

JUDGE BACH DIES AT HIS HOME IN JACKSON

One of the Ablest Lawyers
at the Eastern Kentucky
Bar Passes Away

COPE PAYS A TRIBUTE

Funeral Services Will Be Held Monday Afternoon
at 1 O'clock

JACKSON, Ky., June 19.—Judge J. J. C. Bach died this morning after an illness of several weeks. The funeral services will be conducted at the residence on The Heights Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock by the Rev. C. G. Gunn, of the Presbyterian Church. Tributes will be paid to his memory by members of the bar. The active pallbearers will be, Judge O. H. Pollard, W. H. Blanton, Kelley Kash, W. H. Miller, John D. Patrick and W. McGuire, and all other members of the bar will be honorary pallbearers.

Judge Bach was a native of Breathitt County, was educated at Rose Hill, Va., and in Central University at Richmond, Ky. He had gained a state-wide reputation as a lawyer and as a gifted and learned speaker. He was forty-four years of age.

Judge Bach is survived by his widow and two sons, Judge Grannis Bach, police judge of Jackson, and Herchel Bach, a stenographer. W. N. Cope, of the Jackson bar, paid tribute to the late judge's memory eulogy today. In an interview he said:

"The people of the mountains have lost a real friend in the death of Judge J. J. C. Bach. Mourning prevails through the mountains of Eastern Kentucky. Following closely upon the death of the late Judge D. B. Redwine, the grim reaper has taken from the Jackson bar Judge J. J. C. Bach, the ablest and most learned lawyer in Eastern Kentucky.

"Born poor in a mountain cottage, educated by his own masterful efforts, we have seen him forge his way to an enviable place among Kentucky lawyers. It has been said that Judge Bach 'never read a line that he did not remember.' He was a great historian and a man with a remarkable legal mind."
