Richmonder shoots woman, then kills self

As Carmack walked toward him, Revell pointed a gun at the officer. Maj. A. Steve Csaky said.
Revell then fled down Grove and across Hamilton Street, Csaky said. As Carmack and Detective Steve Sorenson pursued him, Revell turned around and "pointed his gun at one of the policemen" on the other side of Hamilton. Csaky said.
Carmack then fired once at Revell, missing him, and "about the same time or shortly thereafter, the man shot himself in the head," Csaky said.

Stunned by the blow, Revell fell back against a stairway rail and warned Lindgren, "Don't come any nearer," Lindgren recalled. But he added: "I got my lick in."
Revell then left the house and traveled, apparently on foot, to Grove Avenue. It was there that Lt. J. Richard Carmack, aided by a radio broadcast describing Revell, spotted him on Interstate 195 overpass.

Police internal affairs division is investigating the incidents, said Csaky, adding that the guns used by Carmack and Revell have been recovered.
