PREFACE.

THE importance of placing in book form biographical history of representative citizens—both for its immediate worth and for its value to coming generations—is admitted by all thinking people; and within the past decade there has been a growing interest in this commendable means of perpetuating biography and family genealogy.

That the public is entitled to the privileges afforded by a work of this nature needs no assertion at our hands; for one of our greatest Americans has said that the history of any country resolves itself into the biographies of its stout, earnest and representative citizens. This medium, then, serves more than a single purpose: while it perpetuates biography and family genealogy, it records history, much of which would be preserved in no other way.

In presenting the COMMEMORATIVE BIOGRAPHICAL RECORD to its patrons, the publishers have to acknowledge, with gratitude, the encouragement and support their enterprise has received, and the willing assistance rendered in enabling them to surmount the many unforeseen obstacles to be met with in the production of a work of this character. In nearly every instance the material composing the sketches was gathered from those immediately interested, and then submitted in type-written form for correction and revision. The volume, which is one of generous amplitude, is placed in the hands of the public with the belief that it will be found a valuable addition to the library, as well as an invaluable contribution to the historical literature of Wisconsin.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

OVERNOR WILLIAM H. UPHAM. In transmitting to posterity records of distinguished men of the present day, into the minds of the youth of our land will be instilled the important lesson that honor and station are the sure reward of merit, and that, compared to habits of industry, perseverance, probity and integrity, the greatest fortune would be but a poor inheritance. The life of the gentleman, of whom we now write, is a worthy example and model to any generation, and the high dignity to which he has attained is evidence in itself that the qualities above enumerated afford the means of distinction under a system of government in which the places of honor are open to all who may be found worthy of them.

Governor Upham is a native of Massachusetts, born in Westminster May 3, 1841, of English descent, tracing his ancestry to John Upham, who was born in Somersetshire, England, and in 1635 came from England with the Hull Colony, who landed on the shores of America May 16, settling in the then young Colony of Massachusetts, making their first New-World home at Weymouth. From this John Upham sprung all the Uphams in America, and in direct line to the subject of this sketch his descendants were Phineas, John, Samuel, Jonathan, Alvin and William H. At the age of eleven years the last named, now the Governor of Wisconsin, accompanied his parents from Massachusetts to Niles, Mich., and after the death of his father he and his widowed mother came, in 1853, to Wisconsin, taking up their residence in Racine, where the lad resumed his studies, his elementary education having been received at the common schools of his native town and Niles.

In 1861, at the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, Mr. Upham enlisted in the Belle City Rifles, which became Company F, Second Wisconsin Infantry, and with his regiment participated in the battle of Bull Run July 21, 1861, during which engagement he was shot through the lungs, and left on the battlefield for dead. News of his death was sent to his home, and he was mourned alike by relatives and friends, the newspapers publishing long eulogies about him, while Rev. Hutchins, of the First Baptist Church, Racine, preached a most eloquent and impressive funeral sermon, highly laudatory of the (supposed) deceased's character and career. This sermon was printed in full in one of the local papers, and a copy of same now occupies a conspicuous place in the Governor's scrap book—a memento of the stirring war times, and a testimonial of the esteem in which he was held, even in his boyhood, by those who knew him well.

Some seven months afterward the lost one was found in one of the Southern prisons, where he had passed the long interval, far from pleasantly, it is unnecessary to add, but, fortunately, recovering from his apparently fatal wound. From the battlefield he had been taken to Libby prison, where he was confined over half a year, when he was paroled, and after his release he reported at Washington. President Lincoln, thinking it probable that he could get from the young soldier some valuable information relative to Confederate affairs, sent for him, and was so favorably impressed with his appearance and manly bearing that he used his personal influence to secure for Mr. Upham a long-coveted position as cadet at West Point, where he followed the prescribed course of study. This was in 1862, and in the class of 1866 he graduated, after which, June 18, same year, he was commissioned second lieutenant in the artillery service, U. S. Army, his first duty being to act as officer of the guard to Jefferson Davis, who at that time was a prisoner in Fortress Monroe. On March 4, 1869, Second-Lieut. Upham was promoted to first lieutenant, and November 18 he resigned his commission, returned to Wisconsin, and at once commenced to devote his energies to the development of extensive enterprises in the northern part of the State. He first located at Kewaunee, Wis., in 1869, moved to Angelica, Wis., in 1871, and went to Marshfield, Wis., in 1879, the year in which it was platted, and here built a saw and shingle mill, becoming the leading spirit in the upbuilding of the place. The citizens of to-day claim that Marshfield owes everything to Gov. Upham's indomitable will power, enterprise and public-spiritedness, and that he may be truthfully called the founder of the town. In addition to being identified with extensive lumber interests, Gov. Upham is also president of the Upham Manufacturing Co., of Marshfield, the plant of which comprises a sawmill, shingle-mill and gristmill, furniture factory, veneer works and machine shops, employment being given to some 400 hands. The product of the concern is shipped to all points of the compass—to San Francisco, Portland, Boston, New York and Chicago, as well as to London, Glasgow and other European cities. The company also operates one of the largest general retail stores to be found in the West. Governor Upham served as president of the First National Bank of Marshfield, but resigned that position upon being elected Governor of Wisconsin. On June 2, 1887, Marshfield was almost totally destroyed by fire, and brought despair to the hearts of its residents; but Major Upham, though the heaviest loser by the dire catastrophe, with characteristic pluck and energy announced to the people his determination to rebuild the city. By January 1, 1888, less than seven months from the time the scene was one of smoking blackened ruins, sixth-two substantial brick blocks were erected and occupied, Major Upham at once establishing many of the enterprises before referred to, and through his efforts Marshfield has been made one of the thriving and rapidly developing cities of northern Wisconsin.

Governor Upham has ever been foremost in anything he has undertaken. He was first to enlist in the Belle City Rifles, and was the first private soldier appointed to West Point. In military affairs he has ever continued his interest, and is a member of both the Loyal Legion and the Grand Army of the Republic, and was elected State Commander of the latter for the Department of Wisconsin. He served on the staff of Department Commander Lucius Fairchild, as aid-de-camp, with the rank of major, and was appointed by President Arthur on the board of visitors to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md. In politics he is an ardent Republican, and has used all legitimate means to aid this party in its campaigns. His true worth, personal magnetism, honorable record and executive ability, added to his personal popularity, forced the attention of the people of his State upon him as an available candidate for the Governorship. He announced himself as a candidate before the Republican State Convention, held in Milwaukee July 25-26, 1894. There were eleven candidates before the convention, and although the votes were distributed among the candidates Major Upham from the first ballot led all competitors. The political battle of 1894 will long be remembered as one of the most desperately fought campaigns in the history of our country. A reunited Republican party challenged its opponents to battle upon issues of national importance, and upon the past and present actions of the Democracy. Being unable to boldly face the issues advanced by their opponents, the Democrats in various sections resorted to personal abuse of candidates, and desired by such means to nullify as nearly as possible the disgust and distrust of the masses. In Wisconsin they began to abuse Major Upham by declaring that he forced his employees to accept coupons, or company orders, redeemable in merchandise at the company's store instead of cash. Although it was proved, by affidavits of workmen who had been employed for many years, that these assertions were false, the Democratic leaders kept up the cry, and by persistent repetitions so disgusted fair-minded men, irrespective of party affiliations, that many of the opposition displayed the American love for fair play and cast their ballots for Major Upham.

The Republican victory in 1894 will be cited for many generations as the greatest political contest of the century. Major Upham and his associates placed Wisconsin among the banner States. In 1890 his Democratic opponent, Hon. George W. Peck, defeated Hon. W. D. Hoard by a plurality of 28,320. In 1892 Hon. John C. Spooner, after a most victorious campaign, was defeated by Governor Peck by 7,707 votes. In 1894 Major Upham defeated the twice-successful Democratic Governor, by a plurality of 53,900, the largest plurality ever given a gubernatorial candidate in Wisconsin. Although delighted with the returns from the State, Major Upham was probably more gratified with the esteem and admiration displayed by his fellow townsmen by their votes. In 1892 Wood county, in which Marshfield is located, gave Peck a plurality of 441. In 1894 Major Upham carried the county over Peck by 1,123. The appreciation in which he is held by the people of Marshfield, and his high standing in the community are well exemplified by the fact that, though the city is Democratic, he received in this contest a majority of some 400. Although Major Upham received many congratulatory messages after his nomination and election to the highest honors within the gift of the State of his adoption, none gave him as much genuine pleasure as the following resolutions from the citizens of the village in which he was born:

The Republicans of Westminster, Massachusetts, in public meeting assembled on the 20th inst., rejoicing over the recent victory won within the borders of our own State, also feel a just pride in the elevation and prosperity of all the native sons of Westminster, although long removed from her limits, unanimously voted to send greeting to you, and extend congratulations for your success and elevation as Governor of Wisconsin, your adopted State, believing that the Republican principles for which you stand, when put in operation, will not only promote the interests of the inhabitants of your State, but will also restore confidence with all the people, and eventually bring happiness and prosperity throughout the whole country.

S. D. SIMONDS, President,

Republican Club of Westminster.

H. J. PARTRIDGE, Secretary.

To William H. Upham, Marshfield, Wisconsin.

The 7th day of January, 1895, stands as the date of inauguration into his high office. His ripe experience as a man of business will enable him to administer the affairs of the Commonwealth upon sound business principles, and his undoubted integrity and strong individuality assure the citizens of the State that he will control all branches of the government, uninfluenced by professional politicians or unpatriotic advisers.

On December 19, 1867, Gov. Upham was married at Racine, Wis., to Miss Mary C. Kelley, who is descended from Quaker ancestry, and two daughters have blessed their union, namely: Elsie, wife of E. E. Finney, a merchant of Marshfield, and Carrie, living at home. The family are members of the First Presbyterian Church at Marshfield, in which Mrs. Upham, whose name is the synonym for noble and generous deeds, is an active worker. In the quietude of his elegant home Governor Upham exchanges the exciting scenes of political and business turmoil for peaceful retirement in comfort, mayhap to ruminate on past events, or those that are passing, and on those which futurity will probably develop.

HON. GEORGE W. CATE. Biographical sketches of those who have attained merited distinction in American law have a charm and force in them that commend them to every sound thinker. We naturally feel an interest in tracing the footsteps of those who have reached elevated positions in public confidence, and have wielded their influence for public good; who, loving truth, and integrity for their own sake, have undeviatingly followed their dictates, no matter what the personal consequences might be. Records of this kind are calculated to raise the ministrations of law in public estimation, and are guides for the junior members of the profession in their pursuit of reputation, distinction and position.

Born September 17, 1823, in Montpelier, Vt., Judge Cate is a son of Isaac and Clarissa (McKnight) Cate, the former a native of New Hampshire, the latter of Massachusetts, and they were well-to-do farming people, their home being some six miles from Montpelier. At the public schools of that city our subject received a liberal education, and at the age of seventeen years, in 1840, commenced the study of law in the office of Joseph A. Wing, Plainfield, Washington Co., Vt., where he remained two years, and then for a similar length of time studied under Lecius B. Peck, of Montpelier, Vt., after which, in 1844, he was admitted to the bar at the latter place, before Judge Isaac F. Redfield, of the Supreme Court of the State of Vermont. Coming to Wisconsin in 1845, Mr. Cate worked in a sawmill on the Eau Claire river, among the pineries, and was also engaged in all the branches of lumbering, including rafting logs down the Eau Claire to St. Louis, Mo. In 1848 he located in Plover (at that time the county seat of Portage county, Wis.), and commenced the practice of his chosen profession, the only other disciple of Blackstone in that locality being James S. Alban, who was afterward killed at the battle of Shiloh. From the day of his first opening office in Plover our subject has given his entire time to his profession (except while absent in Congress, engaged on business pertaining to the State and Nation), and he has the reputation of being one of the busiest, as well as one of the most successful lawyers in northern Wisconsin. He has given considerable attention to the practice of common law, and among the prominent cases in which he has met with signal success may be mentioned the famous Lamere murder case, and the Hazeltine-Curran-Morse case, and the Mead murder (two trials), in all of which he was counsel for the defense, and where all the defendants were acquitted. He was one of the managers for the State in the impeachment trial of Judge Hubbell. From 1848 to 1854 he held various offices in the gift of the people, such as prosecuting attorney, register of deeds, clerk to the board of supervisors, supervisor, deputy postmaster of Plover, member of the Legislature, and at the time it was the only post office in the pinery of Portage county. In 1854 he was elected circuit judge, and served four terms of six years each, with the exception of the last term, when he resigned after the fourth year on account of his running for Congress. This was in the fall of 1874 (the year of his moving to Stevens Point), and though the Judge is a pronounced Democrat, and the Judicial Circuit and District was strongly Republican, yet he received a handsome majority. While he was in Congress the vote on the electoral commission, which resulted in seating President Hayes, was taken, and Judge Cate was one of the seventeen Democrats who voted against it. On the completion of one term in Congress he returned to his Wisconsin home, and resumed practice.

In 1851 Judge Cate was united in marriage with Miss Lavara S. Brown, daughter of Daniel Brown, a lumberman, formerly of Indianapolis, Ind., who came to Stevens Point from Iowa. Six children have been born to this marriage, to wit: Albert G., now of Amherst, Portage Co., Wis.; Lynn Boyd, of Stevens Point; Henry, a pharmacist, of Menominee, Mich.; Carrie, now the wife of Dr. Cronyn, of Milwaukee; and Ruth and Georgie, both at home. The entire family are members of the Episcopal Church, the Judge since 1860, and for the past six years he has been senior warden of the Church of the Intercession, Stevens Point. Socially, he has been a member of the F. & A. M. since 1855. In addition to seven or eight city lots, he owns a 200-acre farm in Portage county, and takes a great interest in the breeding of blooded cattle; altogether he has imported several head of this class of cattle to Portage county, and at the present time he has a herd of some thirty fine-bred Jerseys (about thirty years ago he imported fine Devon cattle, and, later, several Alderneys). The family residence is No. 321 Ellis street, Stevens Point. Large and generous of nature, kindly and charitable of disposition, with a deep sense of right, Judge Cate is greatly respected by all, and his counsels are frequently sought by his many friends.

AUGUST KICKBUSCH. Some men's minds are blessed, in addition to other native talents, with the happy faculty of originality, permitting them, if they so desire, to forsake the beaten paths, and boldly strike for success by new and untried methods. In looking over the brilliant career of Mr. Kickbusch, one of the most prominent of Wausau's prominent citizens, one is impressed with the fertility and versatility of his powers, giving him a reserve force that would make him equal to any business emergency that might arise. He has shared fully in the glory of Wausau's material advancement, serving as its first mayor, possessing an abundance of prosperous business interests—wholesale grocery, brick manufacturer and lumber dealer—instrumental as no other man has been in the settlement of the county with a thrifty class of citizens, and in many ways contributing to its welfare.

Mr. Kickbusch was born in Colberg, Province of Pomerania, Prussia, Germany, October 15, 1828, son of Martin F. and Katrina (Koahn) Kickbusch. Martin F. was born in Germany August 26, 1802, and had a family of five children: August, subject of this sketch; Marie, wife of Herman Marquardt, of Wausau; Ferdinand, of Wausau; Caroline, wife of Frank Radandt, of Kilbourn City, and Frederick William, now United States consul at Stettin, Germany. Martin Kickbusch died in Wausau in 1873, his wife in 1875, and both are buried in Wausau Cemetery. August attended the district schools of his native land, then learned the trade of a brick manufacturer, at which he worked in the Fatherland until 1857, when he emigrated via Quebec to Milwaukee, Wis., here joining his parents, who had crossed the ocean two weeks earlier. Three days later August started afoot for Wausau, walking the entire distance. There he purchased 354 acres of land, eighteen miles distant, in Hamburg township, but not being able to reach the locality he returned to Milwaukee, where he remained for nearly three years, engaged in teaming.

In 1860 Mr. Kickbusch purchased a wagonload of merchandise suitable for a pioneer country, and drove through to Wausau, then called Big Bull. Selling the goods at a profit of $59, he returned to Milwaukee for his family and household goods. On the journey northward the family camped at night by the roadside. Arriving at Wausau he proceeded to build a shanty on Clark's Island, the family in the meantime sleeping in the wagon, while he made himself comfortable under the wagon. Here, in September, 1860, Mr. Kickbusch began a general trading business, buying furs from the Indians and shipping them to Milwaukee. In 1862 he purchased the large and commodious premises which he now occupies, corner of Main and Washington streets, and there his mercantile business grew until to-day it is one of the most extensive in Wausau. In 1862 Mr. Kickbusch also engaged in brick manufacturing and in lumbering, both of which industries he still conducts. His mills are as follows: One sawmill situated about six miles from Merrill, Lincoln county, the other at Riceville, seven miles east of Harshaw, Oneida county, the planing-mill being at Rice Lake Spur. He also has a brickyard at Edgar, Marathon county, and, when his several industries are in full operation, employment is given to a force of two thousand men, a little army in itself. In 1865 he built a hardware, stove and crockery store adjoining his grocery, and in 1872 he erected a brick business block adjoining his present store on the east, and a brick warehouse, all occupied by the firm.

Mr. Kickbusch had become interested in the settlement of the county, and March 12, 1867, thinking the land was not filling up with settlers as rapidly as it should, he took a trip to Germany, and in three months secured 702 desirable emigrants, for the passage of whom the steamer "America," of the North German Lloyd line, was exclusively secured. Leaving Bremen May 29, 1867, this large party reached New York June 12 and Wausau on June 20. They proceeded by rail to Oshkosh, thence by boat to Gill's Landing, where teams were secured for the women and children, the men walking, and Wausau was reached June 20, 1867. Some of the party Mr. Kickbusch employed, and for others he secured work. Many took up land and engaged in farming, the entire party being comfortably settled in a short time and thoroughly amalgamated with the like of Marathon county. From that time the county began to improve rapidly, and the great impulse which Mr. Kickbusch thus gave to the county's prosperity has been lasting. Many of those early settlers still regard him as their father and benefactor. He has since been offered $1,000 and a free passage to and from Europe to make another such trip, but other business interests will not permit.

Mr. Kickbusch was married, in Germany, to Miss Matilda Schochow, daughter of Ernest and Mina Schochow. Of their six children four are yet living, as follows: Otto, born January 1, 1855, a resident of Wausau; Martha, born in February, 1860, wife of William Rens, of Wausau; Robert, in business with his father, born August 24, 1861, married to Lena, daughter of John A. and Louisa Frenzel, and father of two children—Nina M., born April 13, 1883, and August R., born November 9, 1888; and Emma, born September 1, 1863, wife of Anthony Mohr, and the mother of one child—Matilda. Mrs. Kickbusch died May 26, 1891, and for his second wife Mr. Kickbusch married Miss Amelia Flohr (daughter of Ferdinand Flohr), by whom he has two children, Paul and Alma.

For several terms Mr. Kickbusch was president of the village, and chairman of the county board for five years; was the first mayor of Wausau, filling the office two terms; for a year he was register of the United States Land Office, but resigned the position from lack of time to devote to it. He is president of the George Ruder Brewing Co.; director of the Wausau Furniture Co.; has been a director of the First National Bank since its organization, and is now vice-president of same, and is president of the Central Land Co. Mr. Kickbusch supplies the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad with its timber for bridges, ties, telegraph poles, etc., and also furnished part of the piles for the Jackson Park World's Fair pier, Chicago. Socially, he was a charter member of Lodge No. 215, I. O. O. F., and, politically, he is a staunch Republican. The family attend St. Paul's Evangelical Church. Mr. Kickbusch has been the promoter of many enterprises of a semi-social or public character at Wausau, and few, if any men have done so much to promote the welfare of this portion of northern Wisconsin. In 1892 he presented each of his eldest two sons—Otto and Robert—with a property consisting of a three-story solid brick building, each 25 feet front and 70 feet long, on Third street, Wausau, valued at $20,000, and to his youngest daughter—Alma—he gave an elegant solid brick residence covering four lots, and situated on the corner of Third avenue and Clark street. Mr. Kickbusch's own residence is on Stewart avenue, located on a forty-acre tract, twenty of which lie within the city limits of Wausau. It is a fine brick mansion, one of the best in the city which it overlooks, and is surrounded with beautiful lawns and shade trees, while on the grounds, near the residence, is a natural fish pond, in which sport a multitude of German carp, and the farm is stocked with a fine breed of Holstein and Jersey cattle.

Robert Kickbusch resides at the corner of Second street and Franklin boulevard, and in a substantial two-story brick mansion with mansard roof, one of the most artistic and attractive private residences in Wausau, surrounded as it is with extensive and well-kept grounds and beautiful shade trees.

WEBSTER E. BROWN. A history of the growth and development of the commercial interests of northern Wisconsin, more especially of the city of Rhinelander, would not be complete without a mention of the enterprises, as well as the public improvements, with which the name of this gentleman has long been identified.

Mr. Brown is a native of New York State, born July 16, 1851, near Peterboro, Madison county, the second son of Edward D. and Helen M. (Anderson) Brown, well-to-do people formerly of New York State, from which State they moved to Wisconsin in the spring of 1857. For a short time they made their home at the village of Newport, Columbia county, later moving to Hull township, Portage county, later to Stockton township, same county, and, still later to Stevens Point, where Mrs. Brown died in 1888. In 1894 the bereaved husband and his two daughters, May and Helen, moved to Rhinelander, and are now living in an elegant and comfortable home which he recently built. Few men are better known in the Upper Wisconsin Valley than Edward D. Brown, or more highly respected for honesty, integrity and thorough business capacity. They have eight children now living, namely: Anderson W., Webster E., Edward O., Walter D., Florence H. (now the wife of Judge Paul Brown, of Rhinelander), Isabell (wife of D. D. Flanner, lumber dealer, Rhinelander), and May and Helen. Four of this family are graduates of the Wisconsin State University, Madison, and all attended this institution at some time.

Webster E. Brown, the subject proper of this sketch, was about six years old when the family came to Wisconsin, and his elementary education was secured at the common schools of Portage county, after which, and while still in his boyhood, he attended a few months of each year for three years the university at Appleton, which was supplemented, in the spring of 1870, with a course of study at the Spencerian Business College, Milwaukee. In the fall of that year he entered the Wisconsin State University, at Madison, graduating from there with the class of '74. In the spring of the following year, he and his brother Anderson W., under the firm name of Brown Bros., opened up a lumber business at Stevens Point, another brother Edward O., joining them in 1880; the firm continued in business at Stevens Point until 1883. In 1875 they purchased a tract of land where Rhinelander is now located. In 1882 and 1883, they closed out their interests at Stevens Point and removed to Rhinelander, where they have since pursued a general lumber business. Their sawmill here has a capacity of one hundred thousand feet every ten hours, in addition to which they have a planing-mill, and other accessories necessary to a well-equipped lumber plant. In the fall of 1882 they platted the village of Rhinelander, our subject having charge of the village real estate, also of the manufacturing and sale of lumber produced by their mill. On January 1, 1890, the business of the brothers was incorporated, under the general laws of the State, as the Brown Brothers Lumber Co., of which company our subject is secretary. The Brown Bros. Lumber Co., are also owners of pine lands in Wisconsin and Michigan, and moreover are interested in coal mines in Tennessee. At one time they carried on a private banking business, known as E. D. Brown & Sons Bank, which was afterward merged into the Merchants State Bank of Rhinelander, of which they are directors. They are prominent among the active business men of Rhinelander, and by their energy, enterprise and influence have figured largely in making the city what it is. Like the father, the sons own handsome and pleasant homes.

The subject proper of these lines is a conservative and successful business man. He has always been identified with every movement tending to the advancement of the interests of his city. He was elected mayor of Rhinelander in the spring of 1894, and re-elected in the spring of 1895, on both occasions without opposition. He is an advocate of temperance, yet liberal in his views on the question, and believes in the enforcement of the law on that and all other kindred matters that have been so much legislated on. Politically a Republican, he is no office-seeker, but his friends have insisted in keeping him in incumbencies where his abilities can be best brought into use. He has been a member of the school board several years, and takes a great interest in educational matters; was chairman of the county board two years, and of the town board three years.

On December 26, 1877, Webster E. Brown and Miss Juliet D. Meyer were united in marriage. She was born in Philadelphia, Penn., and is a daughter of Richard and Martha P. (Phelps) Meyer, the former of whom was a native of Germany, and in early life was private secretary for Eastwick, Winans & Co., who built the first railroad from Moscow to St. Petersburg, Russia, for the government. When yet a young man he emigrated to America, locating in Philadelphia as a merchant, and there marrying. After a residence in the Quaker City of a few years, he came, in 1858, to Wisconsin, settling in Lancaster, Grant county, engaging in a mercantile and banking business, where he still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer were the parents of seven children, five of whom are yet living: Richard, Frederick P., Nettie E., Jessie M. and Mrs. Webster E. Brown. Mrs. Brown is an educated and refined lady, and a graduate, in 1875, of the Wisconsin State University, after which she taught in the high schools at Lancaster and Madison, Wis., two years. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been born seven children, five of whom are now living, to wit: Ralph D., Edna M., Dorothy, Richard M. and Allan D. Our subject is a member of the F. & A. M., No. 173, Rhinelander Lodge, and also of the K. of P. Lodge at Rhinelander. He and his amiable and accomplished life partner are prominently identified with the Congregational Church.

Mr. Brown is a man of good physique, as well as forcible intellectual qualities, and is possessed of an active mind, and a frank and generous disposition, traits of character inherited by a worthy son from a worthy sire and ancestry.

EDWARD DASKAM. Man has been endowed with reason, will and physical power, and it is by patient industry only that he can open up a pathway to the enduring prosperity of a community. The fittest survive, and, in writing biographies of individuals like our subject, it is a pleasure to meet with such striking examples of industry and integrity.

Mr. Daskam is a native of New York State, born March 14, 1843, in Caton, Steuben county, a grandson of Nathan Daskam, Jr., who was of Connecticut birth and a soldier in the Revolutionary war, in which struggle he had a brother among the slain. Nathan Daskam, Sr., great-grandfather of Edward Daskam, was one of the associates of the Old Hartford Bank, known as the "Daskam and Barsley Bank," and the Daskams furnished "sinews of war" to the government in both the Revolution and the war of 1812. The grandparents of our subject were of Welch and English descent, their ancestors having many years ago settled in Connecticut where Nathan, Jr., and his wife, as well as his parents, all passed their entire lives. Nathan Daskam, Jr., and his wife had one daughter, Ann, now Mrs. Sydam (whose son, Hiram Sydam, is a prominent business man of Geneva, N. Y.), and three sons, John (a farmer), Nathan and Robert, the latter of whom was born at Hartford, Conn., in 1801, and became a mechanic. He (Robert) married Miss Maria A. Wheeler, who was born in Connecticut, in 1807, of German and Irish ancestry, her father being of Mohawk-Dutch lineage (his parents were among the early settlers of the Mohawk Valley), her mother of Irish. They were farmers, and died in Ontario county, N. Y., each at the age of about ninety years, the parents of four children: William H., Jerry, Jane and Maria A. To Robert Daskam and his wife were born ten children, a brief sketch of whom is as follows: William H., the eldest, enlisted in the Fourth Wis. V. I., and died in August, 1862, of wounds received, leaving a widow but no children (he was also a soldier in the Mexican war, having enlisted in Chicago); Lucinda married Richard Ardell, a shoemaker, and resides in Waupaca county; Caroline is now the wife of William Sidney, a farmer of New York State; John W. is a farmer in Langlade county (he was a soldier in the First Wis. V. C., and served one year); Elizabeth A. is now the wife of George Gelder, a farmer in Michigan, near Kalamazoo; Mathilda is the deceased wife of Stephen Hibbard; Edward is the subject of this sketch; Louisa is now Mrs. Hudson Gelder, and resides in New York State; Robert L. (1) died when seven years old; Robert L. (2) is a farmer of Calumet county, Wis.; Charles W. is a resident of Ashland, Wis. In 1857 the family came to Wisconsin settling on a farm in Calumet county, where the father died November 25, 1882. He was self-made, self-educated, a great reader, and well posted in the affairs of his time; public-spirited and liberal-minded, he was a man of broad ideas, and highly respected by all who knew him.

Edward Daskam, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared on a farm, and enjoyed the advantages of a common-school training. At the age of seventeen, on September 15, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Fourteenth Wis. V. I., re-enlisting December 11, 1863, as a veteran, at Vicksburg, Miss., and was discharged at Mobile, Ala., October 9, 1865, as first sergeant. His war record is an enviable one, and the same courage displayed in the field of battle has since characterized his walks in civil and political life. He participated in the battle of Pittsburg Landing, was at the sieges of both Corinth and Vicksburg, was with Sherman at Atlanta, present at the affair at Nashville, and took part in the siege of Spanish Fort which lasted fourteen days. With the exception of a short time he was in the hospital sick with the measles he was always with his regiment, never missing an engagement. On his return from the army in October, 1865, he engaged in farming a couple of years, during which time he took up the real-estate business to which he then turned his attention exclusively, at first dealing in farm lands, later handling city and village property. In March, 1882, he came to Antigo, Langlade county, which was then a collection of shanties, at once invested in vacant lots, and has since been actively engaged here in the real-estate business, which he does not confine to city and town property in the county and State, for he has extended his interests in that line into the Dakotas, Montana, Michigan and other States. He also carries on a general brokerage business, and upon the reorganization of the Bank of Antigo he was appointed vice-president. In the building up of Antigo he has been a prominent factor, has platted three additions known as the "Daskam Additions," and further interested himself in the erection of several brick blocks, a foundry and machine shop, besides other manufacturing plants; as soon, however, as he saw each of these industries on its feet, he would sell out, preferring to confine himself to the open precincts of real-estate dealing, of which by his natural acumen, shrewdness and sagacity he has made a pronounced success.

On January 2, 1871, Mr. Daskam was married to Miss Henrietta J. McMullen, by whom he had children, as follows: Thomas E., assistant cashier of the Bank of Antigo; Mary L., living at home, and two that died in infancy. The mother of these passed away to the "better land" in 1883, and September 7, 1885, Mr. Daskam wedded Miss Osca Bemis, daughter of George W. Bemis, register of deeds, Antigo, and by this union there are three children: Edith, Edward and Bemis. Socially our subject is prominent in Masonic circles, having attained the thirty-second degree; he is a member of Antigo Lodge F. & A. M. No. 231, of Wausau Commandery No. 19, of Milwaukee Consistory, and of the Mystic Shrine, Milwaukee; he is also a member of the G. A. R., taking a lively interest in the affairs of each fraternity. Politically he is a Republican, and has served as assessor and on the county board. In his religious views he is liberal, giving freely of his means to all denominations, and takes a deep interest in the public schools, in fact in all educational projects. As a business man he has been exceptionally successful, and certainly seems worthy of being placed on the list of the wealthiest men of Antigo, his career being proverbial for honest, straightforward, fair-and-square dealings with all with whom he has had business transactions of any kind. He is a man, take him for all in all, of whom everybody always speaks well, and who has not, and does not deserve to have, a single personal enemy.

JOSEPH DESSERT. Few men have resided continuously in the Upper Wisconsin Valley for over fifty years. Joseph Dessert has not only been a resident of Marathon county for over half a century, but he has during that period built up a vast lumbering business that is perhaps second to none in the State. He has made no business failures, and his name is a synonym of enduring confidence and integrity. Not swerved from his business by this or that glittering bubble, he has made it one of the substantial bulwarks of northern Wisconsin.

Mr. Dessert is a native of Canada, having been born in Maskinonge, Province of Quebec, January 8, 1819, son of Peter and Melonie (Baulien) Dessert, both natives of that province. Twelve children were born to them, four of whom survive: Melonie, wife of Adolphus Martin, still living in her native home at the advanced age of eighty-one years; Joseph, subject of this sketch; and Dosite and Bozilis, both residents of the Province of Canada, the latter being widow of Louis Landry. Joseph attended the schools of the neighborhood of his father's home, and worked at lumbering in Canada until he was twenty-two years of age. In May, 1840, he made a trip to the Lake Superior region, and for four years was employed by the American Fur and Trading Co. Returning home July 1, 1844, he remained only a few months, and September 16 started, an unknown young man, on a long journey to the unknown forests of Wisconsin, where thenceforth he was to make his home, and which he was destined to honor by his exemplary and potent business career. Reaching Buffalo, he proceeded by steamer to Milwaukee, thence by lumber wagon to Fort Winnebago, now Portage City. He pushed on to Whitney Rapids by team, but the destination was still nearly seventy-five miles away, and the country sparsely settled, principally by Indians. This long and tiresome journey was made afoot. Mr. Dessert reached Mosinee October 20, 1844, and from that date to the present he has been a continuous resident of Marathon county. For five years he worked for wages in the solitudes of this vast wilderness, lumbering and logging on the river. Then, in 1849, he joined fortunes with three other young men—William Pencast, Henry Cate and James Etheridge—and, under the firm name of Pencast, Dessert & Co., started the business which has grown into the extensive trade now commanded by the Joseph Dessert Lumber Co. One by one the original parties dropped out, until Mr. Dessert was left sole owner. First Mr. Pencast withdrew, in 1850, and the firm became Dessert, Cate & Co. Four years later Mr. Etheridge sold his interest to the remaining partners, and the style of the firm became Dessert & Cate. In 1859 Mr. Dessert purchased his partner's interest and became sole owner. Alone he conducted the business for twenty-one years; then, in 1880, he admitted to partnership his nephew, Louis Dessert. For ten years the business was under the firm name of Joseph Dessert & Co., and in December, 1890, the present Joseph Dessert Lumber Co. was incorporated, now officered by Joseph Dessert, president; Louis Dessert, vice-president and manager, and H. M. Thompson, secretary and treasurer. Mrs. H. M. Thompson is a stockholder. The company conducts one of the most extensive lumber business in the State.

In 1862 Joseph Dessert was married, in Waukesha county, to Miss Mary Sanford, daughter of William E. and Lavina T. Sanford, the former a native of Connecticut, the latter of New York State. Mr. and Mrs. Dessert have had two children: Marion M., who died in infancy, and Stella, wife of Henry M. Thompson, secretary and treasurer of the Joseph Dessert Lumber Co. Mrs. Dessert died July 1, 1881. Though frequently tendered important and responsible offices Mr. Dessert has almost invariably refused to accept, and in no sense has he ever been an aspirant for political honors, knowing that his business, if neglected, must suffer. Yet he has ever been ready with his counsel and means to forward enterprises promoting the public welfare; he served for several terms as a member of the county board, and was also county commissioner for one term. Mr. Dessert is now in his seventy-seventh year, and has shifted the burden of active business life to younger shoulders. He is in the enjoyment of good health, and has the friendship and esteem of all who have known him, either in public or in private life. No man better deserves the good will of others than he, and none possesses it in a greater degree.

LOUIS DESSERT, vice-president of The Joseph Dessert Lumber Co., Mosinee, was born in the parish of Saint Ambroise, Kildare, Province of Quebec, Canada, June 6, 1849, and is a son of Antoine and Edvige (Rotelle) Dessert, both natives of Canada, the latter of whom is still a resident of the old homestead.

Our subject received a French education in his native town, and when nineteen years of age he came to Mosinee, where he attended the public schools for two terms, in order to perfect his knowledge of the English language. After leaving school he was employed in the extensive lumber business of Joseph Dessert, remaining in the capacity of an employe until 1880, in which year he became a partner, the firm name being changed to Joseph Dessert & Co. In 1890, when the Joseph Dessert Lumber Co. was organized and incorporated, Louis Dessert became vice-president, an official title which he still holds, and under it he is the active general manager of the company's extensive business.

On November 25, 1882, he was married, in Mosinee, to Miss Abbie Richardson. Their family of three children is composed of Howard, born September 16, 1883; Louise, born March 25, 1887; and Blanche, born May 15, 1892. In politics Mr. Dessert is a Republican. In 1889 he was president of the village of Mosinee, and he has also served as supervisor. He is one of the active, progressive business men of the county, and deservedly popular among all classes of the community. Mr. Dessert is also a member of the firm of C. Gardner & Co., lumbermen and general merchants. He possesses business abilities of a high order, and though yet comparatively young in years, his influence in the development of Marathon county is widely felt.

HON. SEBASTIAN KRONENWETTER, one of the substantial and enterprising business men of Marathon county, owns and operates extensive mills near Mosinee, and for many years has been prominently identified with the lumbering interests of the Upper Wisconsin Valley. He was born in Wittenberg, Germany, January 20, 1833, and is a son of Michael and Francisca (Funk) Kronenwetter.

Our subject attended the German schools in his boyhood, and in 1846, when thirteen years of age, emigrated with his father and mother to America. They settled at St. Mary's, Elk Co., Penn., and here the parents remained, honored and respected residents through life. Of their five children three now survive: Sebastian, Nicholas and Charles, both of the latter still residing at St. Mary's. Sebastian grew to manhood at the home of his parents, and at St. Mary's, on October 15, 1855, he married Miss Mary Biri, a native of Alsace, France, now Germany, and daughter of Benedict and Barbara Biri. Two years later he resolved to seek a home in the Northwest. Coming to Wisconsin in 1857, he located in Mosinee, where for two years he worked in the pinneries. In 1859 Mr. Kronenwetter engaged in the hotel business at Mosinee, conducting it successfully for two years. Then, in 1861, he removed to Wausau, and opened a hostelry in that bustling little city. For two years he prospered, but in 1863 fire destroyed his hotel, consumed all his earthly possessions, and left him with his wife and babes penniless. It was a severe blow, enough to dishearten many men, but Mr. Kronenwetter went bravely to the task of restoring his perished fortunes. Perhaps the fire was a blessing in disguise; at any rate it directed the energies of Mr. Kronenwetter into a new channel, and into one through which, by well-directed efforts, he has risen to prominence and a measurable degree of affluence. Beginning anew at the foot of the ladder, in the pineries, he worked for a year or two, then launched into the logging and lumbering business on his own account in a modest way. Through careful attention the business grew, and Mr. Kronenwetter gained in experience and capital. In 1870 he removed to his present location, which at that time was an unbroken wilderness. Here he erected his spacious mills, and time has demonstrated the correctness of his business judgment. He has ever since been engaged in the lumbering business, and through energy and perseverance has won for himself a place among the solid and respected business men of Marathon county. He has for twenty-one years held the office of chairman of Mosinee and Kronenwetter townships, and was chairman of Marathon County Board in the year 1880. He was elected to the Assembly for the year 1885. All his family at this writing reside in Mosinee and Kronenwetter townships.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kronenwetter have been as follows: Michael, born at St. Mary's, Penn., February 2, 1857, died in infancy; Helen O., born at Mosinee June 22, 1860, wife of Michael Lutz; Francis M. K., born at Mosinee June 26, 1861, died November 18, 1863; Karl A., born at Wausau, August 2, 1862; George S., born at Mosinee, September 15, 1864; Clara F., born at Mosinee, October 9, 1866, now the wife of Eugene Wirth; Henry M., born April 1, 1869; Frances Mary, born February 21, 1872, died February 10, 1874; Marie T., born in Mosinee, September 15, 1874, and Anna Otilia, born in Mosinee, March 31, 1877. The family is one of the best known and most influential in Marathon county.

HON. W. L. ARNOTT. So closely have the lumber interests of the upper Wisconsin Valley been woven into the history of this region that few of the prosperous lives in the Valley have escaped a more or less intimate relation with this great industry. Mr. Arnott, one of the most prominent men of Stockton township, Portage county, is not an exception. He, too, has worked in the lumber woods, and "run the river." He was born in the town of Jerusalem, Yates Co., N. Y., September 5, 1832, only child of Amasa L. and Lydia (Rouse) Arnott. The father, who was a civil engineer, died when the son was but eighteen months old, and the mother subsequently married Isaac Haight, by whom she had one daughter, Adel, who died at the age of twenty-four years. Mrs. Haight passed away in Yates county, N. Y., in 1844.

W. L. Arnott was reared on the farm of his grandfather, Timothy Rouse, attending the district schools and assisting in the farm duties until the age of fourteen, when he went to Woodhull township, Steuben Co., N. Y., and there worked for his uncle, M. D. Hathaway, on a farm, remaining thereon till he was nineteen years old. After leaving his uncle in the spring of 1851, he passed a couple of months in Huron county, Ohio, then returning to New York State, worked in Yates county on a farm up to the time of his marriage. He was married at Bath, Steuben Co., N. Y., March 25, 1856, to Mary J. Walker, who was born in the same town, March 25, 1832, daughter of James and Gretia (Warren) Walker, who were the parents of nine children, to wit: Sarah, who died at the age of fourteen years; James W., now a retired farmer of Shawano county, Wis.; Gratia A., wife of A. B. Daniels, a farmer, of Georgia; Susan E., now Mrs. Charles Beach, of Stevens Point; Mary J. (Mrs. Arnott); William R., who was sergeant of Company E, Fifth Wis. V. I., and was killed at the battle of the Wilderness in May, 1864; Frank R., who also served in the Fifth Wis. V. I., and died in 1889; Ada J. (Mrs. Curren), a resident of Stevens Point; and Murray W., who died when five years old. The father of this family, who was a son of Abram Walker, and was of English descent, was a native of New York State, and died at Bath, N. Y. Gratia Walker, the mother, was born in Vermont, in 1804, daughter of Phineas Warren, who was a direct descendant of Dr. Joseph Warren, of Revolutionary fame, and came of English stock. Phineas married Mary Knight, who was of the historic Scottish house of Stewart. Mr. and Mrs. Arnott have two children: Lillian A., and Mary G., both school teachers, the latter at West Superior, Wisconsin.

Mr. Arnott began housekeeping on a seventy-five-acre tract of land which he had contracted for. He had little means, and what he did possess was his own accumulation from wages received. In May, 1864, he decided to move west; and accordingly set out by rail for Plover, Wis., where relatives of Mrs. Arnott lived. Coming by rail to Berlin, he and his wife and daughter journeyed by stage to Plover. Here he lived for one year, working in the lumber woods in the winter, and running the river to Alton, Ill., one trip. Renting some land in Stockton township, Portage county, in 1865, he moved there, and three years later, in July, 1868, he purchased 160 acres, the northeast quarter of Section 29, where he has since lived, excepting four and a half years—from the fall of 1887 to the spring of 1892—during which time he was making his home at Stevens Point. During two of these years—from May, 1889, to May, 1891,—he served creditably as State timber agent under the appointment of Gov. Hoard.

Politically, Mr. Arnott is an earnest and active Republican. He is regarded as the foremost worker among the members of his party in Stockton township, and is one of its advisors and counselors in the county. He has served as assessor two years, as chairman two years, as chairman of the county board one year, and in 1876 was elected to the State legislature. For many years he was clerk, and then treasurer of his district, and has filled various other local offices. Socially he is a prominent member of the F. & A. M. On account of his efforts in securing a certain station on the Green Bay, Winona & St. Paul railway, it was named in his honor. Mr. Arnott has a wide acquaintance through the county, and is one of its most influential and substantial citizens.

GEORGE WERHEIM, one of the most substantial and respected citizens of Marathon county, and one of Wausau's oldest settlers, is president of the Werheim Manufacturing Company, of Wausau, one of the largest establishments of that city.

He was born in Hessen-Homburg, Germany, January 6, 1834, son of Konrad and Margaret Werheim. The mother died when George was a boy, attending the common-schools of Germany, and in 1851 the father and his five children emigrated to America. The family consisted of John, who was afterward killed in the war of the Rebellion; Mary, wife of Henry Hett, of Wausau; Philip, a clergyman, now stationed at Valparaiso, Ind.; George, and Elizabeth, wife of Charles Klinkie, of Chicago. For two years they remained in New York, and then moved to Chicago, where many years afterward Konrad Werheim died. Our subject worked at the carpenter's trade at Chicago for about three years, then in 1856, at the age of twenty-three years, he came to Wausau. For a time he followed his trade, but later he began the manufacture of doors, sashes, blinds, etc.; this business he sold out, and in 1881 he started anew on a more extensive scale. Ten years later a company was organized, officered by Mr. Werheim as president; Philip Werheim as vice-president; Joseph Reiser as treasurer; and George Werheim, Jr., as secretary. It now conducts on a still more extensive scale the business that was founded by Mr. Werheim, and on an average employs some sixty men.

George Werheim was married, in 1855, to Miss Theresa Myers, and to them five children were born: Emma, wife of Frank Hettinger, of Chicago; Theresa, wife of Charles Burke, of Wausau; Philip, of Wausau, who in 1884 was married to Miss Ulrica Kleutz; Mary, married in 1890 to Joseph Reiser, their family consisting of two children, John Raymond and Elsie Elizabeth; and George, Jr. After the death of his first wife in August, 1870, Mr. Werheim was married in December, 1874, to Miss Elizabeth Paulus, by whom he has two children, Carl and Amanda. For many years Mr. Werheim has served as trustee of Wausau, was under-sheriff one term, and for seven successive years he served as city treasurer. He was elected to the Legislature November 6, 1894, on the Republican ticket, by a majority of 540 votes over his opponent, Bradd Jones. Mr. Werheim is a member of the A. O. U. W., and the family attend St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church. During his active business and official life Mr. Werheim has by his public spirit, by his zeal in matters of general moment, greatly endeared himself to the constituency of Marathon county, and he is recognized as one of its foremost citizens.

HON. WALTER D. MCINDOE (deceased). Not only as a business man of the highest character, keenest judgment and noblest impulses was the subject of this sketch known through northern Wisconsin, but also as a profound statesman, a conscientious lawyer, a patriot of the highest type.

Mr. McIndoe was born March 28, 1819, near Glasgow, Scotland, son of Hugh and Catherine (McRae) McIndoe, formerly of Dumbartonshire, Scotland. In his fifteenth year he emigrated to this country, making his home for a time in New York City, where he was engaged as clerk in a large mercantile house; later he was a salesman in Charleston, S. C., and at St. Louis, Mo. He was married at Florissant, St. Louis Co., Mo., by Rev. Father Butler, February 20, 1845, to Miss Catherine Harriet Ann Taylor, born in Stafford county, Va., July 11, 1825, daughter of John B. and Catherine (Spaulding) Taylor, the mother being a first cousin to Archbishop Spaulding. In the same year Mr. McIndoe made a trip to the pineries of northern Wisconsin. Returning to St. Louis he started again for Wisconsin, with his wife, two years later, in 1847, and established a home at Wausau, Marathon county, where he devoted all his energies to the development of the lumber business.

This was a year before Wisconsin was admitted as a State. Mr. McIndoe was a man of enlarged business views, and his operations soon became quite extensive. He became generally known to the people of Wisconsin as one of the most enterprising and prosperous men of the State. His efforts were crowned with speedy success, for in a short time he accumulated quite a respectable fortune. All his business transactions were conducted on liberal and honorable principles, and he used his means freely in bestowing comforts upon those about him. Few if any lumbermen were better or more favorably known in the business circles of the State, or at the centers in the lower Mississippi Valley.

Mr. McIndoe was as prominent in political as in business life. A man of strong convictions and indomitable energy, he was of necessity a potent force in shaping the political status of the infant State. In 1849 he was elected to the State Assembly, and was an able and useful member of that body during the session of 1850. In politics he was a Whig, and that party being in the minority in the Assembly that year he was less conspicuous perhaps than he would have been had his party had the ascendancy; yet his sound practical suggestions and his manly bearing gave him popularity and standing with all members, regardless of party. In the session of 1854 he again represented his District in the Assembly in the same acceptable manner. In 1857 he was a prominent candidate for governor before the State Republican Convention. The contest was mainly between him and Hon. E. D. Holton, but after a protracted and ineffectual struggle, as often happens in a situation like that, a third candidate was taken up in the person of Hon. A. W. Randall. In 1862 he was elected to Congress to succeed Hon. Luther Hanchett, and in 1864 he was re-elected. While in Congress he labored very earnestly and efficiently for the interests of the Upper Wisconsin Valley. Among the many measures, favorable to this locality, which were adopted through his instrumentality, was the land grant to any railroad that should build a line through the center of Wisconsin to Lake Superior.

It resulted in the construction of the Wisconsin Central road.

He was general of the State militia, and during the war of the Rebellion filled the office of provost-marshal of the State with exceptional ability. In 1866 he retired from official business to attend to his large business interests, which had been somewhat neglected. In the Republican National Conventions of 1856, 1860 and 1872 he was a delegate, voting at these momentous gatherings for John C. Fremont, Abraham Lincoln and Gen. U. S. Grant, respectively. Gen. McIndoe was called to rest August 22, 1872, at the age of fifty-two years, while yet in the prime of life, but not until he had attained a success in life, wider and nobler than that which comes to most men who attain their allotted three score years and ten.

As a politician Gen. McIndoe was a man of rare sagacity, incorruptible integrity and commanding influence. With strong convictions and inflexible will he was a tower of strength during the dark days of the Rebellion, and his energies in the halls of Congress during that crucial period of the Nation's life were strained to give aid and sustenance to the cause of national unity. In private life he possessed a broad and generous sympathy, and to his friends he gave chivalrous devotion. To many thousands of men his death was a personal affliction. Too positive in disposition to escape opponents, he always retained their respect and admiration for the qualities of candor, generosity and endurance which he displayed. He could oppose without vindictiveness, and earnestly advocate without undue heat. In the fullest sense of the word he was a self-made man, one of those energetic, self-reliant men who in the tide of humanity walk with head erect, towering above the surrounding masses, and giving directions to the hundreds of men who fall within their influence.

The funeral services of Gen. McIndoe were conducted by the Masonic body, of which the deceased had been a prominent member, and were attended by some two thousand people, many of whom were from abroad. In the funeral train, at the particular request of Gen. McIndoe, was his favorite horse, "Dan." Gen. McIndoe was childless, but his widow still survives, an honored resident of the old homestead at Wausau. Though bereft of her chosen companion and loving consort, she is comforted by a solace unknown to the careless world. Mrs. McIndoe was one of a family of twelve children, only two of whom, besides herself, are now living—Spaulding Taylor, a resident of Memphis, Tenn., and Philip C. Taylor, late sheriff of St. Louis county, Missouri.

Hugh McIndoe (deceased), a brother of Gen. McIndoe, was born in Dumbartonshire, Scotland, February 26, 1832, emigrated to America in 1857, and for twenty-seven years was a prominent citizen of Wausau. He was associated in business with his brother, and witnessed the development of the little woodland hamlet into a prosperous city. He was one of those rare generous characters whom it is a pleasure to meet. Quick to resent an insult, he never gave one himself; thoughtless of self, he would give his last penny to the suffering or afflicted. Unhampered by creed or dogma, he stood forth in the genius of his own nature, an honest man. His death occurred September 23, 1881; his widow survives, and is now a resident of Rhinelander, Wis. Their six children are Walter D., a lumberman, at Barron, Wis.; Thomas B., a prominent physician of Rhinelander; Hugh, a prominent attorney, at Chicago; John B., of Rhinelander; Charles S., a dentist, at Rhinelander, and Archibald J., a dentist, of Toledo, Ohio.

ANDREW G. NELSON, at this writing serving his third term as mayor of Waupaca, Waupaca county, is, by his capable administration, leaving an impress upon that city that will long remain. He is a descendant of a prominent Swedish family. His grandfather, Nels G. Nelson, who was a farmer in Sweden, reared a family of five children, Nels, John, Andrew, Mary and Bertha, all of whom are still living, and all are landowners. Nels Nelson, the eldest, and father of Andrew G., was born April 10, 1822, and married Christine Deburg, a well-educated young lady, and daughter of John Deburg, a judge of Toysse county. They reared a family of seven children: John P., Andrew G., Nels T., John H., August, Anna and Elizabeth. August Nelson still lives in Sweden, a prosperous farmer and lumberman. The mother of our subject died in 1893, in Sweden.

Their son, Andrew G. Nelson, born June 15, 1849, was educated in the common schools of Sweden, and at the age of fifteen began a course of study in the Agricultural College at Seffle, Sweden, where he remained two terms. At the age of twenty-one years he resolved to emigrate to America, his older brother, John P., having come two years earlier. When Andrew reached Waupaca, in 1871, his capital consisted of $16, but he soon found work in a planing mill, and two years later, forming a partnership with his brother, they purchased a small planing mill, running in debt for almost the full amount. Four years later it was burned, a total loss, for there was no insurance upon the property; but the plucky boys rebuilt at once, and continued in business until 1888, when the brother sold his interest to Mr. Churchill, of Waupaca. They removed the plant to its present site, and in 1891 Mr. Nelson purchased Mr. Churchill's interest, and became sole proprietor. He also bought the water power and built a custom gristmill. Still later he added a large lumber yard, and acquired various lumber interests, including a sawmill.

In 1875 Mr. Nelson was married to Hulda Brown, a native of Waupaca, daughter of C. O. Brown, an early settler of Swedish birth, who followed farming here, and was a public-spirited citizen and a county official in various capacities. By this marriage Mr. Nelson had one child, Edwin. The wife died in 1881, and in 1883 he married Anna S. Beadmore, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Barber) Beadmore, early English settlers in Waupaca county. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have one child, Van Andrew Nelson.

Mr. Nelson's executive abilities are of a high order, and have often been called into service by his fellow townsmen. He is a Republican, and for many years served as a member of the city council. He was also a member of the county board, and in 1884 was elected to the State Assembly; but, though he has since been urged to accept a nomination for the same responsible legislative office, which would be equivalent to an election, he has declined the honor. That he has proved the right man in the right place for mayor, is evinced by his many re-elections. Under his administration many city improvements have been made. The city hall, a beautiful structure, has been built, of granite taken from Waupaca's own quarries; many streets have been macadamized, and stone bridges have been constructed. Like the magnificent public work of Mr. Shepard in Washington City, these improvements, in after years, will rise up and call Mr. Nelson blessed. The mayor's public policy, like that in his private business, has been marked by thoroughness, endurance and honesty. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M., I. O. O. F. and the Knights of Pythias.

JEROME CROCKER, general merchant at Weyauwega, Waupaca county, has enjoyed a continuous business career much longer than falls to the lot of most men. He carries a full line of hardware and general merchandise, and, having begun business in 1859, has now been thirty-six years on the site of his present store. Mr. Crocker traces his ancestry back to Revolutionary times.

He was born October 11, 1824, in Perrysburg, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., son of Stephen and Polly (Black) Crocker. Stephen Crocker was born in Schoharie county, N. Y., July 13, 1788, son of Stephen Crocker, who was a native of Rhode Island, of English Quaker extraction, and who lived to the age of 102 years. Stephen Crocker, Jr., was a farmer by occupation, and in 1844 moved to Miami county, Ind., to land pre-empted by his son Jerome. He was a Democrat of the Jackson school, and died in 1847. Polly (Black) Crocker, mother of Jerome, was born in Chautauqua county, N. Y., July 21, 1802, daughter of James and Polly (Putney) Black, the father a native of New York, the mother of Vermont. Stephen and Polly Crocker had five children: Mary Jane, who died June 6, 1845, in New York; Lorinda, wife of Seymour P. Ensign, of Erie, Penn.; Jerome; Eliza, wife of Robert Hughson, of Ripley, N. Y., and Benjamin Franklin, who died in New York September 2, 1848. The mother died October 7, 1832, and Stephen Crocker married Rachel, widow of David Black, by which union he had one child, Rosetta, wife of Daniel Risinger, of Kokomo, Indiana.

The boyhood of Jerome was spent on the farms of Cattaraugus and Chautauque counties, N. Y., and his education received in the schools of western New York and of Indiana. At the age of eighteen he entered the employ of John Morrison & Co., merchants, at Nashville, N. Y. Eighteen months later he entered the employ of Smith & Foote, merchants, at Peru, Ind., remaining ten years. In 1856 Mr. Crocker went to California, via the Isthmus, and for three years was engaged by J. A. Cole and John Stevens in constructing a flume from the Sierra Nevadas to the mines, an enterprise that required three years to complete. In 1859 he returned from California, and located in the budding little settlement at Weyauwega. He at once entered the mercantile trade, and from that time on he has been prominently identified with the development of that locality, being engaged in various enterprises. He was a prime mover in the establishment of the Badger Basket Factory; at one time he owned the brewery, and for a while he owned a tin shop. He was an original stockholder in establishing the county fair grounds.

Mr. Crocker was married, in 1852, to Miss Angeline Rice, daughter of Charles and Harriet (Ainsworth) Rice, natives of Connecticut who became early settlers of Chautauque county, N. Y., and who afterward, in 1859, removed to Weyauwega, Wis. Mrs. Crocker died February 2, 1854, in Chautauque county, N. Y. His second wife was Mrs. Helen M. Rice, of Jamestown, N. Y., daughter of George W. and Mary Tew. She died October 24, 1879, and in August, 1881, Mr. Crocker married his present wife, the widow of Jacob Weed.

Politically, Mr. Crocker has always affiliated with the Democratic party. He has served as a member of the county board. He owns a farm adjoining Weyauwega, and has always taken an active interest in public improvements. Few men can, as he, look back over the entire business development of Weyauwega, noting its reverses, and more particularly its successes, almost from the inception of the settlement. His life has been devoted to its business interests, and his influence felt for good in every step of progress.

HON. FRANCIS A. DELEGLISE
(deceased), "the father of Antigo."

The life of this gentleman presents a striking example of industry and integrity conducting to eminent success, and of political consistency based on enlightened and moderate views—views at all times compatible with a generous toleration of the sentiments entertained by others, and commanding general confidence and esteem.

Mr. Deleglise was a native of Switzerland, born February 10, 1835, in Bagnes, Valais, a son of Morris and Catherine Deleglise, the former of whom was by profession a teacher and surveyor. In 1849, realizing that in the New World their numerous family would have greater advantages and broader opportunities for advancement and success in life, they emigrated to America, coming direct to Wisconsin, and locating first in Gibson township, Manitowoc county, where the mother died in 1854. Later the family moved to Shawano county, settling in Morris township, near Leopolis, where the father followed farming, dying there in 1877. The son Francis, our subject, was fourteen years old when he came with the rest of the family to Wisconsin. He had already received a fairly liberal public-school education, and his first occupation in this, to him, new country, was sailing on the lakes, a vocation he followed until he was seventeen years old, after which he worked in the woods during the winter season, assisting his father in locating settlers, in surveying, and in many other ways, to the best of his ability. At the age of twenty-one he married, and shortly afterward he and his young wife removed to Appleton, where they remained until 1877. During this time Mr. Deleglise was always more or less engaged in civil engineering, locating new settlers on homesteads, and other employment of a like nature, but during the first years of his residence in Appleton, when not thus occupied, followed different lines of work, being ever ready to turn his hand to any labor which would bring him remuneration. Thus he continued until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, in which he served over three years. He was among the first to respond to his adopted country's call for volunteers, enlisting June 28, 1861, in Company E, Sixth Wis. V. I., Capt. Marsten, of Appleton, commanding the company, in which he was speedily promoted to corporal. The regiment was, in the following July, attached to the army of the Potomac, and participated in all the battles of the "Iron Brigade." At Antietam, September 17, 1862, our subject was wounded, which necessitated his confinement to hospital; but he convalesced soon enough to be present at the battle of Gettysburg, July 1, 2 and 3, 1863, where, at the railroad grade, he was again wounded, and was taken prisoner. He did not long remain in the enemy's hands, however, as when they retreated they had to leave all the wounded behind. On July 16, 1864, he was honorably discharged from the service with the record of a valiant soldier, one who did his duty faithfully and loyally. But he suffered much in health, for when he enlisted his weight was 190 pounds, and when he left for his home the scales showed but 90 pounds—a loss of 100 pounds; and he painfully carried a bullet in his thigh till it was extracted at Madison at the time of his discharge. While recuperating Mr. Deleglise resumed the study of civil engineering, and became a proficient surveyor, in 1867 commencing the looking up and locating of lands in this part of the State. It was then that he, in reality, picked out the site for the future city of Antigo, entering lands and locating settlers on homesteads, and in 1877 he settled there with his family. In that same year he platted the village and commenced the sale of lots, which, and his after active connection with the place, brought him the well-merited title of "Father of Antigo." He was the first chairman of the city, and served as county treasurer for some time; dealt largely in real estate, and became possessed of extensive tracts of land in and around Antigo, having unbounded faith in the growth of the embryo city.

On November 29, 1856, Mr. Deleglise was united in marriage, at Two Rivers, Wis., with Miss Mary Bor, who was born January 1, 1835, in Taus, Bohemia, daughter of Simon and Dora (Kerzma) Bor, the parents of two children. The family came to America in 1855, settling at Gibson, Manitowoc county, and the father, who was a merchant in Europe, and a farmer in this country, died in Antigo in 1881; in his native land he served as a soldier eight years. To Mr. and Mrs. Deleglise were born children as follows: Mary T., now Mrs. John Deresch, of Antigo; Sophia E., wife of Samuel E. Leslie, of Antigo; Francis A. (deceased); John E.; Anna E., wife of Thomas Morrissey, of Antigo; Adelbert A.; Alexis L.; Henry (deceased), and Edmond, at home.

Mr. Deleglise was public-spirited and progressive from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, and the primary and great object of his ambition was the development and improvement of the village, town and city where he passed so many busy years of his life. He was liberal in all things, especially in Church and educational matters, in which latter he took special interest; in politics, he was, during the war, a Democrat, later a Republican, and in 1892 he was elected to the State Legislature, where he made a brilliant record as a legislator. In all things he was a most successful man, and when he died he left not only large landed interests in northern Wisconsin, but the record of one whose memory is inseparably connected with the rise and progress of this portion of the State, in all his efforts toward the consummation of which he was instigated by no spirit of selfishness or gain to himself beyond what is conceded to be a right due to every American citizen. He died March 25, 1894, in the full faith of the Roman Catholic Church, beloved and respected by all, regardless of party or religion, and deeply mourned by hosts of friends and acquaintances, as a man, locally speaking, not of to-day alone, but for all time.

WILLIAM H. WEED. In every community there are families that by their strong personality make deep and lasting impression upon the people about them, and by their well-guided energies give direction and momentum to the forming and growing industries about them. To no one, perhaps, is the town of Weyauwega more greatly indebted for its early prosperity than to Jacob Weed, one of its founders. He was a master spirit, fitted and willing to grapple with the problems and difficulties that must be solved and overcome in order to make an obscure and unpromising locality smile with the lasting fruits of industry. The son of Mr. Weed, in the person of him whose name heads this sketch, is now at the helm in directing some of the most important enterprises of Weyauwega.

Jacob Weed was born October 27, 1819, in Saratoga county, N. Y., a son of Alfred and Rolina (Hewett) Weed, natives of that county. Their children were nine in number, as follows: Harriet, deceased wife of Matthew West, a pioneer of Oshkosh; Walter H., a prominent merchant and lumberman of Oshkosh, Wis., who died in 1876; Jacob; James H., a resident of Oshkosh; Sarah, deceased wife of Corydon L. Rich, of Oshkosh township, Winnebago county; Mary, first wife of William G. Gumaer, died in 1856; Priscilla, second wife of William G. Gumaer, died in Weyauwega in 1876; Alfred, a resident of Ashland, Wis.; and Carolina, wife of Homer Chandler, of Chicago, Illinois.

The education of Jacob Weed was received in the common schools of Wayne county, N. Y. In 1847, with his two brothers, Walter H. and James H., he came to Wisconsin, settling in Vinland township, Winnebago county, where he purchased a tract of 800 acres in the forest, and became actively identified in developing the lumber interests of that locality. Here he was married, in 1849, to Miss Ann Elizabeth Gumaer, a native of Onondaga county, N. Y., reared and educated in Washington, D. C., and a daughter of Elias De Puy and Mary (Lewis) Gumaer, natives of Ulster county, N. Y. Elias D. Gumaer was a contractor of public works. He built, as a contractor, part of the Erie canal, and while completing a contract to construct the canal from Georgetown, D. C., to the Navy Yard, was prostrated with quick consumption, and died soon after, in 1844, at his home in Manlius, N. Y. His widow and many of the children removed to Wisconsin, and the latter became closely identified with the development of the State. There were nine children: Ann Elizabeth, wife of Jacob Weed; Margaret, wife of Jacob Devens, of Vinland township, Winnebago county, died in 1880; Martha, wife of Louis Bostedo, a pioneer of Weyauwega, died in 1881; Jane, widow of Richard Holdsworth, of Washington, D. C., her present home being at Penn Yan, N. Y.; Emily, who died in Oshkosh in 1876; Mary, wife of Walter H. Weed, of Oshkosh, died in 1877; Elias De Puy, who was the first county judge of Shawano county, and who died in Shawano in 1879; William G., a prominent pioneer of Weyauwega, who died in November, 1885, and Charles L., a former prominent resident of Weyauwega, and now a resident of Lincoln, Nebraska.

After his marriage Jacob Weed settled in Winnebago county, and with his brothers built up a lumbering and mercantile business which gradually extended into Wau-paca county. As early as 1848 Amos Dodge, James Hicks, M. Lewis and H. Tourtelotte obtained possession of a fine water-power on the site of Weyauwega, and erected a dam and mill. The enterprise encountered financial embarrassments, and led a precarious existence for a number of years, until sold to Jacob Weed and Benjamin Birdsell. W. G. Gumaer and Louis Bostedo afterward acquired an interest in the property, and in 1855 Weed, Birdsell & Co. erected the flour-mill still operated by the Weed and Gumaer Manufacturing Co., the original cost of building, machinery, etc., being $20,000. The business life of Jacob Weed was very active. Frequently he made trips afoot to Green Bay, and rarely knew the meaning of a leisure moment. Yet his mind was always receptive to charitable or public enterprises, and he is kindly remembered for his many deeds of benevolence and public improvement. He died in 1867, and his widow subsequently married Jerome Crocker, a prominent merchant and manufacturer of Weyauwega. To Jacob Weed and wife two children were born—William H., and Ella V., wife of A. J. Kirkwood, of Chicago, Ill. Mrs. Kirkwood's children are Ella Weed and Arthur William.

William H. Weed, president of the Weed & Gumaer Manufacturing Co., secretary of the Badger Basket Manufacturing Co., and an associate in the banking firm of Weed, Gumaer & Co., is one of the most progressive and thorough business men of Waupaca county. He was born at Vinland, Winnebago county, in 1851, and his youth and boyhood were spent at Weyauwega, and his education obtained in the home schools and at Oshkosh. In 1870, at the age of nineteen years, he became associated with the Weyauwega Bank, giving it his exclusive attention until 1883, when he was elected the vice-president of the milling company, and in 1890 was advanced to its presidency. The output of the mill is 150 barrels per day, and the company, besides in flour and feed, deals extensively in lumber, lath, shingles and moldings. The Badger Basket Manufacturing Co. was organized in 1884, Mr. Weed being one of its active promoters. The building was erected the same year, and twenty-six employes are required to manufacture the product for which the energetic owners find a ready market. The building is a two-story structure, 40x60 feet in size. The mill building is a substantial structure, 45x50 feet, two-and-a-half stories high, with an oval elevator having a storage capacity of 30,000 bushels. It is a fully-equipped roller-mill, with two systems for wheat and rye. The planing and saw mill is a two-story structure 40x60 feet.

Mr. Weed was married at Weyauwega, in 1879, to Miss Jennie Smith, a native of Berlin, Wis. She died in 1882, leaving one child, Jacob. In 1886 Mr. Weed was married at Waupaca to Miss Margaret Reed, daughter of Hon. Myron and Julia (Hanson) Reed. Mr. Reed was born in Massena, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., September 19, 1836. He was educated in the common schools and at Union Academy, Belleville, N. Y. Entering the law school at Albany University in 1857, he was admitted to practice in 1858. The following year he came to Waupaca, Wis., and formed a law partnership with E. L. Browne, O. E. Druetzer and M. H. Sessions, which continued until 1871. Mr. Reed was prominent in county politics, and filled many local offices, including those of mayor, clerk, supervisor, etc. In 1871 he was elected State senator, his own partner contesting on the opposite ticket for the honor. While in the Senate he secured, almost by his own unaided efforts, the adoption of Article 4 of the amendment to the Constitution. Mr. Reed has been grand master of the State of Wisconsin, high priest of Waupaca Chapter No. 39, R. A. M., Master of Waupaca Lodge No. 123, F. and A. M., and a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is now a resident of West Superior, Wisconsin.

Mr. Weed is a member and treasurer of Weyauwega Lodge No. 82, and a member of Waupaca Chapter No. 123, R. A. M. He is a Democrat in politics, and has served as a member of the county board.

DEWITT S. JOHNSON, the popular and courteous postmaster at Rhineland, Oneida county, is a native of Wisconsin, born July 23, 1851, in the city of Appleton.

William Johnson, father of our subject, was born July 27, 1811, at Philadelphia, Penn., and his earliest recollection was of life in Columbia county, in the same State, where he received such tuition as the country schools of that period afforded. His mother died when he was very young, and the family became separated. William lived with a cousin on a farm until he was sixteen years of age, and passed the following two years in learning the wagon-maker's trade. Proceeding to Oswego, N. Y., where a brother was living, he remained in that place eleven years, during which time he became master also of the carpenter's trade. Locating at Syracuse, he for five years was there engaged in contracting and building, at the end of that period moving to New York City, where he followed the same line of business some five years. Among buildings for which he had contracts were a cut-stone hotel at Syracuse, costing two hundred thousand dollars; another at Oswego, costing one hundred and fifty thousand dollars; numerous fine buildings in New York City, and many costly residences at Brooklyn Heights. In 1850, having met with serious business reverses, he arranged his affairs as advantageously as possible, and came to Appleton, which was then in the midst of a decidedly new region, as far as settlements were concerned. Here he joined his wife's father, Amos A. Story, who had the contract for building the Green Bay & Mississippi canal, from the Wisconsin river to Green Bay, and Mr. Johnson, who was made foreman, was engaged on this work about two years when the company sold out. He then proceeded to Chicago and entered into contract to build depots for the Illinois Central Railroad Company, remaining with that company three years. Upon his return to Appleton he became interested with others in the sawmill business, but sold his interest in 1871, and in company with Mr. Mory built a gristmill; disposing, however, of his share of the property inside of two years, he began the manufacture of rakes, seed-sowers and woodwork of all descriptions. Meeting with fresh reverses about two years later, he was obliged to relinquish that line of work, after which he was not steadily engaged in business. He superintended the construction of a number of buildings, and busied himself in various ways, but a few years preceding his death he lived a retired life. Mr. Johnson died November 19, 1894, aged eighty-three years, in which connection we glean the following from the Appleton Daily Post of November 20, the day after: strength all day yesterday. Last night the end came quietly, and his spirit entered into the great hereafter to claim the reward of a well-spent life. Mr. Johnson had been a resident of Appleton for forty-four years, and during all that period possessed the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens to a degree which falls to the lot of few men. In his passing is removed another of the sturdy personalities which bind the Appleton of the present to that Appleton of the early 'fifties' which was little more than a name and a clearing in the virgin forest."

In politics Mr. Johnson was a Democrat, and he served as city treasurer, alderman, and chairman of the board of supervisors; was also mayor of Appleton three terms during the war of the Rebellion. In 1867 he was appointed United States collector of customs for this District, the duties of which office he discharged for two years. He was a member of the Masonic Order twenty-five years, and became an Odd Fellow in 1842, being at the time of his death the oldest member of the latter organization in Appleton. He was married in Syracuse, N. Y., May 18, 1845, to Miss Lydia Sophia Story, a native of that State, daughter of Amos A. and Sarah (Tourtelotte) Story, and eight children were born to this union, viz.: Amos A., DeWitt S., Sarah Lois, Frances S., Ina B. and John Allen, living, and Lina B. and William B., deceased. John Johnson, grandfather of William Johnson, was a mason by trade. He married Hannah Duberry, and reared a family of seven children—Charles, David, James P., Gilbert, Eliza, William and Ellen.

The subject proper of these lines, whose name introduces this sketch, received his education at the public schools of his native city, and deciding on making the printing trade his life work commenced at the age of twenty-one to inquire into its many mysteries in the office of the Crescent at Appleton, finishing his apprenticeship in the Riverside Job Office, Milwaukee, in which latter establishment he remained two years. Subsequently taking up his residence in Manitowoc, he had charge there of the Pilot one year, thence returned to Appleton, where he served as foreman in the office of the Cres- cent until 1884, at which time he went to Merrill, working at his trade there a few months. In 1885 he established the West Merrill Herald, which paper he in the fall of the following year moved to Rhinelander, changing its name to Oneida County Herald, and conducting it up to some time in 1890, when he sold it out, having been elected to the office of register of deeds for Oneida county. This incumbency he filled until 1894, in which year he received the appointment of postmaster at Rhinelander, his present position.

In 1874, at Appleton, Wis., Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Beulah A. Johnson, of Clinton, Wis., daughter of Job J. and Kate (Strobridge) Johnson, well-to-do farming people, both natives of Cortland county, N. Y., the parents of four children—Seth, Jay, Beulah A. and Ellen. Both parents died in 1892, within one week. To this marriage of Mr. Johnson there were born three children—DeWitt S., Jr., Bryant A. and Beulah A. The mother of these died in 1881, and in 1889, at Rhinelander, Mr. Johnson for his second wife married Miss Maud Jenkinson, who was born in Brandon, Wis., the result of which union is one child—George William—whose mother was called to her long home in January, 1892. In politics our subject is a staunch Democrat, and has always been a leader in his party; was a delegate to the State convention that elected Peck governor of Wisconsin the first time. Socially he is a member of the I.O.O.F. In 1874, when he was twenty-three years of age, he paid a year's visit to the Pacific coast, spending most of his time in San Francisco.

DANIEL HAIGHT PULCIFER, than whom there is no one better known throughout the entire State of Wisconsin, in both public and private life, is a man of whom the city and county of Shawano may well feel proud.

He is a native of Vermont, born at Vergennes, Addison county, November 16, 1834, and comes of a sturdy race, for the most part farmers who live by honest toil in the valleys of the Green Mountains. His father, John Pulcifer, a ship carpenter by trade, and a native of New York State, married Mary Haight, who was of the same nativity, and they had a family of thirteen children, six of them being sons—of whom the following reached maturity: Daniel H., subject of sketch; Edwin D., a wealthy farmer of Plainview, Pierce Co., Neb., where he is prominent in local politics as a staunch Republican; and Jane E., Mrs. Charles Connely, of Syracuse, N. Y.; Mary E., Mrs. Dennis Darling, of near Syracuse, N. Y.; Martha E., Mrs. William H. Wright, of Syracuse, N. Y.; Bertha, Mrs. David Jones, of Shawano, Wis.; and Dora R., Mrs. Parmelee W. Ackerman, of Shawano, Wisconsin.

Owing to an unfortunate infirmity, the father of this large family was unable to wholly support them, and as a consequence much fell upon the shoulders of the eldest son, our subject, who for some years was the mainstay of the family, the entire support, in fact; but he was equal to the task, as the spirit of determination and resoluteness, which has so forcibly characterized his entire after life, was a dominant feature in his boyhood years. Thus it can be readily understood how it was that his education was so limited that at the age of twenty he could read with great difficulty, and write not at all, much of what he did know having been gained by practical experience in a country printing office which he entered as an apprentice at the age of fourteen years, at Whitehall, N. Y., and where he had to do all the chores that usually fall to the lot of a happy printer's "devil." In 1855, at the age of twenty-one years, he migrated to Wisconsin, locating at Oasis, Waushara county; but in February, 1865, he removed to Shawano, where his energy, honesty and genial temperament soon made him one of the popular citizens of that new section. In the meantime he had some more newspaper-office experience, where he had little difficulty in appreciating the necessity of improving what little education he had, and, with all the energy of a strong physical and mental constitution, he proceeded with a fixed determination, not only to learn but even to excel, if possible. In the spring of 1858 he made a bold dash into the arena of journalism by starting, at Pine River, Wis., the Pine River Argus, which soon afterward was merged into the Waushara County Argus, the plant being removed to Wautonia, where Mr. Pulcifer succeeded, by ingenuity and finessing, in securing the county printing, taking it out of the hands of another office, and this proved a source of considerable profit to him. Later he sold out the Argus, and became editor of the Plover Times, at Plover, Portage county; still later he became editor and proprietor of the Columbus Republican, at Columbus, Wis., so continuing until in 1863 he became connected with the Commonwealth, at Fond du Lac (daily and weekly), as local editor. Severing his connection with this journal in February, 1865, Mr. Pulcifer came, as already related, to Shawano (his family following him a few days later), to take charge of the Journal, a thriving newspaper of that city, with which he was connected some time. In 1889 he became a member of the present firm of Kuckuk & Pulcifer, general merchants, Shawano.

Our subject filled various offices, among them those of clerk of the court, sheriff and deputy U. S. marshal, and served three terms as mayor of the city of Shawano. In 1866 he was elected to represent the District of which Shawano county formed a part in the Assembly, and was again chosen in 1878, each time by an unusual majority. He was also sergeant-at-arms of the Assembly in 1880. As a legislator he was practical and influential. His firm convictions, clear perception, and affable, though brusque, manner, made him a universal favorite with members of both political parties. He compiled the Blue Book for 1879, and did it as well as it had ever been done before or has been since. In 1882 he was appointed, by Postmaster-general Howe, post office inspector, and he was regarded as one of the shrewdest and most valuable officials in that most difficult branch of the service. Reminiscences of his experience would make an interesting volume, and thousands of post offices were subject to his examination. Among those agencies of Uncle Sam he was noted for his patient kindness in giving instruction and counsel to the inexperienced, and in meting out justice fearlessly in cases of dishonesty or wilful negligence. Patience, shrewdness, industry and cool judgment are requisites of a successful inspector, and few officials possess these qualities in a greater degree than did Mr. Pulcifer. He was continuously retained in his position in spite of political changes, serving as inspector under Postmaster-general Howe, Gen. Gresham, Frank Hatton, William F. Vilas, Don E. Dickinson, John Wanamaker and W. S. Bissell, under all of which administrations he was never once censured for failing to do the work assigned to him. His duties in the capacity of post office inspector took him into thirty other States and Territories, and his labors in Arkansas, Missouri, Mississippi, North Carolina, Virginia and other Southern States gave him a rare opportunity to acquaint himself with the customs and habits of the people of those sections; and his after conversations about them and their ways were regarded by his friends as being "as entertaining as a lecture." As sheriff he was known for his utter fearlessness in the discharge of his duty. On several occasions he arrested parties who drew revolvers and knives on him, but Sheriff Pulcifer was always quick and strong enough to arrest his man without serious injury, although he was wounded on one occasion, necessitating a painful and dangerous surgical operation.

On July 6, 1856, Mr. Pulcifer was married at Oasis, Waushara Co., Wis., to Miss Anna E. Wright, a native of New York State, born May 26, 1840, whence when a girl she accompanied her parents, Orvil and Emily Wright, to Wisconsin, their first new western home being made at Kenosha. Mr. Wright was a well-to-do farmer, who drove his own team all the way from New York State to Wisconsin. To Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Pulcifer were born children as follows: Orvil W., who was a farmer in South Dakota, dying there at the age of twenty-seven years; John H., a prosperous merchant of Shawano, who married Laura E. McLaughlin, at White Lake, S. D., in 1885; Charles, deceased in infancy, and Mary E., now Mrs. Anton Kuckuk, of Shawano. In his political preferences Mr. Pulcifer has always been a staunch Republican since the organization of that party, and he was the first man, in the Republican State Convention of 1880, to vote for Gen. Grant (as a delegate from the First Senatorial District). During the Harrison Convention of 1892, held at Minneapolis, he was appointed messenger, duties of importance and secrecy connected with the Convention being entrusted to him. It is a notable fact that he was never beaten as a candidate for office, and that he always ran largely ahead of his ticket. Few men have done more effective work for their party; but in the performance of official duties he knew no party, no friend, no enemy—he simply did his duty, and always did it well. Socially Mr. Pulcifer is a Freemason, and was instrumental in establishing a Lodge of that Fraternity at Shawano. He has always been a total abstainer, and has taken a more or less active part in the temperance cause, for several years past having been a prominent member of the Temple of Honor in Wisconsin, in which Order he in 1883-84 was grand chief templar of the State.

Mr. Pulcifer owns one of the finest private collections of minerals, curios, etc., to be found in the State, many of which are of much value; and besides what he has in his own cabinet he has presented many interesting specimens to the Wisconsin State Historical Society and to Lawrence University, Appleton. His collection is the result of fifteen years research throughout the several States he has visited, and to give an idea as to its value it may be further mentioned that Mr. Pulcifer carries an insurance on it of $500.00. He has amassed considerable property, owns a pleasant home in Shawano, with large, fine, well-kept lawn, shaded with pines and oaks. The village of Pulcifer, in Green Valley township, Shawano county, was named in his honor. Such is a brief sketch of one of Wisconsin's typical self-made men and representative successful business citizens, one possessed of much natural ability, supported by a due allowance of courage, acumen and, perhaps best of all, sound judgment in all his acts, and to be relied upon as a friend under all circumstances.

HON. P. B. CHAMPAGNE (deceased). The gentleman, whose life we propose to here briefly sketch, in his day laid no claims to political distinction, far less to military renown. His triumphs may have been of a less brilliant order; but whether less associated with the well-being of his race, and with developing the resources, and fortifying the powers of the nation than those of a political leader or a military chieftain, the true friends of humanity must judge.

Mr. Champagne was a Canadian by birth, born in St. Felix de Valois, Joliette county, Province of Quebec, December 8, 1845, son of Nelson and Amelia Champagne, well-to-do farming people, natives of France, who emigrated to Canada, where they married and had children as follows: Three sons—P. B., John N. and Nasaire—and two daughters—Mrs. L. Coulters and Mrs. R. Bressett, of whom two sons and two daughters are living with their widowed mother at the old home in Canada; the father died several years ago. At the schools of his place of birth our subject received his education, and when seventeen years old, in 1862, he came to Wisconsin, locating at Grand Rapids, Wood county, where he found employment with Francis Byron, a lumberman, with whom he worked some time, later, for one winter, lumbering for H. A. Keyes, who afterward said of Mr. Champagne: "He was a hard worker, one who took as much interest in my affairs as if they were his own, and I never employed a better man." After that winter Mr. Champagne returned to the employ of Mr. Byron, and with him remained, in the capacity of superintendent of logging, until embarking in business for his own account. For two years he followed mercantile trade at Wausau, Marathon county, after which he returned to the lumber business, continuing to make his home, however, in Wausau until 1880. When he sold out his store at Wausau he moved to Grand Father Rock Falls, Lincoln county, where his family spent their winters, their real home being in Wausau, in order to be near his logging interests, and the post office at that place was named in his honor. When the town of Rock Falls was organized he represented it at the county board three years. In 1882 he moved to Merrill (at that time called "Jenny"), Lincoln county, and he rerepresented the town of Jenny at the county board. In 1881 he incorporated the Lincoln Lumber Co., from which he soon afterward withdrew, and built the mill now owned by the Champagne Lumber Co.; then organized the P. B. Champagne Lumber Co., he being president and treasurer. This concern was in turn succeeded by the Champagne Lumber Co., our subject being treasurer and general manager thereof, which position he was filling at the time of his death. He was the most extensive lumberman on the Wisconsin river, and was possessed of superior business ability, which enabled him to weather every financial storm, of which, in his wide and long experience, there were not a few.

Mr. Champagne passed from earth July 1, 1891, after an illness of four weeks, and had the largest and most imposing funeral ever held in Merrill. It was conducted under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity, special trains bringing mourning friends and brother Masons from Wausau, Grand Rapids, Marshfield, Stevens Point and many other places. He was a most progressive business man, engaged in many enterprises, was very public-spirited, and made many friends, who one and all mourned the taking away of a good citizen. In the early days of Lincoln county he was a conspicuous member of all the Republican gatherings, for a long time was chairman of the Republican County Committee, and to him was due in the main, the success of that party in the county. In 1883 he was sent to the Assembly to represent his District, but declined re-election, though he served with distinction and eminent ability. In Merrill he did the heaviest mercantile business of any, and was never tired of giving both time and money toward the advancement and prosperity of that then rising young city. To the stock of the First National Bank of Merrill he was one of the first to subscribe, and was vice-president of the Merrill Railway and Lighting Co. Socially, he was an enthusiastic Free Mason, and at the time of his death was of the 32nd degree. Prominent among his numerous friends was Alexander Stewart—a bosom friend, he may be called—who was Mr. Champagne's first backer in business. Truly he was a remarkable man, one at all times commanding the esteem of his fellowmen—rich and poor alike—for he was universally esteemed and beloved.

On July 29, 1871, Mr. Champagne was married, at Nile, Allegany Co., N. Y., to Miss Alice G. Coon, youngest daughter of Elijah H. and Prudence (Bowler) Coon, and three children were born to them—Percy Beaugrand, now (September, 1895), twenty-three years old, a graduate of Ann Arbor, Mich., class of '94 (he is practicing law in Detroit, Mich.); Marie and Stella, attending school at Kenosha, Wisconsin.

WR. BINKELMAN. There is perhaps no more prominent business man in the northern part of Waupaca county than Mr. Binkelman. He has been farmer, school teacher and merchant, and, on his way upward to a comfortable competence, has also engaged in various other vocations. His present mercantile establishment is the largest in the village of Marion.

Mr. Binkelman was born in Joliet, Ill., in 1849, son of Leonard and Jane (McCormick) Binkelman, the father a native of Germany, the mother of Irish extraction. Leonard Binkelman was a ship builder by trade, and for many years was a resident of Joliet, removing thence in 1852 to Manitowoc, Wis., where he also followed his trade. Mrs. Binkelman died in 1894, and he now resides with his son, W. R., at Marion. Their children were: W. R.; Mary Jane, wife of William Clark, of Manitowoc; Fred, and Emma E., wife of John Bodwin, of East Gibson, Manitowoc county. W. R. Binkelman was reared in Manitowoc, and after leaving the schools there clerked in a grocery store for some time, after which for about ten years he was engaged in the confectionery business at Manitowoc. In 1872 Mr. Binkelman moved to Shawano county, and there engaged in farming, teaching school and speculating in land for several years, teaching in Grant and Belle Plaine townships, and also in Dupont township, Waupaca county. In 1876, he removed to the latter township, locating on a tract of land one and half miles distant from Marion. Three years later he opened a hardware store at Marion, where he has since been continuously in business. There was only one store in the village when he located there, that of McDonald & Ramsdell, a firm which has since gone out of business. The village contained but three houses, Mr. Binkelman erecting the fifth building, but there is now a population of 800, and it is still growing rapidly. He erected his present building, a good two-story frame, in 1881, and carries a full line of hardware and farm machinery, the most valuable stock of goods in Dupont township. He is a notary public, and for thirteen years, up to January 1, 1895, he was in the insurance business. In earlier life Mr. Binkelman filed cross-cut saws and adopted various other honest and honorable means of obtaining a start in life, and he began business at Marion with only $350, his present extensive trade testifying to his abundant, perhaps unequalled, success at this point.

Mr. Binkelman was married, in 1871, to Miss Mary M. Ramsdell, who was born in Manitowoc Rapids, daughter of Erastus Ramsdell, an early pioneer of Manitowoc country, who subsequently moved to Dupont township, where he died in 1890. To Mr. and Mrs. Binkelman came six children, five of whom are now living: Olla A., Irvine, Luella, Lindon J. and Murrell. Mark died at the age of eight years. In politics Mr. Binkelman is a Republican, and socially he is a charter member of Marion Lodge No. 256, I. O. O. F., in which he has passed all the Chairs, and is now serving as chaplain. He attends the M. E. Church, and his eldest daughter, Olla A., is superintendent of the Sunday-school of that flourishing Church. In January, 1895, Mr. Binkelman was elected chairman of Dupont township; he was clerk of the courts of Waupaca county from 1884 to 1888; was postmaster at Marion under President Harrison from 1888 to 1892, resigning in the latter year; has been town clerk of Dupont for five years; in January, 1895, was appointed chairman of the town board, and, in the spring of that year was elected chairman, receiving 241 votes out of a total of 307, a fact which testifies better than words to his popularity. He is well known throughout Waupaca county, and commands the esteem and good fellowship of all who know him.

JEFF. WOODNORTH, publisher and editor of the Waupaca Record, is a native of New York City, son of Paul S. and Sarah (Astley) Woodnorth, both natives of Stourbridge, Worcestershire, England.

Paul S. Woodnorth was born January 16, 1815, and when a boy was apprenticed by his widowed mother to a tailor. He learned the trade, and at nineteen ran away and worked his passage to America aboard a sailing vessel, landing at New York, after six weeks at sea, with one cent in his pocket. He found employment in the new city, and for eleven years worked faithfully at his trade, then, in 1845, revisited his old home in England. Returning, he established himself in business at the corner of 29th street and Third avenue, New York City, prospering until fire (during the winter of 1848-49) destroyed his shop and left him penniless. The gold excitement was then intense, and selling his lot Mr. Woodnorth started for California via the Isthmus. He was successful in prospecting at first, and later found employment as a cook. In accidentally purchasing supplies in excess he sold the surplus at a profit so great that a new business opened before his eyes, and he quickly seized the opportunity. He purchased a schooner and plied between various points, making money rapidly, until his clerk during a trip absconded with all his effects, and left him bankrupt. He began mining again, but in 1851 he returned to New York City and resumed his trade.

Here he was married to Mrs. Sarah (Astley) Page, widow of Joseph H. Page and daughter of Robert Astley. Mr. Woodnorth adopted the children of Mrs. Page, and bestowed upon them his name. In addition to his tailoring establishment a china store was added, which his wife conducted. Owing to Mrs. Woodnorth's failing health Mr. Woodnorth bargained in New York for some land in Royalton township, Waupaca Co., Wis., on misrepresentation paying an exorbitant price for the same, and in 1856 started with his family by lake for his new western home. The first improvement had yet to be made on the property. Mr. Woodnorth secured the services of two men to build a log house while he boarded at a neighbor's. Eighteen months later he traded the farm for twenty acres in Section 32, Waupaca township, moving thereon and following his trade of tailoring while the boys did a little farming. About this time Mr. Woodnorth put to use the experience as a cook which he had picked up on his voyage to California, and secured a position as cook for a gang of men who were constructing a railroad through Waupaca county. In 1869 he sold his land and removed to Waupaca, where for some years he remained in business. Mrs. Woodnorth died in January, 1882; Mr. Woodnorth is still living, a well-preserved old gentleman of eighty years. The children who attained majority are as follows: Joseph H., now United States pension agent at Milwaukee, a veteran of Company G, Twenty-first Wis. V. I., and for many years a prominent druggist at Waupaca; Franklin S., who served in Company I, Seventeenth Wis. V. I., and is now a druggist at Manawa, Wis.; Amelia P., wife of Thomas Pipe, hardware merchant, at Waupaca; Jeff., the subject of this sketch; George R., of Bayfield county, Wis., and Isabel E., now Mrs. Frank Houseman, of Milwaukee.

Jeff. Woodnorth was a pupil in the "Old White School" at Waupaca, under the instruction of Mrs. Marcus Burham, now of Lind. He displayed little aptitude for farm work, but was eager for an education, and received special instruction from several principals who were later at the head of the Waupaca schools. Possessing a retentive memory, he learned rapidly and looked forward to a liberal education; but at the age of eighteen he found himself engaged in his life work. He had entered the office of the Waupaca County Republican, and seven years later was its foreman and job printer, when he went to Oshkosh with his employer, C. M. Bright, who had purchased the Oshkosh Times. Six months later Mr. Woodnorth returned to Waupaca; then for four years he was on his father's farm in Lanark township, Portage county, keeping "bachelor hall" with his brother.

In January, 1885, he entered the law office of E. L. Browne, as a student, and two-and-a-half years later was about ready to take his examination for admission to the bar, when he was induced to become foreman of the Waupaca Post, then edited by E. E. Gordon. A few months later, in August, 1887, he took charge of the paper as editor, and in April, 1888, he and his brother George purchased a one-fourth interest in the paper, Mr. Woodnorth remaining in charge. The brothers sold their interest to Mr. Gordon in December, 1889, and in June, 1890, Mr. Woodnorth became editor of The Towner News and Stockman at Towner, McHenry Co., N. Dak., remaining until January 1, 1891. In March, 1891, he entered the office of the Waupaca County Republican as job printer and all-round newspaper man, remaining until March 13, 1893, when he purchased a half interest in the job office, which later became part of the Waupaca Record plant, D. L. Stinchfield being his partner. The first number of the Record was issued from this office March 17, 1894, with Stinchfield & Woodnorth as proprietors. Three months later Mr. Woodnorth became sole proprietor, and has since conducted the paper. The Record is a weekly, 16-page, 3-column paper, the form being original in the office where used, and quite a deviation from the usual form of newspapers. It is non-partisan in politics, and an advocate of good government. The growth of the Record has been phenomenal, probably without a parallel as regards circulation and popularity.

CYRUS STROBRIDGE, now a retired merchant and business man, has spent a lifetime of activity and usefulness in Marathon county, and is one of its most worthy and highly-respected citizens. He was born in Cortland county, N. Y., May 24, 1823, and is a son of George A. and Abigail (Lull) Strobridge, both natives of the Empire State. Of their seven children four survive: Mrs. Sophrona Cook, widow of Henry Cook, living at Salt Lake, Utah; James, residing in Michigan; Cyrus, the subject of this sketch; and Julia, widow of the late Joshua C. Kline, of Bradford county, Penn. The mother died when Cyrus was about one-year old, and the father about the year of 1855, removed to Merrill, Wis., where he died in 1866.

Our subject attended the common schools of his home in New York State, and when fourteen years of age went to Yates county, N. Y., where he worked on a farm until he was twenty-one years old. Then he removed to Bradford county, Penn., whither his father in the meantime had removed. Here he was engaged in lumbering for several years, and quite naturally became interested in the great lumbering regions of northern Wisconsin. Accordingly, in 1848 he came west, locating at what is now called Pine River, about five miles from Merrill, Lincoln county, where for three years he engaged in lumbering pursuits. In 1851 Mr. Strobridge returned to Bradford county, Penn., where he was married, in 1852, to Miss Lydia Jane, daughter of John and Alvina Kline, natives of that county. Remaining in Pennsylvania for about five years, engaging there at farming, Mr. Strobridge in 1856 again started for the great Northwest, this time with a family. At Merrill (then called "Jenny") he built the pioneer hotel, calling it the "Jenny House," and for seven years he provided accommodations for man and beast at this outpost of an advancing wave of civilization, during which time he served four years as postmaster (the first postmaster at that place), also as first assessor. He then disposed of his hotel business and engaged in mercantile pursuits. In the spring of 1870 he sold his stock of merchandise and removed to Wausau, where he has since resided, excepting the two years (1880 to 1882) he was again in business at Merrill. During his career as a merchant at Wausau Mr. Strobridge built up a large trade, and became one of the leading business men of the city; of late years he has retired from active life.

Mr. Strobridge is a staunch Republican, but has never aspired for office, though he has served several terms as assessor and supervisor of Marathon county. Of his four children, three survive: Sarah, wife of Walter Alexander (a prominent lumberman of Wausau, and a member of the firm of Alexander, Stewart & Co.), Libbie, and France D. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Strobridge has been an upright, honorable business man, and his successful career has been alike creditable to himself and to Marathon county.

EDWARD C. KRETLOW, the popular and efficient register of deeds for Marathon county, is a splendid type of the self-made man. He has energy, decision, integrity, affability. He has aims in life, and he sets resolutely about to attain those aims. He has been a man of action, and in his constant contact with men he has, by his manner and character, created a favorable impression. Few men are more popular than he.

Mr. Kretlow was born in Germany, July 22, 1852, a son of Edward and Frederica (Schmidt) Kretlow. In 1855 the parents with their family left the Fatherland for America, and landing at New York at once proceeded westward to Wisconsin, locating at Milwaukee. Here for many years the father was a cigar manufacturer; he is still living at that city a hearty old gentleman of seventy-five years. His faithful wife passed from earth December 19, 1893. To Edward and Frederica Kretlow seven children were born, five of whom survive, as follows: Louis, who conducts Kretlow's dancing academy, at No. 401-403 Webster avenue, Chicago; Emil, of Wausau; Edward C., subject of this sketch; Otto, of Milwaukee, and Julius, of Chicago. The family has inherited musical talent of a high order, and can play any instrument. Three of the sons—Louis, Emil and Otto—are leaders of musical bands.

Our subject received his education in the public schools of Milwaukee, and he also took a course in the Spencer Business College, of that city, graduating from the institution in 1866, at the age of fourteen years. He had also, by that time, learned the trade of cigar maker from his father. In 1866 he came to Wausau, and for three years he was a salesman, and also deputy register of deeds. From 1869 to 1871 he lived at Chicago, where he followed his trade as a cigar manufacturer. Returning to Wausau in 1871, he for three years engaged in the insurance business with C. H. Mueller; then in 1874 he again took up the manufacture of cigars, and continued in the business uninterruptedly until 1893. During this period he was also bookkeeper for Heinemann Bros., of Wausau, from 1882 to 1888. In the latter year he was elected city clerk, and he filled that office for two years; then in 1890 he was elected register of deeds, and in November, 1894, was re-elected to that important county office, on the Democratic ticket.

Mr. Kretlow was married in Wausau, in 1873, to Miss Johanna Starge, daughter of Gotlieb and Frederica Starge, natives of Germany. To this union one child has come, Louis J., who was born May 18, 1874, and is now deputy register of deeds for Marathon county. Mr. Kretlow is a member of Wausau Lodge No. 215, I. O. O. F., also of the Sons of Hermann, the A. O. U. W., American Legion of Honor, and other minor societies. In political views he is an earnest Democrat, and he is an active worker in the ranks of that party.

EDWARD PAYSON BRIDGMAN was one of the first settlers of Antigo, Langlade county, and comes of well-known New England ancestors, who have been mostly farmers, and also active in religious matters, being identified with the Congregational Church.

The parents of our subject were Ansel and Salome (Graves) Bridgman, the former of whom was born in Northampton, Mass., in 1802, and was a Congregational minister.

The father of Ansel was Joseph Bridgman, who married Mary Judd, and they had eight children. The Bridgmans date their ancestry back to James Bridgman, who came to this country in 1640 from Winchester, England, and our subject is of the eighth generation, and is the only son of his parents. Ansel Bridgman was first married in Massachusetts to Salome Graves, who died in 1836. He then, in 1837, married Sarepta Pool, and died in 1838. No children were born of this union. Mrs. Bridgman afterward married a Mr. Ellsworth, and they had one son, Ansel, who lives in Ludington, Michigan.

Edward P. Bridgman, the subject of this sketch, was born in Huntsburg, Ohio, March 7, 1834, and when five years of age was adopted by his uncle, John Bridgman, who lived in Northampton, Mass., and was a farmer. Here Edward lived until he was of age, in the meantime pursuing his studies at the State Normal School in Westfield, Mass. In 1856 he went to Kansas, enlisted under the famous John Brown, and was in the fight at Ossawatimie. Owing to political conditions and pro-slavery sentiment of Missouri, it was unsafe to remain, so he returned to his former home, and again took up his studies in the Normal School, from which institution he was graduated in 1860. In August, 1862, he enlisted as a private in the Thirty-seventh Mass. V. I., and served three years in the Army of the Potomac, being in seventeen battles and engagements, but escaping without a wound. His first battle was that of Fredericksburg, his last being the memorable one at which Lee surrendered in 1865.

After his discharge from the army in 1865, Mr. Bridgman returned to Northampton, Mass., and engaged in the boot and shoe business, which he carried on some eight years. In 1874 he came to Wisconsin, and was connected with a trading post store on the Menominee reservation, remaining there four years. In 1879 Mr. Bridgman took up a homestead in Polar township, Langlade county, being piloted to his new home by Indians. Mrs. Bridgman riding a pony for thirty miles. Here they lived three years, cleared seven acres of land, enduring some hardships, but being fairly prospered in their work. In the fall of 1882 they returned east on a visit, and remained until June of the following year, when they came back to the farm. In October of that year they settled in Antigo, and Mr. Bridgman started a store, but did not continue it very long. Since that time he has dealt in real estate, and in 1888 became interested in a broom-handle factory. In 1893 a stock company was formed for this industry, in which Mr. Bridgman took stock, and was made one of the directors and also secretary of the company.

Our subject was married January 1, 1877, on the Indian reservation, to Miss Sophia B. Dresser, who was born at Goshen, Hampshire Co., Mass., March 30, 1846, a daughter of Caleb C. and Julia M. (White) Dresser. In this family were eight children, as follows: Sophia B., Albert B., Helen M., Edward W., Charles, Martha H., Laura M., and Hattie F., also two that died in infancy. The father, who was a carpenter and millwright, was born in Peru, Mass., December 19, 1813, and died at Goshen, same State, March 25, 1880. His father, Moses Dresser, was also a native of Massachusetts. The Dresser family date back for many years, and are characterized by their anti-slavery sentiments and strong character. Caleb Cushman, Grandmother Dresser's father, was a descendant of Robert Cushman—one of the Pilgrim Fathers, who was born about the year 1580—and Mary Allerton, the youngest passenger on the "Mayflower." He preached the first sermon ever printed in America. This was in Plymouth, Mass., where a fine monument has been erected to his memory. In early times they were mostly farmers, but later were engaged largely in the professions, many being ministers and missionaries. Mrs. Julia White Dresser, mother of Mrs. Bridgman, was the daughter of Deacon Benjamin White, a farmer, who was born in Massachusetts, and was the son of William White. The family was a very prominent one in the early history of that State, and succeeding generations find them well known in the professional as well as the mercantile world. Mrs. Dresser died June 26, 1877. To Mr. and Mrs. Bridgman five children have been born, of whom two died in infancy; the others are: Edward P., Jr., born July 13, 1880; Lewis W., born August 28, 1882, and Robert W., born June 16, 1884.

Mr. Bridgman is a self-made man, and is highly respected in the community. He is a Republican, but is no politician. He is a charter member of the Congregational Church in Antigo, and a deacon in the same. He is a member of the Blue Lodge, F. & A. M., and also of John A. Kellogg Post, G. A. R. Mr. Bridgman's uncle and adopted father, John Bridgman, was a strong anti-slavery man, and an intimate friend of those great humanitarians, William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips and Fred Douglass. Indeed, on both his own and his wife's side, Mr. Bridgman has good reason to be proud of his family, who have some of the best blood in the country in their veins, and who were people distinguished for their integrity, religious characters, and progressive ideas.

JAMES McCROSSEN, a retired lumberman and merchant of Wausau, Marathon county, is a living instance of the marked success which may come to a man possessed of willing hands, clear brain and correct principles in life. He is essentially a self-made man, one who began lumbering when a mere child, and has since advanced steadily onward. The interests which he now control are vast and varied, and their acquisition he owes to his own indomitable energy.

Mr. McCrossen was born in Carleton, New Brunswick, February 13, 1829, son of Robert and Elizabeth (McCrossen) McCrossen, both of whom were of Irish birth and Scotch ancestry. Robert McCrossen emigrated to New Brunswick in 1822, residing in Carleton ten years, and then removed to the parish of Lancaster, St. John county, where for eleven years he engaged in lumbering and agricultural pursuits. Thence he removed to Ballie, near St. Andrews, Charlotte county, same province, dying in 1887, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. His faithful wife passed away at Musquash, parish of Lancaster, St. John county, in 1840. Of their nine children, five are yet living, as follows: John, one of the pioneers of Portage county, and now a resident of Waupaca county, Wis.; James, the subject of this sketch; Jane, wife of M. M. Patridge, a prominent merchant of Wausau; Elizabeth, widow of the late George Furnald, of Wausau; and George, a prominent farmer of Marathon county. Of the deceased, Isabella (wife of W. P. Quist, an early settler of Waupaca county, now living at Rural), died in April, 1895; Thomas (a veteran of the Civil war), died in April, 1895, at the Soldiers' Home, Waupaca; and Ann (Mrs. MacAllister), died May 20, 1895.

In his childhood James McCrossen attended the district schools of Lancaster parish, 'St. John Co., N. B., but was evidently born for an active rather than a scholastic life, for at the early age of thirteen years, in 1842, he left home and went to Calais, Maine, where for eight years, or until he became of age, he worked at lumbering. He then came west, locating at Oshkosh, Wis., in 1850, when that city was a small village, and for two years followed lumbering on the Wolf river. Then, in 1852, he removed to Waupaca county, and for eighteen years was actively engaged in developing its rich primitive resources. For eight years he followed lumbering and farming, then in 1860 he engaged in flour-milling and mercantile pursuits. In all this he prospered, and in 1868 he started another venture, a general mercantile business at Wausau, in connection with W. P. Quint. In 1870 he sold out his interests in Waupaca county, and by purchase obtained sole possession of the Wausau business, removing to that thriving little city. Giving it his exclusive attention, this mercantile trade grew rapidly. In 1878 it had assumed large proportions, and in that year he sold a one-third interest to his son, J. A. McCrossen, a one-third interest to W. F. Collins, and retired from the active management of the business. In the same year he purchased a half interest in the Wausau Lumber Co.'s mill, and was actively connected with its management four years. In 1882 he sold his interest to Knox Bros., and resumed lumbering and logging on the Wisconsin river until 1887—in which year he associated with Alexander Stewart, J. E.

Lahoe and William Atwater, and organized the Montreal Lumber Co., with J. E. Leahy president, James McCrossen vice-president, and Alexander Stewart treasurer. Later Messrs. Leahy and Atwater sold their interests to Messrs. Moon & Knight, Mr. Moon becoming president. In 1891 Mr. McCrossen sold his interests in the company to the Alexander Stewart Lumber Co., and retired from active business life.

Mr. McCrossen was married, at Rural, Waupaca county, July 4, 1853, to Miss Cornelia A. Jones, daughter of J. H. and Nancy Jones, natives of New York and early settlers in Waupaca county. Of the seven children of Mr. and Mrs. McCrossen five survive, as follows: Julien A., of Everett, Wash.; Ellen I., wife of Lyman Thyar, of Everett, Wash.; Charles A., of Antigo, Wis.; Elizabeth, wife of H. H. Grace, of West Superior, Wis.; and Henry G., a merchant of Wausau. James M. (deceased), who comes between Ellen and Charles, was at one time a resident of St. Paul, Minn.; Kittie, the youngest, died January 2, 1881, aged two years and five months. Since his retirement from active life Mr. McCrossen has spent his winters in southern California. He is largely interested in timber land and real estate, and is the owner of 12,000 acres of timber land in Wisconsin, situated in Marathon, Price, Taylor and Lincoln counties. He also owns considerable farming land in South Dakota, has extensive landed holdings at Everett, Wash., and has erected some of the finest business blocks in Wausau.

In politics Mr. McCrossen is a Republican, and for two terms he served as chairman of the county board. He is a member of Forest Lodge No. 130, F. & A. M., Wausau Chapter No. 51, R. A. M., and St. Omer Commandery No. 19. The family attend the Universalist Church. He is a typical self-made man, and during his twenty-five years' residence at Wausau he has been one of its most progressive citizens, actively interesting himself in all measures tending to advance the interests and welfare of the county. No man deserves greater credit for the wonderful progress Wausau has made in mercantile and manufacturing affairs than James McCrossen.

JOHAN R. BABCOCK. There are few men more worthy of representation in a work of this kind than the subject of this biography, who for several years has been prominently connected with the business interests of Merrill, Lincoln county, of which fine city he is the present mayor. He is a native of New York State, having been born at Albany May 19, 1855, a son of James H. Babcock, who was born, in 1826, in Otsego county, N. Y. The paternal grandfather, Richardson Babcock, was a native of Connecticut, born there in 1798, and was a carpenter by trade; building many of the best residences and business blocks in Otsego county, N. Y. He married a Miss Robinson, who came to this country from the Emerald Isle, and they became the parents of five children—Adelia, Sarah, James H., Samuel and Mary. His wife died in New York in 1864, and he departed this life in 1875, at the age of seventy-seven. He had followed contracting until within a few years of his death, when he retired to a small piece of land he owned near Schenevus, Otsego county.

James H. Babcock, father of our subject, was educated in the common schools, remaining under the parental roof until his marriage in 1848, at which time he had attained his twenty-fourth year. The lady of his choice was Mary A. Herdman, who was born in Westford, Otsego Co., N. Y., in 1832, a daughter of John and Clarissa (Smith) Herdman, who were the parents of six children—Mary A., Martha, Georgiana, Julia, Louisa and David. Her father was a harness maker by trade, which he followed in early life, but later took up farming. His first wife died in 1844, and subsequently he married a Miss Wright, by whom he had four sons—Eugene, Charles, John and Everett. The father died in New York State about the year 1874. Mr. Babcock had five children: Frank M., John R., Clara L., Mary and Georgiana.

After his marriage James H. Babcock removed to Albany, N. Y., where he remained until 1855, serving as bookkeeper for a commercial house. In that year he came west, locating in Wausau, Wis., and then formed a partnership with one Fletcher in the lumber business which continued until 1858, when he kept a hotel, or station house, at Knowlton until the fall of 1859, at which time he was elected register of deeds of Marathon county. After his election to that office he removed his family to the city of Wausau, and held the office for six years, being elected by the Democratic party, of which he was a staunch supporter, taking an active part in politics. He died in Wausau in 1867. The mother of our subject still makes that place her home; she is now the wife of Henry French.

The primary education of John R. Babcock was obtained in the common schools, after which he attended the high school of Wausau, later taking a course at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., where for six months he paid his own tuition with money he had earned at the age of twelve years by clerking for Mr. Champagne, and later for James McCrossen, where he remained two years. After his return from school he served as bookkeeper in a private bank two years, and for the same length of time kept books in a store; then at the age of nineteen, with the money he had saved, he purchased some land from which he cut the timber. This was in the winter of 1874-75. In the spring of 1877 he went to Kansas for the benefit of his health, and there carried on agricultural pursuits until 1880. On his return to Wisconsin he located at Merrill, where he engaged in clerking in Mr. Champagne's store, when the same company built a sawmill in which he became bookkeeper and timekeeper, serving thus for one year. In the fall of 1882 Mr. Babcock embarked in the lumber business, acting part of the time as expert lumberman, and the remainder as expert accountant until 1889, when he began the insurance and real-estate business. Selling out in 1894, he in company with Mr. Norway purchased the plant of the Wolf River Lumber Co., and established the Norway Box & Lumber Co., which now has a fine trade and is one of the leading enterprises of Merrill.

In September, 1882, Mr. Babcock was married to Josephine O'Neil, who was born in Wood county, Wis., and by her marriage has become the mother of two interesting sons—West O. and John R., Jr. Mr. Babcock takes great interest in the welfare of Merrill and the surrounding country, and is now serving as secretary of the Business Men's Association. He is enterprising and progressive in his ideas, and aids in every object for the good of the community. Politically he identifies himself with the Democratic party, being one of its stalwart supporters. He served as member of the city council from the Second ward; has also been city comptroller, and in 1889 and 1890 was city assessor, in which offices he served faithfully and well. In April, 1895, he was elected mayor of Merrill, having been nominated by both the Democratic party and the Republican party, his opponent being a Populist, Mr. Babcock receiving a majority of nearly 500 votes.

CARL F. PAFF, treasurer of Marathon county, is one of the prominent and progressive merchants of Wausau, the city of his birth. He was born there April 23, 1861, son of Jacob and Sophia (Doell) Paff. The father emigrated from Germany in the fall of 1848, and after spending the winter in Columbia county, Wis., came in the spring of 1849 to Wausau; Mrs. Paff came from Germany in 1853, was married in Watertown, Wis., and died at Wausau in February, 1889, where Jacob Paff resided until his death May 6, 1895, an honored citizen, and vice-president of the First National Bank.

Carl F. Paff attended the village schools, and also took a four-years' course in the German and English Academy at Elmhurst, Ill. Graduating at that institution, he completed a course of bookkeeping at R. C. Spencer's Business College, Milwaukee, and thus equipped for commercial life Mr. Paff returned to Wausau and for two years was bookkeeper for John C. Gebhart. He accepted a similar position with F. W. Kickbusch, manufacturer of doors, sash and blinds, but six months later the factory burned and Mr. Paff entered the post office, as a delivery clerk, remaining there about three months. He then went into business for himself by purchasing the interest of F. W. Stroud in the paint and oil business of Stroud & Zentner. Three years later Messrs. Paff & Zentner sold out to J. M. Stroud & Co., of Oshkosh, and started a new business as dealers in lime, cement and sewer pipe. They continued partners four years, then, in 1887, Mr. Paff purchased Mr. Zentner's interest, and has since conducted the business alone.

He was married, in Wausau, November 22, 1888, to Miss Matilda Kickbusch, daughter of F. W. and Matilda (Braatz) Kickbusch, both of whom emigrated when young from Pomerania, Germany, to America. F. W. Kickbusch has been one of Wausau's most prominent citizens. He settled there in 1860, after a three-years' residence in Milwaukee, was three times elected county treasurer, was engaged extensively in the manufacture of doors, sash and blinds, operated a large flouring-mill, and in June, 1893, left Wausau to accept the position of United States consul at Stettin, Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Paff have two children, Selma, born November 2, 1889, and Carl F., born January 15, 1892. Mr. Paff is a member of the Modern Woodmen, and of the Harugari. As the candidate for county treasurer on the Democratic ticket in 1892, he was elected in November, 1894, defeating his opponent, Chris. Voight, by 168 votes. Mr. Paff, though yet a young man, has won his way into the esteem and confidence of the public, and is one of Marathon county's most popular citizens.

JACOB PAFF (deceased), an early pioneer of Marathon county, and late vice-president of the First National Bank of Wausau, was one of its best representative citizens. He was unostentatious in manner, and a man of few words; yet his character was as sterling as the national coin that lay in the vaults of his bank or circulated over its counters. For nearly forty-five years he lived in the glare of public life at Wausau, and his reputation remained untarnished and unblemished. Mr. Paff was born in Prussia November 5, 1824, son of Phillip (a farmer) and Margaret (Feurring) Paff, both natives of Germany, who died in the Fatherland when Jacob was young. They had a family of four children, three of whom emigrated to America, and the only survivor now is Mrs. Louisa Baker, who remained in Germany.

Our subject in his boyhood attended the district schools, learned the trade of a cabinet maker, and worked at it in the old country until 1849, when at the age of twenty-five years he emigrated to America. Landing in New York July 1, of that year, he proceeded west at once, and stopping for a few months in Columbia county he pushed on through the almost unbroken wilderness to Marathon county, at once becoming identified with its awakening lumber interests. In the same year of his immigration he located at Wausau, and was a continuous resident of the city from that date, ranking at the time of his death, which occurred May 6, 1895, as one of the oldest living and most highly-respected of the old settlers. For six years he followed his trade of cabinet making, then, in 1857, engaged in mercantile pursuits, continuing until 1871, when he retired from active business life. In 1863 he was elected county treasurer, serving faithfully and satisfactorily during the years 1863 and 1864. In 1871 and 1872 he also served as county clerk, and he represented Wausau as its chief officer. Mr. Paff was connected with the First National Bank of Wausau from its organization, and was vice-president of this well-known banking institution at the time of his demise.

On January 20, 1856, he was married, at Watertown, Wis., to Miss Sophia Doell, a lady of German birth, and eight children were born to them, four of whom survive, as follows: Matilda, wife of Fred T. Zentner, United States Express Agent at Wausau; Carl F., county treasurer; Jacob and William. The family attend St. Paul's Evangelical Church. In politics Mr. Paff was a Democrat. He was always foremost in works of public improvement, giving his aid and influence cheerfully to all worthy enterprises.

Fred T. Zentner, son-in-law of Mr. Paff, was born in Oshkosh August 15, 1858, son of Frederick and Barbara (Wiler) Zentner, both honored and early German emigrants to that city. He was educated in the public schools and business college of Oshkosh, and when fourteen years of age became a clerk in a law and real-estate office, remaining six years. In 1880 he removed to Wausau, and since that date has been a continuous resident of the city. For six years he engaged in the oil and paint business, and in 1886 he entered lumbering and manufacturing pursuits, in which he still continues in connection with his Express agency. He is secretary of the Clay Lumber Company, and vice-president of the Wisconsin Moulding Company. Mr. Zentner has served as a member of the city and county board for eight years. He is a member of Forest Lodge No. 130, F. & A. M., and is a worthy and highly-respected citizen of the community. His marriage to Miss Matilda Paff occurred December 28, 1881, and they have one child, Fred T., born October 31, 1882.

BENJAMIN B. ANDREWS, one of the firm of Van Doren & Andrews, prominent lumber merchants at Birnamwood, Shawano Co., Wis., was born at Whitehall, Washington Co., N. Y., September 29, 1849. He is the son of Benjamin M. and Ann (Lyons) Andrews, the former being born in Danbury, Conn., September 5, 1820, and the latter in Rutland, Vt., March 16, 1825. They were married in New York about 1847, and had a family of eight children, as follows: Benjamin Burton; Mary, who died when an infant; Mary Ann, who died when nineteen years of age; Annetta, now Mrs. R. Lyons, of Oshkosh; Adella; Leverett Brainard, who died when four years old; Emma Amelia, and Merton; the latter is an Episcopal minister and resides at Oshkosh.

Benjamin M. Andrews, father of our subject, came to Wisconsin in 1850, and settled on a farm in Juneau, Dodge county. He remained there some twelve years, then went to Beaver Dam and later to Oshkosh, where he still resides. He was a carpenter by trade, although he has followed farming the greater part of his life. His wife, Ann (Lyons), is also still living.

Benjamin B. Andrews, the subject of this sketch, obtained his education in the public schools at Juneau, and remained at home until he was seventeen years old, learning, in the meantime, to run a stationary engine. At the age mentioned he went to Milwaukee, and was employed on the Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad for some two years, after which he returned to Oshkosh and worked in a mill, taking full charge of the same until the spring of 1884. At that time he came to Birnamwood, and in company with Mr. Van Doren began the manufacture of staves and headings; three years later they built a sawmill, and in 1892 an extensive mill. They also carry on a general store, and are large owners of real estate, and Mr. Andrews, being a practical millman, looks after that branch of the business. He is a wide-awake, enterprising man, and has been very successful in all his undertakings. Mr. Andrews was married in 1865, his wife being Miss Agnes Parris, who was born in Canada of Scotch descent, one of a family of five children. Her father was a baker in Canada. By this marriage Mr. Andrews became the father of four children: James, who died when a child; William Henry, who also died when an infant; Mary who married H. G. Deyer, an attorney, of Shawano, and Harry, who died in 1894 at the age of twenty-one years. The mother passed away December 14, 1874. The second marriage of Mr. Andrews took place March 16, 1876, Miss Martha O. Thorn becoming his wife. She is a daughter of John and Sarah Thorn, natives of New York, who came to Wisconsin in 1854. Her birth took place in Jefferson county, N. Y., March 6, 1852, and she was one of a family of ten children. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews have four children: John Burton, Benjamin Burton, Bessie and Helen Dare.

In politics Mr. Andrews is a Republican, but has never been an office-seeker. He is a trustee of the village, a member of the Congregational Church, and has been affiliated with the United Workmen for the past fifteen years. He is a self-made man, one who has attained to his present standing by industry, perseverance and straightforward methods of business, and is respected as a worthy citizen, and one ready to assist in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the community.

EMILE B. ROSSIER (deceased) was a man whose virtues won him high regard, and whose devotion to educational, social and moral interests made him one of the valued citizens of Wood county. He was born at Vevay, near Geneva, Switzerland, December 2, 1832, and was a son of J. B. and Elizabeth (Monnet) Rossier. He was educated in the academy of Geneva, and spent the first nineteen years of his life in the beautiful land of his nativity, after which he determined to seek a home beyond the Atlantic, and in 1851 crossed the water to the New World. He located first in Highland, Madison Co., Ill., where he resided seven years, during which time he carried on agricultural pursuits with a fair degree of success. In 1858 he came to Centralia, Wis., and established a mercantile store, while in connection with this enterprise he served as cashier of the Grand Rapids Bank from 1870 until 1873.

His domestic relations were of the most pleasant. He was happily married in St. Louis, in 1853, to Miss Caroline Mennet, daughter of Emmanuel and Euphrosine (Fawcett) Mennet, who were also natives of Switzerland. Their union was blessed with a family of six children: Cecelia, who was born in Illinois, February 13, 1856, and is now the wife of Frank Garrison, a prominent manufacturer of South Centralia, Wis.; Alfred A., who was born in Illinois, December 6, 1857; Edmond H., born in Centralia, May 4, 1860; Eugene, who was born in Centralia, July 14, 1862, and died July 14, 1862; Emile C., born July 10, 1864; and Benjamin, who was born in Centralia, July 11, 1866, and passed away December 22, 1867.

In connection with the interests previously mentioned, Mr. Rossier was also identified with other concerns in Centralia. He won considerable prominence as the senior partner of the law firm of Rossier &

Baker, and was superintendent of the construction of the Wisconsin Valley railroad. It will thus be seen that his abilities were not limited to one line of action or of business, and he was recognized as one of the most influential and enterprising residents of Wood county, a leader in all matters pertaining to the public welfare. He served as city treasurer, was city clerk for several terms, and postmaster at Centralia for ten years, and in all these offices was an efficient incumbent, faithful to his duty and the trust reposed in him. His life was well spent, and was largely devoted to the good of mankind in one way or another. In the family he was considerate and tender, and the loss to wife and children is one which only time can heal. He passed peacefully away May 24, 1893, deeply regretted by all who knew him. Like the husband and father, the family share in the respect and esteem of the entire community, and Mrs. Rossier is a consistent member of the Congregational Church.

REV. FATHER WINAND DANIELS, pastor of the Catholic Church of Hewitt, Wood county, was born in Giesenkirchen, Germany, February 23, 1866. His father, William Daniels, was born in the same place in 1831, only child of William and Anna (Diedrichs) Daniels. He was a manufacturer of woolen goods, and in business was thorough and systematic. He died in 1887, highly respected. His father was in the German army for some time, serving as an officer.

On November 22, 1858, William Daniels married Barbara Langen, and they became the parents of four children. One son, William, was educated for the priesthood, and on coming to America in 1891 had charge of a church at Kankakee, Ill., in which city he died in 1892. Hermann and Catherine, the other brother and sister of our subject, now make their home with Rev. Father Daniels, as does their mother. The latter was born March 28, 1837, and is a daughter of John and Margaret (Goetz) Langen, farming people of Germany, who had a family of five children: Barbara, Herman, Margareta, Magdalene and Winand, Barbara and Magdalene being the only ones now living.

Rev. Father Daniels received his primary education in the common schools of his native land, and at the age of thirteen was sent to Holland, entering a school near Venlo, where he remained some nine years. At the end of that time he was admitted to a University at Innsbruck, in Austria, where for two years he continued his studies. He completed his literary education after one year's attendance at the Priests' Seminary in Mainz, when he was ordained priest March 14, 1890. After a vacation of three months he started for America unaccompanied, the remainder of the family coming later. The first charge of Rev. Father Daniels was at Chippewa Falls, where he remained but six months, when he came to Marshfield, acting as assistant priest for the same length of time. He then accepted his present charge at Hewitt. Since coming to that place he has been instrumental in the erection of a fine brick church and parsonage, and has won the respect and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. Besides the congregation at Hewitt, Rev. Father Winand Daniels has two other charges, one at Bakerville, Wood county, and the other at Loyal, Clark Co., Wis., where he also enjoys the love and confidence of the people.

JOHN A. LEMMER, a prominent lumber manufacturer, and an early settler of Marathon county, was born near Trier, in the Rhine Province, Germany, February 11, 1843, a son of John and Elizabeth Lemmer, who were both born in Germany, the former of whom is now engaged in agricultural pursuits in the town of Marathon, Wisconsin.

Our subject came to America with his parents and other members of the family, and in 1853 they located in Laporte, Ind., where they resided six years. In 1859 the family removed to Marathon county, Wis., and have been residents of that county since then. Mr. Lemmer received a portion of his education in his native land, and also attended school in Marathon county, Wis.

On leaving school he was engaged in teaching some sixteen years, and after abandoning this occupation engaged in lumbering and lumber manufacturing. He has filled the office of town treasurer seven times; been chairman of the town board four times; president of the village six terms, supervisor of Marathon city six terms, served one year as trustee of Marathon County Insane Asylum, and is a justice of the peace.

At Stevens Point, Portage county, in 1866, John A. Lemmer was united in marriage with Miss Mary Fisher, and there were born to them fourteen children, twelve of whom are living, their names and dates of birth, etc., being as follows: John M., October 9, 1866, at one time a saw-filer, now a fire and life insurance agent at Marathon, Wis.; Robert, November 15, 1869, an engineer and head sawyer, at present serving as city marshal; William, October 9, 1871, millwright and agent; Julius, March 30, 1872, at present studying theology at St. John's University, Collegeville, Minn.; Otto, December 10, 1874, machine agent and head sawyer; Richard, April 3, 1876, a school teacher at Marathon, Wis.; Leo, June 12, 1877, lumber scaler and setter; Alexander, October 5, 1880; Bruno, January 9, 1883; Ludwig, March 30, 1885; Mary S., September 5, 1889, and Mark, January 9, 1890. The parents of Mrs. John A. Lemmer, Balthasar Fisher and Teressa (Schaeffer) Fisher, were born in Germany, and were early settlers of Marathon county, Wis., where they resided until death. They had children as follows: Mary, wife of John A. Lemmer; Margaret, wife of Anthony Schilling; Benjamin, John and Anthony, all residing in the city of Marathon, Wis. John M. Lemmer, eldest son of John A. and Mary Lemmer, was married in 1890 to Rosa Baur, and to their union have been born three daughters: Ella, Erma and Lulu. John A. Lemmer is a Democrat in politics. He is one of the progressive and solid business men of Marathon, and is extensively engaged in lumbering. He has taken an active part in matters having for their object the improvement and welfare of Marathon county, and is a highly-esteemed and valuable member of the community in which he resides. At present he is a member of the Marathon County Committee on Emigration and Industries for Marathon county. The family attend the Catholic Church.

GEORGE CHRISTIAN LICKEL is a typical self-made man, one who owes his success to his own enterprise and industry. He has led a busy and useful life, and in the legitimate channels of business has acquired a competency that now enables him to live retired.

Mr. Lickel was born in the Province of Darmstadt, Germany, September 13, 1841. His father, John C. Lickel, also a native of Germany, was a miller by trade, and in the country of his birth was married, in 1838, to Catherine Gris. They became the parents of five children: George C., subject of this sketch; Henry, who died in infancy; William, who died in Nashville, Tenn., in 1864, while in the employ of the government; Catherine, wife of John Metz—all four born in Germany; and Mary, who was born in this country. The family crossed the Atlantic about the year 1849, and took up their residence in Quincy, Ill., where the father worked at his trade. While in Germany he had owned and operated his own mill, and had obtained a good business education. His death occurred July 27, 1881, that of his wife on February 9, 1876. She, too, was born in Germany, and was the daughter of a miller, but nothing more is known about her people, except that she was the youngest of a large family. John C. Lickel had one sister. Our subject was about eight years of age when he accompanied his parents to the New World. He acquired his education in the public schools of Quincy, Ill., and at the age of thirteen began learning the trade of wagon making. When he had thoroughly mastered the business, he established a shop of his own in Quincy, which he conducted some three years.

On September 26, 1866, he was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Miller, who was born in Germany, in 1846, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Hitridge) Miller, both natives of Germany, the father born in 1796, the mother in 1800; they were the parents of four children: Lizzie (deceased), Caroline, Mary, and Catherine. Mr. Miller was a merchant tailor by trade, a well-educated man, and a leader in politics in Germany, holding public offices there for many years. He was very prosperous in his business, which he followed not only in his native land, but also in Paris, France. In the Fatherland he served in the army, for six years as an officer. In 1852 he came to the United States with his family, the voyage, which was made in a sailing vessel, occupying sixty days. Three months after their arrival in the country the family settled at Quincy, Ill., where Mr. Miller became a speculator in real estate, etc., in which he continued up to his death, in 1892. His wife had passed away in 1875. A Republican on this side of the Atlantic, he took a great interest in politics, and was honored with election to several offices of trust. He was a member of the German Lutheran Church, and in all respects was highly esteemed. Mrs. Bolman, sister to Mrs. Lickel, died in 1867, just eleven weeks after her husband had been laid to rest, leaving five children, one of whom, Katie, Mrs. Lickel adopted. She (Katie) married Robert Megow, of Minneapolis, Minn., and now Mrs. Lickel has her daughter, Lulu, adopted. Thus, if Mr. and Mrs. Lickel have no children of their own, they have been a father and mother to the children of others.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Lickel purchased a hotel at Quincy, Ill., which he conducted a number of years, when on account of his wife's failing health he removed to Wisconsin, locating at Necedah, Juneau county, where for several years he again carried on a hotel. In 1888 he came to Merrill, purchased a store and embarked in the grocery business, which he successfully conducted until January 1, 1895, when he sold out. There have been few idle moments in his life, his time and attention having been given almost unceasingly to his business interests, until within the last few months, since when he has been enjoying a rest well earned and richly deserved. He has always affiliated with the Democratic party, and his fellow townsmen have frequently called him to office, he having twice served as supervisor, once as school commissioner, and once as alderman. In his younger years he took quite an active interest in Masonry, and is now a Knight Templar; is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. He and his wife hold membership with the Presbyterian Church, and are most highly-esteemed people, their many excellencies of character winning them the regard of all with whom they have been brought in contact.

GEORGE E. O'CONNOR, the popular and efficient sheriff of Vilas county, with residence at Eagle River, is a native of Wisconsin, born August 31, 1865, a son of John O'Connor, who first saw the light, in 1833, near the city of Newcastle, New Brunswick, Canada.

Edward O'Connor, grandfather of our subject, was born in Tipperary, Ireland, whence, when a young man, he emigrated to New Brunswick, where he married Miss Catherine Welch, by whom he had seven children, named respectively: John, Timothy, Kate, Richard, Mary, Maurice and Alice, the last two dying when quite young. In the spring of 1845 the family came to Wisconsin, locating in Milwaukee, where the father took up a homestead, near where the city hall now stands, and there remained some three years; but, thinking to better himself farther west, he abandoned his first Wisconsin home, and after a brief sojourn in Oshkosh settled on a farm in Brown county, whereon he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1859; his wife survived him till July, 1883, when she, too, passed to the "great unknown." He was a farmer and lumberman, prominent in politics as an ardent Whig and Republican. His ancestry in Ireland were all well-to-do agriculturists.

John O'Connor, father of our subject, was twelve years old when the family took up their residence in Milwaukee, at the common schools of which then village he received a somewhat limited education, having in his boyhood to assist his father in getting out square timber and clearing the farm. At about the age of eighteen he commenced to work away from home, finding employment in mills and at lumbering, when nineteen years old having charge of a mill as foreman. In 1855, in the meantime marrying, he moved to Oconto, having been offered, and accepted, the position of head sawyer in a mill at that place, also following the logging business. Here he remained till 1866, in which year he took up his residence in Green Bay, where in connection with his lumbering interests he conducted a hotel, and was also interested in a sailing vessel, which, however, was wrecked. After about eight years' residence in Green Bay, he removed to Eau Claire, where he resided some nine years, with the exception of three years passed in Texas and Arkansas, erecting there a mill which turned out a failure. In Eau Claire he followed lumbering, and in April, 1883, he came to Eagle River, buying a tract of one thousand acres of land, in August, same year, platting the town of Eagle River, which was described as the plat of the N. E. quarter of the N. W. quarter of Section 33, Town 40 North, of Range 10 East, being the first plat of the town. Afterward he added two additions known as the Original Plat, and then one called the Ann O'Connor Addition. He came to be known as "the father of Eagle River." Here he logged one winter, and then embarked in the real-estate business, including the buying and selling of city property and pine lands, in connection with which he carried on a general supply store. He died July 4, 1889, a stanch Republican in his political affiliations. He was a typical self-made man, one who was favored with few school privileges, but was a great reader and a close student of human nature. At the time of the Pike's Peak excitement, he passed some six months in that region. Although reared a strict Catholic, yet he was liberal toward all denominations, and was particularly charitable to the poor. He was never called upon to serve his adopted country as a soldier, but he had two brothers in the army—Timothy and Richard.

In 1855, at Green Bay, Wis., John O'Connor was married to Miss Anna Golden, a native of County Sligo, Ireland, born in 1835, a daughter of William and Mary (Flatley) Golden, farming people, both also of Irish nativity, who came to America about the year 1838. For a time they sojourned in New York City, thence proceeding to Rome, N. Y., whence after three years passed in that city they came to Wisconsin, settling at Wrightstown, Brown county, on wild land, where they passed the rest of their days, the father dying in 1860, the mother in 1868. They were the first settlers of Wrightstown, and the old log cabin wherein they lived is still standing. They had nine children, to wit: Thomas, Peter, Patrick, Mary, Martin, James, Margaret, Ellen and Anna. The father was a "dyed-in-the-wool" Democrat. To John and Anna O'Connor were born ten children, named respectively: Mary, Edward, Ellen, Anna, George E., Matilda, Henry C., Don and Walter F. (twins), and Harriet.

George E. O'Connor, the subject proper of this memoir, was reared and educated in Eau Claire, and there at the early age of eleven years commenced learning the trade of printer, which he followed four years, after which he worked for a time in a shingle mill, then learned the trade of plumber. In 1883 he came to Eagle River with his father, whom he assisted in the latter's extensive lumbering interests—sometimes working in the woods, at other times running the river—so continuing some three years. At the age of twenty he entered the Northwestern Business College, at Madison, which institution he attended two summer terms, working in the woods winters, for a time keeping books for a lumber camp. In the fall of 1888 he commenced the management of his father's store, and after the latter's death he was appointed administrator of the estate. Politically he is a stanch Republican, and in 1894 he was elected to his present position of sheriff of Vilas county; for two years he served as town clerk, was secretary of the school board, and filled several minor offices. Socially he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and K. of P. He has two brothers attending school at Detroit, Mich., while another brother, Henry C., is studying for the profession of dentist, at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia (at one time he was register of deeds for Oneida county, Wis.). Our subject has not yet joined the noble army of Benedicts.

HON. JEROME NELSON. In Amherst township, Portage county, it might be difficult to find a name which the people would more delight to honor than that of Mr. Nelson. It is known throughout northern Wisconsin in connection with the milling product which he has made famous for its quality; it is known as that of a brave officer who served throughout the Rebellion; it is known as that of a pioneer who has been identified with the material advancement of the State; it is known as that of a legislator. The name has been commemorated in the village Nelsonville, named from him. He is public-spirited, and perhaps as well known as any one in the county.

Mr. Nelson was born at Attica, N. Y., January 9, 1829, the eldest child of Adin and Sally (Randall) Nelson. Adin Nelson was a native of Massachusetts, and at the age of sixteen moved with his parents to Genesee county, N. Y. In 1828 he was married, at Attica, to Sally, daughter of Miles Randall, a native of New Hampshire, who prior to the war of 1812 moved with his wife to Canada, but was forced to return when hostilities opened because he would not take the oath of allegiance to King George. He settled in New York. His children were Betsy, Statira, John, Sally, Esther, Harriet, Horace and Aurilla. Adin Nelson was a farmer and a merchant. Seven years after his marriage he removed to Rochester, N. Y., where he secured a position as overseer for the New York Central railroad during its construction. In 1836 he moved to Michigan, where he engaged in farming in Hadley township, Lapeer county, until about 1850, and then selling his land he came to Fond du Lac county, Wis., and opened a general store. In 1853 he sold out and moved to Amherst township, Portage county, where he farmed and also carried on a small mercantile business until shortly before his death. Desiring to revisit the scenes of his childhood, he went east at the age of sixty-nine years, and after a short illness died at the home of his sister in Massachusetts. His wife lived until 1892, when she died at the age of eighty-four years. To Adin and Sally Nelson six children were born: Jerome; Harriet, now Mrs. Amos Wilts, of St. Joseph, Mo.; Miles R., a salesman in a large New York City mercantile house, who died while visiting his brother Jerome in Amherst, in 1856; George (1), who died when a boy; Orpha, who died in infancy; George (2), who married Miss Marion Phillips, of Amherst, and is now a merchant of Waukegan, Illinois.

Jerome Nelson attended the schools of New York and Michigan in his boyhood, assisting on the farm and in the store up to the age of nineteen, when he started out in life for himself. He spent one summer in Chicago, then went down the Mississippi river to Vicksburg, Miss., where he engaged to cut timber in the cypress swamp for $20 per month. Two years later, with the money he had saved, he started in the same business for himself in partnership with Frank Johnson, a South Carolina planter. Following this successfully and profitably two years, he, in 1852, came to Wisconsin, and for a short time helped his father on the farm. He then opened and for two years conducted a store of general merchandise at Barton, Washington county. Trading this for real estate in the same county, he sold out two years later and settled in Amherst, where in the summer of 1855 he had engaged in sawmilling.

In October, 1861, Mr. Nelson enlisted in Company H, Third Wisconsin Cavalry. Entering winter quarters at Janesville, Wis., the regiment was sent to St. Louis in March, 1862, and two months later to Leavenworth, Kans. Here its mission was to exterminate Quantrell's notorious guerrilla band, then committing depredations and atrocities along the western border, and to guard supply trains from Fort Scott to Fort Gibson, on the Arkansas river. Mr. Nelson served in the West until the close of the war, and was promoted to first lieutenant during his service. When mustered out he returned to Amherst and resumed his milling operations.

Jerome Nelson

In 1855 Mr. Nelson built a sawmill, which, to use his own words, "wore out." In 1868 he erected the gristmill at Nelsonville; in 1873 purchased a large flouring-mill at Amherst, and in 1874 he put up a steam sawmill in Nelson, all of which mills he has since operated, the product of them finding a market all over the State. He was the first man to build a dam at Nelsonville, and utilize the excellent water-power there found. The land on which his mills and elegant home stand he bought of the government in 1854. He is also interested in a sawmill in Oneida county, Wis., which cuts some ten million feet of lumber each season. Mr. Nelson furnished the capital, and the company is known as the Nelson Lumber and Boom Co., the industry being located on the Pelican river.

In May, 1853, Mr. Nelson was married, in Washington county, Wis., to Miss Marilla A. Yerkes, who was born, in 1835, in Pennsylvania, a daughter of David and Caroline (Calkins) Yerkes, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the latter of New York State. They for a time resided in Michigan, whence about the year 1847 they came to Wisconsin, settling in Barton township, Washington county, where Mr. Yerkes engaged in the sawmilling business. There they died, the mother in 1868, the father in 1893, the parents of seven children, as follows: Marion (now Mrs. Philips, of Amherst); Oliver J. (a farmer of Colby, Clark Co., Wis.), who was a soldier during the Civil war, in a New York Cavalry regiment; Hannah E., who died in Michigan at the age of fourteen; Marilla A. (Mrs. Jerome Nelson); Lovilla L. (Mrs. Baker), living in Kansas; George W., in Wisconsin; and Sara E. (Mrs. Eli Hanks), of Washington county, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have no children of their own, but have an adopted daughter, Flora S., who has lived with them since her infancy; she is now the wife of John S. Loberg (who is in Mr. Nelson's employ), and they have three children: Russell Jerome, Ruby S. and Eva L. Mrs. Nelson is a prominent member of the Episcopal Church. Socially Mr. Nelson has been a member of the F. and A. M., since joining Evergreen Lodge of Stevens Point, in 1878, and also of the Crusade Commandery, same place; but on account of the distance from his home he has been unable to attend the meetings with any degree of regularity. In politics he is a Republican. In 1876 he was elected a member of the State Legislature; was elected justice of the peace, but refused to qualify, for the reason that the judicial duties were distasteful to one of his sympathetic nature. He has served several terms on the town board. Mr. Nelson is foremost in all matters relating to the welfare and improvement of his township and county, is public-spirited, and ever ready to encourage worthy enterprises. He is a typical self-made man, never having received assistance from any one. The industry he has founded has proved a source of much revenue to the surrounding country.

FREDERICK S. GARLAND, a leading lumberman and representative citizen of northern Wisconsin, was born in Rock county, Wis., near Evansville, September 12, 1858.

Joseph C. Garland, his father, was born at Great Falls, N. H., in May, 1833. He attended the common schools, worked on the farm and in the cotton mills, and at the age of twenty came west and worked for a time in the pineries of Wisconsin, afterward settling on a farm in Green county. There he married Eliza N. Broadbent, a native of Goole, Yorkshire, England, daughter of Samuel and Alice Broadbent, who had two children: Sarah and Eliza N. Mrs. Eliza N. Garland's parents came to America when she was fourteen years of age. Her father was a baker by trade, but afterward devoted his time to agricultural pursuits in Green county, Wis., where he died in 1859. Mrs. Broadbent was later united in marriage with J. F. Eggleston, removing shortly afterward to Nebraska, where Mr. Eggleston died, his widow still residing there. Joseph C. Garland's family consisted of four children: F. S., Ida Maria, Alice Lucinda and Frank J. He spent his life as a lumberman, cutting the timber and rafting the logs down the river. He resided in and near Wausau, Wis., for twenty-five years, and died January 21, 1893. The grandfather of the subject of our sketch, Hiram Garland, was a soldier in the war of 1812. He married a Lucinda Smith, who had six children, viz.: Franklin, Dudley, Ann, Angeline, Joseph C., and Winslow, the youngest, who was killed at the battle of Antietam, in September, 1862. Hiram Garland was a farmer by occupation. The grandparents both died in New Hampshire.

The early life of Frederick S. Garland, the gentleman introduced at the commencement of this sketch, was spent in Wausau, where he received his education and assisted his father in his business. At the age of twenty-one he entered into partnership with him in the wholesale lumber business, and since the latter's death has carried on the business himself, being an extensive dealer in lumber, piles, railroad ties, etc. Mr. Garland was married, in the fall of 1887, to Olive Goff, of Marathon county, Wis., daughter of Benedict N. and Mary (Harris) Goff, who had eight children, viz.: Charles N., Daniel J., Mary M., Asa A., Oliver O., Laura L., Olive and Albertine. Mr. Goff was born in Steuben county, N. Y., in 1830; his father and two brothers came from England. Mrs. Goff was born in Detroit, Mich., in 1840, of German descent. Mr. and Mrs. Garland have two children, viz.: Rubie V., born in November, 1888, and Guy N., born in March, 1891. In politics Mr. Garland is a staunch Democrat, and takes a deep interest in public affairs, but is no office-seeker. He holds the position of supervisor of his ward, and by an upright life has won the respect of the entire community.

HKLOSTERMAN, one of the representative prosperous citizens of Shawano county, agriculturist, dealer in real estate, and capitalist, is a native of the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg, Germany, born April 20, 1832. He is the eldest in the family of three sons and three daughters born to Gerhard H. Klosterman, a tailor by trade in Oldenburg, where he passed all his days.

Our subject received a somewhat limited common-school training in his native land, and was offered free education for the ministry, but declined. But what he may not have learned at school, where he was a quick and apt scholar, he made up for by home study and a close observation of men and things, and he also commenced earning money at a very early age, for at about the age of ten we find him herding cattle and sheep, receiving, it is true, very small wages. In his youth he displayed a penchant for carpentry, and, learning the trade, followed it till 1855, in which year, in company with his uncle, Edwin Wilke (his mother's brother), who kindly furnished him with the means, he came to the United States, the voyage being made on the sailing vessel "Nelson" from Bremen for New York, the voyage occupying seven weeks, three days. From the latter city the journey was made by rail to Buffalo, thence by lake to Sheboygan, Wis., where our subject secured work among the farmers, the first money he earned in the United States being at chopping cordwood, an "art" he was taught by a woman. Here he remained until early in the spring of 1857, when he moved to near Two Rivers, where his uncle lived, for whom he now worked, in order to repay him the price of his passage from Germany. Subsequently he worked for other farmers, and later in a sawmill and gristmill at or in the vicinity of Two Rivers, for three years, at the end of which time he went to Racine, Wis., and on the prairie near that city worked as a farm hand, in the fall of the same year going into the lumber woods.

In his somewhat varied experience Mr. Klosterman traveled considerably over the State of Wisconsin, and at one time while at Mayville, Dodge county, he bargained with Charles Rudebusch to drive some cattle from there to Shawano, at which latter place, then a mere hamlet of a few shanties, he in the fall of 1860 found work in the lumber woods. In the following spring he married, an event that will be spoken of further on, and he and his young wife commenced keeping house in a log building that stood near the present outskirts of the city; and even this humble home he did not own, for he bought on credit. He also bought a team of oxen and a couple of cows, and with these oxen he went jobbing; but an unfortunate accident happened to him which gave to his now rising prospects a cruel setback. One day, in the spring of 1861, while he was engaged at plowing his lot with this same yoke of oxen, making ready to put in his crops, the tree-stumps obtruding themselves pretty thickly around, the plow accidentally caught on one of them, which caused the team to give a sudden jerk, whereby the plow handle struck Mr. Klosterman a violent blow close by the knee of the left leg. This produced a fever sore, later a stiff limb with a running sore which left him helpless for a whole year. He had just been married, and his small pile of savings was soon reduced to a minimum, rendering his condition, physically and financially, anything but encouraging. He was helpless as far as manual labor was concerned, and it became clear that his attention must be given to something else totally different to what he had been accustomed to; so he undertook whatever kind of work his enfeebled condition would permit him to do. In consequence of his already injured limb having in December, 1889, received a further hurt by being severely cut with an axe while he was chopping wood at his home, he suffered so severely that the leg had to be amputated September 6, 1890.

For a time Mr. Klosterman kept a small saloon and grocery in Shawano, after which he served as justice of the peace of the village three years, then as register of deeds four years, deputy clerk two years, and he was county judge of Shawano county sixteen years, the longest term held by any incumbent in that office. In February, 1894, he became a member of the firm of Andrews & Klosterman, who conduct a general store in Shawano.

On April 20, 1861, Mr. Klosterman was married in Shawano to Miss Earnstein Fink, a native of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, born December 21, 1843, and to this union have been born children as follows: Louise, born January 18, 1862, died September 17, 1862, and George H., born June 26, 1869, living at home with his parents. In his political preferences our subject has been a Republican ever since Lincoln's first term, though his first vote was cast at Two Rivers for James Buchanan. In addition to his other interests which keep him busy he is vice-president of the Shawano County Bank, and deals extensively in real estate, owning at the present time between 600 and 800 acres, chiefly timber land. He is in all respects a public-spirited citizen, of that stamen which is recognized as the bone and sinew of any new country and community.

JOSEPH HOMIER, a private banker and a leading merchant of Mosinee, Marathon county, is not only one of the most prominent business men in that county, but his influence is much broader, and he is well-known throughout the entire State of Wisconsin. His training has been that of a business man, both in early education and in the various vocations which he has pursued in life. All seemed directly or indirectly to be important in fitting him for the indispensable and all-important field in which he has now for many years been engaged.

Mr. Homier was born in Montreal, Canada, December 7, 1829, and is the son of Joseph and Margaret (Desnoier) Homier, both of whom were also natives of Canada. The father, who by occupation was a merchant tailor in Montreal, Canada, bestowed upon his son Joseph a course in an English Business College in that city. Later the young man studied French for two years under a private teacher. After completing these studies, he was engaged for a year as salesman in a dry-goods store at Montreal, and for six months as salesman in a jewelry store. He was not yet sixteen years old when he left Canada for New York City, and after a year's residence in that city he went to New Orleans, where he enlisted in the quartermaster's department of the United States army, and served some seven months, or until the close of the Mexican war. Upon his discharge Mr. Homier returned to New Orleans, and thence proceeded to Buffalo, where for six years he was engaged in the hotel business with his father. Joining the strong tide of emigration which was then flowing to Wisconsin via Buffalo, Mr.

Homier in 1852 moved to Sheboygan, and there opened a hotel which he conducted two years. That closed his experience as a hotel proprietor. He had become acquainted with the pioneer country, and the mercantile business seemed to offer tempting possibilities. Accordingly, in 1854, Mr. Homier removed to Grand Rapids, Wis., and there opened a general merchandise business. Its success may be judged from the fact that he continued in the trade in that city some twenty years. In 1874, he removed his business to Wausau, and continued in mercantile trade there for six years. Then, in 1880, he came to Mosinee, and in addition to general merchandising engaged in banking and lumbering. His business during the past fifteen years has grown to large proportions, and to-day Mr. Homier ranks among the most prominent business men of northern Wisconsin.

In 1854 he was married, at Buffalo, N. Y., to Miss Caroline Martin, a native of the Province of Quebec; Mr. and Mrs. Homier have adopted five children, two of whom survive, Daisy Martin, wife of Frank McReynolds, bookkeeper for the Joseph Dessert Lumber Co. for the past sixteen years, and Hattie Martin, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Homier attend the Roman Catholic Church; in politics he is a Democrat.

BALSER WILLIAMS, formerly a successful business man of Wausau, and now leading a retired life, was born in Prussia, Germany, June 3, 1835, son of Anton and Caroline (Low) Williams, both of whom lived and died in the Fatherland.

In his boyhood Balser attended the public schools, but he early evinced a liking for outdoor pursuits, and when his school-days were past he followed farming and stage driving until he attained his majority, when, in the year 1853, he emigrated to America. For nearly a year he lived at Reading, Penn., finding employment in the iron mines near that city, and in August, 1854, came to Wausau, where he has ever since remained, a valuable and prominent citizen. Like many of the pioneers to this region Mr.

Williams first engaged in lumbering and in rafting on the Wisconsin river. He was thus engaged nine years, and in 1866, he began a lumbering business of his own, following it successfully for five years. Mr. Williams then gave his attention to real estate, in which he was engaged continuously until June, 1894, save two years when he conducted a livery business. He has prospered, and at the expiration of a forty-years' career he is well entitled to a surcease from active life.

Mr. Williams has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Katrina Kuhl, a native of Germany, whom he married in Columbia county, Wis., and by whom there were three children: Charles A.; Margaret, wife of Henry Wolslegel, who died June 22, 1886; and Mary, deceased in infancy. Mrs. Williams died April 16, 1862, and on July 17, 1864, Mr. Williams was again united in marriage, this time to Miss Amelia Pessert, a native of Germany. Their two children are Caroline, wife of Jacob F. Enter, and Albert, a resident of Wausau. Mr. Williams and family are members of St. Paul's Evangelical Church. In politics he is Democratic. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and has twice, in 1878 and in 1884, represented the First ward as alderman in the common council.

ANDREW WILLIAMS, sheriff of Waupaca county, has been identified with its many interests all his life. He was born in the town of Scandinavia, Waupaca Co., Wis., August 4, 1853, the son of Ora Wilhelm and Anna (Anderson) Boggoton. The father was a Norwegian of liberal education and many accomplishments, the eldest of a family, which owned in the native land a large estate, six miles square. He had two brothers and four sisters. In 1848 the father sold his interests in Norway, and with his wife and two children—Anna and Betsey—emigrated to America, coming to Wisconsin. For one year he resided at Milwaukee, then, in 1849, he settled on the farm in Waupaca county, where he still resides, and became one of the first settlers in Scandinavia township. Eight other children were born in this country: Annie Betsey, William, Andrew, Dena, Bie, Edward, Louis and Anton.

Our subject grew to manhood amidst the surroundings of this pioneer home, attending school during the winters, and by his unremitting labors helping to clear and cultivate his father's broad acres. But at the age of seventeen an opportunity presented itself for his material advancement, and he was not slow to grasp it. The railroad was pushing itself westward and northward, calling out for its construction the work of many hands. Andrew secured a position as foreman of the grading, and in that capacity followed road-building for two years. In 1872 he went to Fort Howard, and learned the trade of machinist and blacksmith. He quickly turned his new acquisition to account by opening and operating a machine shop at High Forest, Minn., with his brother as partner, the firm also handling farm machinery. Mr. Williams remained in Minnesota from 1875 to 1882, spending his winters, however, at home at Waupaca. In 1883 he was married at Rochester, Minn., to Mary M. King, a native of Illinois, and daughter of Ira and Harriet (Bradshaw) King. The father was born in Pennsylvania, and was of German descent. The mother was a native of New York. Mr. King had removed to Illinois with his wife and two daughters, Lizzie and Mary M., and here he enlisted in the army, and gave up his life in the Federal cause. After marriage Mr. Williams devoted himself extensively to farming. He settled on the home farm, leased another large tract of land, and conducted the two farms jointly.

Mr. Williams' prominent official life in the county begins with his appointment as deputy sheriff and jailer in 1887. He served in that capacity two years, and was then elected sheriff, assuming the office January 1, 1889. Two years later his brother Edward was elected sheriff, and Andrew was again appointed deputy sheriff. In 1892 the subject of this sketch was again honored with the office by his fellow citizens. His official life has been filled with stirring incidents, which brought out the sterling traits of his character. He has been relentless in running down criminals, and in consequence of the signal detective ability which he has displayed, he has done incalculable good for good government in Waupaca county. Many times has his life been threatened, and many inducements have been offered him to permit the guilty to escape; but Mr. Williams has marked out for himself one plain course of duty and faithfulness, and he never swerved therefrom. He made three trips to the Pacific coast for criminals, and two to the Atlantic coast. His terms of office have been marked by the trials of many celebrated criminal cases, notably the Meade murder trial, and Mr. Williams won great praise for the able manner in which he administered the criminal affairs of the county.

Mr. Williams is well known throughout the State. He is attached to the Republican cause, and prominent in the party councils. He is interested especially in the welfare of his home county, and is an alderman of Waupaca city. His society affiliations are with the Masons and Knights of Pythias. He has a beautiful home of 200 acres adjoining the city of Waupaca, where he resides with his wife and children, Anna Belle, Robert E., Andrew Lynde and Esther. Besides looking after general farming he is widely known as a breeder of fine sheep and other high-grade stock. He is a member of the Lutheran Church. His successful and useful life is the result of his own exertions and energies, and in every sense of the word Mr. Williams is a self-made man.

L C. BOLD, the honored mayor of Shawano, and editor and manager of the Shawano County Wochenblatt, is a native of Hessen-Nassau, Germany, born June 10, 1848, and a son of Christopher Bold, a highly-educated man, who was born January 7, 1824. He was instructed in some of the best educational institutions of Germany, won a high reputation as a teacher, and was employed at several schools of the Province Hessen-Nassau. His death, which occurred August 7, 1894, was the cause of an extended obituary in the educational paper issued by the institution where he had given such excellent service for so many years, winning a reputation that was far more than local. His family numbered six children—two sons and four daughters.

Our subject attended the public schools until ten years of age, and then entered college at Cassel, after which he pursued his studies. He acquired an excellent education, and then resolved to cross the Atlantic to America, which he believed offered a better field to ambitious young men than was afforded in his native country. In the summer of 1868, at Bremen, he embarked on the vessel "Herrmann," which, after thirteen days, reached the harbor of New York. He remained for some time in the East, and in 1872 was made a citizen of the United States in Jersey City, N. J. Soon after his arrival he entered a drug store, and continued in that line of business for some time.

In 1869 Mr. Bold was married in New York to Miss Babetta Lieb, a native of Germany, and to them were born three children: Paul, who was drowned in 1880; Charles F., one of the prominent young men of Shawano, now employed in his father's newspaper office; and Louis, who is also connected with journalistic work. In November, 1884, Mr. Bold came to Shawano. At that time the Shawano County Democrat was in the hands of the sheriff, the former proprietors having failed to make it a profitable investment. A company was formed, consisting of August Koepper, president; Ed Somers, secretary; and L. C. Bold, editor and manager. The paper was changed to its present name, and the first copy appeared January 15, 1885. In October, 1888, the company was incorporated as the Shawano Printing Association, and Mr. Bold is now president and secretary as well as editor and manager. The circulation has been greatly increased, Mr. Bold having successfully managed the enterprise, until the paper is now one of the leading German publications in northern Wisconsin. It is well-edited, and is a very readable sheet. The equipment of the office is by far the most modern in Shawano, having a cylinder press and other machinery for first-class work, driven by steam power.

In politics Mr. Bold has always been a Democrat, but at local elections does not closely draw the party lines, preferring to support the man whom he thinks best qualified for office, regardless of his political complexion. In the spring of 1895 he was elected mayor of Shawano on the Citizen's ticket, defeating James Black by 59 majority. From 1888 until 1890 he was justice of the peace; in 1891 was supervisor of the Second ward of the city of Shawano; in 1893 was chairman of the county board of supervisors; and in 1894 was again appointed justice of the peace, serving until the spring of 1895 with the same fidelity that has marked his official career in its various capacities. Socially Mr. Bold is a member of Neptune Lodge, No. 46, I. O. O. F., and has been delegate to two grand lodges. He is a member of the Germania Society of Milwaukee, and organized Enterprise Encampment I. O. O. F. He is one of the leading men of the city, prominently identified with its public interests, a man who faithfully does his duty to himself, to his neighbor, and to his country. His public and private career are alike above reproach, and all who know him respect him.

JOHN H. COFFMAN, one of the most prominent citizens of the village of Marion, Waupaca county, where he owns a handsome home and a well-cultivated farm adjoining, is a retired railroad man. For many years he was connected with several of the best western railroads, and when, as an official of the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western railroad, which was built through the rich virgin lands of northern Wisconsin, he saw the possible development of that region, he forthwith acquired a well-selected farm, and upon his retirement from active railroad life identified himself with the interests of the Upper Wisconsin Valley.

Mr. Coffman was born in Edgar county, Ill., September 1, 1838, son of William and Lydia (Akard) Coffman, natives of Virginia, who at a very early day migrated by team to Edgar county, Ill., and settled upon wild land in Grandview township. Mr. Coffman improved the land, devoted it to fruit culture, and made it his home for life. He died from injuries caused by his being accidentally run into by a railroad engine while walking on the track. His excellent wife preceded him to the grave, dying November 5, 1871. They reared a family of twelve children, as follows: James, a resident of Kansas, Ill.; Joseph, his twin brother, a resident of Dudley, Ill.; Susan, wife of Lindsay Welch, of Edgar county, Ill.; Jerome, a resident of Arkansas; John H.; Caroline, wife of John Welch, of Evanston, Ill.; Daniel, who occupies the old homestead in Edgar county, Ill.; George, a deputy sheriff at Chicago, Ill.; Mary, now Mrs. Ratz, of Kansas; Frank, of Arkansas; Belle, wife of Rev. Schuman, a M. E. minister, now of Kansas; and America, wife of William Low, of Paris, Illinois.

Our subject was reared on the farm and educated in the schools of Grandview township, and at the academy at Paris, Ill. He enlisted at Paris June 14, 1862, in Company G, Seventieth Ill. V. I., for three months, serving at Camp Butler and at Alton, Ill., in guarding prisoners until mustered out in October, 1862. Returning to Edgar county, he sold histories of the war until 1865, when he entered the service of the Chicago & Alton road as a conductor. Remaining in that capacity six years on the C. & A., he in 1871 assisted in the construction of the Indiana, Bloomington & Western railroad, running the construction train between Peoria and Danville. The following year he accepted a run on the Chicago and North Western road, with headquarters at Clinton, Iowa. In 1877 he came to Wisconsin, running as conductor on the Oconto branch, and on the Marshfield and Southern divisions. He was with the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western when the Northern division was built through to Ashland, and the station Marion—where he now lives—was by Manager Reed named after Mrs. Coffman's sister, Mary, who was Mrs. James Churchill. She was the first white woman to come to that section of the country. Mary Churchill died July 7, 1862. Mrs. Coffman was the first white woman to ride over the road from Clintonville to Sheboygan, a distance of 105 miles. After serving for seven years as conductor, Mr. Coffman was, in 1884, promoted to the official title of roadmaster between Oshkosh and Milwaukee, a position which he filled until 1893. Since then he has engaged in farming.

Mr. Coffman was married, in 1865, to Miss Sarah A. Warnick, a native of Canada, daughter of John C. and Ellen (Johnson) Warnick, the former a native of New York, the latter of Canada. John C. Warnick was a farmer, and in 1851 moved from Canada to Grant township, Shawano Co., Wis., and opened up a farm, the nearest market then being New London. Mr. Warnick died February 3, 1882, his wife January 20, 1885. They reared a family of twelve children, of whom we have record as follows: Charlotte, who died at Eau Claire, Wis., in July, 1891; Eliza, who died in Clinton, Iowa; Mary, who died in Shawano county, Wis.; Elizabeth, who also died on the home place; John, who enlisted in the Twenty-first Wis. V. I., served three years, and died February 22, 1877, at Clinton, Iowa; Thomas, who enlisted in the Eighth Wis. V. C., served three years, and died in Madison, Wis., in 1865; Isabelle, of Oshkosh; James, who enlisted in a Wisconsin infantry regiment, and now resides on a farm in Oconto county; Joseph, of Kaukauna, Wis., a fireman on the Chicago & North Western railroad; Sarah A., Mrs. Coffman; Susan Burslam, died February 22, 1883; and Archibald Warnick, now living in Tacoma, Washington.

Mr. Coffman in politics is a Democrat. Himself and wife are members of the M. E. Church, of which he is also a trustee. They cleared the land that now constitutes their pleasant and commodious home, and have noted the rapid development of the country that has followed the advent of the iron horse.

EDWARD J. ROLLER (deceased) was born March 25, 1857, in Watertown, Dodge Co., Wis., a son of John and Anna (Johis) Roller, natives of Austria, who were the parents of six children—Mary, Augusta, Edward J., John, Anna and Amelia.

In 1853 the parents of our subject came to America and to Wisconsin, settling in Watertown, Jefferson county, where they remained some ten years, then removing to Richwood, Dodge county, where the father is yet living, all these years following his trade, that of blacksmith, in connection with farming. The mother died November 20, 1886. John Roller, paternal grandfather of Edward J., came to America from Austria with his children, and died in June, 1891, at the age of eighty-eight years; the grandmother, now at the patriarchal age of ninety years, is at present living at the home of her son John; they had two children—John and Anna.

The subject proper of this memoir was reared on the farm, assisting his father until he was twenty-two years of age, at which time he went to Minneapolis, where he commenced the trade of cooper, which he carried on there some five years, and then selling out in 1883 embarked in the saloon trade, continuing thereat in Minneapolis till 1887, in which year he came to Tomahawk, Lincoln county, and opened out a general mercantile business, one of the first in that line to be commenced in the place. By strict attention to the wants of his customers, honest dealing and courteous deportment, he succeeded in building up a remunerative business and surrounding himself with hosts of friends, among whom he was a recognized leader. In addition to his mercantile business he was interested in other industries, including logging and handling of wood, etc., for he was one of the most active business men in northern Wisconsin. But death interrupted his busy life, he being called from earth January 1, 1893, in the heyday of his early manhood and zenith of his usefulness, deeply mourned by all who knew him.

In June, 1885, Mr. Roller was married to Miss Josephine M. Cabott, daughter of Martin and Henrietta Cabott, who were the parents of six children, to wit: Michael, Leopold, Julia, Amelia, Leonard and Josephine M. Martin Cabott, father of this family, was born near Berlin, Prussia, in 1821, learned the trade of carpenter, was married in Posen, Germany, in 1840, and came to America in 1855, taking up his residence in Detroit, Mich., where he died in 1855. His wife was born in Berlin, Prussia, in 1822, a daughter of Judge John Van Zeebol, a man of considerable prominence in that city, who had a family of seven sons and five daughters. After the death of her husband Mrs. Henrietta Cabott moved from Detroit to Watertown, Wis., and was there married to a Mr. Howard, by whom she had five children, named respectively, Theodore, Albert, Rosa, Ferdinand and Henry. Mr. Howard died in the fall of 1893, but Mrs. Howard is yet living.

To Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Roller were born two children—Julian A., and George E., who died in infancy. In National and State politics Mr. Roller was a Democrat, but in local affairs he invariably cast his ballot for the candidate he considered best suited for the position, regardless of party ties. He served as deputy sheriff two years, and constable four years, filling both offices with eminent satisfaction. The entire family (as was also Mr. Roller himself) are consistent members of the Catholic Church, and enjoy the highest esteem and regard of the community at large.

ALBION F. LOMBARD. If the new and vigorous little settlement at Arnot, Stockton township, Portage county, ever grows to goodly proportions, its start on the road to prosperity will have been given it by A. F. Lombard. If the village does not so thrive, it will be because Mr. Lombard's efforts in its behalf are not seconded. In other words the subject of this sketch is a public-spirited citizen, zealous in advancing the interests of the community in which he lives, and thoroughly alive to the possibilities that might follow wise co-operation.

Mr. Lombard is the son of an early pioneer. The family of Lombards in this country have descended from three brothers who many generations ago came to the United States from the Island of Corsica, and settled at Scituate, a small fishing town on the coast of Massachusetts. Albion F. was born at Readfield, Kennebec Co., Maine, October 7, 1842. His father, James Lombard, was born at Gorham, Maine, Deember 2, 1796, and the grandfather and great-grandfather were likewise both named James. The father (James) was reared at Gorham, and there apprenticed to a saddler and harness-maker by his stepfather. James Lombard opened a shop at Readfield, Maine, where, September 7, 1817, he married Isabella Currier, born August 31, 1799, at Readfield, daughter of Samuel Currier, the leading physician of that village, whose practice years afterward fell to his son George. James Lombard's health was failing at his trade, and he took up the study of medicine, preparing himself by a course at Bowdoin College. Practicing successfully at Readfield, Gorham, and Saccarappa, a suburb of Portland, Maine, Dr. Lombard in May, 1851, started with his family for Wisconsin. Coming by rail from Saccarappa to Buffalo, and by the lakes on the old "Wisconsin" from Buffalo to Sheboygan, they drove by team to Plover, where a son, Lewis, had preceded them. Dr. Lombard was a poor man, and sought a home away from the city where he might rear his large family. His children were James, Charles, Isabel, George, Lewis, Leonidas, Halbert, Orlando, Washington, Horace, Emily, Albion F. and Emma. Of these, George (a farmer of Stockton), Lewis (a farmer of Lanark township), Albion F. and Enima (now Mrs. Sydney Stevens, of Livingston, Mont.), are the only survivors. His first settlement was in Section 32, Stockton township, where Lewis had pre-empted 160 acres before the land was on sale, not receiving his patent until 1858. Dr. Lombard died on that farm in 1858, from the effects of a long-standing complaint. He was buried in a private cemetery on the farm, which in 1891 became public, and is known as "Lombard Cemetery." Dr. Lombard was an intelligent, well-read man, far above the average of the early settlers. In politics he was a stanch Democrat. By the terms of the will the property was left to Albion F. and James, they to provide for the widowed mother, who survived until April 21, 1881, and was buried by the side of her husband.

Albion F. Lombard attended the Maine schools diligently till the journey west. For several years there were no schools in Stockton, but in the winters of 1860, 1861 and 1862 he attended terms on "The Prairie," under that old-time instructor, James Walker. After his father's death he took charge of his half of the farm. In 1863 many boy friends and acquaintances were enlisting in the army, and Albion F. was seized with a desire to become a soldier. He had about concluded to join the Seventh Wis. V. I., then stationed at Arlington Heights, in which an intimate friend, Michael Shortell, later killed on the Rappahannock river, had enlisted, when his brother Horace returned from service and pleaded with him not to volunteer. It took the united efforts of the family a long time to keep the boy out of service. He must go somewhere, however, for the spirit of adventure was in his veins. In the lumber country, along the Big Eau Plaine river, he became cook for the crew of a big raft of lumber and shingles bound for the South. Starting March 25, 1863, the first division of the raft collided at Clint's dam, and one of the crew perished, others narrowly escaping. The second division, containing Mr. Lombard, passed in safety. At Rock Island, Ill., the raft struck one of the bridge piers in the Mississippi river, and was considerably damaged; but by the aid of tug boats repairs were made, and the one million feet of choice lumber loaded with shingles, which the raft contained, reached Quincy, and the lumber was sold for $18 per thousand feet.

Receiving his pay, the young man started for Pike's Peak. Crossing the bridgeless Mississippi in a skiff, he reached St. Joe by rail, and staged it to Omaha. Impatiently waiting for a train to cross the Plains, he hired out to drive a team of four mules, hauling corn to Fort Laramie, Wyo., at forty dollars per month. He had to shell the corn himself, and started several days later. The wagon boss was brutal and insulting, and after several clashes Mr. Lombard left him, at Julesburg, Neb., obtaining his pay only after threats to sue. He had met trains bound for Denver at Ft. Kearney, and, joining one of them, paid his passage by work. Proceeding by stage to Mountain City, near Central City, Colo., where he expected to find his brother, Washington, he learned the latter had left for Idaho. Albion secured work as a laborer at a stamp mill, at $2.50 per day; then worked in a mine at $3 per day, and later at the Gregory Lode at $3.50 per day. His brother Horace joined him in the spring of 1865, and they worked as carpenters for a time, when Albion became foreman in a mine at California Gulch, Colo., at $3 per day in gold. Returning to Black Hawk, he, with the brother took a wagon train for Omaha. Here for a short time he worked for the Union Pacific Railway Co., and, work becoming scarce, hired out in the spring of 1866 as a laborer in the construction of the Union Pacific road at Columbus, Neb., 100 miles west of Omaha. One month of this work was enough, and returning to Omaha he drove wagon to Denver, and mined during the summer. Back to Omaha he went again in the fall to find his brother Horace doing contracting work, and hired out to him as a carpenter, being a great help to him in time of misfortune. During the winter of 1866-67 he hauled wheat to a mill twenty miles up the river from Omaha for Edward Creighton, afterward a multi-millionaire.

Hiring out on bridge construction for the Union Pacific road in the spring of 1867, Mr. Lombard learned on reaching his destination that "no hands were needed." A company of soldiers passing en route to Cheyenne, where barracks were to be erected, he hired out to Col. Carlin for $100 per month. Six weeks later, because a comrade was discharged, he quit, too, and did job work at Cheyenne for $10 per day. By fall he had saved several hundred dollars, and he returned to Wisconsin, where he spent the winter. Returning to Omaha in the spring, he was actively engaged in bridge and trestle building for the Union Pacific road as far west as Corinne, Utah. He witnessed the celebrated ceremonies attending the completion of the road, June 9, 1869, and soon after, learning of the death of his brother James, he returned to Stockton township, Portage Co., Wis., and took charge of the farm. He also engaged in the sale of agricultural implements and farm machinery. In 1890 he sold the "home farm," and erected several buildings at Arnott Station, doing much to establish and improve business at that point. There he erected the first potato warehouse, a building 40 x 60 feet, leasing it to Mr. Carley, who afterward bought it. He also sold other buildings, and thus diversified the interests at the little station. His business in implements and farm machinery grew so rapidly that in 1893 he built a large warehouse, and he has since added a select line of hardware. His present stock would be a credit to a larger town. On April 22, 1895, he met with a heavy loss by fire, amounting to some $3,500, on which he had an insurance of only $1,100; but in no ways discouraged, he has rebuilt, and has now an even finer place of business than was his old one.

In politics Mr. Lombard is independent, and votes for the best man. He is well-informed on matters of general interest, and is widely known. He possesses the full confidence and friendship of his wide circle of acquaintances, and a more popular and genial man it would be difficult to find. Sufficiently provided with worldly goods to make labor unnecessary, he enjoys life by building up the interests of the locality in which he lives.

REV. JOHN EISEN, pastor of St. John's Church of Marshfield, was born in the village of Weisendorf, Bavaria, Germany, April 22, 1856, and is a son of John Eisen, who was born in the same locality in 1812. He married Margaret Bessler, who was born in Bavaria in 1818, and they became the parents of three children: Barbara, Michael and John, but the last named is the only one of the family that ever came to America. The sister, Mrs. Stoehr, died in 1881. The father was called to the home beyond in 1865, and the mother, who survived him some years, passed away in 1888.

Father Eisen acquired his primary education in the public schools of his native land, which he attended until thirteen years of age, when he entered college in the city of Bamberg, there pursuing his studies until 1878. In that year he entered the University of Louvain in Belgium, and in 1882 was ordained a priest at Luxemburg. His entire life has been devoted to the work of the ministry, and in his clerical calling he came to America in March, 1883, being first stationed at Chippewa Falls, where he served as assistant priest for four months. He was then appointed pastor of the church in Ellsworth, Wis., over which he remained in charge for eight years and ten months. His residence in Marshfield dates from May, 1892, at which time he was called to the pastorate of St. John's Church.

His labors here have been untiring, and it was largely through his instrumentality that the fine brick edifice which is now used as their house of worship was erected. A school is also conducted in connection with the church, in which six teachers are employed and 462 pupils are enrolled. Father Eisen has given himself to his work with an unselfish devotion that has brought good results to the churches with which he has been connected. He is an indefatigable worker, earnestly striving to benefit his people, and he has their confidence and respect in an eminent degree.

CHARLES A. GARDNER, a prominent merchant of Mosinee, Marathon county, and senior member of the firm of C. Gardner & Co., was born in Mosinee in November, 1857, a son of Henry B. and Ellen R. (Priest) Gardner, who were born in New York State.

Henry B. Gardner came west about the year 1853, and at first locating in Minnesota; but after a short residence there removed to Marathon county, Wis., and settled near Mosinee, being among the pioneers of that district. After coming to Marathon county he worked in the pineries and at lumbering and logging, was for some years engaged in shingle manufacturing, and for several years conducted a hotel called the "Prairie House," about four miles north of Mosinee, on the Wausau and Stevens Point road. Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Gardner were the parents of three children, all of whom are living, namely: Charles A., the subject of this sketch; and George F. and Henry A., lumber manufacturers, their mill being situated about six miles from Mosinee. In 1863 Henry B. Gardner enlisted in the Thirty-eighth Wis. V. I., and was killed in battle.

Charles A. Gardner was educated in the public schools of Mosinee, Marathon Co., Wis., then engaged in lumbering and agricultural pursuits until July, 1887. In May, 1887, in Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., Wis., he was united in marriage with Miss Effie P. Locke, and one son, Raymond Locke, has been born to them. Mrs. Gardner is a daughter of Alfred and Pauline Locke, the former of whom resides in Oshkosh; the latter died in 1893. In July, 1887, Mr. Gardner, in connection with his brothers George F. and Henry A., embarked in mercantile pursuits. In 1890 George F. and Henry A. retired from the business, and our subject formed a co-partnership with Louis Dessert and Frank McReynolds, under the present firm name of C. Gardner & Co.

Politically, Mr. Gardner is a staunch Republican, and he served as president of the village of Mosinee one term; socially, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a live, progressive business man, enjoys the esteem not only of the residents of Mosinee, but of all who are acquainted with him, and his high character and genial qualities have made him generally popular.

HENRY W. REMINGTON, one of the pioneer settlers and a most popular resident of Babcock, Wood county, was born in Pittsfield, Lorain Co., Ohio, August 9, 1823. He is a son of Henry and Matilda (Williams) Remington, and was the first white child born in the town. His parents were New Englanders, his father being a descendant of the Turkey Hills Remingtons of Connecticut, while his mother came of the Williams family of Rhode Island. In 1822 the father removed from Berkshire county, Mass., to Ohio, leaving Washington Mountain, Mass., in January of that year, and traveling all the way on a sled drawn by oxen, the trip consuming forty days, and during the last six miles of the journey they had to cut their way through the dense forests. They were the first family to settle in Pittsfield, Ohio. There the birth of our subject occurred the following year.

When Henry W. was a child of four years he accompanied his parents on a visit to Massachusetts, and there for the first time saw how people lived in civilization. In 1837 the father again thought it best to go West and removed to Steuben county, Ind., locating in the midst of a wilderness. There he went through all the hardships and privations that are known to frontier life, and for three years struggled to maintain his health against the fevers and agues that prevailed in that new country. At one time he nearly died when twenty miles from his home, where were his wife and three sons and three daughters, all sick and unaware of his condition. This determined him to retrace his steps and leave the far western frontier for a time, so in January, 1840, he returned to Lorain county, Ohio, and settled in the town of Amherst, where his death occurred in January, 1891, he having reached the advanced age of ninety-five years. His wife passed away in 1882, at the age of eighty-three years.

Henry W. Remington had accompanied his parents on their various removals in his youth. The Presidential election of 1840 aroused him to action, and he attended all of the political meetings possible, and often made speeches to the audiences assembled. Although he knew but little about schools at that time, he was very familiar with the history of his country and its great men. His leisure hours in the woods and in his cabin home were often spent in study, and his mother proved to him a good teacher. The year following he obtained permission to leave home and began teaching school, which he followed at intervals until twenty years of age, also attending school within that period. He also worked as an assistant in the county treasurer's office, and while thus employed he studied surveying.

About this time his father became financially embarrassed, and was so discouraged that he expressed himself as ready to give up the contest for his home, but Henry W.,

then just of age, looked more upon the bright side of life and determined to aid his father in the difficulty. He had but little time to act, but at once bought goods which he began to sell as a peddler, traveling as far east as Newport, R. I., and as far west as Nauvoo, Ill., during the succeeding four months. At the latter place Joe Smith, the prophet, and his brother had just been killed, and the Mormon war was in progress. At Carthage, Ill., he was captured by the anti-Mormons, and held prisoner for a week as a Mormon sympathizer. Soon after he was captured by the Mormons and imprisoned by them for three weeks. He was a witness of the killing of the sheriff of Hancock county, saw most of the incidents of the war, and was in that locality when the settlement was made in which the Mormons agreed to leave the State. He improved his time while a prisoner in buying up the heaviest claims against his father, these being held by Mormons then in Nauvoo, and when he succeeded in getting away he was master of the situation as far as his father's debts were concerned. He then went down the Mississippi and up the Ohio river to Cincinnati, thence across the State to his home, having in about six months time paid off all his father's debts, besides seeing considerable of the world and saving to the family their home.

On his return, Mr. Remington again entered the treasurer's office, but after a few months purchased 150 acres of timber land on credit, and began farming. The same year he was married he cleared and fenced fifty acres of his land, and sowed it in wheat. This property he afterward disposed of. He had gone security for friends, who could not pay him, and so he could not meet the payments upon his own property, and in consequence he sold out, paid his debts, and gave to his father-in-law the remainder of his capital, to pay for the board of his wife and child as long as it would last. With indomitable courage Mr. Remington entered the law office of Judge Humphrville, of Medina, Ohio, with whom he studied for two years, when he was admitted to the bar, having supported himself in the meantime by carpenter work, by teaching school, and by trying cases in justice courts. He had also made a trip to Chicago, Ill., and Madison and Milwaukee, Wis., with a team and peddler's wagon, returning to his home from the last named place by way of the lakes.

In October, 1848, having completed his law studies, Mr. Remington packed up his carpenter's tools, surveyor's outfit, and a few books he had obtained, together with his household goods and, accompanied by his wife and little girl, took a steamer at Cleveland for Milwaukee, where he landed November 1, 1848, so ill that he had to be helped ashore. He had only a few dollars in his pocket, and knew no one in that place. The roads were then almost impassable, but as soon as he was able to sit up he hired a man owning a team and lumber wagon, and after twelve hours of travel they found themselves only fourteen miles from Milwaukee. After six days they reached Madison, and there the little daughter, after a three-weeks' illness, passed away on her second birthday. In Madison, Mr. Remington's skill as a surveyor became known, and he was soon profitably employed, being appointed by Gov. Dewey to appraise school lands, which occupied his time for one year. He also had letters of introduction to Judge Hubbell, then judge of the Madison and Milwaukee circuit court, which he presented, and was admitted to the bar. Shortly after he was established in a large and lucrative practice, and in the following year formed a partnership with Judge L. B. Vilas, father of U. S. Senator William F. Vilas, but after a few years, his sight and health failing him, he in a great degree turned his law business over to others, and engaged in the construction of the Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien railroad through to the Mississippi; also in improving the streets of Madison, in constructing the Watertown & Madison railroad, and in building up the village of Black Earth. In 1857, misfortune again overtook him. During a long and severe attack of typhoid fever his wife became insane. In the month of January she left him, and the care of their three young children devolved on him alone. Three days later a large amount of his property at Black Earth was destroyed by fire, shortly after a bank failed by which he lost $16,000, and by the collapse of the Watertown & Madison railroad he lost as much more, so that within a year the accumulations of many years of hardships and privations were all swept away.

During all this time Mr. Remington was prominent in political matters, and succeeded in introducing into the Legislature resolution for the closing of saloons on election days, for he believed that drunkenness caused much of the ill-feeling and trouble that occurred on those days. This resolution resulted in the passage of the present law in regard to the closing of all liquor saloons at the time of elections, and this work has brought to him more satisfaction than he would have obtained had the highest political favors been bestowed upon him. He was nominated for district attorney in 1856, and after a hotly contested election was beaten by the saloon influence by sixteen votes, his opponent being Hon. M. H. Orton. He warmly advocates Democratic principles, but has really never cared for political preferment.

In 1860, Mr. Remington came to Wood county, and engaged in the lumbering business and the cultivation of cranberries, and was also instrumental in the building of the Valley railroad from Tomah to Wausau, Wis., and was vice-president of the company. He has repeatedly served as chairman of the town and county boards of supervisors, and has served one term in the State Legislature, and has been prominently connected with all public enterprises calculated to advance the general welfare. He has now partially retired from active business (spends some of his time writing for the Press on various subjects), and is living in the town of Remington, which was named in his honor.

Mr. Remington was twice married, first wedding Betsy Wiling, by whom he had three children: Dora, wife of Eber Steile, of Amherst, Ohio; William H.; and Amanda Ellen, wife of Adelbert Cleveland, of Remington. In 1858, in Madison, Wis., he wedded Susan McGlyn, widow of Andrew Clavin, and they have a son, Henry, a conductor on the St. Paul & Duluth railroad, residing at St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Remington is one of the oldest residents of Wood county, highly-esteemed for his keen intelligence and unswerving integrity, is recognized as a gentleman of unmistakable ability, and is respected throughout the county.

HERMAN C. EICHE, mayor of Marshfield, is one of the highly-esteemed and prominent citizens of Wood county, and his unselfish devotion to public interests has won him the commendation of all concerned. He is numbered among Wisconsin's native sons, his birth having occurred in Meeme, Manitowoc county, February 8, 1856. He is descended from sterling German ancestry.

His grandfather John Eiche, who was an officer under the Prussian government, was the father of two children—John B. and Nannie—the former of whom is the founder of the family in America. He was born in Prussia in 1815, and in his younger years learned the cabinet maker's trade which he followed in the Fatherland until his emigration. At the age of twenty-eight he crossed the Atlantic to America, and coming to Wisconsin took up his residence in Manitowoc county, Wis. In 1845 he was united in marriage with Catherine Walters, also a native of Prussia, who came to this country with her three brothers: Fred, Herman and Joseph. They all settled in Meeme township, Manitowoc county, where they engaged in farming, though Herman subsequently carried on a furniture store in Sheboygan, Wis., until his death. The parents of this family died in Prussia when Mrs. Eiche was only thirteen years of age. On coming to Wisconsin, John B. Eiche secured a farm, and he is yet living on the old homestead, having devoted his entire time and attention to its improvement. Eight children were born of his marriage to Miss Walters, one of whom died in infancy, the others being George D., Leopold C., Herman, Mary, Anna, Nannie and Louisa. The mother passed away in 1889.

In taking up the personal history of Herman C. Eiche, we present to our readers the life record of one who is widely and favorably known in Wood county—a self-made man, whose industrious efforts have brought him well-merited success. His early years were quietly passed upon the home farm, while his education was acquired in the district school, to which he had to walk a distance of two and a half miles. At the age of sixteen he left home to fit himself for earning his living in some other way than farm labor, and began to learn the shoemaker's trade in Centerville, where he remained three years. He then learned the business of manufacturing cheese, and carried on a cheese factory for his father two years, when his father gave him the plant, and he operated it in his own interest one year. Selling out in 1879, he then removed to Sheboygan Falls, where he remained for a year, at the expiration of which time he purchased a saloon in Brillion, Wis., successfully conducting it for five years. In 1887 he sold out that business, and has since been identified with Marshfield's interests, building here, in the spring of 1888, a store-room, in which he began a retail business in wines and liquors, changing it, however, to a wholesale trade in 1891. He manages his interests on strict business principles, and is always straightforward and honorable in his dealings.

Mr. Eiche takes great delight in his home. In 1879 he married Lena Festerling, who was born in the town of Mosel, Sheboygan county, Wis., a daughter of Andrew C. and Louisa Festerling, natives of Prussia, who came to America in 1847, settling on a farm in Sheboygan county. Their family numbered eight children as follows: Fred, Herman, Charles, Gustol, Menna, Augusta, Louisa and Lena. The mother died in 1890, but the father is still living. Four children have been given Mr. and Mrs. Eiche: Laura, Adelia, Reuben and Melvin. The principles of Democracy are advocated by Mr. Eiche, and he takes quite an active interest in political affairs. While residing in Brillion, Wis., he served for three years as school treasurer; for two terms has been alderman of Marshfield, and in 1894 was elected its mayor, which position he is now creditably and acceptably filling. It is his earnest desire to advance the city's welfare, and promote all interests which will add to its improvement and upbuilding. Socially, he is connected with the I. O. O. F. and the Sons of Hermann, in which he has filled all the offices. With no special advantages in his youth, he started out to fight life's battles unaided, and has won the victory over poverty and other difficulties, securing for himself a comfortable competence.

SOLOMON TRUDEAU was born in Canada East (now the Province of Quebec) May 13, 1831, son of Stephen and Constance Trudeau, who were born in Canada of French ancestry, and are now both deceased. They had born to them ten children, of whom six are still living, namely: Marie, wife of Oliver Vigeault, residing in the Province of Quebec, Canada; Eloise, a sister in the Providence Convent at Montreal, Canada; Solomon, the subject of this sketch; Malena, wife of Conzaque Berard; Domitile and Orostile, residing in the Province of Quebec, Canada.

Solomon Trudeau was reared and educated in Canada, and when twenty-four years of age came to the United States, locating in Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., where he has been a continuous resident some forty years. He worked in the pineries, also at rafting lumber on the Wisconsin river, and as foreman in sawmills for about twenty-eight years, since which he has not been engaged in any active business. In 1879 Solomon Trudeau was united in marriage with Malena, widow of Moses Turner, and daughter of the late John La Messurier. They have had no children by this marriage. Mr. Trudeau is one of the few men who came to Wausau at an early period of its history, and have lived to see it grow from an obscure logging camp and Indian village to a city of prosperity and note. He is a man of high character, much esteemed in the community in which he lives.

Malena, second living daughter of John La Messurier, and wife of Solomon Trudeau, was born in the Isle of Guernsey January 7, 1837, accompanied her parents to America, when but four years of age, has been a resident of Wausau for upward of fifty years, and has been married three times. Her first husband was Isaac Coulthirst, to whom she was wedded at Pine River, Lincoln Co., Wis., and by him she had three children, two of whom are now living: Ellen Maria, wife of C. W. Nutter, of Wausau; and Mary Ann, wife of Richard Cosgrove, residing at Chippewa Falls, Wis. Mrs. Trudeau's second husband was Moses Turner, by whom she had four children, two of whom at present reside in Wausau: Alice, wife of Frederick Burt, and Aarah M., wife of Albert Empey. In 1879 occurred her marriage to Solomon Trudeau, as already stated. John La Messurier, father of Mrs. Solomon Trudeau, and one of the very earliest settlers in Marathon county, was born in the Island of Guernsey, in the English Channel, February 2, 1799, where he was reared and educated. He was united in marriage in Guernsey with Elizabeth H. Alley, who was born at Newton-Bushel, England, June 7, 1779, and to their union were born three children, who came with them to America, and two of whom are yet living, viz.: Malena, wife of Solomon Trudeau, and Priscilla, wife of Eli R. Chase, a prominent lawyer, formerly a resident of Wausau, but now of Contra Costa, Cal. Coming to this country in 1839, Mr. La Messurier located at Sauk Prairie, Wis., where he erected the first house, the first store, and the first blacksmith shop ever built in the upper town; he also owned and operated the first ferry at that point on the Wisconsin river. He removed to Wausau, Marathon county, in 1846, and was a constant and highly-esteemed resident of that city, taking an active part in matters pertaining to the welfare of the county and of his fellowmen. He continued to make Wausau his home until his death, which occurred April 20, 1885. His faithful wife was the third white woman to locate in Marathon county.

Priscilla, youngest living daughter of John La Messurier, was born in the Island of Guernsey May 11, 1839, came to Wausau, Wis., with her parents when nine years of age, and lived in Wausau, Marathon county, until 1873, since which date she has been a resident of Contra Costa, Cal. In June, 1858, she was united in marriage with Eli R. Chase, who was born in New York State, and was a prominent lawyer and resident of Wausau up to 1873. They had four children: Margaret Adelia, born at Wausau where she died in infancy; John L., who died at the age of thirty-one years, and Anna, deceased when fifteen (they were both born in Wausau, and both died in California), and Gertrude, born in California, and died at the age of nineteen years.

HON. JAMES J. NELSON. The Kingdom of Norway, that cradle of the redoubtable and hardy Norsemen of old, the Vikings of history and poetry, who were wont to make the nations of the earth tremble with awe at their deeds of valor, daring and prowess, has given to America many of her most useful, enterprising, loyal and brave citizens. In them still lingers a strong leaven of the old Norse ardor, resolution and indomitable perseverance, as well as of that unquenchable spirit of adventure that impelled Norwegian navigators, with their white-winged ships, to seek out every quarter of the earth, some of whom left their footprints on the shores of this vast continent hundreds of years before either Cabot, or Cartier, or Columbus opened his eyes to the world. To be descended from such a noble race is a proud distinction, indeed, one that the subject of these lines is justly entitled to by virtue of his blood, his heritage and his instincts.

Mr. Nelson is in the heyday of his manhood, having been born April 8, 1846, in Porsgrund, Bratsbergs Amt, Norway, a son of Nels Andersen Toldnes and Anna Helvik Jacobson Hogstad (Toldnes), both also of Norwegian birth, the father born April 14, 1802, in Slemdahl, the mother born, in 1804, at the same place. In his youth the father learned tailoring in Porsgrund, where by industry he accumulated a snug property, following his trade till his emigration to the United States. He and his wife were the parents of children as follows, all born in Porsgrund, Norway: Isaac, born January 27, 1827, married Anna Pernille Erikson, by whom he had three children—Edward, Carrie P. (deceased) and Adolph—and after her death he married Maren Gullickson, by whom he had one child—Anna. Ingeborg Karine, born November 27, 1829, married Jacob P. Toldnes, a blacksmith, and had four children—Inger Andrea, Maren (deceased), Mariane and Nicolai. Andrew M. (who is a banker in Amherst), born April 14, 1843, married for his first wife Isaphena Smith, by whom he had one child—Henry I. (now deceased)—and after her decease wedded Agnes Louise Boss, by whom he had three children—Elizabeth Maud, Nellie Ernestine and Agnes Louis; the mother of these dying, he married, for his third wife, Julia Nelson, and they also had three children—Minnie Eburna, Beulah Genivieve and Winifred Rosamond. James J. is the subject proper of this biographical sketch. The mother of this family died in Norway in 1846, and in 1857 the father sold his property in Porsgrund for twelve hundred dollars, then with his family set sail from the port of Porsgrund on the 20th of April, same year, on the good ship "Sjofna," Capt. P. M. Petersen, bound for Quebec, Canada, reaching her destination after a voyage of five weeks and five days. From that quaint "Gibraltar of America" the family at once came to Wisconsin via Buffalo and Milwaukee, from which latter city they journeyed by wagon to Oshkosh, thence by steamer up the Wolf river to Northport. The then new settlement of Scandinavia being their objective point, they traveled from Northport thither on foot, the journey occupying some seven-teen hours, and their first day there they passed with a friend, after which for a year they lived at the home of Isaac N. Toldnes (brother of our subject), who had preceded them to America in 1848. At the end of that time the father of the family purchased eighty acres of partially-improved land in Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, whereon he built a comfortable, if not luxurious, log house, where he passed the rest of his days, dying August 27, 1863. He was a son of Andreas Oleson and Isane Isaacson, who lived and died in Norway, the parents of children as follows: Ole (who located in southern Wisconsin early in the "forties" and died there), Nels, Anders, Karen and Anna, all deceased. The name of our subject's maternal grandfather was Jacob Jenson, that of the grandmother being Ingeborg Oleson.

James J. Nelson, the subject proper of this review, accompanied his father and his brother Andrew M. to the New World in 1857, being then a bright boy of some eleven summers. In Scandinavia township, Waupaca Co., Wis., his early educational training was received at the common winter schools of the "neighborhood," for a few years, his attendance being somewhat handicapped, however, by the disadvantages of living two or three miles from the school house, which distance he had to tramp daily, the way lying through woods and swamps. During the summers he assisted his father on the farm, clearing the land of timber and brush, and converting it into smiling fields of golden grain or honey-laden clover. After the death of his father, the lad, now sixteen years old, left the old homestead in Scandinavia, and journeying to Waupaca found employment there with Dr. George H. Calkins, doing various chores for his board and farther schooling. At the end of five months, being an apt and willing student, he found himself competent to accept a position in the drug store of James A. Chesley, of Waupaca, and there remained till the following June, when we next find him in Oshkosh, working in the harvest field for F. F. Kees—all these his younger-day experiences illustrating with what facility he could apply himself to any conditions of life, no matter how irksome or laborious.

This now brings us to our subject's enlistment at Waupaca August 16, 1864, in Company A, Forty-second Wis. V. I., Capt. Duncan McGregor, which regiment soon thereafter was ordered to Madison, Wis., where the companies were drilled about two weeks, and then sent to Cairo, Ill. Here the colonel, E. T. Sprague, who took command of the regiment, promoted Private Nelson to the position of his orderly. After serving eight months, he was taken sick and was sent to hospital, where he remained two months and thirteen days, at the end of which time he returned to Waupaca on furlough; but he had barely arrived home when he received orders to proceed at once to Madison for the purpose of receiving his discharge, same being granted him June 2, 1865. On the occasion of this visit to Madison, Mr. Nelson partook of an exceedingly frugal meal, consisting of a ten-cent loaf of bread, which he carried to the suburbs of the city, and there ate with a relish. (What a contrast within the space of a few years!) On regaining his health, which had been much impaired, he left Waupaca for Scandinavia, and for a couple of months worked as a farm hand for his cousin Isaac Oleson Solverud; then journeying to Stevens Point he secured work as a porter in Mrs. Kollock's hotel; but at the end of two months he once more came to Waupaca, and accepted a position as clerk in the store of H. J. & A. Stetson, with whom he remained two and one-half years. On November 28, 1866, he and his brother, Andrew M., embarked in mercantile business at Amherst, our subject continuing, however, with the Stetson firm for a year after the opening out of the Amherst business. In 1867 he married, an event that will presently be recorded, and then moved from Waupaca to Amherst, at once assuming charge of his interests in the firm of A. M. & J. J. Nelson. This relationship continued until October, 1870, when the partnership was dissolved, and our subject commenced in the same line for his own account, and in his present place of business at Amherst.

On October 14, 1867, at Waupaca, Mr. Nelson was united in marriage with Miss Juniata Patton Andrews, Rev. M. F. Sorenson officiating, and children as follows have come to them: Herbert Sprague, born May 8, 1869, now a resident of Idaho Springs, Colo.; George Bliss, born May 21, 1876, at present attending Wisconsin State University, Madison; and Laura Perry, born February 17, 1882. Mrs. Nelson is a member of the Episcopal Church. She is a most amiable, talented and educated lady, beloved by all who know her, and she presides over the home with dignified grace, and with the hospitality and kindly greeting proverbial of the entire home. She is a native of Wisconsin, born July 23, 1849, in Janesville, Rock county, a daughter of John V. and Aurelia (Saxton) Andrews, the former of whom was born May 17, 1818, the latter on November 9, 1823. Grandfather Andrews was born in Connecticut in 1787, and his wife April 8, 1797, in Broome county, N. Y., and they had children as follows: Solomon, Harmon, John V., Phelinda (now Mrs. Carl H. Marckstadt, of Princeton, Wis.), and Walter. Grandfather Saxton was born in Bennington county, Vt., April 8, 1785, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died some time in the "fifties;" he married Rosetta Shellhouse, who was born at Ferrisburg, Vt., October 12, 1792, and lived to be 102 years old.

John V. Andrews (Mrs. Nelson's father) came from Cortland county, N. Y., to Wisconsin in 1837, and settled in Rochester, Racine county, where he married, afterward removing to Janesville, and thence, after some years (in 1855), coming to Waupaca. Here he carried on the trade of millwright, which was his vocation after marriage, prior to which he had followed agricultural pursuits. In 1869 he removed to Rea, Andrew Co., Mo., where he is now living on a farm. During the Civil war he was in the employ of the government, working at his trade in Nashville, Tenn. The record of the children born to John V. and Aurelia (Saxton) Andrews is as follows: Edwin R. was a soldier in the Twenty-first Wis. V. I., serving two and a half years in the Civil war; he married Virginia Harron, by whom he had four sons, and died in East Rockport, Ohio, May 30, 1887. Myra died in infancy. Mary is also deceased. Juniata P. is the wife of James J. Nelson. Emma resides in Waupaca. Frank M. is a resident of St. Joe, Mo. Anna Alma lives in King City, Mo. Erminie resides in Rea, Andrew Co., Missouri.

In his political preferences our subject is a strong Republican, and, though he has never sought office, has yet been honored with positions of honor, both State and local. He is well-known among the politicians of the State. In 1894 he was a delegate to the State Convention, and he helped to nominate W. H. Upham for governor, having on a previous occasion been of similar assistance to Gov. Rusk. On May 17, 1895, he was appointed, by Gov. Upham, commissioner of immigration for the State of Wisconsin. Socially, he has been affiliated with the F. & A. M.; since joining the Fraternity at Waupaca, in 1877, has attained the 32nd degree, and is a member of the Mystic Shrine; is also associated with Capt. Eckels Post, G. A. R., at Amherst. He was baptized and confirmed in the Lutheran faith. In 1876 he attended the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. In the early spring of 1882, in company with Rev. Perry Miller, he crossed the Atlantic in the "Devonia," and journeyed through Scotland, visiting Edinburgh, Glasgow and the Highlands, also traveling through England, France, Germany, Sweden, Denmark and Norway, in the latter country visiting his old home, and the most northerly town in Europe—Hammerfest, in the "land of the midnight sun." The trip occupied five months, and the wanderers returned home by way of Glasgow, recrossing the Atlantic to New York in the "Furnesia." During the summer of 1892, accompanied by his wife and children, Mr. Nelson visited the chief places of interest in the West, including Denver, Salt Lake City, Yellowstone Park, etc., being absent over two months on this delightful trip.

Mr. Nelson is noted for his genial manners, social nature, cordiality and courtesy, attributes well becoming his fine physique, quick intuition and generous sympathies. These, all combined, have militated in making him deservedly most popular among all classes, and in winning for him the success in business, which has been built and reared on his well-established reputation for integrity. Success seldom fails to come when it is entirely deserved. Certainly it has not in the case of Mr. Nelson. Wealth and friends have been given him, and he and his faithful life partner enjoy them all with no trace of that offensive ostentation that has so often shaded the lives of others. It is a pleasure to bear willing testimony to real worth, and this last testimony voices the sentiments of the entire community in which they live. In addition to his extensive business, the largest of the kind in Amherst, Mr. Nelson is closely associated with property interests and enterprises outside of that city. Few men are to be found who, unaided, have made in their early manhood so enviable a success. He is recognized as one of the most liberal-minded of men, believing in the essence of the golden rule—"do unto others as you would they should do unto you"—seldom a day passing without some tangible evidence of his philanthropical nature being made manifest. His delight is in helping others when worthy of assistance, and there is nothing he would not do for a friend in need, as many a grateful heart knows. But his liberality is not confined to those in distress and affliction, for others have felt and appreciated the open-handedness and frankness of his generosity. When he and Rev. Perry Miller took their never-to-be-forgotten trip to Europe in 1882 (above referred to), all the latter's expenses were generously defrayed by Mr. Nelson.

For seven years the family lived in the apartments over the store, but in 1877 Mr. Nelson commenced building his present modern residence, from time to time adding to it. The dwelling is both elegant and commodious, situated in large, well-kept grounds ornamented with graceful trees, picturesque shrubbery and beautiful lawns, the mansion inside being furnished with all modern accessories to be found in a refined and cultivated home—treasures in art and bric-a-brac collected from all quarters of the world, and a large and carefully selected library, themselves presenting evidence of the literary taste and accomplishments of their owners—the tout ensemble presenting the reflex of chaste and cultivated minds.

IRA J. BISHOP is one of the honored pioneers of Waupaca county, to whom the experiences of frontier life are very familiar, for he has lived in this State since the time when the greater part of the land was in the possession of the government, when settlements were widely scattered, and when Indians were still frequently seen. He was the third white child born in the town of Plymouth, Sheboygan Co.,

Wis.—a son of Hiram and Amanda (Baldwin) Bishop, natives of Oswego county, New York.

Hiram Bishop's early life was spent mostly on the farm, where he enjoyed but limited educational privileges. He, however, abandoned the farm while yet a boy in his "teens," and became a sailor. In this he was assisted by his brother-in-law, Capt. Chapman, who was a man of stern demeanor, but under the rough exterior there existed a very kind heart, and many a one did he help in various ways. He secured for Mr. Bishop a position on the lakes, which gave him a start in life, and Hiram was steadily promoted until he finally became a sailing master. He was very ambitious, not content with mediocrity, but always working his way to something better. He continued a sailor upon the lakes until twenty-two years of age, and in 1844 emigrated to Sheboygan county, Wis., where he purchased wild land from the government, transforming it into one of the finest farms of the neighborhood. He still retains possession of the original eighty acres, and, although now seventy-two years of age, operates it. His wife, but six weeks his junior, has shared with him in all the trials and hardships of life, and has rejoiced with him as prosperity has come to them. He was a man of great muscular power, often astonishing his companions by exhibitions of his strength. The winter after his arrival in this State he boarded with a neighboring family, and having business in Milwaukee he went on foot to that place, a distance of sixty miles, following the Indian trails, for there were no roads. As hotel accommodations there were very limited, he walked back ten miles in order to obtain shelter for the night, these seventy miles being accomplished in one day. Ten months previous he had left his trunk at the only hotel in Milwaukee, and had hid some money in it. The landlord was very much surprised when he saw him return and secure the money. In the fall of 1845 he went to New York, and in July, 1846, married Amanda Baldwin.

In August, 1846, Mr. Bishop brought his bride to the little log cabin he had erected on his Wisconsin farm. In payment for the previous winter's board he had cut the timber from the first acre of land cleared on what now constitutes the site of the city of Plymouth, and on that ground now stand three churches. He ripened the first apple in Plymouth, and many people came to see it, while Ira J., then a little boy, was often held up that he might also view the fruit. In the little home there was at first no floor and no windows, as lumber and building material were hard to get, there being no sawmill nearer than Sheboygan, fourteen miles away. These were soon supplied, but for a year and a half Mr. Bishop had no team. He would work for two days for a neighbor in order to get the use of an ox-team for a day, but after a few years he became the owner of the best ox-team in the county, taking premium at the first county fair held in Sheboygan county. He continued to cultivate his farm with the aid of his noble wife and children, until to-day the property is valued at several thousand dollars. (1) Ira J. Bishop is the eldest in the family. (2) Mary Sophia, who was born July 5, 1851, and was a cultured young lady, died at the age of twenty-five. (3) Lester Tyler, born September 12, 1855, is engaged in merchandising and other lines of business in Sheboygan; he married Evaline Barnard, daughter of his partner, George W. Barnard; this estimable lady died June 15, 1895, St. Paul's Episcopal Church, at Plymouth, being inadequate to accommodate those who attended the funeral rites, evidence of the esteem in which she was held by those who knew her; she left two daughters, aged fourteen and ten respectively, and a son one year old; Lester possesses excellent business ability; has been clerk of the court, and alderman, also city clerk of Plymouth, and though he is a Democrat receives a large Republican support, which indicates his popularity and the high regard in which he is held; he is accounted one of the prominent citizens of Sheboygan. (4) H. Fayette, born May 10, 1859, went to California in 1887, to engage in mining, and no news was heard of him until January 11, 1895, when he was married. Feeling the necessity of an education for his children, Hiram Bishop turned his home into a school room, and gave his children as good advantages as were possible. All remained at home until after they had attained adult age, and strong family ties still draw them to the parental roof.

In 1861, at the early age of fourteen, Ira Bishop began teaching school, receiving $15 per month, out of which he paid $6 for board. In that work he was very successful, and won a high reputation by untiring application. The first school, held in a building 16 x 20 feet, numbered fifty pupils. He followed teaching fourteen years, and his wages were gradually increased to $75 per month; but on account of ill health he was obliged to abandon that work. Two years previous he purchased 160 acres of land in Waupaca county, still in its primitive condition, covered with a dense growth of hard-wood timber, and in 1876 took up his residence thereon. He was then almost a physical wreck. He purchased two horse-teams, and his father gave him some grain to feed them until he should get located and at work; but he could not load the twelve bags of oats into the sleigh, and it required three days and two nights for him to drive from Plymouth to Symco, Wis. For almost a year he boarded with Mrs. Z. Baldwin, his aunt, then returned and taught a select school of young teachers. His health had rapidly improved under out-door exercise, but this school warned him of the return of difficulty, and he returned to his farm, on which he built a log shanty, 14 x 20 feet, and only six feet high, having previously made a small clearing. In it he lived alone for three years, cooking his food, when a frame house was built a short distance off, which has since been remodeled, making a comfortable home. At one time a bear visited him while he was cutting some logs away from home. His lumbering was done on the land, and afforded him some means of living.

Mr. Bishop was married December 30, 1879, to Catherine, daughter of David and Catherine (Remus) Wolfred, who were of Holland lineage. Mrs. Bishop was born in Holland, and at the age of six months was brought to America. Her father, a farmer by occupation, died while en route, leaving three children: Elizabeth, wife of Isaac Eernessee, who died in 1890, leaving twelve children; George C., now a farmer of Indiana, and Mrs. Bishop, the youngest. The mother afterward married Peter Dillman, who was of the same country. She had brought the remains of her first husband to Chicago, where he was laid to rest, and thus she was left alone in a strange country with three children to support. She then went to Sheboygan county, Wis., where her father-in-law, Christopher Wolfred, lived, and worked hard to support her family, often walking three miles to do a day's washing. The children were early forced to earn their own living, George starting alone for Indiana at the age of fifteen. There he secured work, and through honorable dealing has secured a good home; he is married and now has a family of five children. By her second marriage Mrs. Dillman became the mother of five children: John, a fisherman of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; Peter, who operates the old homestead, and cares for his mother, who is now seventy-two years of age; Crena, wife of Jacob Verdoin, a resident of Sheboygan, Wis., and two who died in infancy.

Mrs. Bishop began earning her living at the age of fourteen, and later learned the dress-making trade, which she followed until the time of her marriage, accumulating considerable money, with which she furnished her home at the time of her marriage. Together Mr. and Mrs. Bishop have labored, transforming the rugged wilderness into an inviting home, and the success which has come to them is due no more to the industry and enterprise of the husband than to the economy and good management of the wife. The privations and discouragements of pioneer life have been theirs in common with all who have striven to extend the bounds of civilization. In connection with farming Mr. Bishop is engaged in raising hogs and in the dairy business, and during the winter of 1894 his wife made eleven hundred pounds of butter. This worthy couple have the highest regard of all who know them, for their many excellencies of character command admiration and respect. They are earnest advocates of the cause of popular education. Socially Mr. Bishop is connected with Plymouth Lodge No. 71, I. O. O. F. From the Territorial days of Wisconsin he has resided within her borders, has witnessed her entire growth as a State, and has ever borne his part in the work of upbuilding and advancement, being numbered among her valued citizens, as well as honored pioneers.

NATHAN S. LOCKE, one of the prominent and influential citizens of Antigo, is a native of the "Old Granite State," his birth having taken place October 27, 1837, in the town of Hopkintown, New Hampshire.

The Lockes are a well-known family in New England, and date their ancestry back to John Locke, who was born in London, England, Sept. 16, 1618, and came to New England about 1638. He was a man of great energy and courage, serving as captain in the French and Indian wars of the early days, and was so instrumental in defeating the Indians in several of their descents upon the town as to incur their special enmity. As afterward appeared, eight of their number journeyed from Canada to Rye, N. H., with the express purpose of killing him. They succeeded in their attempt August 26, 1692, but found the task one of difficulty and danger. He was attacked while reaping grain in the field, and the sickle with which the brave man stoutly defended himself, and which was broken in the combat, is now in the museum of the State Historical Society, and on exhibition at their family reunions. Capt. John Locke's descendants now form a numerous and influential family. More than two hundred, including representatives of the fifth to the ninth generation, were present at the reunion held August 26, 1892, at Rye, N. H., where their reunions are held in honor of the memory of their heroic ancestor. Capt. John Locke was the great-grandfather of Jonathan Locke, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and served at the battle of Bunker Hill with great distinction.

Jonathan Locke's son David, father of Nathan S. Locke, our subject, was born at Epson, N. H., January 19, 1795. He was a wheelwright by trade; he also owned a farm which he managed with success. He was an only son, and had five sisters. He was a man of enterprise and integrity. On December 23, 1818, he married Elizabeth S. Chase, who was born at Pittsfield, N. H., May 11, 1796, and who was a relative of Chief Justice Chase, and also of Bishop Chase. Ten children were born of this marriage, as follows: Drusilla L., Alpheus C., Mary E., Sarah C., Milton P., Ann M., Silas M., Nathaniel C., Nathan S. and George H. Neither of these six sons has ever used tobacco or liquors of any kind, nor has their father. This family inherited habits of frugality and industry, so productive of success with the true New Englander, by which some of them have won for themselves positions of honor and usefulness they now enjoy, and by which all have attained a competency, some having become wealthy. These brothers have given the world some of the most valuable inventions that have ever been produced for controlling the pressure of steam and water; they have valuable patents, in England, Germany and France, on devices which regulate steam and water pressures. They own a large plant at Salem, Mass., and manufacture their own machines. Nathaniel C., the well-known inventor, has made this a special study for more than twenty-five years, and is probably one of the best-informed men in the world to-day on this subject. The mother of this family, after a noble Christian life, died at Hopkintown, N. H., in 1869; the father, David Locke, after a quiet, useful life, died at the same place in 1886.

Nathan S. Locke, of this family, was given all the advantages of good schools, and was a student for two years in the Claremont (N. H.) Seminary, by careful improvement of his time becoming quite skilled in the trade of house building. At the age of twenty-one he went to Lewiston, Maine, living in the home of his oldest brother, Alpheus. About this time he learned the art of photography, and followed the business for five years in Lewiston, also two years in Boston. In 1865 he came west, locating at Green Bay, Wis., where he pursued his former vocation for a short period of time, after which he purchased a farm in Outagamie county, Wis., and began the enterprise of farming with all the persistent industry which characterizes his nature, and in the course of a few years he became a successful and well-to-do farmer. He was married November 7, 1865, to Abbie G. Ware, who was born in Kennebec county, Maine, daughter of Cyrus E. and Nancy A. (Mitchell) Ware, who were the parents of five children, whose names are: Mary M., Abbie G., Emma H., Nancy E. and James F. Her father's family came west in 1855, and settled in Outagamie county, Wis., where Mr. Ware engaged in lumbering and general mercantile business. He was an active business man, and amassed a fortune. He was a Republican in politics, and during his lifetime held numerous public offices, though in no sense an office-seeker. His son James F., an attorney-at-law, is a graduate of Lawrence University, Wis., and also of Ann Arbor (Mich.) Law School. He was a member of the State Assembly in 1880, 1881, 1883, and he was elected State Senator in 1884, in which capacity he remained until 1888, proving a hard worker, never shirking responsibility, but by honest endeavor proving himself capable of filling the prominent positions into which he was frequently placed. He also created and worked for the passage of important bills which have proved to be for the betterment of the people of Wisconsin; the establishing of the Home for Friendless Children at Sparta, Wis., and other bills which have greatly improved the State laws relative to social purity. Abbie G., of this family, wife of Nathan S. Locke, was formerly a student at Lawrence University, and was for eight years a successful and favorite teacher in the public schools of Outagamie county, Wis., where she was universally esteemed for her many virtues, and correct Christian living. She became early identified with the Woman's Christian Temperance organization, to which she is ardently attached. In May, 1866, Nathan S. Locke and wife united with the Congregational Church at Hortonville, Wis., wherein Mr.

Locke was a leading and influential member, and superintendent of the Sunday-school for years. And through all these years of character building they have sought instruction from the great Giver of all our blessings.

Mr. Locke sold his farming interests in 1882, and moved to Antigo, which was then in its infancy. He invested in village lots, and land, and began building houses to sell and rent. He has had a prosperous business, building generally for himself, though he has built quite a number for other people. He has aided several societies in securing houses of worship and parsonages; was a liberal contributor toward securing the railroad improvements at Antigo; he has always aided financially in the temperance work of the place, of which cause both he and his wife are strong advocates. He is closely identified with the growth of the town, and takes great interest in its advancement and prosperity. He owns quite a large amount of real estate, both in the city and county, and is one of those who add largely to the upbuilding of their community.

EDWARD W. WHITSON. It is believed the Whitson family, of whom this gentleman is a worthy representative, were of Welsh descent, immigrating to this country about the time the English captured New Amsterdam (now Long Island) from the Dutch. They were all Quakers, and, as a rule, followed agricultural pursuits.

Abraham Underhill Whitson, the father of our subject, was born on Long Island, in Queens county, in 1810, where he received his primary education and was employed about the farm. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Hannah C. Willis, of Long Island, where she was born in 1810, of English parentage. To this union were born six children, viz.: Ann, now Mrs. Miles (a widow), living in Marquette county, Wis.; Sarah, now Mrs. Frink, a resident of the same place; Abraham, the eldest son, who went west and was killed by the Indians (when last heard from he was in Idaho); Daniel, unmarried, and living in southern Nebraska; Townsend W., married, and living on the old homestead, in Packwaukee, Marquette Co., Wis., where the father settled in 1851, and died in 1880; the mother's death occurred in 1892.

Edward W. Whitson is the youngest of the family, having been born on Long Island, April 1, 1851. He was but an infant when his parents came to Wisconsin in 1851, and here he received his primary education in the common schools, but later in life attended the academy at Madison, Dane Co., Wis., for two years. During his early life Mr. Whitson was employed about the farm; but on attaining his majority he accepted a position as clerk in a store at Madison, remaining there one year. In 1882 he was married to Anna D. Jones, at Montello, Marquette Co., Wis., and immediately afterward entered the employ of D. J. Spaulding, of Unity, Clark Co., Wis., as clerk and lumber shipper, remaining there three years. He then moved to Merrill, Lincoln Co., Wis., and engaged in the lumber business. In 1889 Mr. Whitson came to Tomahawk and entered the employ of the Tomahawk Lumber Co., as foreman of their lumberyard, which position he filled one year; but being a young man of great ambition, he soon afterward engaged in the mercantile business for himself, which he still continues to carry on, having been very successful. In 1878, before his marriage, Mr. Whitson worked for one year in the Black Hills mines, being employed by a government surveying party, and also by a stage company for one year. Mrs. Whitson is a daughter of John C. and Jane (Pritchard) Jones, both natives of Wales, who came to America when very young. They were married in Pennsylvania. Mr. Jones was a farmer by occupation, a highly-educated man, very much respected, and one to whom people often went for advice. His death occurred in 1867; his widow is still living. Mrs. Whitson is one of a family of ten children, viz.: John C., Richard L., Anna D., Maggie, William C., Elias, David C., Robert R., Edward and Ellen. Mr. and Mrs. Whitson have four children: Anna E., Grace M., Mabel and Edward.

Mr. Whitson has always been a staunch Republican, a man of strong character and great influence, and is looked up to, respected and admired by the entire community. In 1874 he was elected mayor of Tomahawk, this being his first public office. Socially, he is a Mason, being a charter member of Tomahawk Lodge No. 243, and has filled all the chairs, having been a member of this society since he was twenty-two years of age; he still takes an active part in the work. In religious faith the family are members of the Congregational Church.

JOHAN FINCH. That a review of the life of such an energetic and enterprising individual, as is the subject of this memoir, should have prominent place in the pages of a work of this kind is peculiarly proper; because a knowledge of men, whose substantial record rests upon their attainments, character and success, must at all times exert a wholesome influence upon the rising generation of the American people, and can not fail to be more or less interesting to those of maturer years.

Mr. Finch is a native of Niles, Berrien Co., Mich., born May 18, 1834, to Benoni W. and Elizabeth (Hollimond) Finch, who were of English and Scotch descent, respectively, the father born in Dutchess county, N. Y., the mother in Woodville, Miss. Benoni Finch was captain of a boat that plied on the St. Joseph river, Michigan, between Niles and St. Joseph, and in 1835 he moved with his family, consisting of wife and eight children, to Milwaukee, Wis., where he engaged in the manufacture of brick. He built the first brick house ever erected in Milwaukee, and was the first sheriff of Milwaukee county—in fact active in all the affairs of a public nature at that early period. He died of cholera morbus August 15, 1851, and lies buried near Fort Atkinson, Wis., whither he had moved in 1841, following farming there until 1846, in which year he came to Stevens Point, where he carried on lumbering operations; and it was while on a visit to Fort Atkinson that death overtook him as above related. In his political predilections he was a Whig.

The subject proper of this memoir received a liberal common-school education, and when seventeen years old, the time of his father's decease, took up the lumbering business, with which he has ever since been prominently identified—logging and running lumber on the Wisconsin river by contract, commonly known as "piloting," by which it will be seen that he is a pioneer in that industry in this section of the State. From boyhood Mr. Finch has been a consistent Democrat, the only vote he ever recorded on the Republican ticket having been for Abraham Lincoln when he first ran for President, and he has always, as a leader in his party, taken an active interest in politics. His ability and administrative qualifications have received substantial recognition by the people, he having been several times placed in positions of honor and responsibility. In 1877 he was elected sheriff of Portage county by a flattering majority of 190, and after serving two years he was re-elected in 1882, this time for a three-years' incumbency, after which he served four years as under sheriff. In 1886 he received the appointment of chief of police at Stevens Point, in which capacity he served five years, proving himself a most active official, and a terror to evil-doers. While he was under sheriff Mr. Finch attended to all the criminal business.

In 1855 Mr. Finch was married to Miss Malinda Barrett, daughter of Joel Barrett, a farmer and lumberman by occupation, who came to Wisconsin from Montreal, Canada, and to this union were born nine children, a brief record of whom is as follows: Frankie H. is married to E. R. Week, of Alexandria, Ind.; Marion L. is the wife of August Fulker, a druggist of Merrill, Wis.; Lizzie A. is married to Eugene Martin, of Cadott, Wis., in the lumber business; Carrie E. is married to Charles E. Smith, who is engaged in railroad insurance business at Chicago, Ill.; Henry J., assistant postmaster at Stevens Point, is married to Josie Main; Addie L. is the wife of Frederick Perkins, a locomotive engineer, with residence in Abbottsford, Wis.; while Robert B., Merle E. and John H. are all yet at home. Of these, Mrs. Frankie H. Week, from the age of sixteen to the time of her marriage, was a successful teacher in the public schools, chiefly of Portage county, also in the La Crosse High School, all in Wisconsin, and for three terms was president of the board of education.

Politically Mr. Finch is a staunch Democrat, and April 16, 1893, he was appointed to his present position of postmaster at Stevens Point, taking possession of the office May 27, 1893. He is by nature admirably qualified to fill any public office of trust, and during his several incumbencies he has never been charged with anything approaching even a tinge of impropriety or informality, in all business relationships proving himself a thoroughly efficient and competent officer.

CAPT. ELMER E. AMES. In presenting to our readers the life record of this gentleman we record the history of a self-made man, a public spirited citizen, and of one who in the esteem of those who know him occupies a most enviable position. He was born in Durand, Ill., on the 8th of May, 1861, and is descended from one of the early New England families. His grandfather, Allen Ames, was one of a family of seven brothers and sisters, and during his boyhood removed from his native State, Massachusetts, to New York, where he was reared to manhood. He there married Aloma Thompson, and they became the parents of six children: Milo, Anice, Lorinda, Hila, Lavern and one who died in infancy. In his early life Allen Ames worked in a sawmill and lumber yards, but subsequently gave his attention to agricultural pursuits. He is still living near Jamestown, N. Y., but his wife died about 1868.

Milo E. Ames, Capt. Ames' father, was born in the town of Stockton, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in 1826, and having arrived at years of maturity married Lydia D. Childs, who was born in Massachusetts, but in early life was taken to the Empire State. Her mother Dolora (Crawford) Childs, died in Massachusetts, when she was only eight years of age, after which the father married, again, having one child by the second union.

His death occurred in New York. In the Empire State, Milo E. Ames carried on farming until 1844, when he removed with his family to Rock county, Wis., but after a short time went to Durand, Ill., where he engaged in the furniture business. In 1868 he returned with his family to New York, where his wife died the following year, while he survived her only until 1871. Their children, seven in number, bear the names of Lona D., Flora E., Belle D., Elmer E., Solon H., Ella C. and Eunice D.

Captain Ames was left an orphan at the age of ten years. The family was then broken up, and in order to earn a living he worked as a farm hand through the summer months, while in the winter season he attended school, his time being thus passed until he was nineteen years of age. When a youth of twelve years he decided to come to Wisconsin and, making the journey alone, at length arrived at the home of his mother's brother in Mayville, Dodge county. Seven years later he went to Ripon, Wis., and learning the miller's trade, followed that pursuit for six years, or until the spring of 1886, when he came to Marshfield and entered the employ of the Upham Manufacturing Company, with whom he remained for two years as second miller. He then acted as their traveling salesman for two years, and in the spring of 1891 embarked in the furniture business in connection with G. W. Upham, under the firm name of E. E. Ames & Co., the partnership continuing until May, 1894. He then sold his interest to Mr. Upham, and organized the Marshfield Bedding Company, of which he is the heaviest stockholder. He was elected its secretary and treasurer, and soon became general manager and superintendent of what is now one of the leading enterprises of the city. Employment is furnished to thirty workmen, and the industry is managed on strict business principles; the employees are paid good wages, are treated with consideration, and in return labor for the interests of the company, and turn out first-class work, which finds a ready sale in the market. Ever fair and honorable in all business transactions, Mr. Ames has won the confidence and good wishes of those with whom he has had dealings, and prosperity is now attending his efforts.

In Ripon, Wis., October 15, 1884, was celebrated the marriage of Captain Ames and Lulu Belle Stephens, who was born in Wisconsin in 1863, a daughter of James and Abbie S. (Derby) Stephens. The parents were natives of Lewis county, N. Y., the father born in 1822, and in the family were three children: Lulu Belle, Carlos D., and Clara S. The grandfather, James Stephens, belonged to a family that were of the Quaker faith. The maternal grandparents, James and Abbie Stephens, emigrated to Wisconsin in 1850, and the former died in March, 1886. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Ames numbers two interesting daughters, Clara Belle and Gladys Lona.

The Captain supports the Republican party, and though he never seeks office for himself labors in the interest of his friends. Socially he is connected with the Masonic fraternity. He won his title as commander of Company A, Second Regiment Wis. N. G. He took an active part in the organization of the regiment in 1888, at which time he was elected first lieutenant, and in August, 1889, he was chosen captain. It was first organized as an independent company, but was mustered into the State service in 1888, and in the fall of 1893 was made the Second Regiment. Mr. Ames ranks as the eighth captain in the State, and is an honored commander, very popular with the members of his company, and esteemed by all who know him.

CHARLES EDWARD WEBSTER. This well-known prominent farmer-citizen, and present treasurer of Portage county, is a native of the State of Maine, born December 15, 1839, in Carritunk plantation, Somerset county.

He is a son of Enoch and Lydia H. (Fletcher) Webster, also of Maine, where the father conducted a farming and lumbering business, coming west from there with his family in August, 1845, and locating for a time in Lyons, Walworth Co., Wis. In 1847 they moved to Rosendale, Fond du Lac county, and in 1855 to Amherst, Portage county, where the father followed farming and other business until retiring into private life; he is now in his eighty-second year. He served as postmaster at Amherst sixteen years, justice of the peace thirty-six years, besides in various minor offices, such as supervisor, county commissioner, etc. In 1863 he was elected a member of the State Assembly, and served one term. His wife died in Amherst in 1892. The Webster family, of whom our subject is a member, are descended from Thomas Webster, an Englishman, who came to this country in 1636, locating in the neighborhood of Portsmouth, N. H.; the Fletchers were also an old family who settled in the neighborhood of Boston and Concord, Mass., about the year 1630.

The subject proper of these lines received his education in the schools of Fond du Lac and Portage counties, and remained under the parental roof until the spring of 1861, when he moved to Minnesota, and there took up a claim in Waseca county. About that time the war of the Rebellion had broken out, and our subject, fired with the spirit of patriotism, enlisted May 20, that year, in Company G, First Minn. V. I., in which he served two years, when he was honorably discharged on account of sickness. He participated in the first battle of Bull Run, Ball's Bluff, and was with McClellan during the Peninsular campaign, also in the engagements at Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill, etc. On January 30, 1865, he re-enlisted, this time in Company B, Forty-sixth Wis. V. I., taking rank as sergeant, from which he was promoted to sergeant-major, and served through Tennessee and Alabama until the close of the war, being finally mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., September 27, 1865. Returning north, he came to Wisconsin and bought a farm in Almond township, Portage county, and at once commenced agricultural pursuits, in which he continued till September, 1893, when he moved into the village of Amherst and partially retired from active life. At one time he owned about six hundred acres of land in Almond and adjoining townships.

On March 27, 1866, Mr. Webster was united in marriage with Miss Mary Frost, daughter of Daniel B. and Jane (Cowan) Frost, and five children have been born to them, as follows: Daniel Edward, a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, and now in the employ of the Westinghouse Co., in Pittsburg, Penn., as electrician, as is also John E., who was a student at the University of Wisconsin, where he graduated in June, 1894; Genevieve, attending the Normal school at Stevens Point; Oscar F., at home, and Rollin F., who died at Almond, Wis., in 1880, aged twelve years. Politically our subject is a Republican, and he served three years as township clerk of Amherst township; in 1869 was elected a member of the county board from Almond township, and with the exception of two years served continuously until September, 1893; also served as chairman of the county board several years, and as justice of the peace in Almond township sixteen years. During the session of 1887 he was appointed and served as transcribing clerk of the Wisconsin State Senate; in November, 1893, he was appointed, by the county board, treasurer of Portage county, to fill a vacancy, and is now serving as such, having been elected in the fall of 1894. He has always been an active worker in politics, and has several times served as delegate to both State and Congressional conventions. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and G. A. R. Although Mr. Webster is practically retired, he to some extent deals in real estate, and looks after his private affairs, which still occupy much of his attention.

RUDOLPH KRATCHE, an enterprising, energetic citizen of Antigo, Langlade county, is a native of Wisconsin, born February 8, 1865, in Manitowoc county, a son of Paul Kratche, a Bohemian by birth, who first saw the light in 1828.

Paul Kratche came to the United States in 1850, settling in Mishicott township, Manitowoc Co., Wis., where he married Miss Anna Holup, a lady of European birth, by whom he had five children: Mary, John, Joseph, Rudolph and Louis. The father of these, who was a farmer, died in October, 1893; the mother is yet living, and is in comfortable circumstances. The paternal grandfather of our subject died in Europe, leaving a widow and four sons.

Rudolph Kratche received a practical public-school education, and at the age of fifteen commenced clerking in a general store at Manitowoc, where he remained some five years, after which he went to Chicago, and in that city clerked for Marshall Field & Co. three years. From Chicago he came direct to Antigo, in 1887, and clerked for L. Strasser four years, or until the beginning of 1892, in February of which year he commenced business on his own account, opening a dry-goods and ladies' furnishing store. He carries a full stock, an excellent line of goods, enjoys a lucrative trade, and has never had any help. In 1890 Mr. Kratche was married to Miss Blanche Teitgen, also a native of Manitowoc county, Wis., and one little daughter, Viola, has come to brighten their home. In politics our subject affiliates with the Democratic party, but he is neither a politician nor an office-seeker, his business requiring all his time. He and his amiable life partner are faithful members of the Roman Catholic Church of Antigo.

DANIEL SULLIVAN, a leading lumberman of northern Wisconsin, with residence in Rhinelander, Oneida county, is a native of Canada, born in the County of Chateauquay, Province of Quebec, April 4, 1838.

Patrick Sullivan, father of our subject, was born in Ireland, in 1803, was married there to Margaret O'Malley, and in 1826 they came to Canada, where they followed farming pursuits. They had seven children, namely: Two deceased in infancy, John and Daniel, both living, and Thomas, Cornelius and Mary Ann, deceased. The mother of these died in 1847, and the father subsequently married Ellen Swords, by whom he had nine children, named respectively: Maggie, James, Theresa, Peter, Agnes, Veronica, Andrew, Francis and Catherine. The father died in 1885. He had one brother, Daniel, who came to America, settling in

New York State, where he was a lumberman, and died leaving a family of six children—two sons (Michael and Daniel), and four daughters.

The subject of this memoir was educated at the public schools of the neighborhood of his place of birth, and at the age of sixteen left home to work in the lumber woods of Canada two winters, running logs down the Grand river, in the Province of Quebec, during the summer months. In 1857 he came to the State of Wisconsin, locating at Wausau, where he made his home some twenty years, all that long period of time engaged as superintendent of Walter D. McIndoe & Co.'s mills and camps; also looking up and locating pine land (after the first two years he worked by contract). He then returned to Canada, purchased a farm in the Parish of St. John Chrysostome, Chateauquay Co., Quebec, and conducted same four years, at the end of that time selling out, and once more coming to Wisconsin, in 1882, settling at Rhinelander, where he again took up lumbering, which he followed until 1887. On July 1, 1889, he was appointed "government farmer" on the Indian Reservation at Lac du Flambeau, in Vilas county. Here he remained five years, at the end of which time he resigned his position, and returning to Rhinelander resumed the lumber business, in company with John Curran.

In September, 1863, in Canada, Mr. Sullivan was married to Miss Cordelia Sloan, who was born in 1847, at Napierville, Canada, daughter of Patrick and Julia Ann (Atkins) Sloan, natives of Ireland who emigrated to Canada, and were there married. They were pioneer farming people who cut the timber, cleared the land and built the house wherein they are yet living, at Napierville, Quebec. They had thirteen children, two of whom died in infancy, eleven growing to manhood and womanhood, their names being: Jane, Cordelia, Lizzie, Catherine, Mary Ann, William, Charles, Albert, George, Theresa and Isabella. Mr. Sloan was captain in the Canadian militia during the rebellion in that country of 1837-38. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have no children. He is a staunch Republican, and, in addition to the government position he held at Lac du Flambeau, he has served as supervisor of Pelican township, Oneida county. In religious faith he and his estimable wife are members of the Catholic Church.

ADAM PAULUS, proprietor of the Marshfield News, and postmaster at Marshfield, Wood county, is a native of Wisconsin, born at Chilton, June 29, 1866.

In boyhood he learned the printer's trade in the Times office at Chilton, and subsequently held positions in the offices of the Sentinel, Milwaukee, and Sun, Kaukauna, Wis. In August, 1889, he came to Marshfield, and in company with John P. Hume established the News. He was chairman of the Democratic City Committee in 1892-93, till his appointment as postmaster at Marshfield, September 7, 1893. In November, 1894, he bought out the interest of John P. Hume in the News, becoming sole proprietor. The paper is a lively, newsy sheet, Democratic in its political leanings and influences, and enjoys the largest circulation of any in Wood county.

OWEN CLARK, a well-known prominent and prosperous agriculturist and lumberman of Portage county, is a native of New York State, born February 15, 1840, in Oneida county, in the town of Deerfield, about one and one-half miles from Utica.

Owen Clark, father of our subject, was a farmer by occupation, and in 1849 came to Wisconsin with his children, for about one year sojourning in Milwaukee, but in the fall of 1850 entering 160 acres of land two-and-one-half miles northeast of Montello, Marquette Co., Wis. He afterward acquired more land, becoming quite an extensive farmer, and he died in the fall of 1875, when aged ninety-four years, at the home of his son Owen in Stevens Point. His wife Mary (Condon) died in New York State when our subject was between four and five years old. They were both natives of Ireland, the father being fifteen years old when he arrived on the shores of the New World, and they were married in Utica, New York.

The subject proper of these lines came to the Upper Wisconsin Valley in the fall of 1856, locating in Knowlton, Marathon county, where he was engaged in lumbering both in the woods and on the river for about a year, at the end of which time he moved to Wausau, and here was given charge of a sawmill, part of the time working by contract. In February, 1864, he enlisted in Company C, Third Wis. V. I., which was attached to the First Brigade, First Division, Twentieth Army Corps, commanded by Gen. Hooker, and shortly after his enlistment he joined his regiment at Fayetteville, Tenn. After three months from his first enlistment he commenced to see active service, taking part in the battles of Buzzard's Roost and Resaca, Ga., also at Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, and in all the engagements up to Atlanta, and was with Sherman's army on its memorable march to the sea. Mr. Clark also participated with his regiment in numerous other engagements and skirmishes from Buzzard's Roost to Atlanta, and thence to the sea; then through North and South Carolina to Washington. In fact he was with his company continually, never missing a roll-call or a meal from sickness or any other cause, and marched the entire distance, nearly three thousand miles, covered by his company in its several campaigns. He was present at the final Grand Review in Washington, May 24, 1865, and was mustered out of service in August, same year, as corporal, to which rank he had been promoted in the preceding June. Returning home, he in the spring of 1866 secured employment as general manager of the Goodhue & Bellsmir Mill on the Plover river, east of Stevens Point, where he remained over summer, and then in the fall of the same year he was employed in William Avery's mill at Stevens Point, after about a year and a half buying the mill, which he operated for his own account until the spring of 1891, when it was destroyed by fire. Since then he has been retired from the lumber business, and has devoted his time and attention exclusively to his farm of 420 acres just west and adjoining the city limits of Stevens Point.

On November 30, 1867, Mr. Clark was united in marriage with Miss Anna E. Gardiner, daughter of John W. and Lucinda M. (Raney) Gardiner, the former of whom was born in Cherry Valley, N. Y., of English origin and of patriotic Revolutionary stock, grandfather Gardiner (who was a brother of Lord James Gardiner) having served in the war of Independence. He was living at Cherry Valley at the time of the Indian massacre at that place, but was absent, serving in Washington's army, his wife, children and servant being left at home. The latter reported to Mrs. Gardiner that the Indians were coming, and the mother escaped into the woods with her children, where they remained in hiding, and she had frequently to stifle the cries of the youngest one by stuffing her apron into its mouth, fearing the savages might hear it. John Gardiner, son of this Revolutionary warrior, and father of John W. Gardiner, served in the war of 1812, participating in the battle of Lundy's Lane. John W. Gardiner, when a young man, went to Lower Canada (now Province of Quebec) and there married Lucinda M. Raney. In 1839 he came to Wisconsin, locating at Evansville, Rock county, where he erected a gristmill and followed the milling business until 1848, the year of his coming to Stevens Point, leaving his family behind. Here he invested in several hundred acres of land, heavily timbered with pine, and in 1850 he brought his wife and ten children to their new home; the names of the latter are John W., James I., Ellen, Jane M., Emeline, Elizabeth M., Almond, Anna E., Henrietta and Franklin. Of these John and Almond were soldiers in the Union army, the latter enlisting when but sixteen years old. Mr. Gardiner was engaged in the lumber business on a large scale, and became very successful; he was public-spirited and popular, much given to works of benevolence, and he donated the timber for the building of the first Methodist Church and the first Episcopal Church buildings ever erected at Stevens Point. In 1851 he built the residence (now occupied by his widow) on the south side of Main street, between George and Church streets. He was killed by an accident, in 1852, while running his lumber over the Little Ball Falls, Wisconsin river, and was buried under the auspices of the Temperance Society, of which he was an ardent member.

The children that have come to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Clark are Byron F., born August 15, 1869, educated at Notre Dame, Ind.; Hallie M., born July 27, 1874, now attending Knox College at Galesburg, Ill.; Owen W., born November 29, 1877, and Raney J., born July 12, 1880, all living at home except Hallie M., as above mentioned. Politically Mr. Clark is a Democrat, has served as alderman of Stevens Point sixteen years, as mayor three terms, and is now serving his fourth. Socially, he is a member of the G. A. R., Stevens Post No. 156, of which he has been commander three times, and is now serving the fourth time. He is a thoroughly representative, progressive and liberal-minded American citizen.

CARL H. MUELLER. Anomalies exist in the lives of many prominent men that perplex unless the key to their solution is found. It might seem strange that Carl H. Mueller, now a prominent attorney of Wausau, should, as the scion of a prominent German family, flee the Fatherland in order to escape conscription in the German army, only to espouse with ardor the Union cause in America, and enthusiastically give it the best years of his life. Yet such is the case. The explanation is that the conscription was compulsive and tyrannous, and that in America he quickly imbibed the spirit of national liberty and unity, and was ready to yield his life's blood for its perpetuity.

Mr. Mueller was born in Schwelm, Westphalia, Prussia, July 16, 1839, son of Hermann Henry and Amelia (Langewiesche) Mueller, of whose four children three survive: Carl H., and two in Germany—Marie, widow of Rudolph Kline, and Hermann, both of Schwelm. Hermann Mueller was a merchant of high standing in that village, a member of a family in which large landed interests in Westphalia have been entailed since the year 800 A. D., now in the possession of Carl's cousin. Two of Mrs. Mueller's brothers were lieutenants in the German army. Carl H. attended the common schools at home, and the commercial college of Ebberfeld, after which he entered the office of a wholesale hardware store, and at the age of eighteen was a commercial traveler. He expected to escape conscription, as his father was over sixty years of age, and his one brother was only eight years old; but at twenty he received the fatal notice that he must serve four years, and then go into the Landwehr, and be liable for service for manœuvres, or during war, until he was forty-two years old. A cousin from Houghton, Mich., was then visiting the old country, and before the time arrived for taking the oath Carl was on his way to America with his cousin. Landing at New York in 1859 they proceeded to Houghton, Mich. Unable to speak English, and thus unable to use his commercial training, Carl found work as a common laborer in the mines until the fall of 1860, when he entered the employ of Ransom Sheldon, a merchant of Houghton.

When the call for volunteers came, the young German emigrant was among the first to enroll his name, enlisting in Company F, First Mich. V. I., and was hurried to the front. He participated in the battles of Mechanicsville, Gaines' Mills, the seven-days' fight before Richmond, Peach Orchard, White Oak Swamp, Savage Station, Malvern Hill, the retreat to Harrison's Landing and the consequent skirmishes, Gainesville, second Bull Run, Antietam, Shepherdsville and Shepherdstown. At the latter place, October 1, 1862, he suddenly became ill, for ten days being insensible, and on regaining consciousness he found himself in the hospital at David's Island, New York. He was there three weeks, and was discharged November 2, 1862, on account of double hernia. During his service he had been sergeant, and for some time had acted as adjutant's clerk. In the fall of 1863 he returned to Houghton, Mich., acting as recruiting officer until the spring of 1864, when, under a captain's commission, he reported to the provost marshal at Corunna, Mich., with 135 recruits. He was assigned to Company I, Thirty-first Mich. V. I., but was refused muster on account of disability, and was again honorably discharged. Later he acted as recruiting officer on the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, where he had entire charge of the different recruiting offices in that vicinity. Again he reported at Corunna with eighty-three men, and thus saved the Lake Superior region from draft.

Returning to Houghton Mr. Mueller re-entered the employ of Mr. Sheldon, and soon had the management of the express business, and of the post office at that city. In the spring of 1865 he established a grocery and fruit business, and sold out in 1866, preparatory to a return to Germany, in response to the entreaties of his parents. He reached his native place as an American citizen, and a crippled soldier; but he was so thoroughly Americanized that a continued stay in the monarchical Germany was impossible, and in the fall of the same year he returned to his adopted country. Wintering at Milwaukee, he commenced working at the lumber business at Wausau in the spring of 1867, supplementing that occupation with teaching, bookkeeping, etc.; in 1869 he was elected justice of the peace, serving three years. In 1872 he was admitted to the bar, since when he has served seven terms as city attorney of Wausau, and two terms as district attorney of Marathon county. In 1887 he was re-elected justice of the peace, and held that position until the spring of 1895. Mr. Mueller is also president of the Wausau Cemetery Association, commissioner of the Marathon County Soldiers' Relief Fund, and a circuit court commissioner. He is a charter member of Wausau Lodge, No. 215, I. O. O. F., and of Marathon Encampment, No. 17; also Cutler Post, No. 55, G. A. R., which he has served as commander and vice-commander.

At Houghton, Mich., March 3, 1864, Mr. Mueller was married to Miss Anna K. Keidel, daughter of Henry Keidel, of Alsfeld, Hessen, Germany, and two children were born to them: Herman, who was drowned at the age of nine years in the Wisconsin river at Wausau, July 6, 1873, and Ida E., wife of Jacob Mortonson, a prominent lumberman of Wausau. Mr. Mueller has been a prominent citizen of Marathon county since his residence there.

WINSLOW HALE HOLMES first saw the light of day in Concord, Jackson Co., Mich., December 18, 1843, and is a son of David Holmes, a miller and stone mason.

David Holmes built the mills for the Padocks in Concord sometime in the "thirties" when Michigan was a Territory, and many cobble-stone houses, with sandstone trimmings and old-fashioned gables, stand to-day as monuments to his skill. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1795. His father, John Holmes, was born in the North of Ireland, and married Miss Sarah Moore, who was born in Scotland. Mrs. Lucinda (Watson) Holmes, mother of our subject was a daughter of William Watson, a native of Massachusetts, his father coming of early New England stock who came from old England. The mother was a native of Ireland, her name being Anna Hamilton. The father of Winslow Hale Holmes lived in Ohio during the early formation of the negro "underground railway," and was an active worker toward helping slaves to gain their freedom. He was the father of eleven children—five sons and six daughters. He died in 1851, his widow in 1861. Of the family, Winslow (the youngest) and two sisters only are now living, two of the brothers having been killed in the war for the Union (three were in the service).

Our subject learned the printer's trade with his brother David in the office of the Jackson (Michigan) Citizen, under the tutorage of Col. C. V. DeLand in 1858-59-60. His early schooling was gained by walking three miles a day to a district school in Pulaskee, Mich., in winters, and working on a farm in the summer time. In the winters of 1858 and 1860 he attended the Union School in Jackson, Mich. In 1863 he was foreman of the Three Rivers (Michigan) Reporter, and while there married a daughter of Dr. T. Oaks, of Marcellus, Mich. Mr.

and Mrs. Holmes reared one daughter, the mother of whom died in 1873. Mr. Holmes married Miss Hetta K., daughter of M. J. Lathrop, in May, 1874, at Hastings, Mich. Four sons and two daughters have blessed this union; one of the daughters died in 1891. Mr. Holmes was foreman of the Ann Arbor (Michigan) Courier in 1861-62; foreman of the Marshall (Michigan) Statesman in 1867-68; held a business interest in and was foreman of the Charlotte (Michigan) Republican in 1869-70; foreman of and held a business interest in the Hastings (Michigan) Banner in 1870-73; then was half-owner in the Hastings Journal until 1880. Removing to Wisconsin, he was foreman of the Ripon Free Press in 1880-82; bought the Waupaca Republican in 1883, and still continues as its editor and publisher. He was city clerk from 1889 to 1893, has taken an active part in helping to herald the beauties and resources of Waupaca, and encourage the establishment of enterprises of various kinds in the city, having taken an active part in establishing a rival telephone line and exchange, "The Badger," in the city, he being manager of the exchange in Waupaca. Mr. Holmes is also secretary of the Humane Society and recorder in the Uniform Rank K. of P.

HON. HENRY W. WRIGHT. Under different circumstances and in the many varieties of human character we find exhibited in biography something to instruct us in our duty, something to encourage our efforts under every emergency and, perhaps there is no combination of events which produces this effect more certainly than the steps by which distinction and positions of honor have been acquired through the unaided efforts of youthful enterprise, as illustrated in the life of Henry W. Wright.

A native of Wisconsin, he first saw the light at Racine, March 10, 1846, and is a son of Thomas W. Wright, who was born in the city of Manchester, England, a son of James Wright, also of English birth, who was married in the Mother country, some years later emigrating to the New World, and settling on a farm in Michigan where he died. The son Thomas W., however, had come to this continent prior to this, making his first American home in Syracuse, N. Y., where he married Miss Angeline Knowles, a native of New York State, by whom he had a family of eight children: Thomas, James (I), Lydia, Mary, Henry W., James (II), Charles and Belle, all born in Wisconsin except Thomas and James (I). In an early day Thomas W. Wright and his wife came to Wisconsin, at first making their home at Geneva, afterward removing to Racine. By trade he was a carpenter, and was engaged in the manufacturing of wagons. In 1854 he went to California, and died there; his wife was called from earth May 6, 1882, while residing in Racine.

The subject proper of this writing received his education at the common and high schools of Racine, Wis.; but at the age of seventeen he laid aside his books for the rifle, enlisting, in 1862, in Company K, Seventh Missouri Cavalry, in which he saw active service two and one-half years, when he was appointed second lieutenant of Company H, First Missouri Cavalry, having previously been promoted, while in the Seventh, to sergeant and sergeant-major, respectively. While scouting he was captured by the enemy, but succeeded in making his escape twelve hours afterward. He participated in the battles of Memphis, (Mo.), Prairie Grove (Ark.), Springfield (Mo.), Cassville (Mo.), and Helena, Little Rock, Pine Bluff, and Saline River, or Jenkins Ferry (Ark.). He was mustered out of the service in June, 1865, with an excellent war record, and returned to Racine, Wis., where for a year he was employed on the railroad, afterward keeping books for several prominent commercial firms.

In 1871 Mr. Wright commenced business for himself in Racine, in the manufacture of sash, doors and blinds, an enterprise he successfully conducted until September, 1881, when he sold out and, in company with ex-Congressman Myron H. McCord, commenced business in Merrill, Lincoln county, and laid the foundation for the present vast plant of the H. W. Wright

H. Wright

Lumber Co., of which our subject is the chief moving spirit—"the head and front." The firm have the most extensive plant of the kind in the Upper Wisconsin Valley, consisting of sawmills, sash, door and blind factory, etc., which, combined, give employment to an average of 300 men, at times as many as 640 names being on the pay-roll. The buildings, which in every respect are first-class, are equipped with all modern improvements, and are lighted throughout with electricity. With all his employes Mr. Wright is on the most friendly terms, and if there are any wrongs to be righted or favors granted, he is appealed to individually.

On November 1, 1871, Mr. Wright was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Buchan, who was born in Dover, Racine Co., Wis., daughter of Edward and Jane (Tillie) Buchan, who were the parents of eight children, named respectively: Andrew, Oliver, Mary, Edwin, Alfred, Samuel, Carrie and Thomas, all born in America. The parents were both natives of Scotland, whence, about the year 1840 they came to the United States, and here Mr. Buchan for a time followed his trade, that of miller; but his health failing him, he settled on a farm near Dover, Racine Co., Wis., whereon he passed the rest of his days. He died in 18—; his widow is yet living, now at the advanced age of eighty-three years. To Mr. and Mrs. Wright have been born three children: James A., manager of his father's lumber yard; Alfred H., in his father's office, and Nettie E., attending school at Kemper Hall, Kenosha, Wis. Mrs. Wright is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

In politics Mr. Wright is an uncompromising Republican, and, as a local paper has said of him, "while he has never sought an office of honor or emoluments in his life, yet he has filled responsibilities of trust, and helped to shape the policy of the Republican party in Wisconsin." While a resident of Racine he served as postmaster for nearly six years, having been appointed to that position by President Hayes; he was also alderman and supervisor of that city. Since coming to Merrill he has served as alderman of the Fifth ward, and filled the mayor's chair one year, during which administration it was demonstrated that the management of the city affairs could not be improved upon. At present Mr. Wright takes no more interest in politics than any good citizen ought, being too closely engaged in business to devote more than a little time to political affairs. While a resident of Racine he was secretary of the Building Committee of that city. In Merrill he is a stockholder in the First National Bank; is a member of the Lumberman's Association of the Wisconsin Valley, and of the F. & A. M., in high standing. Mr. Wright is a man of commanding presence, possessed of great force of character, and "when he undertakes to do anything the work is almost done before it is begun. Such men are generally stern men, not easily swayed from any given path, and this can be said of the subject of this sketch. Yet he has a heart as tender as a woman, and no man, woman or child ever went to good, big-hearted Henry W. Wright with a tale of woe without coming away helped and encouraged."

JAMES B. DAWLEY. There is more of the romantic and pathetic in some life histories than in others, yet if the depths of each could be sounded romance might perhaps be found in all. But however that may be, it is certain that the early struggles of the Dawley family in Portage county, and the golden character thereby developed from the straits into which these pioneers were forced by circumstances makes an appealing and interesting recital. It is the story of a man who, on the verge of the grave, comes into a wilderness, and with almost superhuman efforts seeks to make a home for his wife and little ones before death takes him away, and then of the brave efforts made by the widow to continue the toilsome undertaking thus inaugurated.

The subject of this sketch was born in Providence, R. I., June 12, 1850, son of Jesse B. and Lydia (Searles) Dawley, both natives of Rhode Island. Jesse B. Dawley was born May 9, 1823, his wife September 5, 1822. He was a carpenter and joiner, practically without means, and a victim of consumption. Yearning for a home of his own he in the fall of 1852 with his wife and family, then consisting of two sons, started from Newport, R. I., for Providence, same State, from which city he embarked for Milwaukee. Three days later he was in Jefferson county, Wis., with fifty cents in his pocket. For a year he supported his family here by day's work, then in October, 1853, he pushed northward to what is now Section 6, Stockton township, Portage county. It was then in a primitive condition. Not a stick of timber had been cut. Mr. Dawley had for a little while indulged the fond delusion that the change of climate might benefit his health, but this was quickly dispelled, and his only aim was to secure a home for his family. He knew nothing of farming, but he was ambitious and anxious to learn. With his own hands he built a log cabin, the first habitation on the farm. Gradually growing worse, he died August 23, 1857, and was buried in a private cemetery on the farm. A widow was left to mourn and to provide for four small children, the eldest not yet nine years of age. Inspired by her affection for the children, the brave woman struggled on amid the hardships of the frontier, beneath which men often quailed. She kept her family together, and the children appreciate her efforts. They are as follows: La Fayette D., born February 23, 1849, now a carpenter and contractor of Ada, Minn., who never learned his trade, but inherited from his father a marked mechanical ability, and whose family consists of Mabel F., Etha I., Lillian E. and Ivan B.; James B., born in Providence, R. I.; Julius E., born in Jefferson county, Wis., April 23, 1852, now head clerk in a large general store at Aitkin, Minn., and who has one child, Reginald E.; Emma I., born June 29, 1854, now at home.

James B. Dawley has remained from his early boyhood until now upon the farm, excepting seventeen months, which he spent on a farm in Rock county, Wis., when he was fifteen or sixteen years old. His school advantages were meager, but, largely by his own individual study, he has picked up a common education. He was one of the three brothers who, by their united efforts, in 1870, built a good home, doing all the work themselves. James B. was married October 30, 1889, in Wautoma, to Letitia T. Cogswell, a native of that village, and daughter of Asa A. Cogswell. To Mr. and Mrs. Dawley two children have been born, Royal M. and Jessie R. In politics Mr. Dawley is a Republican. He has served as town clerk, and his reports were the best prepared of any submitted that year to the county officials. For two years he was township treasurer, and for ten years he has served as justice of the peace. For many years he has served either as clerk or as assistant clerk at all elections. In 1887 he was elected secretary of the Stockton Fire Insurance Co., and still serves in that capacity. His business calls him all over the fourteen townships of Portage county, and has given him an extensive acquaintance. In his business relations he is guided by his sense of right, and unswervingly adheres to his convictions when once formed. Mr. Dawley is one of the best citizens of the county, and has led a useful and active life. His services are sought in every movement or meeting of general interest in the township. The widowed mother still lives at the age of seventy-two years, and makes her home with her son. She is a member of the Brethren Church.

ANTONI BREITENSTEIN. It seems to be the mission of some lives to show the possibilities of human nature, to show how, for example, a young man, without advantages of any kind, may so seize the present, so adapt himself to circumstances, and then mold those circumstances to his own well-being, that he rides ever upon the crest of the wave, and steers the fragile bark of human endeavor through the tossing sea of adverse fate into the harbor of peace and plenty. There are men so wise and prudent, so determined and energetic, that they would succeed in any sphere of life, and one of them is he whose name appears above.

Antoni Breitenstein is the son of a poor peasant of Alsace, France (now Germany), Michael Breitenstein, who had met with business reverses in his native land, and who in February, 1843, resolved to mend his fortunes in America. He had barely means enough to make the journey with his wife, Catherine (Goss), and two children, Antoni and Barbara. Antoni was born April 11, 1830, and was therefore only twelve years of age when he took passage from Havre with his parents and sister, in the American sailing vessel "St. Nicholas," which, after a passage of thirty-five days, landed them at New York. They reached Pittsburg, Penn., with a capital of two dollars. After living with his son-in-law for some time Michael Breitenstein rented a farm in Robinson township, Allegheny Co., Penn., near Pittsburg, and three years later, while pulling sweet potatoes, he was bitten in the hand by a copperhead snake. Despite the best medical aid the wound resulted fatally, several days afterward. Misfortunes multiplied, for the mother died several weeks later, after a brief illness, and a daughter, Mary, was called away at about the same time. Michael Breitenstein and wife were members of the Catholic Church, and were buried in Troy Hill Cemetery, Allegheny. Of their ten children six died young; Mary married in Alsace, and died in Pittsburg; Lawrence, an officer in the French army, died in the service; Antoni and Barbara were the sole survivors, the latter being now Mrs. Lawrence Hagenbauer, of Pittsburg.

Our subject was sixteen years old when thus orphaned. He had mastered the English language within six weeks after he reached America, and in a year his foreign nativity could not be detected from his conversation. Though still a boy, he resolved to continue the gardening life of his parents. He was industrious and energetic, and felt competent for the work. He hired help, and had credit, and for a term of years successfully carried on the business, each year adding to his capital. He was married, in February, 1854, at Birmingham, a suburb of Pittsburg, to Miss Mary Beck, who was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1832, daughter of Witbold and Theresa (Biechle) Beck, and who at the age of eighteen, with a brother and sister, crossed the ocean from Havre to New York in twenty-one days, and settled in Pittsburg, where another brother then lived.

At the time of his marriage Mr. Breitenstein was a well-to-do young man. He was well equipped with farming tools, and by his good management and industry had prospered. He continued farming in the Chartiers Valley, Allegheny Co., Penn., until February, 1865, when he migrated to what is now Stockton township, Portage Co., Wis.; while still at Pittsburg he had bought land in Marathon county, but he never lived there. He came with his family to Wisconsin by rail as far as Berlin, then the northern terminus of the railroad, and by team continued the journey to Stevens Point with his family, then consisting of five children. For six years he lived near Stockton station, then moved to Section 6, same township, where he has since remained. He erected the first building on the place. His first 160 acres were enlarged by subsequent purchases until Mr. Breitenstein owned 720 acres. This has now been reduced to 560 acres by donations to his children. His family is as follows: Lawrence, proprietor of a planing-mill at Knowlton, Wis.; Lena, now Mrs. John Gerdes, of Stevens Point; Louisa, at home; Michael, a telegraph operator; Antoni W., a potato merchant of Stockton and Custer, Wis.; Richard, a carpenter and merchant of Stevens Point, member of the firm of Breitenstein & Gerdes; Charles, an operator; Mary, at home.

In politics Mr. Breitenstein was once an active Democrat, but he is now to some degree an independent, and votes in local elections for the better candidate, regardless of politics. He has declined office himself, preferring to devote his time to personal business. Himself and family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Breitenstein is one of Stockton's best farmers, and he owes his prosperity to his own efforts. He never attended an English school. His struggle in early years was a bitter one, and the manner in which he has attained his comfortable competence has won for him the respect and esteem of all who know him. His sons and daughters are prosperous young men and women, and though sixty-five years have come and gone in the life of this worthy man he still has a large reserve fund of vitality. He can yet, if he so elects, perform any kind of farm work. His good wife has nobly borne her share of toil and responsibility in life's hard battle, and enjoys equally with her husband the esteem and best wishes of her many acquaintances. Had his early advantages been better, it is impossible to say what wider sphere in life Mr. Breitenstein might not, with his native talents, have creditably filled. But in the life which he has lived none could more manfully have met and overcome the bars to deserved good fortune.

CHRISTIAN OSSWALD, a prominent baker and merchant, is one of the progressive business men of Wausau. Like many other successful men, Mr. Osswald, in his youth, learned a trade, and by using this trade as his capital, and by watching his opportunities, the way to a prosperous and active career in time presented itself to him.

He is of German birth, the son of John M. and Katrina (Getter) Osswald, and was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, March 12, 1834, both natives of the Fatherland. Of the family of six Christian is the eldest survivor. Three sisters and the aged mother are supposed at this writing to survive in Germany, and the father died in 1854. Christian received in Germany the thorough elementary education which that country now guarantees its youth, and after leaving the schools he was apprenticed to a baker. Upon completing the trade he worked in Germany for a short time, but in the fall of 1854, at the age of nineteen, he immigrated to America. Going to Utica, N. Y., he there learned the trade of a brewer, remaining two years. In 1856, deeming the West richer in opportunities, and desiring to return to his earlier trade, he migrated to Milwaukee, and for ten years was steadily employed in a baking establishment. Then he came to Wausau, and for five years worked on the Wisconsin river, and in the logging camps as a cook. At last he saw what he thought was the right opening for himself, and in August, 1871, he engaged for himself in the bakery business at Wausau, at his present location. His judgment was correct. Mr. Osswald applied himself diligently to the work of building up for himself a large and profitable trade, and he has succeeded to an admirable degree; and during his residence there for a period of more than a score of years, he has thoroughly ingratiated himself into the well wishes and esteem of his fellow citizens, and is now universally regarded as one of the city's deserving and most substantial citizens. He at present represents the Second ward of the city in the common council as alderman, and is a member of Wausau Lodge No. 215, I. O. O. F.; also of the Sons of Hermann, and the A. O. U. W. Mr. Osswald's political affiliations are with the Democratic party. The family attend St. Paul's Evangelical Church.

Mr. Osswald was married at Milwaukee, in 1861, to Miss Elizabeth Dresel, daughter of Bernard and Sabina Dresel, natives of Germany. To this union twelve children have been born, seven of whom survive, as follows: John Frederick, a baker, at Wausau; Katrina, wife of H. J. Zentner, of Oshkosh; Gustave Adolph, a partner in the bakery business with his brother, John F.; Bertha Marie; Henry; Emma Carolina; and Alexander.

REV. GUSTAVE SOLOMON MUNDINGER, pastor of the Lutheran Church of Manawa, Waupaca county, is a representative of one of the honored and respected families of this section. He was born January 1, 1869, in Bloomfield township, Waushara county, a son of Solomon and Julia (Abraham) Munding, the former of whom was born January 1, 1830, in Wurtemberg, Germany, and the latter December 6, 1839, also in Germany. The father was a son of John Munding, who was descended from a noble family.

In his younger days the father followed weaving, and in 1856 came to America, first locating in New York City, whence after a few months he removed to Cook county, Ill., being there engaged in farming. On leaving Illinois he came to Bloomfield township, Waushara Co., Wis., and having sold his property purchased land lying in Sections 16, 21 and 22, all of which was in its primitive condition. He was very kind to the pioneers of his own nationality, often buying land, which he would sell to them on time. The year after his arrival in the county he married Miss Abraham, a daughter of Martin Abraham, who had come to America with her parents and grandmother, and located in Bloomfield township, where the latter died at the advanced age of ninety-four years.

At the time of his marriage Solomon Mundinger had a very small clearing made upon his land and a log house erected, in which they began their domestic life, but the farm is now numbered among the best in this section of the State. He was ever a prominent and leading citizen of the community, being instrumental in securing many public improvements which were for the good of the locality, and served in nearly all the township offices. He was one of the founders of the Lutheran Church in his neighborhood, and many of the early meetings were held at his home. His death occurred in Bloomfield township, January 16, 1886, and there his remains are now interred. No man in the community was more widely or favorably known, and his memory will long be cherished by the people of the township and county generally. Mrs. Mundinger still lives on a part of the old homestead, and has now reached the age of fifty-five years. In the family were nine children—Ferdinand and William, both deceased; Fred, a carpenter of Manawa, Waupaca county; William, who is living on the home farm in Bloomfield township; Gustaf Adolph, deceased; Adelina, wife of Gustave Bartel, a farmer of Bloomfield township; Gustave S., our subject; Henry R., a teacher of New London, Wis., and Julia, deceased.

Rev. Mr. Mundinger obtained his primary education in the common schools, but at the age of seven years he entered a German school three-and-a-half miles distant from his home, and when fourteen he entered Concordia College, Milwaukee, where he took a four-years' course. For the following two years he continued his studies in Fort Wayne, Ind., after which he became a student in Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, where he took a three-years' course, this completing his literary education. His first pastorate was at Manawa, Waupaca county, where he still remains, having served the congregation there since August 2, 1891, on which day he was ordained and installed as a minister of the Lutheran Church. His congregation now numbers 150 families, including 100 voting members. He is well liked, not only by the people of his own Church, but of other denominations as well, and he has gained the love and confidence of all with whom he has come in contact. He belongs to the Wisconsin District of the Missouri Synod.

On May 12, 1892, Rev. Mr. Mundinger was united in marriage with Miss Clara Behrens, daughter of Carl and Margaret (Conrad) Behrens, natives of Germany, who on their arrival in the New World located at St. Louis, Mo. To this union has come one child—Carl S., born February 1, 1894. Rev. Mr. Mundinger takes no active part in political affairs, giving his support to no particular party, but leaves himself free to vote for the man he thinks best qualified to fill the office.

JOSEPH RAYMOND. Had Charles Dickens had a knowledge of the wrongs and privations suffered by Joseph Raymond during the latter's boyhood and youth, he might have written a story as deep in pathos, as grand in its lessons, as any which the world yet delights to read. Unlettered and unlearned, the simple-hearted boy had in his nature a native pride of character that starvation could not have subdued, a robust determination to be truthful and independent that withstood the fiery trial of many years. Sublimely his rugged, honest nature has been preserved within him, and glorious has been the victory he has achieved.

Joseph Raymond is now a wealthy farmer of Stockton township, Portage county. He was born in Canada about the year 1835, son of Joseph Raymond, a native of that land, a farmer by occupation, and a man of unsteady habits, wealthy at one time, but later in life plunged in poverty. The mother died at Montreal when Joseph was about eight years old, the eldest of four children. The three sisters were Nepere, now married and living in Michigan; Lizzie, in Canada, and Mary Louise, deceased. The father did not keep the family together, and little Joe, as he was known, saw none of the comforts of home until after his marriage. The support of one of the sisters fell upon him, and he began life for himself in his tender years by working for four cents a day. He lacked proper clothing and nourishment, but he was too proud to beg and preferred bleeding feet to borrowed shoes. At the age of fifteen years his earnings had risen to twenty-five dollars per year. With a few dollars he had saved he concluded to come to Grand Rapids, Wis., where lived a family he had known. His money was exhausted before he reached his destination, and for four days and four nights he walked on the way. Reaching Grand Rapids he was a penniless, friendless lad. Pushing on to Plover, he met John Boursier, a farmer of Stockton, who happened there on business, and secured work with him. After three weeks he grew desperately lonesome, for he could not then speak English, and, with all his earthly possessions in a sack, he walked back to Grand Rapids, where several of his countrymen lived. There he remained three weeks, but could find no work; he slept outdoors and procured eatables wherever he could. The lumber season was opening, and he hired out for fifteen dollars per month, and worked all winter in the woods. He had no mittens, and suffered terribly from exposure. Worse still, his employers were irresponsible men, and he did not receive a cent for his winter's work. With threadbare clothes he began to chop wood for his board. Going to Plover he again met John Boursier, and in April of that year again began working for him, at which time he could easily carry his clothes under his arm. For fourteen months he remained with Mr. Boursier, and during this time he did the hardest work of his life. Mr. Raymond was a "green boy," as he expressed it, and strove hard to please his employer. He hauled rails to Plover, starting at 2 o'clock in the morning and reaching his destination before daylight. Though possessing great natural strength, and an over-willingness to work, he often over-taxed his strength. Mr. Raymond then worked in a mill at Grand Rapids, and at driving team, and various other kinds of employment. He finally secured work with Frank Biron, and it speaks well for his efficiency and steady character that he remained with Mr. Biron until his accumulated wages amounted to eight thousand dollars.

On May 8, 1870, he was married to Miss Anna Boivin, a native of Canada, born August 15, 1850, daughter of Louis Boivin, a baker by trade. She was visiting her sister, Mrs. Biron, and there met her future husband. After his marriage Mr. Raymond continued to work for Mr. Biron until the latter's death. During the winter of 1876-77 he went to Canada to settle up his large accounts with the Biron estate. In that country Frank Biron was "Lord Biron." In 1878 Mr. Raymond purchased 160 acres in Sections 28 and 29, Stockton township, which he now occupies, and he has added to it from time to time until the acreage has reached 400. In addition to his farm he has large financial interests. To Mr. and Mrs. Raymond eight children were born: Joseph (deceased), Eugene, Laura, Arthur, Mary (deceased), Fred, Hannah (deceased), and Frank (deceased). In politics our subject is a Democrat, and in religion is a member of the Catholic Church. He is a representative farmer of Portage county, and his life demonstrates the possibilities open to a poor boy of industry and pluck. His good wife has by her thrift and good management been of inestimable aid to Mr. Raymond, and deserves great credit for her devotion and attention to his large interests.

MORRIS C. HYMAN a prominent and popular citizen of Tomahawk, Lincoln county, is a native of Prussia, having first seen the light there November 26, 1859, in which county was also born his father, Isaac Hyman. The latter was married in early life, and had a family of eight children, six of whom are now living, viz.: Morris C., Abe D., Isaac, Rachel, Lena L. and Sarah. The mother of these died in January, 1891. At one time Isaac Hyman was a hotel-keeper, but later in life he engaged in the milling business, and at present he is the owner of a large gristmill. He visited his sons in America in 1893, remaining here one year, then returning to Europe.

The subject proper of this sketch received a good common-school education, and is also well versed in the Hebrew language. He came to America at the age of sixteen, and secured a situation in a notion store in Chicago, Ill., where he remained one year; then went on the road, selling jewelry, continuing thus for five years. In course of time he and another opened a clothing store in Minneapolis, Minn., which they carried on for one year, then sold out, and in 1883 Mr. Hyman located in Merrill, Lincoln Co., Wis., and commenced the saloon business with his brother Abe, who had joined him. In the fall of 1887 he removed to Tomahawk and opened a saloon, the brothers still continuing the business at Merrill, both wholesale and retail, also conducting a similar establishment at Raum, Wis., and they have been in business together ever since the arrival of Abe in America. The Hyman Brothers have also dealt quite extensively in pine lands and hardwood in Wisconsin, besides owning city property at Merrill. In addition to their place of business at Tomahawk, a brick store and other similar property, they are interested in real estate, in which they deal extensively. They are representative self-made men and typical "hustlers," respected for their honest straightforward way of doing business. Morris C. Hyman in politics is a Democrat, an active worker in the ranks of the party, and was a delegate to the county conventions. He was one of the first aldermen of Tomahawk, and in the spring of 1895 was elected mayor of that city, the campaign proving a very hot one. Socially he is a member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Tomahawk. Mr. Hyman has not yet enlisted into the noble army of Benefactors, being still single.

ISRAEL E. BUCKNAM, proprietor of the leading shoe store in Antigo, and one of the most highly respected citizens of Langlade county, is a native of Maine, born in Falmouth, Cumberland county, March 28, 1830, a son of Israel and Mary E. (Morse) Bucknam, of the same nativity. John Bucknam, father of Israel Bucknam, Sr., was also born in Maine, and was a farmer by occupation. Israel Bucknam, Sr., was a common laborer, and he and his wife, Mary Bucknam, both died in Maine, the parents of four children, namely: Israel E., William H., and Elizabeth E. and Mehitabel E. (both now deceased).

Israel E. Bucknam commenced as a section hand on a railroad in the East when but eighteen years old, followed railroading in all some thirty years, and rose to the position of roadmaster. He married Sarah J. Badger, who was born in Maine in February, 1830, and they had two children: Louis E., of whom special mention will presently be made, and Charles, who died at the age of two years; they have also an adopted daughter, Alice A., now the wife of Daniel Sweeney. The parents of Mrs. Israel E. Bucknam, Samuel W. and Mary Badger, the former of whom was a farmer, were both born in Maine, and had a family of twelve children. In the spring of 1855 Mr. Bucknam moved west, followed agricultural pursuits for a short time near Minneapolis, Minn., and in 1858 came to Wisconsin, settling at Watertown, where he engaged in railroad work. In August, 1864, he enlisted in Company L, First Wisconsin Artillery, served in the forts about Washington, and was discharged in 1865. On account of his health he was obliged to give up railroading in 1884, at which time he came to Antigo, where in June, 1885, he established his present business. In politics he is a Republican, and was a member of the city council one year; socially, he is affiliated with the K. of P. and I. O. O. F.

LOUIS E. BUCKNAM, cashier of the Bank of Antigo, Antigo, Langlade county, is a native of Wisconsin, born in Kenosha, October 19, 1869. He received a liberal education at Fort Howard High School, also at Green Bay Business College, where he graduated in 1885, in which year he came to Antigo, where for some twelve months he worked as a common laborer. In the spring of 1886 he entered the Langlade County Bank as bookkeeper, filling that incumbency until 1891, at which time, the Bank of Antigo having been reorganized, he associated himself with that institution as a stockholder, and soon afterward was appointed cashier, his present position.

On March 6, 1889, Louis E. Bucknam was united in marriage at Antigo with Miss Marian McDonald, who was born near Prophetstown, Ill., daughter of, Charles D. and Elsie (Briggs) McDonald, and a bright little daughter, Margaret, has come to cheer their home. Politically Mr. Bucknam is a Republican, and is chairman of the county committee, as well as its secretary. Socially, he is a member of the F. & A. M., and secretary of the Chapter; is also a member of the Antigo Fire Department. He is a representative, pushing young business man, self-made, and his present responsible position is evidence sufficient of what pluck, ambition and honest endeavor will accomplish.

JAMES K. POLK COON (deceased). Prominent among the names of the representative business men of Lincoln county, more especially of the city of Merrill, is found that of this gentleman, who for several years was a leader in the community, and became a martyr in his devotion to his country.

He was born September 27, 1844, in West Edmeston, Otsego Co., N. Y., a son of Elijah H. and Prudence C. Coon, the former of whom was also a native of New York State, born of Scottish ancestry, and was a son of Jabez Coon. The latter was one of five brothers who came to America, settling in Otsego county, N. Y., on farms near Coonsville, in that county, which village was named after them. Jabez Coon married Matilda Holmes, by whom he had thirteen children, six reaching mature age, viz.: Elijah H. (the eldest in the family), Nelson, Daniel, Joshua, Jefferson and Betsey, the others dying when young. Jabez Coon was one of a hardy, robust race, was a man of influence in his day, and was respected far and wide for his many good qualities, as was also the entire family. Mrs. Prudence C. Coon, mother of James K. Polk Coon, was an adopted child (brought up by her uncle, Rev. Daniel Coon, who was a brother of her mother, Mrs. Nancy Coon Bowler), her right name being Prudence Coon Bowler, and she was of Scotch and Irish descent. Rev. Daniel Coon and two other of her uncles were noted ministers of their day.

Elijah H. and Prudence Coon were the parents of eight children, to wit: Fannie A., now the widow of Albert Burdick, and living at Merrill; Elijah Morgan, also of Merrill; Cortland J., deceased; William M., deceased; James K. P., deceased, subject of sketch; Julius J., of Toledo, Ohio; Mrs. Emma Witter, of Wausau, Wis.; and Mrs. Alice Champagne Fleming, of Merrill. The father was by vocation a manufacturer of and dealer in furniture; was something of a politician, and held many prominent public offices. He was a man of sterling character, well educated, a leader of men, enjoying to the day of his death the esteem and respect of all classes. He died in Delaware county, N. Y., in 1853, his wife surviving him till August 16, 1887, when, in the city of Merrill, she too passed away.

James K. Polk Coon, the subject proper of this memoir, received but a limited education at the common schools of his native county, remaining with his mother up to the time of his enlistment in the army, in the meantime working out among the neighboring farmers. He had a war record worthy of prominent mention, and suffered much while in the service of the Union. At the age of seventeen, October 14, 1861, he enlisted at Friendship, Allegany Co., N. Y., in Company C, Eighty-fifth N. Y. V. I., three years' service, and was honorably discharged April 24, 1865. He participated in the siege of Yorktown, Va., battles of Williamsburg and Fair Oaks, and in the seven-days' retreat. In the campaign along the railroad between Newbern and Goldsboro, N. C., his regiment was under the fire of the Confederates seven days; thence it proceeded to Plymouth, and was in the attack on Fort Gray, where, after three days' hard fighting, the entire command was taken prisoners, Mr. Coon along with the rest. He was first confined in Andersonville and Charleston, S. C., whence, October 8, 1864, he was transferred to the stockade at Florence, where, on January 9, 1865, he and four others "made a break" for freedom. Their flight, however, was soon discovered, and bloodhounds being put on their track, they were captured seven days afterward at the Little Pee Dee river and taken to Wilmington, thence to Goldsboro, Raleigh and Salisbury, making short stops at each place till they came to the last named. On February 26, 1865, the end of the struggle being now at hand, our subject and the rest of the prisoners were sent to Greensboro, N. C., where they were paroled and allowed to make the best of their way to Wilmington, N. C., at which point the Union forces were stationed, Mr. Coon arriving there March 1, 1865, whence he was sent to Parole Camp, Annapolis, Md., where he was laid up with fever, brought about by severe hardships and lack of proper food, etc.; but, receiving a furlough, he set out for his old home and to his mother, who, until she received a letter from him, written at Annapolis after his release from captivity, thought him dead. He reached home the night of President Lincoln's assassination.

James Cove

After his return to the pursuits of peace Mr. Coon was engaged some twelve years in the manufacture of butter and cheese in New York State, and in 1878 he came to Merrill, his first employment being with P. B. Champagne, merchant and lumberman. In the following year (1879) our subject went to Illinois, where he again took up, near Peoria, the cheese-manufacturing industry; but in 1880 he returned to Wisconsin, again entering the employ of P. B. Champagne, having charge of his general store at Merrill. In December, 1884, he was appointed secretary and treasurer of the Champagne Lumber Co., which incumbency he filled two years, or until 1886, when he attended the anniversary of the Grand Army of the Republic, held at San Francisco, Cal. On February 1, 1887, he took up the insurance business; later, in company with Mr. Bruce, he engaged in the real-estate and insurance business at Merrill, in which he continued up to the time of his death. He died February 21, 1893, at Tucson, Ariz., whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. He was a public-spirited, generous-hearted and whole-souled man, one who made many friends, who deeply mourned the taking away, in the prime of life, of a good man. He left a sorrowing widow and two children, mention of whom will be made further on. In politics he was a zealous Democrat, but no office-seeker, and though often urged to accept office invariably declined the honor, preferring, rather, to work for his friends. In social affiliations he was a thirty-second degree Mason, always taking a lively interest in the affairs of the Order, and he was also prominent in the G. A. R., having served Lincoln Post No. 131, at Merrill, as commander, and was junior vice-commander during the incumbency of General Weissert, as commander of the State department. He was also aid-de-camp on the staff of Gen. Lucius Fairchild during the years 1886 and 1887, up to his decease—in fact he ever took a most active interest in the G. A. R., and was a zealous, untiring worker in its interests.

On December 5, 1865, Mr. Coon was married to Miss Alice Vilmina Withey, who was born in the town of Wirt, in the western part of Allegany county, N. Y., March 9, 1849, daughter of George and Catherine (Moyer) Withey, who were the parents of seven children, viz.: Mary, Caroline, Sarah, Alvira, Alice V., Jennie and Helen. The father of these children was born in Otsego county, N. Y., in 1807, and died in western Allegany county, N. Y., in January, 1879; he was a son of Stephen and Lydia Withey, who had four children: Alva, Eliza, George and Harriet. Stephen Withey was born about the year 1769, and lived to be ninety-two years of age. The mother of Mrs. Alice V. Coon was born in Germany July 22, 1821, and died April 15, 1893, at Bolivar, Allegany Co., N. Y.; she was a daughter of Jacob and Mary Moyer, farming people, who had a family of eight children, named respectively: Caroline, Dorothy, Elizabeth, Mary, Jacob, John, Catherine and Louis, all born in Germany. The parents came with their family to America about the year 1833 on account of the father's health, and decided to remain; but he did not long survive his arrival in the New World. To Mr. and Mrs. Coon have been born two children: Mamie Genevieve, born in Richburg, Allegany Co., N. Y., March 21, 1870, married to Herman Charles Wolff (sketch of whom follows); and Georgia Prue, born in Merrill, Wis., September 24, 1880, and entered Kemper Hall school at Kenosha, Wis., on her fifteenth birthday.

Herman Charles Wolff was born in Grossborkenhagen, Germany, August 3, 1860, a son of Gottlieb and Caroline (Kluetz) Wolff, who were the parents of four children—Herman C., Edward J., Willy J. and Mary A. The father of these, who was an agriculturist, came to the United States and landed in New York City July 7, 1869. He settled on a farm in Winnebago county, Wis., although he was not dependent on farming for a living, as he was a man of means when he came to this country. On August 16, 1876, the family moved into the village of Jenny (now city of Merrill), and here the father, who was born March 31, 1810, died August 20, 1891, and the mother, born June 15, 1832, is yet living. He had been twice married, the children by his first wife being Tena, August, Carl and Caroline.

Herman C. Wolff received a liberal education at the district schools of Winnebago county, and worked on a farm until coming to Jenny (now Merrill). He then entered his uncle's store, clerking there some three years, at the end of which time, in 1879, he went to Milwaukee, where he filled the position of bookkeeper for a wholesale commission house some eighteen months. Returning to Merrill, he was employed in department stores until 1888, at which time he was elected clerk of the circuit court, serving two years, and then, in association with a partner, conducted a grocery business. On February 20, 1893, he entered the First National Bank of Merrill as bookkeeper, his present position, which he is filling with characteristic ability and fidelity.

JOSEPH THOMAS is the proprietor of a fine hotel in Marshfield, and a representative business man. As he has a wide acquaintance in the city we feel assured that the record of his life will prove of interest to many of our readers, and gladly give it a place in this volume. He was born in the city of Teller, Prussia, October 10, 1837, and is a son of Urborn Thomas, who was born in the same place June 29, 1809. By trade he was a cooper, and he possessed considerable musical ability, coming of a family of musicians. He was one five brothers, intelligent and highly-educated men, two of the number engaging in school teaching. The names of the members of the family are Cornelius, Jacob, John, Sybilla, Elizabeth and Anna Maria. The eldest brother has two sons who became Catholic priests, and John A. also has a son who is a priest.

Having arrived at years of maturity, the father of our subject was married, in 1837, to Anna Maria Holesmir, and ere leaving their native land they became the parents of the following children: Joseph, Anna, John, Sophis and Sybilla. After coming to America their family circle was increased by the birth of Anton, Fidelia, Jacob and Peter. They also lost three children in infancy. The year 1845 witnessed the emigration of the family to the New World, and they stepped from the sailing vessel on American soil in New York City on the 4th of July. At once continuing their westward journey, they at length reached Washington county, Wis., the father securing a tract of wild land in Addison township when there were only twelve families within its borders. At different times he was interested in other business ventures, but made farming his principal occupation through life, and he died in the town where he had first located, in May, 1874. His wife, surviving him a number of years, passed away in November, 1891.

The eldest child of this worthy couple is Joseph Thomas, who was a lad of only seven summers when his parents crossed the Atlantic to America and took up their residence upon a wild farm, which he aided in bringing under cultivation as soon as he was old enough to handle the plow. For two years his father was ill, and he was compelled to work for neighboring farmers in order to support the family. There was no school in the new country, so his educational advantages were necessarily limited. He worked out, giving his earnings to his parents until twenty-four years of age, being employed to a considerable extent in building levees in the South. He had also learned the cooper's trade which he followed for a time, and thus in various ways did he gain a livelihood.

At the time of the breaking out of the Civil war Mr. Thomas was in Little Rock, Ark., and was obliged to run down the river; also walked a long distance, and even then had trouble in getting home. Soon after his return he was married June 12, 1861, to Lena Kopf, who was born in France in 1841, a daughter of George and Catherine (Buchart) Kopf, who came to America in 1847, locating on a Wisconsin farm. Their family numbered seven children: Lena, Sophia, Frances, Michael, Bartell, Adam (deceased), and John. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas were born the following children: Anna, Katie, Frances, Lena, John, George, Joseph, Michael, August and William, who are yet living; and Joseph and William, now deceased. Upon his marriage Mr. Thomas rented a farm and cultivated same eight years, when he purchased another tract of land which he operated until 1884; then sold out and came to Marshfield, purchasing some lots on which stood a frame hotel. There he began business, and success attended his efforts until June 27, 1887, when the hotel was destroyed in the great Marshfield fire. With characteristic energy he began building his present fine brick hotel, which he has since carried on with the exception of three years, when he rented it to his son-in-law. He is the present genial and popular proprietor, and the place is a favorite with the traveling public.

In his political views, Mr. Thomas is a Democrat, and has been honored with a number of local offices. For five years he served as supervisor of his township, and for four years after coming to the city held the same position, serving in that capacity at the present time by appointment from the council. His fidelity to duty is well-known, and he is accounted one of the ablest officers on the board; at one time he was a candidate for city assessor. From his parents he received $300, and all that he has over and above that he has accumulated through his own efforts. In the rush and hurry of business he has not neglected the holier duties of life, and is a prominent member and active worker in the Catholic Church, having served as a member of the building committee when the present fine church edifice was erected.

MARK NEUMAN, a leading and popular clothing merchant of Antigo, Langlade county, is a native of Wisconsin, born January 13, 1861, at LaCrosse, a son of Simon and Hanchen (Hoffman) Neuman, both natives of Prussia, the former born in 1822, the latter in 1839.

The father of our subject had two brothers and three sisters, all of whom came to America except one sister, who remained in the Fatherland with her parents. Simon emigrated in 1850, first locating, for any length of time, at Granville, Washington Co., N. Y., in the general merchandising business, having followed the trade of hat and cap maker in New York for a short time, at which he had previously worked in London (England). About the year 1855 he came to Wisconsin, and in the city of LaCrosse established a dry-goods store, which he conducted some twenty-five years, or until 1881, when he moved to Racine, and there for four years carried on a clothing business. In 1885 he came to Antigo and opened out the clothing establishment now managed by his son Mark. At Milwaukee, in 1859, Simon Neuman was married to Miss Hanchen Hoffman, who was born in Prussia in 1839, and came alone to this country in her girlhood. She has one brother, William, living, and had one sister, Fredericka, now deceased. Mr. Neuman died April 13, 1893, respected and regretted by a wide circle of relatives and friends; his widow now has her home in Duluth, Minn. They were the parents of four children, namely: Mark, Rebecca (now Mrs. M. Kastriner, of Duluth), Louis (in business at that city) and Hulda.

Mark Neuman, the subject proper of these lines, received his education at the common schools of his native place, after which he was employed in his father's store until 1890, at which time he was given a half interest in the Antigo business, and since his father's death has had the control and management of the entire concern, his mother retaining a half interest in the same.

On May 2, 1894, our subject was united in marriage with Miss Ida DeLee, of Chicago, who was born at Cold Spring, on the Hudson, New York State, daughter of Morris (a wholesale clothier in Chicago) and Dora DeLee, natives, the father of Poland, the mother of Germany. They have a family of eight children, viz.: Solomon T., Charles, Abraham, Joseph, Augusta, Ida, Nettie and Anette. To Mr. and Mrs. Neuman has been born one child, named Ruth Hertha. In his political preferences our subject is a Republican; socially, he is a member of the F. and A. M., and K. of P., in which latter order he is a charter member of the lodge at Antigo, and is master of the exchequer.

JOSEPH GAUTHIER, of Keshena, Shawano county, was born August 18, 1818, at Rock Island, Ill., and is nearly a full-blooded Menominee Indian. His father's name was Shaw-nah-wah-quah-hah, and his mother's name was Sho-sha-quær, a daughter of Kanote, who was a sub-chief and a brother of Tomah, the head chief of the tribe, and a noted Indian of his time. Both Kanote and Tomah had some white blood in their veins from a distant ancestor.

Mr. Gauthier's Indian name was Mah-chickeney, and he was an only son. His father died when he was eight years old, and his mother afterward married Antoine Gauthier, an employe of the American Fur Company, who were extensive traders with the Indians all over the Northwest. Antoine Gauthier remained with this company for about thirty-five years. He then went to farming in Henry county, Ill., where he remained until his family grew up and were scattered, when he went to Kansas and died in Kansas City, Mo., in September, 1856. After his mother's second marriage, Mr. Gauthier took his step-father's name, which he still retains. By the second marriage of Mr. Gauthier's mother, children were born as follows: Antoine, who for many years was interpreter for the Sacs and Fox Indians, but afterward married a daughter of Muck-Kunth, the chief of the Chippewa and Munsee tribe; he died in 1875. Louis also married into the same tribe and family as his brother, Antoine, and died in 1892; Frank, who married into the same tribe, died in 1870; John, who married into the Sacs and Fox tribe, was a farmer near Rock Island, Ill., all his life, and died there in 1845; Susan married a half-breed Menominee, is still living, and since the death of Mr. Gauthier's wife has been his housekeeper; Margaret married a son of Muck-Kunth, the chief of the Chippewa and Munsee Indians; she died in 1862, and her husband in 1888.

Joseph Gauthier's younger days were spent in the vicinity of Rock Island, Ill., and he received some education by attending the primitive schools of that period, and from what the officers of the fort taught him, which he improved as he grew older. In his boyhood days he knew Gen. Harney, Gen. Scott, Gen. Banks, and other officers who became noted soldiers later on, and was always a favorite with the officers and soldiers at the fort. Mr. Gauthier was fourteen years old at the time of the Black Hawk war, and has a vivid recollection of the stirring times of that period. He was enrolled with the militia and carried a musket with the balance, but being young was not sent into the field. He was one of the pioneer lumber boys of the State, working for several years on Black river for D. B. Seers & Co., of Moline, Ill. In 1850 he rejoined his tribe, who were located at Poygan, Wis., a few miles above Oshkosh. After working on a boat on Fox river one season he was given a position in the government blacksmith shop conducted for the benefit of the Indians at Winneconne. In 1852 the Menominees were removed on to their present reservation in Shawano county, and Mr. Gauthier came with them and continued to work in the blacksmith shop. Shortly afterward he was appointed the boss of the shop at $40 a month, which was large wages for those days, and he continued in that position until 1857, when he was appointed the official interpreter for the tribe, which position he held until 1860, when a change of agents took place, and for political reasons he was removed. He then engaged in the mercantile business at Keshena under the firm name of Gauthier & Upham, his partner being Charles M. Upham, of Shawano, Wis., who is a brother of the present governor of the State. Mr. Gauthier continued in the mercantile business until 1866, when he was again appointed interpreter, which place he has held ever since, with the exception of about one year and a half.

During the Civil war Mr. Gauthier was an enthusiastic Union man, and if he could have arranged his business matters satisfactorily would have been to the front with his musket. As it was, he encouraged enlistments among the Indians, and was the prime mover in raising Company K, Thirty-seventh Wis. V. I., paying the expenses of transporting the company to Madison, and supporting many of the families of the men who enlisted. He accompanied the company to Madison, and was appointed special quartermaster for the services he had rendered. It is well enough to say here that Company K, Thirty-seventh Wis. V. I. were all Indians but two. They were mustered into service June 27, 1864. On July 31, 1864, they were in the front of Petersburg, and were caught in the explosion of the mine celebrated in the history of that fight, and nineteen of the company were killed, and several others wounded.

In 1852 Joseph Gauthier was married to Mary Ann Mo-sha-quah-toe-kiew, whose father died when she was a small child. They had one child, Frank, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Gauthier adopted a small boy, and brought him up as their son. His name is Joseph F. Gauthier, and he is now a prosperous merchant and lumberman, and resides at Keshena, Wis. Mrs. Gauthier died July 12, 1892, when about sixty-seven years old, loved and respected by all.

Joseph Gauthier is a member of the Catholic Church, and a regular attendant. Although he is partly blind, he retains all his mental faculties, and is respected and held in high esteem both by the Indians and whites. The present Chief of the Menominees is Ne-oh-pet, a son of the celebrated chief, Oshkosh. Ne-oh-pet, Chickeney and Nah-tah-wah-pah-my are the present judges of the Indian court, and try all Indian cases arising on the reservation. Mr. Gauthier acts as interpreter for the court. The decisions of this court are so pure and just that many white judges could learn a lesson from them in equity and justice.

JUDGE MUNSON M. ROSS, of Langlade county, was the first attorney in the county, and is now serving as municipal judge. He is a native of Wisconsin, born in Manitowoc, August 22, 1853, and is a son of Norris and Eliza (Edwards) Ross.

Norris Ross was born in the town of Windsor, Hartford Co., Conn., in 1816. His father, who was a farmer, removed to Cleveland, Ohio, when Norris was a two-year-old child. The latter left home when about sixteen years old, and going to Milwaukee worked at carpentering and ship-building. Later he came to Manitowoc, and in 1836 built the first vessel ever constructed there, and which was named the "Citizen." He was here married to Miss Eliza Edwards, who was born in Monmouth county, N. J., December 30, 1830, a daughter of Joseph and Amy (Johnson) Edwards, whose family comprised the following children: Henry, Daniel, Joseph, Perry, Eliza, Gertrude, Phoebe, Jennie and Emma. The father was a lake captain for many years, owning and sailing his own vessels; he served in the Civil war. His sons are all sailors. Mr. Edwards died in 1866, his wife in 1887. Norris Ross also sailed the lakes for some years, owning and sailing his own vessels. He is still living at a good old age, and makes his home with the subject of this sketch. Mrs. Ross died April 30, 1881. They were the parents of five children as follows: Ella, now Mrs. George H. Hoffman, of Antigo; Jessie, Mrs. Albert Ross, also residing in Antigo; Julia, who married C. Deda, of Kewanee, and is deceased; Ione, who married Richard Hampton, a farmer, and resides in Langlade county; and Munson M., who is the second child in order of birth.

Our subject was educated in the common schools of Manitowoc, and learned the trade of a printer, at which he worked some seven years, one year of that time on the Milwaukee Sentinel. He was then obliged to give up work for two years on account of his health. At the age of twenty-five Mr. Ross, having decided to study law, entered the office of H. G. and W. J. Turner. Here he remained about four years, was admitted to the bar in 1881, and in July of that year came to Antigo, and opened an office, being, as already stated, the first attorney to take up his residence in Langlade county. He had practiced here only one year, when he was elected register of deeds, and held that office four years, succeeding R. G. Webb, who was the first man to hold that office in the county. He was then elected mayor, and after his term expired he moved on his farm near Antigo, where he remained, however, only eight months. Then he came back to the city, and purchased a hardware store, which he carried on for two years, when he sold out, and built a sawmill near his farm. This, however, proving a financial failure, he again moved onto his farm, where he lived one year.

In the spring of 1895 Mr. Ross was elected municipal judge of the county, and now resides in Antigo. Judge Ross was married, in 1881, to Sarah J. Edwards, who was born in Milwaukee, Wis., December 6, 1857, daughter of Robert and Mary (Jones) Edwards, one of eight children, whose names are: Sarah J., Anna, Maggie, Laura, Mattie, Thomas, Robert and John. Her parents, who were natives of Wales, came to America when young, and were married in Milwaukee. Her father was a sailor, first on the ocean, and afterward on the lakes, and is now living at Two Rivers, Wis. Her mother died in February, 1895. Three children have been born to Judge Ross and his wife, Thomas M., Anieta and Munson M. The judge is a staunch Democrat, and an active worker. He has been a member of the school board ever since coming to Antigo, and takes a great interest in educational matters. He is identified with the Episcopal Church, and is a member of the I. O. O. F. and K. of P.

HERMAN A. HERMANSON, one of the extensive landowners and lumbermen of Iola, Waupaca county, was born September 19, 1851, in Norway, son of Herman Hermanson, who was a mill employe in that country. Our subject also had one sister born in Norway, Christina, now Mrs. Goodman Amanson, of Iola, and one born in America, Annie, now Mrs. Carl Hagen, of Helvetia township, Waupaca county.

In the spring of 1852 the father, accompanied by the mother and two children, crossed the Atlantic, being eleven weeks in making the voyage, and landed at Quebec, Canada. Their destination was Winnebago county, Wis., whither they came by way of Buffalo and the lakes. The father kept a store at Winneconne for a year and a half, but his capital was quite small, being limited to what he could realize from the sale of such possessions as he had. In the fall of 1853 the family arrived in Waupaca county, locating in Scandinavia township, where a great many of their countrymen resided, which fact, and the cheapness of the land, proved a great attraction. The father there purchased the northwest quarter of Section 3, which was quite wild, with very little clearing done, and a few rude improvements. To make a farm of it required much labor, but although not experienced in farming, Mr. Hermanson was strong and robust, and the thoughts of owning a home inspired him. Work was plentiful, but at first progressed slowly, yet as he became more accustomed to his new calling he made better headway. The place was at last free from debt, and he added to his possessions until at one time he owned 260 acres of good land. He continued to reside upon the farm until 1885, when he removed to Iola, there living retired until his death, which occurred March 19, 1892; his good wife had preceded him to the final rest, dying March 19, 1889, and as his birth had occurred August 2, 1819, and her's on August 8, 1816, each was seventy-three years old at the time of decease. They now lie buried in the old cemetery at Scandinavia. The father was large, being six feet tall, was an industrious, hard-working man, and entirely self-made. Politically he was first a supporter of the Democratic party, until Abraham Lincoln's candidacy, when the Republican platform, with its patriotic planks, seemed to please him, and thereafter always found in him a warm friend, staunch supporter and regular voter, as well as a faithful servant in minor township offices. He also held the position of school trustee. He was a devout member of the Lutheran Church, to which his family also belonged, and helped to erect the first house of worship for that denomination in Scandinavia, to which he was always a liberal contributor.

The common schools afforded Herman A. Hermanson his literary education. His first teacher was Amelia Ingersol, in District No. 3, Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, the primitive school house furnished with old-fashioned benches for seats, and other furniture in keeping. The terms were short, and poorly conducted, and at the age of sixteen he left the school room in order to give his whole time to farm work, which he has always assisted in from mere childhood. At the age of seven years he helped take the wheat to Waupaca, and the flour to Weyauwega, all being done with oxen, which he could lead. Wheat was the main crop in those days, and the father raised as much as 700 bushels, thirty to the acre being nothing unusual. In hauling flour to Weyauwega they would start at 2 o'clock in the morning, and with cattle, make the round trip in a day, the price per bushel received for wheat being so small that they could not afford the hotel expenses over night. Mr. Hermanson remained on the home farm until he had reached the age of twenty-two, when he entered the employ of Thompson & Howen, of Amherst, Wis., as a clerk, remaining with them some eight months, when the firm changed, and he returned home. Later he was again employed by Mr. Howen, with whom he worked six months. In 1875, while looking up pine lands in Township 26, Range 10, Waupaca county, he was accidentally shot through the hip, causing a wound which kept him from business for two years, and represented quite a loss, as in those days valuable pine timber was being located all over northern Wisconsin, and he was prevented from participating in the hunt.

On October 7, 1885, the marriage of Mr. Hermanson and Clara Hoyerd was celebrated in the Lutheran Church, of Scandinavia. She was born in Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, February 27, 1866, daughter of O. P. Hoyerd. After their marriage the young couple lived for some time with his parents, and when the latter removed to Iola he took entire charge of the farm, though he had for some time previous been the mainstay of the place. Mr. Hermanson continued to follow farming here, but in the fall of 1889 he bought an interest in a flouring-mill at Scandinavia, in connection with the Sither Brothers & John Wrolstad, who sold their interest to the firm, continuing as Wrolstad & Hermanson until the following spring, when our subject sold his interest and returned to his farm. Here he continued to carry on agricultural pursuits until October, 1890, when he became interested in a general store in Scandinavia with Carl Peterson, under the firm name of Peterson & Hermanson, they having purchased the stock of N. I. Nelson. This business Mr. Hermanson followed until June 24, 1891, when he disposed of his interest, and bought pine lands in Helvetia and Wyoming townships. At the same time he started a mill, and has since continued the lumber business with good success, purchasing the pine on almost nine hundred acres. He yet retains eighty acres of the home place, as well as 280 acres in Iola and Scandinavia townships, Waupaca county, and he also owns a house and lot in Iola besides his place of business.

While not an office-seeker, Mr. Hermanson takes considerable interest in political matters, always casting his ballot in support of the Republican party, and for six years served as justice of the peace. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, of which he is one of the trustees, and socially he belongs to the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Iola, No. 282. He is exceedingly generous and benevolent in nature, and in the last ten years has lost some $5,000, going bail for friends, and in other ways. He is numbered among the foremost men of Iola, and seems destined to become a wealthy man. Public-spirited and enterprising, he has done much for the advancement of the community, and is numbered among her respected citizens.

BYRON B. PARK, an active and wide-awake attorney at law of Stevens Point, Portage county, is a native of that city, born October 6, 1858, a son of the late Hon. Gilbert L. Park. He graduated at the high school of that place, and afterward, in 1876, entered the Wisconsin State University at Madison, taking a special three-years' course preparatory to becoming a law student. In the fall of 1879 he commenced the study of law in the office of Jones & Sanborn, Stevens Point, so continuing until 1880, when he became a student in the Law Department of the State University at Madison, graduating from there in June, 1881, at which time he was also admitted to the bar. He then moved to Milwaukee, and there entered the office of Winfield & A. A. L. Smith, a prominent law firm of that city, and with them remained one year, when, owing to the illness of his father, who was obliged to go to California for his health, he returned to Stevens Point, in order to give his attention to his father's business. The latter dying in June, 1884, our subject during the next two years was engaged in settling up his father's estate and private affairs; then in the spring of 1886 he formed a partnership with Frank B. Lamoreux, under the firm name of Lamoreux & Park, which continued until December, 1891, when J. O. Raymond was admitted as a partner, the firm names becoming Raymond, Lamoreux & Park, which still exists, Mr. Park as a rule having charge of the trial branch of the business, though each member of the firm is more or less actively engaged in all departments of law. Our subject practices before all State, United States and District courts, and is fully recognized as one of the prominent attorneys of northern Wisconsin. The firm enjoy a wide and lucrative clientage throughout this section of the State, and, probably, have the most extensive practice, locally, of any in the profession.

Politically Mr. Park is a Democrat, and has always taken an active part in the councils of the party; was a delegate to the Democratic State Convention held at Madison in 1888, and has been a delegate to every State Convention since; was also a delegate to the Congressional Conventions held in 1884, 1888 and 1892. In 1888-89 he served as city attorney; in 1891-92 as mayor of Stevens Point; in 1892 was elected district attorney, and is now (1895) serving as such. In February, 1892, he was appointed regent of State Normal schools by Gov. Peck, and was re-appointed in February, 1894. In every political campaign he has been active on the "stump," his services always being in demand and highly appreciated. Socially our subject is a member of the F. & A. M., Blue Lodge, and of Forest Chapter at Stevens Point; also member of the Knights of Pythias, Phoenix Lodge No. 33. On September 29, 1886, he was married to Miss Bertha N. Wyatt, daughter of William Wyatt, of Stevens Point, and two children have come to brighten their home, named respectively: Gladys and Laurence W.

JOHNS RUSSELL FLEMING. To the land of Scott and Burns the United States is indebted for many of her most loyal, most progressive and most successful of citizens, not a few of whom are to be found in the State of Wisconsin. In this connection it is a pleasure to here outline the life of the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch.

Mr. Fleming was born in Lanarkshire, Scotland, near the city of Glasgow, November 22, 1846, and is a son of William and Janet (McIndoe) Fleming, both also natives of the "land of the heather," where they followed agricultural pursuits, and were highly respected and esteemed for their many virtues. The father was born near

John Russell Fleming

Bathgate, in 1820, the mother in Dumbartonshire, in 1825; she died in Scotland in 1871. They were the parents of nine children, a brief record of whom is as follows: John Russell, the subject of these lines, is the eldest; Catherine is now the wife of R. Crum, and lives in Idaho; Jessie is deceased; Peter is a wool-grower and sheep raiser in Idaho; William is in Montana, Walter in Australia, and James in Idaho; Hugh was engaged in the sheep industry in Idaho, where, in 1894, he was killed by cowboys while protecting his flock; Agnes was married in Scotland, and emigrated to Australia, where she died.

John Russell was the first of the family to come to the United States, the date of his immigration being June 2, 1868. The rest of them followed him to the New World soon afterward, except the father, who did not come till 1889, and he is now living near Minocqua, Vilas county. Our subject followed farming some nine months in Canada, at the end of which time, his uncle, Hon. Walter Duncan McIndoe, being a prominent resident of Wausau, Wis., he moved thither, and for three years was employed in the pineries in various pursuits. In 1872 he went to Nevada, but did not remain there long, Idaho appearing to him to be more inviting for his purposes, and accordingly he proceeded to that then Territory. In Idaho he remained nearly twenty years, engaged in the rearing of sheep, cattle and horses, besides extensive farming, and during those years he had some thrilling experiences with the Indians, Mormons, cowboys and sheep owners, with all of whom he had considerable business dealings from time to time. For nearly two years he held a government position as agent over the Bannock and Shoshone Indians while at war with the whites. In 1892 he returned to Wisconsin, and is now a resident of Merrill, Lincoln county.

On November 28, 1893, Mr. Fleming was united in marriage with Mrs. Alice G. Champagne, widow of Hon. P. B. Champagne. He is a pleasant, genial gentleman, and although his education in boyhood and youth did not extend beyond the limits of the common schools of his native county, Lanarkshire, yet by culture and close observation of men and nature he has become a man of superior literary attainments, as is evidenced by his many contributions of poetry and description to the public press; he is also a producer of music and art of high rank. A lover of fine horses, he finds no enjoyment more congenial or healthy than driving some fine team, and at the present time he is owner of a superb pair of "blacks." A familiar figure in the community, possessed of an ever-cheerful countenance, he has a smile and cheery word for all whom he meets, and no one in the county possesses more fully the esteem, good will and respect of his fellow-citizens than does John Russell Fleming.

OLE G. FROGNER, one of the foremost citizens and successful business men of Iola, Waupaca county, is now serving as president of the village. He was born near Skien, Norway, May 29, 1852, and is a son of Gunder Frogner, who was head sawyer in a mill in his native land. In 1872 the father, accompanied by his family of five children, came to the United States, the passage being made in a sailing vessel, and occupying seven weeks and three days. They first located in New Hope, Portage Co., Wis., where a temporary home was made on rented land; but soon after the father purchased land in Section 2, Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, and began farming it. This was the first land he ever owned in the United States, and it was here that he followed agricultural pursuits during his active life. On landing in this country he had limited means; but at the time of his death he was possessed of a comfortable amount of worldly goods. He passed away July 2, 1886, and was buried in the Lutheran Cemetery, of Scandinavia, of which Church he was a faithful member. Though no politician, he regularly cast his ballot in support of the men and measures of the Republican party. His widow now makes her home with our subject. In the family were the following children: Louis, of the firm of Frogner Brothers, of Iola; Ole G.; Mary, wife of Ole Gordon, of Nelsonville, Portage Co., Wis.; John, also a member of the firm of Frogner Brothers; and Gusta.

The educational advantages which Ole G. Frogner received were very limited, although he learned very readily. He attended school to some extent in his native land, but after coming to the New World most of his time had to be given to work instead of study. At the age of nineteen years, while in the old country, he began learning the trade of wagon making, and in the fall of 1872 commenced work at his trade with Martin Perkins, of Stevens Point, whose death caused him to lose what wages were due him, some seventy dollars, and he was thus left with no money, having to borrow to pay his board. He then worked at the carpenter's trade for three or four years. In the fall of 1877 he bought the wagon shop of Harrison Warren at Iola, with whom he had previously worked four months, and he conducted the business alone until January, 1878, when his brother Louis became a member of the firm, and later John also became interested in the business. In 1884 they added a blacksmith shop, which they carried on until 1893, when they sold to Hansen & Johnson Brothers, who had formerly been in their employ. The firm in 1885, in connection with their other business, also began wagon making in Scandinavia, of which our subject had charge, and has two workmen under him; but later the employes bought out the business. In 1879 they added farm implements to their stock, and for four years also had a wagon on the road for the sale of pumps. Their plant has been enlarged, and many new improvements added, including an engine, which was put in in 1887; in 1890 an Atlas engine and saw outfit was added, and also a planing department. In 1892 a steam dry-kiln was put in operation. Three years later they sold out the implement business with the exception of the sale of mowers, binders and steam-threshing outfits, which they continue to supply. Repairing of machinery and boilers forms a part of their business, and this branch is under the charge of John, who displays great natural mechanical ability. The firm of Frogner Brothers is widely known in Waupaca county, and they have built up an extensive and paying business.

On June 30, 1878, Mr. Frogner was joined in wedlock with Miss Christina Peterson, of Scandinavia, Waupaca county, a daughter of Simon Peterson, a leading farmer of that community. To this worthy couple seven children were born: Hans J., who died at the age of one year and six months; and Hannah J., Myrtle T., Guy S., Oliver C., Arthur W. and Herbert N., all at home. After his marriage Mr. Frogner located in Iola, but in the fall of 1886 Frogner Brothers purchased the father's farm, on which our subject resided about a year, when he returned to Iola, where he remained until the spring of 1895. At that time he bought his present farm of 120 acres, near the village, on which he now makes his home.

Mr. Frogner is a stalwart supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and is one of its leaders in the community. For ten years he was township treasurer; was the first treasurer of the village of Iola; and in the spring of 1893 was elected president of the village, which office he is now acceptably filling. After serving two terms as school clerk he resigned in order to become eligible to bid on the erection of a new school house. Mr. Frogner is prominently connected with the I. O. O. F., belonging to Iola Lodge, No. 282, in which he has filled all the offices, being noble grand in 1882. He often attends the State meetings of the Order; has been State delegate to the Grand Lodge, and was district deputy grand master in 1890 and 1891. Himself and wife are charter members of Rebecca Lodge, No. 331, at Iola, and their religious connections are with the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Frogner has ever been an untiring worker, and has been an important factor in the building up of one of the most leading industries of Waupaca county. His success is only the more creditable when it is considered that he had little or no education in English, that in fact in his first business correspondence he had to consult friends in order to learn the contents of his letters. Too much praise can not be bestowed upon him for the success he has made, and his energetic disposition caused him to fill a sick bed for two years and a half, the result of overwork. Though many predicted disaster when they saw the firm of Frogner Brothers adding to their business, they have met with nothing but success, which is well-merited.

CHARLES S. LEYKOM. In presenting a record of the lives of representative self-made men of northern Wisconsin, more especially of Langlade county and the city of Antigo, it is a pleasure to include that of the gentleman whose name is here given, because it is men of his caliber who have made this comparatively new State what it is, and brought it to its present condition of prosperity.

Mr. Leykom is a native of Wisconsin, born in the city of Manitowoc November 14, 1858, a son of John and Ann (Wallace) Leykom, the father born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1807, the mother in Quebec, Canada, in 1830. The parents and brothers and sisters of John Leykom all died in Germany, John, alone, emigrating to Canada. He was reared by an uncle, John Hoffman, and before crossing the Atlantic he served in the German army. He had a family of eleven children, of whom John R., Harriet (now Mrs. H. A. Kohl), Catherine (now Mrs. G. W. Hill, of Antigo), Mary Ann and Charles S., are the only survivors. All the eleven children were born in Canada except Catherine and Charles S., who are of Wisconsin birth. The family came to Wisconsin in 1845, settling in Manitowoc, where the father is yet living, and where the mother died in 1887. John R. and James served in the Union army during the Civil war, James enlisting when seventeen years old, serving eighteen months; in 1868 he was drowned in the wreck of the ill-fated "Seabird." Thomas died in Manitowoc at the age of seventeen, Albert when twenty-six, while other members of the family passed away in infancy. The mother, Mrs. Ann (Wallace) Leykom, was a daughter of James and Ruth Wallace, the former of whom, a mason by trade, died in Canada, the father of two sons and four daughters, one son, only, now living.

Charles S. Leykom, the subject proper of these lines, who is the youngest in his father's family, received a liberal common-school education in the city of his birth, and when fourteen years old commenced learning the trade of cigar maker, which he followed some eighteen months, but had to abandon on account of impaired health. Later he clerked in a hardware store in Manitowoc three years, then in a grocery store one year, after which he returned to the hardware store and clerked there another three years. In July, 1881, he came to Antigo, Langlade county, where, in company with Mr. John Hessel he embarked in the hardware business, the firm (Hessel & Leykom) building their own store, the first of the kind in Antigo, and they have met with the success due to enterprise and indefatigable energy. At that time the place was in a very primitive condition, the nearest railroad station being fifteen miles distant, and Mr. Leykom had to come on foot to the then village of 150 inhabitants.

In 1883 Mr. Leykom was united in marriage with Miss Nellie A. Williams, who was born in Potsdam, N. Y., in 1864, daughter of G. C. and Alois (Heath) Williams, both natives of Vermont, who came to Wisconsin in 1882, settling on a farm; they had a family of eight children, of whom Abbie, Winnie, Nellie A., Bertha and Jennie are living, the others having died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Leykom have been born two children: John W. and Charles S. In his political preferences our subject is a Republican, and he has served as member of the school board; socially he is affiliated with the A. O. U. W., and is very active in that Order; in religious faith he and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church. He is recognized as one of the wide-awake pushing men of Antigo, in the building up of which young city he has always taken the deepest interest, and given substantial aid. At the present time he is president of the Langlade County Bank; treasurer of the Antigo Electric Light Plant Company; and president of the Agricultural Society, and of the Antigo Cemetery Association. He and his amiable wife are proverbial for their hospitality and geniality, and enjoy the well-merited respect and esteem of the entire community.

JAMES BUCHANAN CHURCHILL in point of residence is the oldest settler of Grant township, Shawano county. In 1857 he purchased from the Fox River Improvement Co. a tract of 160 acres in Section 35, Grant township, distant a scant mile from the present flourishing little village of Marion, Waupaca county. This pioneer home was then under the territorial jurisdiction of Matteson township, and included what is now Grant, Pella, Matteson, Fairbanks and Split Rock townships. The little log house which he built stood in the midst of the dense forests, and here for many years he lived, a pioneer, when pioneers were few, and when frontier life meant hardships and privations almost innumerable.

Mr. Churchill was born in Lock township, Cayuga Co., N. Y., in 1831, son of David A. and Martha (Buchanan) Churchill. David A. Churchill was the son of Daniel and Marion (Clark) Churchill, both of New York nativity and English ancestry. Daniel Churchill was a captain in the Continental army in the war of 1812, and died in Cayuga county, N. Y., where he was a large landowner. Miriam Buchanan was the daughter of John and Miriam (Yaeger) Buchanan. John Buchanan was a native of Ireland, and served during the Revolutionary war as a captain in the Patriot army. He was a relative of President Buchanan, and a farmer by occupation, living through life on a farm in Orange county, N. Y. David A. Churchill, father of James B., was a currier and shoemaker by trade, and in 1845 moved from Cayuga county, N. Y., to Tioga county, Penn., where he remained until 1867. In that year he came to the Wisconsin home of his son, and remained there until his death, in 1880; his wife died in 1887. Their family of eight children consisted of Clark L., a lumberman, who died in 1855, in Simcoe county, Canada West (now Ontario); James Buchanan, subject of this sketch; Jerome, of Tioga county, Penn; Wilber, a resident of the same county, who enlisted in a Pennsylvania cavalry regiment and served three years; William, his twin brother, now a resident of Larrabee township, Waupaca county, who also saw active service in a Pennsylvania infantry regiment; David, also of Larrabee township, Waupaca county, and a veteran of a New York regiment; Daniel, who died in Maryland while in the service, January 1, 1862; and Martha, wife of Ebenezer Burley (also a Union soldier), of Tioga county, Pennsylvania.

James B. Churchill attended the district schools of Cayuga county, N. Y., and at the age of thirteen years accompanied his father's family to Tioga county, Penn., remaining there, engaged in farm labors, until the age of twenty. In 1851 he went to Canada, and there followed lumbering, and six years later was married to Miss Mary Warnick, a native of Canada, after which, with his young wife, he started for his prospective home in the wilds of Wisconsin. The journey was made by rail to Fond du Lac, thence via boat to New London, and the balance of the way afoot through the primeval forests. There were then no roads, and here in the fastnesses of the woods the hardy and venturesome pioneer lived for years. For several years after their settlement their only beasts of burden were oxen, and the only vehicle a wood-shod sleigh, which was used summer and winter, no wagons having yet been brought into the settlement. In going any distance in any direction streams of all kinds had to be forded. Their flour was all bought at New London, and brought by boat up to Clintonville, from which point Mr. Churchill would bring a 100-lb. sack on his shoulder to his home, a distance of ten miles as the roads run. The first interment in the adjoining graveyard at Marion was in 1872. In 1864 Mr. Churchill enlisted at Menasha, Wis., in Company K, First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, which was assigned to the Twenty-second Army Corps and stationed at Arlington Heights and Ft. Lyons, Alexandria, on garrison duty. He was mustered out at Washington, D. C., in July, 1865, and returned to Shawano county, Wisconsin.

Mr. Churchill's first wife died in July, 1862, and in September, 1865, he was married in Bear Creek township, Waupaca county, to Miss Elizabeth Hehman, a lady of Holland birth, whose parents, Gerhard and Bertha (Haytink) Hehman, emigrated in November, 1856, from Holland to Milwaukee, Wis., and in May, 1857, settled in Section 18, Pella township, Shawano county. Their nearest neighbor then was fourteen miles distant. Mr. Hehman cut a road through the woods from a point two miles below Buckbee, Larrabee township, Waupaca county, to Pella, Shawano county, and from the farm to Embarrass village. He built a shanty 10 x 12 feet, and lived in it from May to November, by which time he had erected a log cabin, quite commodious in comparison. By faithful and persistent labor he improved the farm, and he died at this pioneer home in 1872, his wife surviving until 1879. Their five children were: Henrietta, wife of Fred Strausburg, of Marion, Wis.; William, formerly of Seneca, Shawano county, who died of heart disease July 4, 1895; John, who died in Grant township in March, 1893; Mrs. Churchill; and Gerhard, who lives in Sugar Bush, Outagamie county.

After his second marriage Mr. Churchill settled in Bear Creek township, and operated the Welcome Hyde farm for about five years. He then returned to his old farm, which he improved, and in 1883 equipped with a good one-and-a-half-story dwelling 16 x 28, with an L 16 x 16 feet, and having a one-story kitchen 14 x 15; his substantial barn, an imposing structure 36 x 56 feet, with 18-foot posts, he erected in 1869. Here Mr. Churchill is engaged in farming, and in raising an excellent grade of stock. In politics he is a Democrat, and he is one of the most public-spirited and enterprising citizens of the prosperous community in which he lives. In 1859 he served as commissioner of Matteson township, and in 1869 he assisted actively in organizing Grant township. He was instrumental in building many of the roads throughout the township, and in various ways contributed liberally to the convenience and welfare of the tide of immigrants who later filled up this wild land and converted it into an expanse of happy and prosperous homes. In matters of local history Mr. Churchill is an undisputed authority, and none stand higher than he in the esteem and respect of his fellow-citizens. Though not a member of any Church or denomination, he has been a liberal contributor to the different churches of his neighborhood, having assisted all of them by donations at different times, for their erection and afterward in their support. Socially he is a member of Shawano Lodge, I. O. O. F.

JOHN BOURSIER, JR., one of the representative young farmers of Stockton township, Portage county, and one of its most prosperous citizens, was born August 21, 1852, son of John Boursier, Sr., who is one of the earliest pioneers in that part of the county.

The father was born in LaPrairie, near the St. Lawrence river, June 2, 1819. His father, whose name was also John, was a farmer in ordinary circumstances, and had a large family. He was twice married, and John is now the only surviving child by the first marriage. When fourteen years of age, or in 1833, the latter left home. His mother had died when he was two years old, and his step-mother reared him. The lad made his way westward to Detroit, and after working there on the lakes some time he walked the entire distance to Chicago, and grubbed in what is now that city. He was of a roving disposition as a boy, and in his wanderings reached Manitowoc, Wis. Working there four months, he went to Green Bay. Then he went afoot to the mining regions of Illinois and Iowa. In the spring he rafted on the Mississippi river as far as St. Louis, and at Prairie du Chien, Wis., he was sick five months with ague. Proceeding to Galena, Ill., he hired out to Robert Bloomer, a lumber operator, and with three others walked thence to Portage county, Wis., where he learned of certain dissatisfaction in the lumber country, and he walked to Green Bay. Next proceeding to Wood county, Wis., in 1839, he worked in the woods until 1850. In 1849 he bought eighty acres in Section 32, of what is now Stockton township, Portage county, buying it as a claim, and securing title for it and an adjoining eighty acres from the government, in 1852.

Mr. Boursier was married, July 26, 1847, at Mill Creek, Wood county, to Miss Mary Young, born July 26, 1827, in Corina, Me., and daughter of Simon and Lois (Knowles) Young, who in 1838 removed from Maine to Illinois. Miss Young, with a brother, was visiting in Mill Creek, and while en route she first met her husband. After marriage he lived in a log house on Mill creek until he removed to his farm in Stockton township, April 18, 1850, at which time there was no building on the farm and but one house on "the prairie." Their first house was a shanty 12 x 16. Mr. Boursier was a strong man physically, and proceeded at once to improve the farm. For forty-five years he has lived here, a longer residence, perhaps, than anyone else in the township can claim. Starting with eighty acres, he now owns 320, well improved. In politics he is a Democrat, and while not a member of the Church, attends the services of Protestant denomination. Socially he is a Mason. He has met with many reverses. Twice he was burned out. When the "Old Horicon" railroad was projected he, with many others, pledged assistance; it cost him $2,000. In 1892 Mr. Boursier retired from active farm work. The winter of 1891-92 he spent with his wife in California. He has been a self-made man in the full sense of the word, and has done Spartan service in developing the material interests of Stockton township. He possesses a rare sense of personal honor, and when his home was burned he felt compelled to decline the generous offers of friends to assist him in rebuilding, preferring to bear the entire cost himself. The children of John and Mary Boursier are as follows: Arvesta, now Mrs. Orleziem DeRosier, of Stockton; Arvilla, now Mrs. Thomas H. Hackett, of Escondido, Cal.; Zoa J., now Mrs. Warren Onan, of Buena Vista township; John, a farmer, subject of this sketch.

John Boursier, Jr. has always lived at home, attending the district schools and assisting his father until the latter's retirement, several years ago, since when he has conducted the farm. He was married, December 25, 1874, at Plover, to Miss Elizabeth Baker, born December 3, 1857, in Tioga county, Penn., daughter of James H. and Eliza (Bartlett) Baker, who in 1863 removed with their family to Wisconsin. Mrs. Boursier has a good education, and before her marriage she taught school. To Mr. and Mrs. Boursier have been born four children—Myra M., a teacher, born in August, 1875, now attending Normal school; Grace E., also a teacher, born in June, 1878, a student at Stevens Point Normal; Clair J., born in April, 1880, and Cecil F., born April 30, 1885, both at home. Mr. Boursier is a Democrat in politics, has Protestant sympathies, and is a member of the Masonic order. He is an enterprising and progressive farmer, popular and influential among his many friends.

PETER McMILLIN, one of the best known citizens of Stockton township, Portage county, and an ex-soldier, is a native of the Green Mountain State. He was born in Alburg, Grand Isle Co., Vt., September 20, 1824, son of Peter and Sarah H. (Sowles) McMillin.

The father of our subject was a farmer and carpenter, comfortably situated in life. He was born in Jersey City, N. J., son of emigrants from Edinburgh, Scotland, and after learning his trade at Jersey City removed to Grand Isle county, Vt., where he married and reared a family of nine children, as follows: Jane, who married Nathan Miles, and died in Vermont; Harriet, who died when a young woman; Maria, who married Isban Kenyon, and died in Hinesburg in 1894; Philyer, who died a farmer in Missouri; William, a railway engineer, who died at Burlington, Vt.; Peter, subject of this sketch; Gustavus, who went to California during the gold fever, and has never since been heard from; Norman, a carpenter, of Denver; Sarah H., now Mrs. Noel Potter, of Bombay, Franklin Co., N. Y. The father was an Old-line Whig, and died in Vermont at the age of sixty-three; the mother died at the age of forty. They were members of the Universalist Church.

Peter McMillin was only eight years old when his mother died. Sisters took her place, and the boy remained at home until he was eighteen. He received a district-school education, much more meager than now, and at his home, by precept and example, learned the value of honesty and straightforwordness. Beginning farm work for others at the age of eighteen, in Essex county, N. Y., he several years later went to Tioga county, and worked for a few months in a sawmill. With a young companion he undertook the venture of getting out some timber, but the failure of high waters in the stream which was to carry the lumber to market made the enterprise unremunerative. In the fall of 1849 he put into execution a cherished plan by coming west. Traveling by lake to Milwaukee, he walked to Oshkosh, took boat for Gill's Landing, on Wolf river, and came afoot through the woods to Plover. Here he found work teaming goods from Madison to Plover for C. S. Ogden, now a merchant of Waupaca. In June, 1850, he pre-empted 160 acres in Section 32, of what is now Stockton township. The land was then undisturbed, and there were only three or four settlers on the prairie. There was little timber on the tract, but burr oak surrounded the site selected by Mr. McMillin for his primitive habitation, a rude shanty, 16 x 16. He at once began to break this land, and in the fall of the same year, November 17, 1850, he was married at Plover to Miranda Dimond, born in Canada October 1, 1820, daughter of Enos and Miranda (Richmond) Dimond, New Englanders by birth. Enos was twice married, and Miranda, his second wife, bore him six children: Fannie, Miranda, Sanford, Royal, Paulina and Clara. Miranda in 1849 came to Plover with her brother Royal, and was employed as a domestic in the same household her husband worked for. The couple began housekeeping at once, in the little shanty on the farm they still occupy. The rude habitation was scantily furnished, but the happiest five years of their married life were spent there. Mr. McMillin improved the place during the summers, and in the winter followed teaming. The present dwelling, with various alterations and additions, succeeded the shanty. To Mr. and Mrs. McMillin were born these children: Emma M., who was born October 1, 1851, and married James Bremmer, of Stevens Point, January 28, 1873; Edith S., born May 18, 1855, married December 25, 1876, to Oscar Drake, of Stevens Point (she passed from earth, May 30, 1895, her death being the first in the family); William P., born May 18, 1856, a farmer of Lincoln county, Wash.; Sidney G., born January 8, 1859, a resident of Oregon; Annie J., born October 4, 1860, married December 12, 1885, to George Iverson, and now living on the home farm; Carrie A., born May 12, 1866, and married January 3, 1888, to Merritt Kenyon, of Stevens Point. For several years, in addition to farming, Mr. McMillin followed lumbering operations extensively during the winter.

In November, 1861, he enlisted, at Plover, in Company E, Eighteenth Wis. V. I. The regiment was ordered from Milwaukee to Tennessee, and at Shiloh saw its first active engagement. Exposure and disease cost more lives during the war than bullets, and Mr. McMillin, though possessing a naturally rugged constitution, was one of those who succumbed to the climatic conditions of the South under the exposures to which troops were necessarily subjected. His health was ruined, and at Corinth, in August, 1862, he was discharged on account of disability. From Corinth he came directly home, and the ailment he contracted in service has never since disappeared. To-day he is almost a physical wreck. Mr. McMillin in a later year of the war was drafted, but at La Crosse, Wis., he was rejected for ill health, before entering active service. He has continued farming operations since the war, but during the past five years has given up active work. Politically he is an earnest Republican in National affairs, but in local matters he is independent. For two years he served Stockton township as assessor. Mrs. McMillin is a member of the Baptist Church. Though deprived of the benefits of good schools in his youth, Mr.

McMillin is as strong an advocate of thorough education as may be found in Stockton township, and by observation and judicious reading he has more than overcome the deficiencies of his own opportunities. He is widely known and highly esteemed as one of Stockton's oldest and best residents.

ALANSON C. NORWAY, who is now living on a small farm of forty acres within the corporation limits of Merrill, Lincoln county, is one of the honored pioneers of that section, having arrived in that place in 1851, when the city was called Jenny, and had not more than one hundred white inhabitants, though there were a great many Indians still living in the neighborhood. Wild game was to be had in abundance, and furnished many a meal for the early settlers.

The State of New York has furnished many worthy citizens to Lincoln county, not least among whom is numbered Mr. Norway, who was born in the town of Lisbon, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., June 11, 1824, and is a son of Charles Norway, a native of New Jersey. The grandfather, who bore the name of Charles, came to this country from Scotland when a young man, locating in New Jersey, where he carried on farming. Later he removed to New York, where both he and his wife died. In their family were six children—five sons: William, John, James, Gregor and Charles, and one daughter whose name is not known.

The father of our subject was reared to manhood on the home farm, after which he married Esther Sheldon, a daughter of Nehemiah and Sarah Sheldon, and to them were born nine children: Alanson C., William and Jeremiah, who are still living; and Jerod, Sheldon, Geddin, Elizabeth, Clarissa and Sarah, who have passed away. William and Geddin were soldiers during the Civil war, fighting Indians in Minnesota in 1862. The father followed agricultural pursuits most of his life, though at an early day he ran a flatboat between Ogdensburg, N. Y., and Montreal. He was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Episcopal Church, and a man of high moral principals, while politically he was an Abolitionist. His death occurred in New York in 1872. His wife, a woman of firm, decided character, died in 1883, greatly beloved by all who knew her.

Alanson C. Norway, the subject of this sketch, was the second in his father's family, and upon the home farm he remained, assisting in the labors of the field until he had attained his majority. He was allowed to attend school only about two months during the year, and his literary education was completed at the age of eighteen. He worked some for others while still in New York, and at one time went with a raft of square lumber to Quebec. In the winter of 1849 Mr. Norway came west, stopping at Saginaw, Mich., where he was employed in the woods until the following spring, when he continued his journey to Walworth county, Wis. In that county he engaged in farm labor during the summer, but in the fall returned to New York, where he remained all winter, and then again came to Wisconsin, spending another summer in Walworth county. At the end of that time, in the fall of 1851, he came to Merrill, locating here when the town had but one industry—an old sawmill owned by Andrew Warren. For one season Mr. Norway worked in the lumber woods, after which he made a contract with Jones & Goodard to cut and put in their logs. From that time on he followed lumbering for a number of years, meeting with a well-deserved success. In 1866, owing to poor health, he gave up that occupation and purchased a hotel, known then as the "Jenny House," but later the name was changed to the "Merrill." This he successfully conducted for sixteen years, when he built his present home on the bank of Prairie river, a beautiful spot, and his place consists of forty acres. For some time he owned an addition to West Merrill, but this he disposed of in 1880.

In Merrill, September 1, 1856, Mr. Norway wedded Martha Crown, a native of Groton, Caledonia Co., Vt., born September 13, 1838, to Alanson and Anity (Stebbins) Crown. She is one of a family of ten children: Harriet, Maria, Moses, Martha, Horace, Hannah, Cynthia, Aldin, Orin and

A. C. Norway

Frank. The parents were both born in Caledonia county, Vt., and removed to Wisconsin with their family in 1848, locating in Green Lake county, where the father's death occurred in 1886. He was a farmer by occupation. The mother, who died in 1880, was a daughter of Horace Stebbins, a blacksmith, of Vermont, in which State he married Hannah Eaton, and to them were born a family of four sons and four daughters. The paternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Norway was a native of Scotland, and came when a small boy with his parents to America, locating in Vermont. Crown Point, that State, was named in honor of his father. Ebins Crown, Mrs. Norway's grandfather was captured by the Indians when a boy about nine years of age, and held by them until he was sixteen, when he was assisted to escape by a young squaw, who never dared to return to her tribe. He was afterward employed at Crown Point as an interpreter by the traders. Alanson Crown and his wife were earnest Christian people, holding membership for many years with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

To Mr. and Mrs. Norway were born six children, only two of whom survive—the eldest and youngest—Charles A. and Myron. Those deceased are: Homer, who died while young; Clarissa, who died at the age of one year; Elnora, who died at the age of three; and Burton, who died in infancy. In politics, Mr. Norway is a steadfast adherent to the principles formulated by the Republican party, although not a seeker after official positions. For six years he served as county judge of Lincoln county; has been chairman of the town and city boards; and was also assessor, in which offices he has served with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all concerned. In religious views he is liberal, believing that every one has a right to his own opinion, and being endowed with many virtues and a genial, hospitable manner, he receives the respect and confidence of the entire community.

CHARLES A. NORWAY, a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of Lincoln county, Wis., is at present one of the leading business men of Merrill, being connected with several of the most important industries of the county. He is a native of this State, his birth having occurred in Wausau September 29, 1859, and is a son of Alanson C. Norway, one of the highly-respected early settlers of this portion of the State.

The primary education of Charles A. Norway was received in the common schools of Merrill, where he also attended the high school, and later entered the normal school at Oshkosh, Wis. At the age of seventeen he began work in the hotel owned by his father, and was admitted into partnership in the business when he was but twenty years of age. That connection continued for three years, after which he began contracting and building, following that occupation for about a year. In 1882 he was elected register of deeds of Lincoln county, serving four years, during which time he opened a real-estate office and purchased the abstracts of the county. He admitted to partnership C. L. Wiley, and they remained in that business until the spring of 1890, when they sold out and erected a saw-mill in the town of Harshaw, Wis., which they still own. They cut about fifteen million feet of lumber per year, and are doing a good business, in connection with which they have a general store at the same place. In 1893 their mill was burned, but they rebuilt without delay, and immediately resumed work. Mr. Norway is also interested in a drug store in Merrill, and in 1894, in company with J. R. Babcock, he built and established a factory for the manufacture of boxes, the firm being known as the C. A. Norway Box and Lumber Company. Here he is also meeting with success, giving employment to fifty men.

In 1881 Mr. Norway was united in marriage with Frances Kimball, who was born at Stevens Point, Wis., and is a daughter of Bryant B. Kimball. Unto our subject and his estimable wife has been born one child, a son, Jerry A. In politics, Mr. Norway is a Republican, and is in favor of any movement that is for the benefit of the community, or calculated to elevate the tone of society in general. He served for one year as alderman of the city. He is also interested in civic societies, holding membership with the I. O. O. F., and of the F. and A. M. (being a Knight Templar) of Wausau. He is an industrious, energetic business man, and everything he undertakes he carries forward to completion if it lies within his power.

HON. GILBERT L. PARK, deceased. The family from which this gentleman descended were of English origin, and early settlers in America during Colonial days. Joel Park, grandfather of Gilbert L., was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, and was present at the surrender of Gen. Burgoyne's army.

The subject of these lines was born August 31, 1825, at Scipio, Cayuga Co., N. Y., a son of Elisha and Sarah (McDowell) Park, prosperous and highly-esteemed farming people of that State. The lad received a liberal education at the schools of his native place till the age of fifteen, when, without in anyway consulting his parents, he left the parental roof—in other words “ran away from home”—and enlisted in the service of the Hudson Bay Company. With a party of their employes he went up the Ottawa river, in Canada, in the direction of Hudson Bay, and as far north as Fort Churchill on the river Severn. Returning, however, southward at the end of a year, by way of the Georgian Bay, he there left the company and took passage on a steamer for Detroit, thence proceeded to Port Dover, county of Norfolk, Upper Canada (now Province of Ontario), where his father's family had recently settled. The next three years Mr. Park spent at an academy in Millville, Orleans Co., N. Y., then once more proceeded to Canada, where he embarked in business as a lumberman, meeting with encouraging success for some two years, or till in 1848, when he had the misfortune to lose a large raft of logs which had broken up on Lake Erie, nearly every “stick” floating over the Falls of Niagara. This caused him to close out his business, and he then commenced the study of law at Kalamazoo, Mich., in the office of Hon. N. A. Balch of that place. He was admitted to the bar of that county, in September, 1851, and in November, same year, he removed to Wisconsin, where, his funds being exhausted, he went to work cutting saw logs on the Wisconsin river, at which he continued until the summer of 1852, when he formed a law partnership with James S. Alban, at Plover, at that time the county seat of Portage county, which firm conducted business until 1855, when it was dissolved. Mr. Park then removed to Stevens Point, where he opened up an office and established a law practice, which continued up to the time of his death. He distinguished himself as one of the ablest members of his profession in northern Wisconsin, and his energy and vigor, both of mind and body, his command of speech and pen, inspired the people with such full confidence in his ability and integrity that they early honored him with election to local positions of responsibility and trust. None, perhaps, ever exercised more influence on the people, or more impressed them with his own merits, than Mr. Park. In 1854 he was elected district attorney of Portage county, in which incumbency he served four years; was mayor of Stevens Point at the time of the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, and being a “War-Democrat” he resigned the office in order to take up the sword in defense of the integrity of the Union, as adjutant of the Eighteenth Regiment Wis. V. I., afterward accepting the captaincy of Company G, same regiment. He accompanied his regiment in all its fortunes for a period of nearly three and one-half years, during which he participated, among other engagements, in the famous battle of Look-out Mountain, where they “fought above the clouds,” also at Vicksburg, and Corinth, and with Sherman on his march to Atlanta. Although never wounded, he experienced several narrow escapes, at one time his horse being shot under him, at another a bullet striking his scabbard (while the sword was sheathed), a portion of the sword blade being broken off. On retiring from his service in the army, Judge Park, in the spring of 1865, returned to Stevens Point, Wis., and resumed the practice of his profession, at the same time applying himself to the study of advanced legal lore so assiduously that before very long he became both a jury and consulting lawyer of no little reputation, probably, if anything, excelling in the latter capacity. He died June 5, 1884, of Bright's disease, and was buried under the auspices of the Masonic Fraternity. He had been in ill health for some time, and had traveled considerably in California in the hope of bettering his physical condition; but he returned home in 1883, little improved, and in January, 1884, became a patient in the Sanitarium at Waukesha, Wis., where he succumbed to the disease which had so long and painfully afflicted him.

Judge Gilbert L. Park, as has already been remarked in this article, was a "War-Democrat," but in earlier days he voted with the old Whig party. On March 1, 1875, he was appointed, by Gov. Taylor, circuit judge, to fill a two-years' vacancy, and in April following was elected by the people. In 1878 he was re-elected for the full term, but owing to ill health he was obliged to resign in July, 1883, before the expiry of the term. As a jurist he was cool, clear-headed, candid and logical; he presided with ease and dignity, and with the utmost fairness and impartiality. As an evidence of his popularity it may be mentioned that while serving in the army he was nominated (without his knowledge or consent), and run by his party, for State Senator on two or three occasions; he was also urged to bring himself forward as candidate for the lieutenant-governorship of Wisconsin, and also for member of Congress.

On February 26, 1856, he was married to Miss Mary D. Beach, daughter of John and Anna (Waterhouse) Beach, and three children were born to this union, to wit: Byron B., sketch of whom follows; Gilbert L. (practicing law in Stevens Point), and Anna, both living at the old homestead in Stevens Point. The mother of these died November 9, 1893, and she and her husband lie side by side in the cemetery of the Church of the Intercession (Episcopal) at Stevens Point. Mrs. Park was, however, associated with the Methodist Church. The Judge was a prominent member of the F. & A. M., had reached the thirty-second degree, and was a Knight Templar. He was an ardent student and lover of Nature and Nature's God, and, as described by one who knew him well, was a man who saw something beautiful in every phase and form of life; one who was the delight of every social group—young or old; one whose smile would lighten a household, whose frown would cause a pang; the quiet ease, the social converse, the varied learning—all were his, and no one ever sat in his company without feeling disquieted at his departure; he was never boisterous, never rude, and always mindful of the feelings of others. In domestic life he was a lovable character, a kind husband, and loving father, and true friend to his children.

D LLOYD JONES. This leading member of the bar, one of the experienced and reliable attorneys of Portage county, is conspicuous not only as such, but as one of the best-known and widely-respected citizens in this portion of the State.

He is a native of North Wales, born October 9, 1841, in the parish of Llanfair, Denbighshire, a son of Edward and Anna Maria (Lloyd) Jones, well-to-do farming people of North Wales, who lived at Graig Cottage. The father died at Graig Cottage in 1856, the mother at Rock Cliffe, North Wales, in 1881, and both their remains repose in the cemetery of Llanfair's Parish Church. They were members of the Episcopal and Congregational Churches, respectively.

Our subject received his education in part at the British and Foreign School at Ruthin, Denbighshire, North Wales, and in part at a Church school in Wrexham, Flintshire, after which, February 18, 1856, he entered the North and South Wales Bank as junior clerk, in which capacity he served in that institution two years, at Liverpool, Chester and Wrexham. On May 15, 1858, he emigrated to America, sailing from Liverpool on the "Jeremiah Quin," of the Black Ball Line, and arriving in New York in June. After remaining there a couple of weeks endeavoring to secure a position in one or other of the banking institutions of that city, he came to Wisconsin, for a brief space sojourning in Milwaukee; but he soon found employment on a farm near Waukesha. At the end of a month he moved to near Oshkosh, to the home of his uncle, George Griffiths, where and in the vicinity he remained until the spring of 1860. He then proceeded to Lake Emily, near Fox Lake, and worked on a farm until his enlistment at Beaver Dam, Dodge county, in Company C, Sixteenth Wis. V. I., in December, 1861, with which regiment he participated in the battles of Shiloh and Corinth, siege of Vicksburg and Atlanta, and many minor engagements, and Sherman's march to the sea, during which latter, toward the close of the march, he had charge of the foragers for his brigade. In October, 1862, after the battle of Corinth, he was promoted to first sergeant; in July, 1864, after the battle of Atlanta, was promoted to second lieutenant; in December, 1864, was appointed adjutant of the regiment, and July 12, 1865, was mustered out of the service with the latter rank. On July 21, 1864, while making a charge on the works at Leggett's Hill, before Atlanta, he received a bullet wound in the back part of the neck, rendering him unconscious, so that he had to be carried from the field. It was a very narrow escape for him from death, as had the bullet struck him a little higher or a little lower the result would have been instant death. After leaving the army he returned to the peaceful pursuits of agriculture, and so continued till January, 1866, when he was appointed, by State Treasurer W. E. Smith, clerk in the treasurer's office at Madison, in which capacity he remained until October, 1871. In the meantime he took up the study of law, in September, 1870, entering the University Law School at Madison, where he graduated in June, 1871, at the same time being admitted to the bar of the supreme court. In October, 1871, he came to Stevens Point, where he commenced the practice of his profession, in partnership with G. L. Park, under the firm name of Park & Jones. In 1875 Mr. Park was elected circuit judge, and the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Jones then conducting the business alone until August, 1876, at which time he associated himself with A. W. Sanborn, the firm being known as Jones & Sanborn till March, 1886, when Judge Cate was admitted into partnership, the style of the firm becoming Cate, Jones & Sanborn, and has since so remained, Mr. Jones having charge of all the supreme court work of the firm, and giving his special attention to corporation, real-estate and commercial law business.

On May 1, 1867, Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Miss Addie Purple, daughter of Chauncey H. Purple, at that time assistant State treasurer. Two children have been born to this union, viz.: Grace Purple, married to George S. Rodd, and Chauncey Lloyd, now a student of law. Politically our subject is a Republican, and for five years he represented his ward in the council as alderman, part of the time filling the president's chair. In 1872 he was appointed United States commissioner for the Western District of Wisconsin, which office he yet fills. In religious faith he and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church, of which he is one of the vestrymen. Socially, since 1870 he has been a member of the F. & A. M., was in Madison Lodge No. 5, and is now a member of Evergreen Lodge No. 93, of Stevens Point; has passed all the minor degrees up to and including that of Knight Templar, is member of the Wisconsin Consistory, Scottish Rite, Milwaukee, and is a member of Crusade Commandery No. 17, Stevens Point. In 1891 he was elected grand commander, Knights Templar of the State of Wisconsin, serving as such one year; was commander of Crusade Commandery six years, high priest of the Chapter four years, and at the present time is master of the lodge at Stevens Point. By virtue of his honorable service in the Union army during the Civil war, he is a member of the G. A. R., Stevens Post No. 156, of which he has been commander, and has served in the Council of Administration of the Department of Wisconsin; also was judge advocate on the staff of Col. Upham while the latter was department commander.

L EVI MONTGOMERY GREGORY, M. D. Among the eminent physicians and surgeons of Portage county, the more prominent of whom find place in this volume, none enjoys to a greater extent the confidence and esteem of the community at large than the gentleman whose name is here recorded.

Our subject is an Ohioan by birth, having first seen the light at Harpersfield, Ashtabula county, August 17, 1827, a son of Ezra and Eve (Brakeman) Gregory, natives of Schoharie county, N. Y., the former of Scottish ancestry, the latter of German. The father, who was a farmer by occupation, came with his family to Walworth county, Wis., in 1846, afterward moving to Sauk county, where he died at his home in Winfield township. He was a Whig of the old school, and at one time served as sheriff of Ashtabula county, Ohio; also as justice of the peace, and in other positions of honor and trust, after coming to Wisconsin, invariably winning and retaining the confidence and esteem of those with whom he was associated. Courteous, genial and kind-hearted, he was universally liked, and was extremely popular. In Sauk county he filled various offices, such as justice of the peace, supervisor, etc., and so valuable were his services that he was almost continually called upon to serve the community in which he lived in an official capacity of some kind or another.

The subject proper of these lines received his education at the public schools of Ohio, and at the age of fourteen commenced reading medicine in the office of Dr. Jerome Gregory, of Harpersfield, Ohio, with whom he remained till coming to Wisconsin with the rest of his father's family in 1846. Here he resumed his medical studies in the office of his brother, H. N. Gregory, at Fort Atkinson, Jefferson county, and then attended the Indiana Medical College at Laporte, Ind., two sessions, and keeping up his studies closely ultimately graduated from Cleveland Medical College, at Cleveland, Ohio. In 1850 he located in Plover, Portage Co., Wis., and at once commenced the practice of his profession, being the only physician in the place at that time, and here remained until the spring of 1887, the time of his removal to Stevens Point, since when he has been in active practice as physician and surgeon in that prosperous and progressive city.

On February 22, 1852, Dr. Gregory was united in marriage with Miss Olive S. Babcock, and they have two children, namely: Frances R., born July 27, 1855, and Will W., born September 16, 1870, living at home with his parents. Politically the Doctor is a staunch Republican, and for four years, under the administration of Garfield and Arthur, he served as pension examiner. His full time has been given to his profession, to which he is devoted, and as he is a busy man at all times, he finds leisure time for little else. A prominent member of the F. & A. M., he has been a Knight Templar for the past nine years, and he is highly respected and esteemed by the community.

T HOMAS LOVE is proprietor of the "Love Hotel," Grand Rapids, and probably no resident of Wood county is better or more favorably known than he. Mr. Love is universally esteemed by those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance, and no better evidence of his worth can be given to the public than a record of his personal history in this volume.

Our subject was born in Canada, about twenty miles west of Quebec, July 24, 1838, and is a son of Patrick and Isabella (Beatie) Love (natives of Ireland), both now deceased. The father was a farmer by occupation, but taught school for thirty-five years in one district in Canada. The family comprised twelve children, of whom nine are still living, namely: Mary, who resides in Milwaukee, Wis.; Patrick, a resident of Rochester, N. Y.; Catherine, wife of James Mehan, who makes his home in Milwaukee; Elizabeth, who also lives in Rochester, N. Y.; William and Thomas, both of Grand Rapids, Wis.; Eugene, residing in Rochester, N. Y.; James, of the same city; and Alexander, who lives at Stevens Point, Wis. The father died March 10, 1876.

The subject of this sketch was reared and educated in Canada, and after leaving school engaged in agricultural pursuits until he was twenty-five years of age, when on the 5th of February, 1864, he left home for Rochester, N. Y. In Orleans county, that State, he went to work for H. H. Benedict, and continued in his employ until November of the same year. On November 12, 1864, he removed to Grand Rapids, Wis., where he has since made his home. The trip from New Lisbon, N. Y., to Grand Rapids, was made by stage and occupied three days. During the first winter after his arrival Mr. Love worked in the lumber woods for James Mehan; the following year he engaged with John Rablin at carpentering and building, and was also employed in a mill. He continued in that employ until 1873, when he started his present business, that of hotel-keeping.

On June 4, 1860, Mr. Love wedded Matilda Reinhart, who was born December 15, 1842, daughter of Jonathan and Lucinda (McWilliams) Reinhart, who had a family of five children: Mary M., born November 17, 1841; Matilda (Mrs. Love); J. G., born October 15, 1844; M. L., born January 1, 1850; and Jonathan, born April 12, 1852. Mr. Love's brothers were born as follows: William, born July 19, 1836; Eugene, August 6, 1840; Stephen, December 7, 1843; James, October 6, 1845; and Alexander, October 8, 1849. The mother of these died October 12, 1863. The children who bless the union of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Love are John Graves, born June 2, 1861, who is foreign or commercial agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company, with residence at Centralia, Wis.; Peter, born March 24, 1863, an engineer on the Green Bay, Winona & St. Paul railroad, his home being in Grand Rapids; Mary M., born April 20, 1865, died November 4, 1868; William E., born April 26, 1867, a train dispatcher on the Wisconsin Central railroad; Arthur T., born October 8, 1871, cashier in the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad office at Centralia, Wis.; Lavin M., born April 18, 1874, died October 5, 1874; Alexander Raymond, born October 21, 1875, has just graduated with honors from the schools of Grand Rapids; James Irving, born December 18, 1877; Francis Roger L., born September 2, 1879; Paul Carl, born September 28, 1881; and Matilda M., born January 17, 1886, died September 28, 1888.

Mr. Love and his family are devout members of the Roman Catholic Church; in his political views he is a Democrat, and staunchly supports the principles of that party. In everything pertaining to the welfare of Grand Rapids he takes an active part, and is numbered among her honored and respected citizens.

THOMAS CHRISTY, a leading blacksmith and wagonmaker of Merrill, Lincoln county, is conducting a successful and well-established business, one that occupies a prominent place among the various industries of that thriving city. He is a man of high standing in the community, as he conducts his business on strictly honest principles, and is looked upon as a useful and honorable citizen.

The birth of Mr. Christy occurred in New Brunswick, Canada, August 13, 1835, and he is a son of John Christy, who was born in the same province in 1801. The grandfather, Jesse Christy, was born in New Hampshire August 1, 1755, and went to Canada in 1762 with the first colony that settled along the St. John river. He was there married in 1781 to Easter Burpee, a native of the same place in New Hampshire, born May 3, 1759, also a member of the colony. They became the parents of thirteen children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Agnes, January 12, 1782, died 1828; James, February 2, 1783; Thomas, June 12, 1784, died 1853; Mary, June 14, 1786, died 1835; Jesse, September 25, 1787, died 1789; Jesse, June 16, 1789; Hepzibah, May 3, 1791; Elizabeth, March 1, 1793; Peter, February 15, 1795; Joshua, September 28, 1797; Jeremiah, June 16, 1799; John (the father of our subject), September 5, 1801, died September 5, 1872; George, January 3, 1803. Jesse Christy and his wife were highly-respected people, honored and esteemed. They both died in Canada, at a ripe old age, where he

for many years had carried on agricultural pursuits.

John Christy, father of our subject, was a millwright by trade, which occupation he followed some fifty years. He was twice married—first time August 2, 1828, to Permelia Quint, who was born in September, 1809, in the State of Maine, daughter of William and Susan (Payne) Quint, both also natives of Maine (the former born November 20, 1785; they were married in 1808), where the father was a sailor during the earlier years of his life. They removed to New Brunswick in 1723, where Mr. Quint was engaged in lumbering, and Mrs. Quint died. They were the parents of ten children, to wit: Permelia, born September 1, 1809, married in 1828, died in 1836; Johannes, born March 28, 1811, died 1812; Diana, born February 5, 1813, married 1833, died 1892. Eliza, born August 18, 1816, married 1834, died 1842; William Payne, born December 1, 1818, married 1846; Amsom Parker, born May 11, 1824, married 1855; Susan Payne, born July 26, 1826, married 1846, died 1861; Jane Allingham, born May 13, 1829, married 1853; Elizabeth E., born October 13, 1832, died 1842; Henry D., born August 25, 1835, married 1866. The father of these died in 1843, the mother in 1865. Samuel Payne, maternal grandfather of Mrs. Permelia Christy, was a Revolutionary soldier. To John and Permelia Christy were born children as follows: Mary Ann, May 11, 1829; John P., December 1, 1830; Diana, February 21, 1833; and Thomas, August 13, 1835. The mother of these died May 27, 1836, and in 1845 Mr. Christy, for his second wife, married Miss Jane B. Perley, who was born December 4, 1808, daughter of Thomas Perley; she died September 21, 1871.

Thomas Christy, whose name introduces this record, received his education in the common schools of his native country, and remained at home until he had attained his twenty-fifth year, working with his father at the millwright's trade. He then started out in life for himself, following lumbering and milling for some six years. At the end of that time he began blacksmithing in New Brunswick, and was thus employed ten years, when he sold out and purchased a saw and grist mill, operating the same some five years. In September, 1881, he came to Wisconsin, locating at Wausau, where he worked at his trade for others about four years. He then removed to Scofield, Wis., remaining there about a year, when he came to Merrill and built his present blacksmith shop, which he has since conducted. He has in his employ five workmen, and the work he turns out is all of a first-class description. During his residence in this State Mr. Christy has also superintended the construction of many dams in Michigan, Montana, Iowa and Wisconsin. He has had a great amount of experience in his line of work, for when at home he often aided his father who was an expert in that line of business.

On September 3, 1868, in Canada, Mr. Christy was united in marriage with Miss Helen White, who was born in that country June 23, 1851, a daughter of Peter and Esther (Wiggins) White, who were the parents of ten children, named respectively: Ebenezer H., Elizabeth A., Henry K., Helen, Esther R., Amelia M., Neville V., Rebecca A., Carrie E. and Eva E. The father was a carpenter and millwright by trade, and he died in New Brunswick May 2, 1867, his wife in the spring of 1894, in Duluth, Minn. His grandparents, who were Loyalists, removed to Canada from the United States at the time of the Revolution. To our subject and wife have come two sons—John K., born September 26, 1869, and Wesley H., born June 8, 1871, both connected in business with their father.

The cause of temperance has always received the earnest support of Mr. Christy, and he now stanchly advocates the principles of the Prohibition party, with which he casts his ballot, though he is no politician; he is now serving as alderman of the Fourth ward of Merrill. With the Presbyterian Church he holds membership, and is at present one of its elders; socially, he is a member of the F. & A. M. In business he has won a well-merited success, and in connection with his sons not only does general blacksmithing and repairing, but also deals in wagons, cutters, sleighs, etc. They conduct a lucrative trade, and rank among the best firms of the city.

MICHAEL RUPLINGER, an extensive manufacturer and general merchant at Hewitt, Wood county, has grown by slow degrees to his present active and influential life from a start as modest as ever fell to the lot of a poor boy. He commenced with no capital, and directing his attention to an industry that permitted the use of an abundance of hard work and energy, he has gradually broadened his sphere of action. An uninterrupted continuance of this course has brought him wealth and prosperity.

Mr. Ruplinger was born in Polk township, Washington Co., Wis., July 22, 1850, son of Nicholas and Magdalena (Wahlen) Ruplinger, who in 1846 emigrated from Prussia, their native land, and settled on a farm in Washington county, Wis., where he remained through life. Of their six children—Mathias, John, Joseph, Michael, Mary and Margaret—two were born in Germany, one on the ocean and three in Wisconsin. Michael was reared on his father's farm, and attended the district schools in that neighborhood. At the age of sixteen he began life for himself, for three years worked out on a farm, then at the age of nineteen entered upon business operations of his own. In partnership with Henry Knapp he began, in the town of West Bend, the manufacture of staves with horse-power. For eight years they followed this work successfully, when Mr. Ruplinger, believing that steam-power would prove profitable, risked the construction of a steam plant at the city of West Bend; his judgment proved correct; but in 1879 he met with misfortune in the shape of a fire that destroyed the factory, by which he lost everything, less about $500. However, he rebuilt, and continued to operate the plant successfully until 1885. The northern part of the State seeming to offer greater opportunities in the way of material, Mr. Ruplinger in that year decided to locate in Wood county. In company with two others he built a large stave and heading factory at Hewitt. Wise management made the venture a success, and in 1887 a saw-mill was added. In the same year they started a general store, the partners being his brother John R., and Baltus Christmann. In 1889 Mr. Ruplinger, in company with Mr. Uthmeir, opened a general store at Marshfield. In 1883, in company with his brother John, he still further extended his business interests to a stave factory and lumber yard at Allenton, Washington county, some twenty men being employed, John Ruplinger looking after the lumber yard at Allenton; he was a soldier during the war of the Rebellion, serving in the First Wis. V. C. In 1891 Mr. Ruplinger, in company with his brother John R., Baltus Christmann and William Uthmeir, started a steam and heating foundry at Loyal, Clark Co., Wis., and also a general store. In 1892 he bought out the company, and purchased 1,500 acres of timber land in order to supply their mill for future years. The general store in Marshfield, which is one of the finest in the county, carries a stock valued at $8,000, and handles all kinds of farm produce. Mr. Ruplinger also deals to some extent in land, timber, etc. He has been a heavy loser, not only by fire, but also through endorsing for others, losing within a couple of years as much as $9,000, by signing for the accommodation of others.

In 1872 Mr. Ruplinger was married, in Milwaukee, to Miss Mary Ritger, a native of New York. Her parents, Philip and Katherine (Wolf) Ritger, emigrated from Bavaria, Germany, to America, in 1848, and, after residing for some time in New York State, moved to Washington county, Wis., where they died. Their children were John, Philip, Jacob, Peter, August, Frank, Mary and Paulina. To Mr. and Mrs. Ruplinger ten children have been born, as follows: Philip M., Anna K., Peter L., Edward, Joseph and Richard B., all living at home, and John, Mary, Rosa, and an infant, all four deceased. Philip M. is clerking in the store at Marshfield. In politics Mr. Ruplinger is a Democrat. Against his wishes he was nominated on his party's ticket for member of the State Legislature in 1894, for his private affairs do not permit the devotion of his time to politics. He takes a lively interest in school matters, and for six years was school treasurer at Hewitt. In religious affiliation he is a member of the Catholic Church. Mr. Ruplinger is distinctively a self-made man. He owns a fine home, and his large business interests and sterling character have given him an influential standing in Wood county. He is "one of the people," for, whatever may be his position in life, he is thoroughly permeated with the essence of the Democratic principles upon which the American form of government is based.

JOHAN P. CHRISTY, though a recent arrival in Merrill, Lincoln county, has already won the respect and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. He is a brother of Thomas Christy, the well-known blacksmith and wagon maker of Merrill, in whose sketch a full record of the family is given.

The subject of these lines was born in New Brunswick, Canada, December 1, 1830, and in that country during his boyhood and youth was educated, attending the common schools of the neighborhood of his home. He was there reared, and with his father learned the trade of a millwright, remaining with him until the latter's death, in 1872. Since then he has made that occupation his life work, and is recognized as a thorough expert. He remained in his native country until 1892, when, accompanied by his family, he came to Wisconsin, locating in Merrill, which he now makes his home.

In New Brunswick Mr. Christy was married, in 1869, to Miss Frances Mitchell, a native of that country, and a daughter of William and Anna (Doby) Mitchell, who had a family of eight children, John, James, William, George, Alexander, Janet, Mary Ann and Frances. Both the parents were natives of Scotland, and were married in Canada, where the father engaged in farming. To Mr. and Mrs. Christy have been born two sons, both of whom are at home—Alexander, who is working in the mills at Merrill (he holds membership with the

I. O. O. F.); and William, who is still attending school. The father belongs to no secret society; in religious faith he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a consistent Christian gentleman. He bears a high character for sterling integrity, and his honesty is unquestioned.

EDWARD D. GLENNON, editor and proprietor of The Gazette of Stevens Point, Portage county, is a native of that city, having been born there September 3, 1857, when it was a village of but a few hundred inhabitants.

Until about the age of fourteen years he attended the public schools of his native place, after which he became an apprentice in the Journal office, remaining there until 1877. He then established a job-printing establishment and confectionery store; later, on July 17, 1878, in company with H. W. Lee and W. C. Krembs, started the Portage County Gazette. The newspaper firm was known as Glennon, Krembs & Co., for some eighteen months, at the end of which time it was changed to Glennon & Cooper, Clay C. Cooper having bought out the interests of the other partners. In May, 1883, Mr. Glennon became sole proprietor, and has since so continued to the present time. The Gazette is an active local publication, enjoying a circulation extending throughout the county and neighboring cities and towns.

On March 31, 1880, Mr. Glennon was married to Miss Annie M. Krembs, eldest daughter of Charles Krembs (now deceased) who during his life time was a leading hardware merchant of Stevens Point. To this union have been born six children: Marguerite, Edward, Carl, George, Katherine and Grace, the eldest being now (September, 1895) fourteen years old, and the youngest an infant of seven months. Mr. Glennon in politics is a Democrat, has been a member of the board of education for ten years, and president of the local branch, C. K. of W., nine years. His father, who was born in Ireland, coming to this country when a boy, is living at Stevens Point in the enjoyment of good health at the age of sixty-eight years.

JAMES O. RAYMOND, one of the oldest established attorneys at law of Stevens Point, Portage county, has long held, in the opinion of those competent to judge, an enviable place in the front rank of the array of legal talent which constitutes the bar of this State.

Mr. Raymond is a native of New York State, born May 30, 1831, in McDonough, Chenango county, a son of Edward and Maria (Osborn) Raymond, who were of English and Irish extraction respectively, the former a native of Athol, Worcester Co., Mass., the latter of Washington county, N. Y. Our subject received his education at the public schools of Chenango and Tioga (N. Y.) counties, at Newark Valley (N. Y.) High School, and at the academy at Owego, Tioga county, after which he taught school some four terms. When twenty-two years old, in 1853, he commenced the study of law in the office of John M. Parker, of Owego, N. Y., remaining under his preceptorship two years, or until 1855, when he came west to Wisconsin, and in Fond du Lac continued his law studies in the office of Edward & Bragg. In the fall of the same year he moved to Plover, Portage county, where he taught school one term. On May 26, 1856, he was admitted to the bar at Plover, and at once commenced the practice of his chosen profession. On February 20, 1866, he was admitted to the Wisconsin Supreme Court, and on June 5, 1873, to the United States Circuit and District Courts. In July, 1873, he moved to Stevens Point, where he has since resided. At first, and for some years, Mr. Raymond conducted a general practice, being employed on many important cases; but for the past five years he has restricted himself more exclusively to acting as counsel, appearing only occasionally in court to argue cases, generally in the supreme court. The cases he argued in that court numbered over one hundred, and altogether it may be said that he has been identified with and interested in more important cases than, probably, any other attorney in this section of the State. In 1856 he was elected, on the Republican ticket, district attorney of Portage county, re-elected in 1858, and again in 1866, and he was a member of the board of supervisors of Plover for some years. In 1865 he was elected to the Assembly, and in 1881 he was appointed postmaster at Stevens Point, serving four years. During the Civil war, February 1, 1865, he enlisted in Company C, Fifty-second Wis. V. I., at its formation, and on the organization of the company he was appointed first sergeant. He saw service at St. Louis and Pilot Knob, Mo., also at Ft. Leavenworth, Kans., and at the expiration of his service was brevetted second lieutenant.

On October 25, 1857, Mr. Raymond was united in marriage with Miss Mary Eliza Harris, of Canton, Ohio, and three children were born to them, only one of whom grew to maturity—Mitchell Harris Raymond, now cashier of the Merchants State Bank, of Rhineland, Wis. The wife and mother died in October, 1864, and April 15, 1867, our subject was married to Mrs. Lucinda Hanchett, widow of Hon. Luther Hanchett, a former partner of Mr. Raymond, and who died while a member of Congress. Socially Mr. Raymond has been a member of the F. & A. M. since September, 1856, is a Royal Arch Mason, belongs to the Chapter, and is a Knight Templar; while a resident of Plover he served as Master of Blue Lodge No. 76, and after coming to Stevens Point was master for a time of Evergreen Lodge, of that city. He is also a member of the G. A. R., Stevens Point Post No. 56, was its first commander, and held that position some three years. He is one of the most popular men of Portage county, is possessed of marked ability, and has acquired a reputation for business tact and fairness greatly to his credit.

JOHAN OELHAFEN, a prominent and influential citizen of Tomahawk, Lincoln county, is a native of Bavaria, Germany, born January 22, 1836, a son of Andrew Oelhafen.

The father of our subject was born in Bavaria, Germany, June 15, 1806, and was a man of rank and owner of a large estate. He came to America in 1845, landing in Milwaukee, and purchased a quarter section of government land in Washington county, Wis., which he cleared and cultivated, living there until 1863. He then removed to Milwaukee, residing there until his death, in 1875. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth Beck, daughter of a well-to-do farmer, and one of a large family. Their children were: John, Jacob, Maria E., Margaret E., Fritz, Frederick, Elizabeth, Ludwick and Marguerite.

John Oelhafen, the subject proper of this sketch, came to America with his parents when eight years of age, and his childhood days were spent on the farm, his primary education being received in the village schools. He remained on the farm, assisting his father until he reached his majority, although at the age of seventeen he commenced working in the pineries, giving his earnings to his father to help in the support of the family. In September, 1861, he was united in marriage with Anna S. Miller, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Krouse) Miller, the former of whom was an extensive landowner in Germany. Anna S. came to America, alone, at the age of seventeen. To this union were born six children, viz.: Anna E., born October 3, 1862, now the wife of August Zastrow, living in Tomahawk; Andrew, born February 29, 1864, married, and is clerk in his father's store; John W., born May 11, 1866, married, and also a clerk in his father's store; Mary E., born June 28, 1868, now the wife of George Pfeiffer, of Wausau, Wis.; William, born April 2, 1872, and Anna L., born November 19, 1878. After their marriage Mr. Oelhafen and his wife removed to a farm in Washington county, where they remained for about two years. Mr. Oelhafen then sold his interest in the farm and removed to Milwaukee, where he opened a general store, remaining there some ten years. In 1872 he removed to Wausau, at which place he opened a general store, and also engaged in the lumbering business, both in Wausau and in Millbank, S. Dak., where he still has large interests in farm lands and city property. In July, 1887, he erected the first building in Tomahawk, Lincoln county, before the days of railroads in that section of the country. At Tomahawk he again opened a general store, which he still carries on, being assisted by his three sons.

Mr. Oelhafen has invested heavily, but profitably, in pine and farm lands all through the northern part of the State. He owns a very handsome residence in Wausau, and has always been an enterprising and influential citizen. He at one time filled the office of vice-president of the first bank of Tomahawk, now Bradley's private bank. The family are all leading members of the Lutheran Church. In politics Mr. Oelhafen is a Republican, and although often urged by his friends would never accept any office. He is a man of considerable means, which he has acquired by a life of industry.

DENNIS LAUGHLIN, one of the most prosperous farmers of Stockton township, Portage county, is the son of an old pioneer, and though still a young man, has lived to witness the marvelous changes that have occurred in the Upper Wisconsin Valley during the past forty years. He was born in Toronto, Upper Canada, August 9, 1853, son of Patrick and Margaret (Cullon) Laughlin, natives of County Wicklow, Ireland, where Patrick was born, in 1815, the son of Dennis Laughlin, a stock farmer of some means, and where Margaret was born, January 10, 1826, daughter of Thomas Cullon.

Soon after their marriage Patrick and Margaret Laughlin crossed the Atlantic in a sailing vessel, starting from New Ross and landing at New York City in June, 1847, after a seven-weeks' voyage. At Utica, N. Y., they secured employment as attendants in the insane asylum. They moved to Canada early in the year 1853, where Mr. Laughlin entered the grocery business, but within a year he returned to the United States, coming in the fall of 1853 to Wisconsin. They reached Stevens Point November 2, 1853. It was election day, and the site of the present "Curran Hotel" was on the outskirts of the village. Election excitement was high that day, for between the hotel site and the Wisconsin river fourteen fist fights were in progress at one time. The journey was made from Milwaukee by team.

Mr. Laughlin bought two lots at Stevens Point, which the family still owns. He also purchased from the government 120 acres in Section 28 of what is now Stockton township. During the winter of 1853-54 the family lived at Stevens Point; but in the following spring removed to the farm, where they lived in a shanty 16x20 feet, which Mr. Laughlin had built, the first habitation on the farm. The father at once began to improve the place, and he lived here until his death, May 8, 1885, after a brief illness. He was the owner of 360 acres of land in Stockton and New Hope townships. In politics he was a Democrat, and his religion was that of the Catholic Church. The widow still lives on the farm with her son, Dennis. The children of Patrick and Margaret Laughlin were Mary, born in Utica, N. Y., and now the widow of John McGinley, of Almond township; Dennis; Margaret, now Mrs. Patrick Ryan, acting postmaster at Custer post office; Catherine, now Mrs. Michael Lally, of Rhinelander, Wis.; Elizabeth, now Mrs. M. O'Keefe, of Stockton township; Theresa, Mrs. George Woodnorth, of Helena, Mont.; Martha, a teacher, at home.

Dennis Laughlin was a babe when he was brought to Portage county. He was reared on the farm he owns, spending the winters in the woods. All told, he has followed lumbering for twenty-two winters. He was married July 10, 1879, in Stockton township, to Miss Margaret Conniff, who was born in Beloit, Wis., December 18, 1855, daughter of John and Winifred (O'Rourke) Conniff, natives of County Galway, Ireland. The family of Dennis and Margaret Laughlin consists of Amanda W., John Thomas, Mary F., Stanley P., Daniel F., and Ruth A.; Margaret E. died in infancy. After his marriage Mr. Laughlin began housekeeping on the home farm, and in 1885, after the death of his father, he completed a large stone residence, which is the finest in the township. He is the owner of over 400 acres of land, and one of the most prominent citizens of the township. He is a member of the Catholic Church, and in politics is a Democrat. In the spring of 1894 he was elected town chairman, and is generally regarded as one of the political leaders of the township. Under President Harrison's administration he was appointed postmaster at Custer, and has since held that office, giving over the details of the work to his brother-in-law and sister. Mr. Laughlin has a remarkable memory, and is gifted with a high order of business ability.

ANTON LIEG & SON is the name of one of the most prominent business firms of Shawano, and these gentlemen demonstrate what can be accomplished through industry, diligence and perseverance. The senior member of the firm was born in Prussia June 22, 1835, and is a son of Kasler Lieg, a tailor by trade. The father died when Anton was only seven years of age, leaving the widow with two children—Anton and John.

After obtaining an ordinary education, Anton Lieg at the age of fourteen began working as a slater, and when seventeen he came to the United States, going down the Rhine to Rotterdam, thence sailing across the North Sea to Hull, England, and from there journeying by rail to Liverpool, where he boarded a sailing vessel, which sixty days later reached New York harbor in safety. From there traveling westward, his funds were exhausted at Erie, Penn., in consequence of which he was forced to seek work there, and obtaining a position as a farm hand, remained there from August, 1852, until July, 1853, when he came by boat to Milwaukee. He had been employed on the construction of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad, but through a dishonest contractor lost his wages. In Milwaukee, he secured work in a brickyard, receiving from $25 to $30 per month, and in that locality he remained until 1856, when he went to Green Bay, Wis., where he again secured work in a brickyard.

On October 20, 1864, in Green Bay, Wis., Mr. Lieg married Miss Gertrude Bibelhausen, a native of Germany, born February 18, 1844. When a child she came to the United States with her father, John Bibelhausen, who engaged in farming in DePere township, Brown Co., Wis. For four years Mr. Lieg continued his connection with the brickyard, then worked as a gardener in the summer and chopped cord wood in the winter. He also clerked for two winters in a store there, purchasing a house on Main street near Rahr's brewery, and kept boarders. In 1871 he came to Shawano—traveling by stage—and here worked as a gardener, while his wife conducted a little store, beginning with a capital of only $60. In the fall of 1871 they returned to Green Bay, where for a short time Mr. Lieg was employed as overseer of a gang of men. In the spring of 1872 he again came to Shawano, and purchasing twenty-two acres of land began the manufacture of brick. He had disposed of his property in Green Bay, and now had a capital of $1,100; but the new business proved a failure, and left him with only $200. With this he began merchandising, at first renting his store room, but after thirteen days he purchased it. He first opened with a stock of groceries, and subsequently added dry goods, later developing a general store. At first the family lived in the store room which was 40 x 20 feet, as they did not wish to go beyond their means; but as time passed prosperity attended the new undertaking, and to-day the establishment is one of the best mercantile houses in Shawano, occupying as it does a brick building 82 x 20 feet.

The firm of Anton Lieg & Son have carried on a successful business, and fair and honorable dealing, courteous treatment and earnest desire to please their patrons have been the important factors in their success. Theirs is one of the most substantial firms in Shawano, and in connection with general merchandising, they are interested in the Shawano Water Power and River Improvement Co., the Shawano Shoe Factory, and the Shawano County Bank. The business history of this locality would be incomplete without the record of their lives, for they have greatly promoted commercial activity in this region, and while promoting individual prosperity have advanced the material welfare of the community.

While living in Green Bay, the following children were born to Mr. and Mrs.

Lieg: Catherine who died in infancy; John A., a member of the firm of Lieg & Son; John, who died at the age of five years; and Mary, who died at the age of ten. Since coming to Shawano the family circle has been increased by the birth of the following children: Catherine and Frank, who are employed in their father's store; Charles, who died in infancy; Peter and Joseph, at home. In politics, Mr. Anton Lieg has always been a Democrat, and served as alderman for five years, but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking. In religious belief he is a Catholic, and helped to build the beautiful church in Shawano. He also belongs to St. Bonifacius Society of Green Bay.—[Since the above was written Mr. Anton Lieg died at his home August 12, 1895.]

JOHN A. LIEG, the wide-awake and enterprising young business man of the firm, was educated in the common schools of Shawano, and has been connected with the mercantile store here from the beginning. He has served as a member of the city council for two years.

GOTTlieb KUSSMANN, now one of the wealthiest and most prosperous citizens of Stockton township, Portage county, has not always enjoyed the comforts of his present life. He can look back over many years of hardships and struggles, more perhaps than fall to the lot of most men, and through them all he can trace the threads which have guided him upward to a plane considerably above the high-water mark of restless want. Those threads are patience, steadiness of purpose, industry and good management.

Mr. Kussmann was born in Prussia, May 20, 1833. His father, John Kussmann, was a common laborer, who owned a small piece of land, and had five sons and one daughter to support—Christian, Peter, John, Gottlieb, William and Regina. With little schooling the boys were early put to work. Gottlieb at ten years of age began herding cattle, and a little later sheep. His earnings barely sufficed for a scanty livelihood. At seventeen he was apprenticed to a tailor, and for three and a quarter years received no wages. Following his trade for a few years, conducting a shop of his own for one and a half years, he saved a few dollars with which he resolved to pay his passage to America. In Germany he saw no hope of attaining a home. Bidding farewell to friends he took passage August 10, 1856, at Hamburg, in the sailing vessel "Elizabeth," bound for New York. An incident at sea was a collision with another craft in mid-ocean, resulting not more seriously, fortunately, than in the loss of a mast. Another feature of the trip was that aboard was the young woman whom Gottlieb afterward made his wife. She too, with her mother, stepfather and brothers and sisters was journeying to a land of greater opportunities. After six weeks and two days the "Elizabeth" reached New York. Gottlieb's intended destination was Montello, Marquette Co., Wis., where friends lived. At Green Lake Prairie he struck his first job, and for six weeks' work received fifteen dollars, which was paid in gold dollars, queer little coins indeed as they seemed to the German boy. During the winter he worked at his trade, and May 3, 1857, came to Stevens Point by team. En route he spied some Indians, and the aborigines frightened him somewhat. Stevens Point was then a primitive village, and pine trees stood in the public square. Gottlieb secured work with a farmer, Dewey Brown.

In June, 1857, Mr. Kussmann was married, at Stevens Point, to Henriette Heiman, his sweetheart on the "Elizabeth." She was born in Germany June 25, 1834. During the harvesting season he visited Green Lake Prairie, and in the fall returning to Stevens Point worked at his trade. With his brother he ran the river during the summer of 1858, making four trips to Galena, Ill., Alton, Ill., and Dubuque, Iowa. They had several narrow escapes from drowning. For twelve years Mr. Kussmann worked land he had rented, then, about 1870, he bought on credit 120 acres in Section 18, Stockton township, only ten acres of which had been broken, and it was destitute of buildings. Where his house now stands were large oak trees. Mr. Kussmann erected buildings, and has ever since resided on this farm, adding to it until it now includes 240 acres. To Mr. and Mrs. Kussmann were born the following children: Julius, a farmer of Lanark township; Anna, who married Frank Pollard, and died in Stockton township; John, a farmer, of Stockton township; Samuel, at home; Fred, a grain buyer of Fall Creek, Eau Claire Co., Wis.; Lena, now Mrs. Rupert Ward, of Stockton township; Ernest, at home.

For two years after coming to America Mr. Kussmann was a Democrat. He has ever since been a Republican, and all his sons are Republicans. He has never sought office, but one year served as path master. Himself and family are members of the Lutheran Church at Stevens Point. In the early days he hauled wheat with ox-teams to Berlin, a distance of sixty miles, and sold it for from 30 to 40 cents a bushel, and other pioneer experiences were on a par with this one. He is now one of the leading farmers of the township, and no family is more highly respected than his.

JAMES O'CONNOR, deceased. While transmitting to posterity the memory of such men as was the subject of this sketch, it will instill into the minds of our children the important lessons that honor and station are the sure reward of continual exertion; and that, compared to indomitable will power, abundant experience, coupled with habits of honest industry and judicious economy, the greatest fortune would be but a poor inheritance.

The subject of this memoir was a native of Wisconsin, born April 19, 1853, in Marquette county, to Edward and Bridget (O'Connor) O'Connor, the former of whom was born in Ireland, whence when a young man he emigrated to Canada, where he married, and where his four eldest children—Margaret, Catherine, Thomas and Timothy—were born, of whom Margaret and Catherine died when young; the other two children in the family—James and Charles—were born in Wisconsin. Early in 1853 the family came to the "Badger State," the father having been attracted hither by the bright promises held out for the then young State, and here, in Marquette county, near the county seat, they settled on a farm, which, by cultivation, they brought to a high state of perfection. Here the mother died in 1874, the father afterward passing away in Portage City, Wis. Thomas, their eldest son, was a soldier in the Union army, and died while in the service.

James, the third son, and the subject proper of this sketch, was reared on his father's farm, and received his education at the district school of the neighborhood, remaining at home until the death of his mother, when he moved to Lincoln county, locating in what was then known as the village of Jenny, now the bustling city of Merrill, and for several years worked in the lumber woods. He then formed a partnership with J. N. Cotter, under the firm name of Cotter & O'Connor, in the logging and lumbering and real-estate businesses, which continued until the spring of 1886, when the death of Mr. O'Connor, which occurred April 20, severed the partnership. He was reared in the Roman Catholic faith, and died in same. Politically he was a Democrat, but no office-seeker, simply quietly recording his vote at the polls according to the dictates of his conscience.

On January 1, 1884, Mr. O'Connor was united in marriage with Miss Prue Cotter, who was born in Franklin county, N. Y., a daughter of John Cotter, and the result of this union is one child, Prue L. O'Connor, who is brightening the home of her widowed mother, in Merrill. As a representative self-made man Mr. O'Connor in his day had few equals, and he deserved the highest credit for the success he secured within the short twelve years of his experience in Lincoln county—from the time he came here with all his worldly effects contained in a small parcel to the day death summoned him from his labors.

CROWEL W. WHITE, in his varied but successful career as farmer, lumberman and merchant in the Upper Wisconsin Valley, has run almost the entire gamut of fortune from the pinching poverty of the struggling pioneer, laboring without adequate tools, to the affluence which is the fruitage of his many years of intelligent and determined effort. He was born at Locke, Cayuga Co., N. Y., November 27, 1819, son of Joseph and Catherine (Moyer) White, both natives of the Empire State. Joseph was the son of John White, a farmer, and had nine children: Crowel W.; Harriet, who died in Michigan; Phoebe, now Mrs. Deporter, of Michigan; Adonijah, a blacksmith and farmer, in New York; William, by trade a shoemaker, now living in Iowa; Emily, widow of William Kline, a jeweler; Achsah, who died at the age of sixteen years; John, by trade an engineer, living in Pennsylvania; and one child who died in infancy.

As the eldest child of this family Crowel W. White was deprived of the opportunity for a good education. He attended school during winters until he was twelve years of age, and was then "buckled into the collar." His father owned fifty acres of poor land, and was engaged principally in lime burning rather than farming. Crowel helped his father until he was sixteen, then worked for E. Newman one summer for twelve dollars per month. He then hired out to the same man until he was twenty-one years old for his board and clothes, and for $100 and two suits of clothes, to be paid when the term of service expired. His mother had died in 1833, when Crowel was still at home. After his children had all left the homestead the father married a widow, Mrs. Towne, and died about 1870.

Reaching his majority and receiving the promised stipend from Mr. Newman, Mr. White drove team six months on railroad construction in Allegany county, N. Y., then scored timber in Pennsylvania. In 1842 he went to Galena, Ill., and mined for two years, then in 1844 moved to Grand Rapids, Wis., and for several years followed saw-milling and lumbering. Here he was married, October 3, 1848, to Elizabeth P. Anthony, born in Oswego county, N. Y., November 9, 1826, daughter of Abraham and Mary (Allen) Anthony, the former a native of New York, the latter of Massachusetts. Abraham Anthony, who was a farmer, reared a family of four children: Sarah, Elizabeth, Allen and Mary, Elizabeth, wife of Mr. White, being the only survivor. In 1844 Abraham Anthony purchased and moved upon eighty acres of wild land in Dane county, Wis., which he engaged in clearing, but several years later moved to Grand Rapids, and there embarked in the lumber business. About 1853 he returned to Dane county, and in 1858 sold his farm and came to Almond township, Portage county, where he and his wife lived with their daughter and son-in-law. Mr. Anthony was instantly killed by lightning, and his wife died nine days later, from the effects of the same shock.

After his marriage Crowel W. White remained in Grand Rapids until the spring of 1853, when he moved to Almond township. He purchased eighty acres of wild land in Section 7, now owned by Joseph Springer, and lived two months with a neighbor, until a log shanty, 12 x 12, could be built. They moved into this, and in turn gave shelter to another family, the two families numbering twelve people. In the fall a frame house was built, which still stands. Mr. White had brought with him a team of horses, but he was without farming implements, and the work of breaking the land proceeded slowly. It was only by the hard and toilsome efforts of both Mr. and Mrs. White, aided by their children, that they succeeded. After twelve years on the farm Mr. White returned to Grand Rapids, and for about seven years quite profitably conducted a meat market. He then engaged in the general merchandise trade for three years, also very successfully. Returning to Almond township, where he then owned 160 acres, he built a store at Lone Pine, and engaged in general trading. Three years later he erected a commodious two-story residence 16 x 24, with two one-and-one-half-story Ls, each 16 x 24, sold his business, and moved to the farm. Again taking charge of the store, he sold it afterward to Michael Curtis, whose widow now conducts it. Mr. White now owns an excellent farm of 200 acres. He is a Republican in politics, and has for three years been a member of the side board. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. White:

Alonzo A., born July 22, 1850, died at the age of sixteen years; S. Melissa, born July 27, 1852, died aged five years; Emma A., born August 30, 1854, and Bert E., born March 27, 1868. The two younger children have always remained at home, and have been of great assistance to their parents.

JULIUS THIELMAN. Among well-to-do citizens of Merrill, Lincoln county, not the least worthy of special mention in the pages of this volume is the gentleman whose name here appears, who is a thoroughly representative, progressive German-American.

He is a native of Wisconsin, born in Watertown, Jefferson county, September 20, 1860, a son of Gottfried and Julia (Baum) Thielman, natives of Prussia, Germany, where the father was born, in 1829, and where they were married. They came to the United States in 1852, making their home in Watertown, Wis., where the father followed the business of contractor and builder, for many years also being employed on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad. In 1888 he came to Merrill, Lincoln county, where he and his wife are at present residing. To them were born eleven children, named respectively: Alvina, Louisa, Julius, Emil, Albert, Robert, Helen, Louis, Theodore, Amanda, and Mollie. Julius, the subject proper of this article, received his education at the common schools of Watertown, Wis., and at the age of fourteen commenced to learn the trade of butcher. When eighteen years old, in 1878, he started in the same line of business for himself at Grand Rapids, Wis., which he continued until the spring of 1881, when he sold out there, and, coming to Merrill, opened out a first-class butchering establishment, the business of which has since so increased that now he has two leading markets in that city, besides one in the city of Tomahawk, in the same county; these are, it is unnecessary to say, retail establishments, and in addition he does a lucrative wholesale business.

On April 20, 1879, at Grand Rapids, Wis., Mr. Thielman was married to Miss Minnie Plahmer, a native of Germany, whose parents, John and Carolina (Knut) Plahmer, came with their nine children to America in 1870, settling at Grand Rapids, Wis., where the father followed farming pursuits. He is now living in the town of Grant, near Grand Rapids. To Mr. and Mrs. Thielman have been born three children: Amanda, Lillian, and William. In politics our subject is a strong Democrat, active at all times in the workings of the party, and for three years he was chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee; was mayor of Merrill one year; chairman of the county board of supervisors, and alderman two terms. In July, 1893, he was appointed postmaster at Merrill, an office in which he gives unbounded satisfaction, and each and every one of these incumbencies he has filled with scrupulous integrity. For six years he was secretary of the Central Manufacturing Co., which establishment burned in May, 1894, and he is a director of the First National Bank of Merrill. In religious faith he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church.

Julius Thielman

Mr. Thielman is a typical self-made man, one whose only capital, when at the age of fourteen, he vaulted into the arena of business life, was naught save a level head, a stout heart and a willing pair of hands, and bearing for his motto the words: "Fortuna facit fortibus." He is now one of the leading business men of Merrill, is a power in his party, and a leader in the development of all enterprises tending to the growth and prosperity of the city of his adoption—a typical Western man. Without ostentation, either in their manner or style of life, he and his amiable life partner always maintain a high social position, and are at all times in the enjoyment of the highest esteem and regard of the community in which they live.

JOHAN H. LIVINGSTON began life in the Upper Wisconsin Valley under the most unpropitious circumstances. The burdens of unusual responsibilities had been thrown upon his young shoulders. As a boy he helped to support his widowed mother and his younger brothers and sisters. When eighteen years of age he came to Wisconsin with his mother and her four younger children, supporting them by his daily labor. Four years later he entered forty acres of land in Almond township, Portage county, but was too poor to pay for an axe with which to clear the farm. But Mr. Livingston has overcome all difficulties. He has successfully passed the trying ordeal of those stern, forbidding years, and is now one of Almond township's most prosperous farmers. His life has been one of struggle and triumph.

Mr. Livingston was born in Chazy, Clinton Co., N. Y., July 3, 1832, son of William and Polly (Newman) Livingston. The grandfather of Polly Newman was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. William Livingston was a blacksmith and a native of Milton, Vt., son of Rensselaer and Mary Livingston. Rensselaer was also a blacksmith, and from him his son, William, learned his trade. After marriage William and Polly Livingston migrated from Vermont to Clinton county, N. Y. They had ten children: Harriet, deceased wife of Alexander Irwin, a merchant of Knowlton; Olive, deceased wife of Cludius McLaughlin, a farmer, of Oasis, Waushara county; Catherine, deceased wife of William Fellows, a merchant of Stevens Point; John H.; Frederick, deceased; Mary, deceased wife of Silas S. Walsworth, a lumberman, of Stevens Point; Ardelia, now Mrs. Mott, of Oklahoma; Norman, deceased; and two who died in infancy. William Livingston died about 1845, when John H., the eldest son, was only thirteen years old. He had little opportunity for an education, and began work at 25 cents per day; but a little later secured a position in an hotel at $10 per month. Remaining there three years, he saved enough money to buy a small home and a cow for his mother. They remained there until 1850, when he concluded to bring his mother and her four younger children to Stevens Point. Here he rented a house and secured work at rafting at $1.50 per day, which seemed like a fortune. Remaining at Stevens Point four years, he in 1854 purchased forty acres in Almond township, buying a claim from one Robert Huston. It contained a small log house, 16 x 24, which stood just back of Mr.

Livingston's present residence, and to this habitation he brought his mother's family. He had no team; he purchased an axe on credit, and began the work of clearing up the oak openings of his little farm. The first crop, a diversified one, consisting of wheat, corn, oats and potatoes, yielded well, and he was soon the happy possessor of an ox-team. He added gradually to his farm until it grew to 240 acres of well-cultivated land. Polly (Newman) Livingston, wife of William Livingston, died at Stevens Point in 1882. Our subject was married, March 3, 1869, to Laura M. Hinkley, born in Connecticut January 13, 1842, daughter of Lucius and Laura (Waterman) Hinkley.

Mrs. Laura M. (Hinkley) Livingston is a lineal descendant of Samuel Hinkley, who was the ancestor of all of the name in America, coming in the spring of 1635 to New England, with his wife Sarah, and four children, the voyage from the mother country being made in the ship, "Hercules," Capt. John Witherly. They landed at Boston, and settled at Scituate, a town situated about thirty miles from Boston, but within the boundaries of the old Plymouth Colony. In 1639 he removed with all his family and effects to Barnstable, on Cape Cod, being one of the first settlers of that town. His first wife (Sarah) died in Barnstable, August 18, 1656, and December 15, 1657, he married Mrs. Bridget Bodfish, widow of Robert Bodfish, of Sandwich. Samuel Hinkley died in Barnstable October 31, 1662, leaving a large landed estate. The homestead remained in the possession of the family until the commencement of the present century, the last occupant being Squire Isaac Hinkley.

Thomas Hinkley, eldest in the family of eleven children of Samuel Hinkley (all by his first wife Sarah), was born in England, in 1618, and came with his father to New England. He was twice married, first time December 4, 1640, to Mary Richards, daughter of Thomas and Welthean (Loring) Richards, of Weymouth, Mass. She died December 4, 1659, and for his second wife Thomas Hinkley was married March 16, 1660, to Mrs. Mary (Smith) Glover, widow of Nathaniel Glover, of Dorchester, Mass. She was born at Toxteth Park, Lancashire, England, July 20, 1630, and died at Barnstable, Mass., July 29, 1703. Thomas Hinkley died at Barnstable April 25, 1705, aged eighty-seven years. He was a lawyer by profession, and one of the most prominent and influential men of his day, having been a deputy magistrate, governor's assistant, commissioner of the confederated colonies of New England, and governor of Plymouth Colony. He had seventeen children in all—eight by his first wife, and nine by his second.

Samuel Hinkley, son of the above and his first wife (and fifth in the order of birth), was born at Barnstable, Mass., February 14, 1652, and died at Barnstable (Great Marshes) March 19, 1687. He was married November 13, 1676, to Sarah Pope, of Sandwich, Mass., daughter of John Pope, and they had a family of ten children. She survived her husband, and married again, after which the family of children removed to Harwich, a town situated about twelve miles from Barnstable, lower down toward the extremity of the Cape.

Thomas Hinkley, third child of Samuel and Sarah (Pope) Hinkley, was born at Barnstable March 19, 1681, removed to Harwich, as above related, and was there married to Mercy ——. [The family history is here incomplete.] Thomas appears to have died young, probably in 1710, as administration on his estate was granted to his widow October 11, 1710.

Thomas Hinkley, second child of Thomas and Mercy Hinkley, was born at Harwich, Mass., March 11, 1708-09, and was a blacksmith by trade. He was thrice married: first time March 31, 1730, to Ruth Myrick, of Harwich; second wife was Lydia Nickerson, of Chatham, married March 17, 1765; third wife was Hannah Severance, of Harwich. [The family record is again incomplete.]

Seth Hinkley, eldest child of Thomas and Ruth (Myrick) Hinkley, was born at Harwich, Mass., September 2, 1730, and died at Hardwick, Worcester Co., Mass., April 21, 1797. He was married in Harwich February 2, 1755, to Sarah Berry, daughter of Judah Berry, and who died in Hardwick April 8, 1813, aged eighty-one years. They appear to have removed to Hardwick soon after marriage, as the births of all of their eight children are recorded here. [They were the great-grandparents of Lucius Hinkley.]

Scottoway Hinkley, seventh child of the eight children of Seth and Sarah (Berry) Hinkley, was born at Hardwick, Mass., April 10, 1771, settled in Vernon, Conn., and there married Eunice Kellogg, who was born November 15, 1773, daughter of Rev. Ebenezer and Hannah (Wright) Kellogg. He died in Vernon, in August, 1849; his wife passed away in November, 1823. He was a physician, and a very large man, weighing, it is said, 300 pounds. They had six children.

Lucius Hinkley, eldest of the six children born to Dr. Scottoway and Eunice (Kellogg) Hinkley, was born in Vernon, Conn., September 6, 1799, married at Bolton, Conn., November 9, 1830, to Miss Laura (Waterman), born at the same place in February, 1805, daughter of Charles and Anna Waterman. Lucius Hinkley was a manufacturer of woolen goods, merchant and farmer. He removed from Connecticut to Troy, N. Y., about 1842, and became a grocer. Ten years later he came to Waupun, Wis., and in 1855 to Pine Grove township, Portage county, where he pre-empted a farm of 160 acres and erected a one-story log house, 14 x 24, into which he moved with his family. The parents in 1872 removed from Pine Grove township to Marcus, Iowa, where Mr. Hinkley died, April 23 1883; his wife, November 16, 1893. They had six children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Jane Gray, December 2, 1831; Lucius Dwight, November 8, 1834; Julian Wisner, March 12, 1838; Laura Maria, January 13, 1842; Mary Amelia, February 14, 1844; and Myron Edward, February 15, 1846. Of these, Jane G. is married to William H. Wilson, and resides in Milwaukee; Lucius D. is a dealer in pumps and windmills at Waupun; Julian W. is a contractor and builder, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Laura M. is the wife of John H. Livingston; Mary A. died in 1894; and Myron E. is a nurseryman at Marcus, Iowa.

The children born to John H. and Laura M. Livingston are Stacia, born April 16, 1870, a student at Oshkosh; Olive, born December 2, 1871, a school teacher at Plainfield; Zella, born December 27, 1876, a student at Oshkosh; Ralph Allen, born March 26, 1885. In politics Mr. Livingston is a staunch Republican. He has been a member of the side board, and for twenty-two years has been school treasurer. He is now vice-president of the Stockton Insurance Company.

ADELBERT D. ROGERS. Many of the early pioneers of Wisconsin are the descendants of pioneers. From the New England and other Eastern States the more active and enterprising element of society migrated to the outposts of civilization, and by successive waves of migration extended farther and farther westward. It was so with the Rogers family. It settled originally in Vermont. Then many years ago its representatives sought Western homes in Oneida county, N. Y. Another movement brought the family to the wilderness of Wisconsin, in Almond township, Portage county.

Our subject was born in Vernon, Oneida Co., N. Y., August 4, 1844, son of Orim and Velinda (Wood) Rogers. Orim Rogers was a native of Vermont, and in his earlier years had moved to New York, where he engaged successfully in farming and dairying. He had four children: Caroline, now Mrs. Albert Wood, of Almond township; George, also of Almond township; Sarah, wife of Edwin Forsyth, a carpenter, of New York; and Adelbert D. Sarah, at the age of seventeen years, had married Mr. Forsyth. The other children were still at home in 1855, when the parents sold their New York property and came to Almond township, Portage Co., Wis. Here Orim Rogers purchased eighty acres of government land in Section 18, paying $1.25 per acre for it; it was wild land, innocent of any improvement whatever. For a time the family lived with Albert Wood, but in the spring of 1856 they built a frame house, 16 x 24, in which they lived about twelve years.

Mr. Rogers had purchased a yoke of oxen in the southern part of Wisconsin, and drove through to the new home. The work of breaking the land began, but progressed slowly at first. The mother at one time received some money from the settlement of her brother's estate, and contributed the amount to the general welfare of the family. Mr. Rogers added forty acres to his original purchase, and remained on this homestead of 120 acres until his death, May 28, 1892, he dying at the age of eighty-two years; his wife died February 22, 1870, at the age of sixty-three years.

Adelbert D. Rogers received only a common-school education. He was ten years of age when he came with his parents to Wisconsin, and he has ever since remained on the home farm, assisting in breaking the land and taking charge of the farm since the death of his mother. He has added eighty acres to the land, which is now a well-improved farm of 196 acres. Mr. Rogers was married December 19, 1869, to Eliza Monday, the eldest child of Edward and Emma Monday, of Almond township. To Mr. and Mrs. Rogers two children have been born: Reuben S., now at home, and Lyman, who died at the age of ten years. Politically Mr. Rogers is a Republican. He is a thorough and successful farmer, and highly respected by all who know him.

MRS. ARABELLA BEGGS, who now conducts a large and excellent farm in Almond township, Portage county, is the worthy representative of an early and influential pioneer family of this locality.

She was born in Freemansburg, Penn., August 27, 1839, daughter of Jeremiah and Caroline (Merrill) Roseberry. Jeremiah Roseberry was born in Warren county, N. J., August 15, 1812, son of Michael and Margaret (Mackey) Roseberry. Caroline Merrill, a native of Pennsylvania, was the daughter of Otis and Susanna (Ravenau) Merrill. To Jeremiah and Caroline Roseberry were born eleven children, as follows: Freelope E., who died at the age of sixteen years; Arabella, subject of this sketch; Anna M., now Mrs. Leman Pratt, of Minnesota; Charles O., who died in Andersonville prison during the Civil war; Robert I., a farmer of Pine Grove township; George A., deceased; Laura J., now Mrs. William Beggs, of Plainfield; William M., deceased; John A., deceased; Lillie M., deceased; Harriet, now Mrs. Everett Beggs, living on the old Roseberry homestead in Pine Grove township. Jeremiah Roseberry was a physician, practicing at Alexandria, Va., in 1854. Ill health induced him to abandon his profession, and to seek renewed strength in the great pines of the Northwest. Accordingly in that year he migrated with his family to Wisconsin, and took up a farm in Pine Grove township, Portage county, of 150 acres mostly covered with oak openings. Dr. Roseberry remained a resident of the farm until his death, December 3, 1888, at the age seventy-six years. He bore a high reputation for honesty and fair dealing, and was a successful and influential citizen of the new country, respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

Arabella Roseberry was fifteen years of age when she came with her parents to Wisconsin. She had meager opportunities for a finished education, yet from her native intelligence, and from her association with her father, who was a cultured man, she fared much better by way of education than many others whose lot was cast in the pioneer land. She was married to James Beggs, and with him began housekeeping on his farm in Pine Grove township. In 1864 James Beggs enlisted in Company F, Fifth Wis. V. I., and was mustered into the service at Madison; his brother Albert was in the same regiment. The regiment was pushed right to the front, and at Petersburg Albert was killed by a Rebel bullet. James Beggs served in Virginia until the surrender of Lee's army, the crowning victory of Northern arms, which was witnessed by Mr. Beggs. After his return from the army he bought 140 acres of land in Almond township, Portage county, which is a portion of the farm now occupied by Mrs. Beggs. He removed there with his wife, and engaged in practical farming, adding to his possessions until at the time of his death, January 3, 1890, they had reached 200 acres. The death of Mr. Beggs was hastened by injuries which he had received in the army. It was a severe blow to the bereaved wife and family. In politics Mr. Beggs was a Democrat. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Beggs are Charles A., a bookkeeper of Plainfield; Harmon H., of Almond township; and Frank R. The latter was married February 22, 1892, to Miss Maggie Gould, who was born in Canada, near Ontario, December 29, 1871, daughter of Robert and Jane (Livingston) Gould, whose eight children are John, Lizzie, Jane, Maggie, William, Margie, Mary and Lottie. At the time of her marriage Maggie Gould was a school teacher. Frank R. and Maggie Beggs have one child, Genevieve.

MAJOR HENRY CURRAN, senior member of the widely-known firm of H. & J. D. Curran, the popular and genial proprietors of the "Curran House," Stevens Point, Portage county, is a native of the State of Illinois, born in Winnebago county, near Mt. Carroll, January 1, 1841.

The grandfather of our subject, also named Henry, who was a man of no small degree of prominence, descended from a distinguished family in Ireland, and was a well-to-do agriculturist in that country, owning eighty acres of land, besides renting other farmsteads. He came to this country with his family, and died at the home of his son John, at Plover, Portage Co., Wis., in 1849, at a very advanced age; his wife had preceded him to the grave in Ireland. John Curran, the son just referred to, was born in County Carlow, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1830, locating in Illinois, near Mt. Carroll. At Galena, in that State, he married Miss Mary Ann Code, a native of Missouri, and they had four children. The father came to Plover, Wis., in 1847, becoming an Indian trader in the Wisconsin Valley, and in Plover he opened a general supply store which he operated until a short time before his death, which occurred November 2, 1852, caused by neuralgia of the heart. His widow died in June, 1856, and they as well as his father, sleep their last sleep in the Plover burying ground. They were all members of the Roman Catholic Church, and all died in that faith.

The subject proper of this memoir received a fairly liberal education at the common schools of Plover, Wis., and at the early age of twelve years commenced to "hustle" for himself. When fourteen he began lumbering, part of his duties being the running of lumber down the Wisconsin river as far as St. Louis, Mo.; and he so continued until the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion when he enlisted May 10, 1861, at Madison, Wis., in company E (a Jeffersonville company), Fifth Wis. V. I., which soon afterward was sent to the front, the first active hostilities our subject participated in being at Centerville, Va., in a skirmish with the enemy. He served until July, 1864, his term of enlistment then expiring. Veteranizing, he re-enlisted September 30, 1864, becoming sergeant-major of the re-organized Fifth Wis. V. I., in December, 1864, in which he was promoted to second lieutenant of Company A; in February, 1865, he was further promoted to captain of Company G, and, finally, after the battles of Petersburg and Sailors Creek, "for gallant and meritorious conduct," he was brevetted major. He served faithfully and well to the close of the war, being mustered out in June, 1865. Major Curran participated in all the battles of the army of the Potomac (except that of first Bull Run) up to May 5, 1864, the day he was wounded at the battle of the Wilderness, a minie ball striking him in the left leg below the knee, which laid him up till the middle of the following July; he was also injured in the same battle, on the stomach, by a bullet striking the brass plate of his belt with terrific force, causing a severe and painful contusion; afterward, from November, 1864, to the close of the campaign, he participated in all the battles fought by the army of the Potomac. The brevet commission was given to our subject for the following acts of bravery: at Petersburg the command led by him was the first to enter the enemy's works at the storming of the place; at Sailors Creek, Capt. Curran and his command were in charge of the skirmish line on the enemy's left, when, just toward the close of the battle, Gen. Ewell, of the Confederate service, and staff raised a white flag as a signal of truce. Thereupon Capt. Curran detailed Sergt. Cameron of Company A to meet Gen. Ewell and see what he wanted; the sergeant did so, and returned with Ewell and his entire staff who desired to surrender, and were accordingly sent to the rear to report to Gen. Wright or to Gen. Sheridan, and soon afterward Ewell surrendered with his army of 7,000 men (this was April 6, 1865, three days before Gen. Lee's surrender); after this engagement had been in progress some time, Col. T. S. Allen, commanding the Fifth Wis. V. I., asked Capt. Curran if he would not charge the enemy's skirmish line, and drive them in or capture them, to which the Captain responded that he "would try," so, taking Companies G and A, he advanced on the Rebels in skirmishing order, drove in the picket line and took many prisoners. The Major participated in the Grand Review held at Washington in 1865.

On returning to civil life Major Curran resumed citizenship in Portage county, first in the capacity of manager of "Phelps' Hotel," Stevens Point, so continuing until December 2, 1866, when he bought the hotel he has since successfully conducted in partnership with J. D. Curran. On October 11, 1866, he was united in marriage with Miss Addie Walker, daughter of James Walker, and three children were born to them as follows: John D., a graduate of Stevens Point High School, also of St. John's Military Academy at Delafield, Wis., and was a teacher in that institution for two years (he is now attending Wisconsin State University); Florence Gratia and Henry, Jr., both at home; they have also an adopted son, Russell W. Walker, whom they reared as their own from the age of two years, is now a resident of Astoria, Oreg., and is studying law.

Major Curran is a Republican, filled the position of alderman at Stevens Point some fifteen years, and is looked upon as one of the most substantial men of the place.

standing high in the community, has always been active in politics and influential in the affairs of his party.

HERMAN FELKER, one of the progressive young farmers of Almond township, Portage county, lives on the farm from which the present village of Almond was carved, and which was settled by his father, Isaiah Felker, over forty years ago. The land was partly timbered by oak, and partly prairie, and hence was easily cleared. Mr. Felker has one of the two stump machines that are owned in that part of Portage county, and it has helped greatly in preparing the land for cultivation. Of the original 240 acres which the father possessed, Herman now owns and cultivates 120 acres.

Isaiah Felker, the father, was born in Stratford, Stratford Co., N. H., in 1820. He was well-educated, and in his younger days was a school superintendent near Boston, Mass. He came west to Wisconsin about 1854, and purchased a farm in Almond township, and also a half-interest in a hotel where the village of Almond now stands. In 1857 he was married to Christina Ferber, who was born in Baden, Germany, daughter of John P. and Barbara (Buerkle) Ferber, the eldest of whose five children is Barbara, now Mrs. Michael Milure, of Almond township; the second, Elizabeth, is Mrs. D. Shafer, of Almond; the third is Mrs. Felker; the fourth, Mary, now Mrs. George Tysan; the fifth, Margaret, now Mrs. Albert Young, of Almond. In the fall of 1846 John and Barbara Ferber emigrated to America, were eight weeks in crossing the ocean, and came direct to Racine, Wis. Mr. Ferber bought 160 acres of partially-improved land ten miles from Racine, and lived there until 1854, when he came to Almond township, Portage county. Here Mr. Ferber bought 260 acres of land, where Albert Young now lives. It was mostly prairie land, and contained a small building. The parents occupied and improved this farm until their death, many years later. After their marriage Isaiah and Christina Felker engaged in farming and conducting the hotel at Almond until the death of Mr. Felker, Nov. 24, 1874. He had four children, Anna Rosetta, now Mrs. William Walker; Herman, who now owns the old homestead; and twins who died in infancy. Politically, Isaiah Felker was a Republican, and for many years he was postmaster at Almond. The widow, Mrs. Felker, now lives at Stevens Point.

Herman Felker was born in Almond township July 6, 1862. He was educated in the common schools, and when quite young assisted in clearing the land. He was only twelve years old when his father died, and at that early age he took his place at the head of his mother's household. Mr. Felker has ever since engaged in farming, and now plants about twelve acres of potatoes. On March 27, 1889, he was married to Carrie J. McCrossen, born in Waupaca county, daughter of John and Rachel (McDougle) McCrossen, both natives of Maine, and of Scotch-Irish extraction. John McCrossen was a successful farmer and lumberman, and about 1856 emigrated with his family to Waupaca county, where he purchased and opened up a farm. The parents now live in Waupaca, at the ages of seventy-three and sixty-nine years respectively. The children of John and Rachel McCrossen were Mary, now wife of W. Chady, a merchant in Waupaca; William, who died at the age of twelve years; and Carrie J., wife of Mr. Felker. Mr. Felker is in politics a Republican, and is well and favorably known throughout the southern portion of Portage county as one of the most enterprising and influential citizens.

L D. SCOTT is one of the foremost citizens of Belmont township, Portage county—foremost in enterprise, foremost in enlightened opinion, foremost in public spirit. He is a self-made man, and one of the pioneers of the Upper Wisconsin Valley.

Born in Tioga county, Penn., August 2, 1831, he is a son of Luke and Julia (Seeley) Scott, the former of whom, who was a farmer, died in 1836, leaving a widow and a large family of children, as follows: Lucretia, Levi, Julius, Charlotte, Abigail, James, Charles, Julia, Phoebe, L. D. and Hester A. The oldest brother took charge of the farm, and the family remained together. The mother died in Tioga county, Penn., October 17, 1858, aged 64 years, 8 months, 22 days. L. D. Scott, who was the youngest son, remained on the home farm, attending the district schools and assisting in the farm work until he was twenty-one or twenty-two years of age, when he went into the lumber woods. In the fall of 1855 he came to Oshkosh, Wis., traveling by rail to Sheboygan, and thence by stage to his destination. In the winter he worked in the woods, and during the ensuing summer he was employed in a sawmill at Oshkosh; then, in the fall of 1856, he came to Portage county, and worked in the pinery on the Big Plover, running the river the following summer. He bought land in Springwater township, Waushara county, but never occupied it. For several years longer he followed lumbering, then in the fall of 1861 he purchased eighty acres of poorly-improved land in Section 8, Belmont township.

Mr. Scott was married, March 29, 1862, in Oconomowoc, Wis., to Susan E. Dopp, who was born in Oneida county, N. Y., May 16, 1832, daughter of John W. and Catherine (Miller) Dopp. Mrs. Scott migrated to Waukesha county, Wis., May, 1846, with her parents, coming via the Erie canal to Buffalo, thence by lake to Milwaukee, and thence to Waukesha county. She was the youngest of six children, and before she was eighteen she began teaching school. She taught eighteen or twenty terms, and it is an evidence of her ability that she received unusually high wages for those times. Her first term was for fourteen shillings per week, extraordinary wages then, and in later years she received as high as twenty dollars per month. After his marriage Mr. Scott lived for about six months on his eighty-acre tract, then in the fall of 1862 he moved to his present farm, where he has lived ever since, engaged in farming. He now owns 200 acres of land, highly improved, it being one of the excellent farms of the township. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Scott: Mattie A., September 12, 1866 (now Mrs. John H. Johnson, of Blaine, Wis.), and Bertha E., December 12, 1871 (now Mrs. Frank Casey, and living with her parents). On October 4, 1864, L. D. Scott left home to join the army, was discharged from Jeffersonville Hospital, and reached home July 22, 1865.

In 1893 and 1894 Mr. Scott was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Blaine. In politics he is a Republican, and voted for John C. Fremont in 1856. He has held various local offices, including those of town chairman, supervisor and treasurer of District No. 6; has been an active advocate of Republican principles in Belmont township, and from his influential position has been one of the chief advisors of his party in his section. For fifteen years, from September 4, 1878, to December 25, 1893, he was postmaster at Blaine, conducting the office in his house. Successful in business, always active in public matters, well-informed and happy in his domestic relations, Mr. Scott is most highly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

AUGUST H. STANGE, president and manager of the A. H. Stange Co., Merrill, and whose enterprise, energy and business tact and public-spiritedness have done so much toward the building up of the city of his adoption since he came to it, is by birth a German, having been born near the city of Berlin October 10, 1853.

Charles F. Stange, his father, also a native of Germany, born in 1820, was married in the Fatherland to Miss Caroline Boetcher, of the same nativity, the date of her birth being February 6, 1826. In Germany three children—Caroline, August H. and Charles—were born to them, and in 1856 the family came to America, settling in Watertown, Jefferson Co., Wis., where six more children were born—Ira, Augusta, Anna and Emma, living, and two that died in infancy. The father was called from earth in 1886.

while a resident of Merrill, Lincoln Co., Wis., having been an invalid for eleven years; the mother is yet living.

The subject proper of these lines secured but a limited education, as on account of his father's ill-health he had early to commence work in order to aid in the support of the family. To the astonishingly rapid development of lumber manufactures in Wisconsin during the past quarter of a century Mr. Stange has conspicuously and effectually contributed, and he entered the arena of business with a vigor and energy which has never flagged. At the age of thirteen we find him in a sash, door and blind factory, giving all his earnings to his parents, which, in fact, he did until he was married. When eighteen years old he went to Racine, Wis., to accept the position of foreman in a sash and door factory, where he remained eleven years, or until coming to Merrill in the spring of 1882, in company with H. W. Wright, working for him on salary until the organization of the H. W. Wright Lumber Co., of which he became a member. After two years, however, he sold his interest, and in partnership with Mr. Mihill, bought the present plant consisting of sawmill, sash, door and blind factory, which he has vastly increased and improved, employment being now given to an average of 350 hands. Within one year Mr. Stange bought out his partner's interest, and the business was conducted in Mr. Stange's own name until January, 1895, when it was organized into a stock company, known as the A. H. Stange Co., of which he is president, a part of the stock being distributed among his trusted employes, Mr. Stange owning the controlling interests. When he bought his present plant, it was far from new, and considerably run down; but his energy and business ability soon built it up to its present standard of efficiency, and to-day the concern stands at the head of all similar industries in Northern Wisconsin. Mr. Stange enjoys the unqualified esteem and respect of his employes, for reasons, chief among which, probably, is his thorough personal knowledge of the business in every detail, there not being a single machine in all the extensive plant that he can not operate himself—well-establishing his claim to be recognized as a master of every department of the industry.

In February, 1874, at Racine, Wis., Mr. Stange was married to Miss Emily Miller, a native of that city, and daughter of William and Hattie Miller, Germans by birth. Six children have been born to this union, named respectively: Hattie, Charles, Adaly, August, Emily and Lydia. In religious faith the entire family are identified with the Lutheran Church, while, socially, they are held in the highest esteem by the community.

Mr. Stange's business interests will not permit of his taking much, if any, active part in politics; but his popularity is such that he has, even in a measure against his inclination, been placed in public offices of trust and honor. For six years—or in fact until he positively declined to act longer—he served the city of Merrill as alderman, and in the spring of 1895, although a Democrat, he was offered the nomination for mayor of his adopted city by the best representatives of the Republican party of Merrill. We have said he does not take active part in politics, but he is looked upon as such an able adviser that he is repeatedly waited on and consulted on political questions of moment. One of his business capacity, administrative ability and unblemished integrity is certain to be sought after to fill positions where experience and sound judgment are essential, and to-day Mr. Stange is vice-president of the First National Bank, as well as one of the directors of the National Bank of Merrill. He takes great interest in the welfare and advancement of the city. Liberal in his views, and charitable almost to a fault, yet quiet and unostentatious, as becomes a man of modest mien, he has ever been a powerful supporter of any philanthropic or similar cause to which he could conscientiously give his sanction.

JOHNS S. COWAN, who is one of the most enterprising farmers of Almond township, Portage county, has thoroughly experienced in his career as a pioneer the vicissitudes and hardships which are inseparable from life on the outskirts of civilization, and has lived to witness the wonderful development of the Upper Wisconsin Valley.

He was born in Oshkosh, April 18, 1849, son of James and Mary (West) Cowan, natives of County Armagh, Ireland, who in 1828 emigrated to America. From Montreal they went to Genesee, N. Y., whence Mr. Cowan moved to Rochester, N. Y., and afterward to Erie, Penn., where he was engaged on the Erie canal. He then went to Warren, Trumbull Co., Ohio, where he bought a small unimproved farm, and began to clear it. In 1846 he pre-empted and occupied 120 acres of land in Algoma township, Winnebago county, near Oshkosh. That city then consisted of one store and one blacksmith shop. Settlers were few, and wild beasts abounded in the unbroken forests. Mr. Cowan came from Ohio in company with Noah and Clark Miles. He began life in Wisconsin without a team, but prospered and remained on the homestead in Algoma township until his death, April 14, 1882, the wife surviving him until October 27, 1889. Their children were Jane, now Mrs. D. B. Frost; Margaret (deceased); David; William (also deceased); Sarah; Mary Ellen; Martha; William, now with his brother John; Jefferson; John S., the subject of this sketch; and West, who occupies the old homestead in Winnebago county.

In his boyhood John S. Cowan attended the public schools, also the city high school, and graduated from the business college at Oshkosh. In 1870 he left his father's home and came to Almond township, Portage county, where for three years he was in the employ of his sister, who was then a widow. In 1873 he went to Lincoln county, S. Dak., and homesteaded a farm of 160 acres, consisting of prairie land. He remained here, engaged in wheat growing, until December 1, 1876. Mr. Cowan was married March 16, 1876, to Etta Frost, daughter of Locke and Maria J. (Frost) Frost, who emigrated to Wisconsin from Arlington, Mass. Taking his bride to the Dakota home Mr. Cowan remained there until the following winter, when, his wife being homesick and not liking the new country, they decided to return to Wisconsin. Starting in December they made the entire journey in an emigrant wagon, using sled runners when the snow permitted, and were seventeen days in reaching Almond township, Portage county. Until the following spring Mr. and Mrs. Cowan remained with her parents, then purchased from Mr. Frost a farm of 120 acres in Sections 22 and 27, Almond township. About forty acres were cleared and in good farming condition. Mr. Cowan constructed a frame house, 16 x 24, which is now a portion of their residence. Here they started anew in life. The team with which they drove through from Dakota, they lost, and the only stock they had on the new farm was a colt given them by his father. Plainfield, the nearest market, was eight miles distant. The work of clearing proceeded slowly but surely, and to-day Mr. Cowan has his whole farm under cultivation. In 1884 he purchased seventy acres of additional land, covered with hardwood timber, and easy to clear. In 1885 he made a one-and-a-half-story addition, 18 x 26, to his house. He built a substantial barn, 24 x 36, and each year has witnessed new improvements. Mr. and Mrs. Cowan have two children: Wayne F., born January 15, 1879, and Etta Irene, born July 14, 1881, both at home, and attending school. The son is at this writing preparing to enter the Normal school at Stevens Point, in 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Cowan are Spiritualists, and in politics he is a Republican. He was town clerk four years, and has served as assessor two terms. He was appointed chairman in 1893 to fill a vacancy, and in the following year was elected to that office. He is now serving his second year as school district clerk. Mr. Cowan is one of the prominent citizens of Almond township, and one of its most influential farmers.

L EVI PARSONS POWERS. There was no more progressive, well-known or more highly-esteemed citizen in Wood county than the gentleman whose name introduces this memoir—a man of but few words, quiet and undemonstrative, but of great force of character, and a credit to the profession to which he devoted his life.

Mr. Powers was born May 9, 1828, in Marshfield, Vt., and was a son of Parsons and Susan (Cooper) Powers. He was educated in his native town, and his early years were passed upon his father's farm; but at the age of sixteen he began teaching school, at the same time spending his leisure hours in the study of law. He began reading for the legal profession with a Mr. Wilkinson, and afterward continued his studies with Judge Poland, of Vermont. Coming west in 1849, he spent one year in southern Wisconsin, and then after two years' residence in Sauk City came, in 1852, to Grand Rapids. During his early residence here he was engaged in various lines of business; but after a time he entered upon the practice of his chosen profession, and was soon in the foremost ranks of the legal fraternity, being considered one of the best counsellors in this section of the State. He was fitted for leadership, being a broad-minded man, possessed of keen discernment and progressive views. In politics he was a stalwart Democrat, and when Wood county was organized he was elected clerk of the board of supervisors, holding that office for several terms. He served in the State Legislature of Wisconsin in 1863, and was the vice-president of the Wisconsin Valley Railroad Company, in the organization of which corporation he was an active and efficient mover, while up to the time of his death he served as its attorney.

Mr. Powers was possessed of a marvelous memory, and it was generally conceded that he had few rivals in his knowledge of law records, and also the history of Wood county and the State from the time of his residence within its borders. New settlers learned to look to and rely upon him for suggestions, aid and counsel in almost everything that pertained to their interests, and especially so in legal matters, until his fame became known throughout his adopted State and even beyond its limits, while his friends were legion. In his appearance he was unostentatious, but in his convictions he stood as firm as the mountains among which his early childhood was passed, yet he readily yielded to logical reasoning, and was ever earnest and untiring in his search for the key that would solve the problems presented to him through his life, doubting when he could not demonstrate. In religion it can not be said that he was an unbeliever. He had no fear of death, but the question of the hereafter he could not solve to his satisfaction. He never tired of studying and pondering upon religious and scientific subjects, and his ever honorable and upright life assures us that if existence is continued beyond the grave he will live in immortality. In his practice he made considerable money, but more often his services were unrequited by pecuniary remuneration. He seldom asked for a stated sum, letting his patrons give him what they believed to be his just due. He was generous and benevolent, ever kind and thoughtful of others, none could speak aught against him, and he probably had not a single enemy in his wide circle of acquaintances.

Mr. Powers was married, in Grand Rapids, September 8, 1870, to Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Robert and Mary Ann (Brown) Dickerson, and one daughter, Alta Charlotte, was born to them January 22, 1876. The devoted husband and father passed peacefully away on the morning of September 24, 1888. He has left an impress upon this State and her laws that will be seen and felt for many generations, and in the records of the courts has built for himself a monument more splendid and enduring than could have been made by the sculptor, and his memory will be cherished throughout Wood county and Wisconsin while the friends who have known him are still in life.

NICHOLAS GROSS. Among the enterprising, wide-awake hustlers of Stevens Point none is more deserving of special mention in the columns of this work than the gentleman whose name is here recorded.

Mr. Gross is a native of Lorraine, France (now in Germany), born April 4, 1854, a son of Nicholas and Christina (Demmerle) Gross, highly respectable and well-to-do farming people of that historic province. In 1865, accompanied by their then family of eight children, they set sail from Havre, France, in the ship "Bremen," and after a passage of forty-two days landed at New York, when they at once proceeded to Wisconsin via Buffalo, where they remained a short time. In the spring of 1866 they came to Portage county, and in the town of Sharon, at Poland Corners, the father, in 1867, built a tavern, which was known far and near as the "Poland Corner Tavern," the first hostelry ever seen in that neighborhood. Here he died, in comfortable circumstances, in 1876, his wife passing away at Stevens Point in 1892, and they were buried, the father at Poland Corners, the mother at Stevens Point. In religious faith they were members of the Catholic Church, and in political affiliation Mr. Gross was a Democrat. Their family of children were as follows: Born in Lorraine—Richard, a resident of Stockton, Portage Co., Wis.; Catherine, now Mrs. N. Jacobs, of Stevens Point; Victor, of the same place; Nicholas, our subject; Henry, living in Wausau, Wis., representing the Pabst Brewing Co.; Aloysius, member of the hardware firm of Gross & Jacobs, Stevens Point; Christina, now Mrs. John Khiei, of Stevens Point; Felix, who died at Poland Corners when twelve years old; those born in the United States are—Mary, a Sister of the Order of Notre Dame; and Rosa, now Mrs. John Martini. The father of this family at one time owned some land in this country, but never lived on it.

The subject proper of these lines received his primary education at the schools of his native place, and after coming to this country attended a short time a German school at Buffalo, N. Y., while the family were remaining there while on their westward journey. At the age of seventeen he left the parental roof, and coming to Stevens Point made his home here with a Mr. Jacobs, and attended the Second Ward School. For a time he found employment in a supply store; but prior to this he went up the river to Big Eau Claire to work on a lumber raft bound for St. Louis, Mo., in which expedition he came near losing his life, for on running down the Little Bull Falls he was accidentally knocked off the raft into the water. James McHugh, the pilot, made an effort to save him, Mr. Gross being unable to swim, in which effort (unsuccessful, it seems) McHugh lost his pocket-book, containing $250, and our subject a trouser leg. Mr. Gross finally succeeded in reaching shore through what is known among lumbermen as the "emptying of an eddy," his ardor for raft-running being thoroughly cooled. This occurred at a place called Mosinee, and by the time the raft reached Stevens Point, Mr. Gross concluded he had had enough of aquatic adventures, and embarked in the less perilous stream of commercial life, securing a position in a supply store, as already related. In 1877 he thought he would vary the monotony of life by trying his hand at railroad life, and proceeding to Colby he worked on the construction of the Wisconsin Central railway a couple of days, "riding the crowbar;" then once more returned to Stevens Point, making the trip on a freight train, whereof James Dorsey was conductor. For a time after this Mr. Gross worked in a supply store for Thomas Gray, the result of which was that in the fall of 1874 he opened up a saloon business on Main street, Stevens Point, between First street and the square, John O. Herren being his partner; but the business was not a success, and at the end of some six months was closed out. Our subject next tended bar for his brother-in-law, Nicholas Jacobs, at the "Jacobs House," and with him remained until 1877. From 1878 to 1881 he was employed in the machine shops of John and James Rice, keeping books and running machinery; then again opened out a saloon on the northeast corner of the Square, in which he continued alone until the spring of 1882, when he removed his business to the Lutz Block, on Main street, Peter Eiden becoming his partner. There Gross & Eiden continued the saloon till June, 1883, when Mr. Gross sold out to A. Watke, and began the handling of Pabst's beer, selling it by the carload from October, 1883, to May, 1884, since when he has been local representative at Stevens Point for that vast brewery, the trade of which has considerably increased under his careful management and thorough business capacity. On November 21, 1875, Mr. Gross was married at Stevens Point to Miss Johanna C. Splawn, who was born in Hartford, Washington Co., Wis., a daughter of Patrick Splawn, a native of Ireland; she was brought to Portage county when a year old, and was here reared and educated. The children born of this marriage were as follows: Nicholas, who died at the age of two years and two months; Alice, born November 7, 1882, still at home; and Mabel, who died when three years and sixteen days old. In politics Mr. Gross is a Democrat, and in 1878 he was a member of the school board; socially he is affiliated with the Catholic Knights, the Catholic Order of Foresters, and has served as trustee of each, at the present time being trustee of the Knights. In 1894 he built one of the finest dwelling-houses in Stevens Point, and he has every home comfort due to a man who has earned it well and is deserving of all he owns.

JAMES BARR. In every agricultural community there are some men who are generally known as poor farmers, and others who have the reputation of being good farmers. Among the latter class are a few who excel even among the excellent. The reputation of James Barr, of Belmont township, Portage county, is that he is one of the best farmers in the county. He is not specially interested in politics. It is the farm that interests him, and as a result he is a model for the man who wishes to make farming a successful business.

Mr. Barr comes of sound Scotch stock. Now, at the age of seventy, he is a very well-preserved man. He is one of a family of twelve children, all of whom lived to the age of twenty-one years, and six of whom now survive. He was born in Renfrewshire, Scotland, June 21, 1825, son of Robert and Janet (Pettiker) Barr. Robert Barr was a joiner, and supported his family in Scotland by working at his trade. Becoming discontented there, he made a prelimi-ary prospective trip to New Brunswick, and soon after, in 1827, he emigrated with his family, then consisting of four children, to a farm in Lower Canada, in a new and wooded country. He was a poor man, and sought a cheap home. On the farm he thus settled he lived through life, and died aged seventy-five years, his wife surviving to the age of eighty-six. Their family was as follows: Janet, now Mrs. Gilmour Danks, of Iowa county, Iowa; Jane, who married and died in England; James, subject of this sketch; Mary, who married and died in Michigan; Robert, of British Columbia; John, who died in Lower Canada; William, of Indiana; Margaret, widow of George Maxwell, of Lower Canada; Elizabeth, who married and died in Iowa; Isabel, who married and died in Lower Canada; Peter, of Lower Canada; and Allan, who died in Lower Canada.

James Barr was reared in a new country in Canada, where there were no schools for years; but, nevertheless, he got education enough to carry him through. When about eighteen years old he started out in life for himself, working at whatever he could find to do, chiefly lumbering for a while. For some time he worked in Lower Canada, then went to Upper Canada where for four years he was engaged in loading and unloading vessels at Port Ryerse, and during these years secured his start in life from wages of from twelve to eighteen dollars per month. He first came to Wisconsin in the winter of 1854-55, when he was engaged in lumbering on the Big Eau Claire river. Returning to Canada, he again came to Wisconsin in the spring of 1856, and settled on 120 acres in Section 21, Lanark township, Portage county, which he had purchased a year previous. It was a new piece of land, without buildings, and for three years he spent the summers in improving it, passing the winters in lumbering.

In 1860 he was married, in Lanark township, to Mary Donovan, who was born September 22, 1841, in New Brunswick, daughter of Patrick and Julia (Coughlin) Donovan. Patrick was a mason and stone cutter, and a great traveler. He lived successively in New Brunswick (Canada), Fall River (Mass.), Richmond (Vt.), Rensselaer county (N. Y.), Willimantic (Conn.), Upper Canada near the Suspension bridge, and in various points in Ohio. In the fall of 1854 he came with his family to Wau-paca, Wis., and later bought forty acres in Lanark township, Portage county, also pre-empting 120 acres and making the first improvements on the farm. The family first lived in Lanark township in a shanty twelve feet square, boarded up and down, and here during severe winters they suffered little from the cold as the house was so small it was easily kept warm. Mr. and Mrs. Donovan had ten children—five sons and five daughters. The parents both died in Lanark township, the father at the age of seventy-five, and the mother when fifty-three. Mrs. Barr when a girl of fourteen summers worked away from home, and as a domestic received wages as low as fifty cents per week. After marriage Mr. Barr began housekeeping in Section 21, Lanark township; in 1873 he removed to Section 19, Belmont township, where he had purchased 160 acres, and has lived here since. His four living children—John, William, Jessie L. and Allan—are all at home: three children, Robert, Anna and Jane, died young. Since coming to Belmont township, Mr. Barr has engaged solely in farming, and has erected all the substantial buildings which the farm now possesses. He is a great reader, and always has daily and weekly newspapers in his home.

FRANK FLETCHER, a representative citizen of Portage county, was born in the town of Burton-on-the-Water, Gloucestershire, England, December 18, 1848, and is a son of John and Charlotte (Humphries) Fletcher, who were also natives of that locality. The father learned and followed the trade of a baker in his native land, and in the spring of 1841 was married. In the spring of 1854, accompanied by his family, he sailed for this country on the "George Washington," a merchant vessel. They had previously intended sailing, but were fortunately prevented from doing so, for on the vessel on which they had intended taking passage yellow fever broke out, and nearly all on board died.

The Fletchers spent thirty-three days upon the water, and then continued their journey by rail to Oshkosh, Wis., where Mrs. Fletcher had an uncle living. Two years later they came to Portage county and located a claim, but after six months were obliged to leave, for it was found that a certain John Gray had a prior claim to the farm. In Buena Vista township the father secured eighty acres, which, however, reverted to the original owner. He next rented land for two years, and then purchased forty acres in Section 16, Buena Vista township, and now became more prosperous. He afterward bought an additional eighty acres, later the eighty-acre farm on which our subject resides, and subsequently a quarter section on which his son George is living, and eighty acres on which a nephew is living. He also owned forty acres of timber land, making in all 360 acres. In politics he was a Republican, and he was a valued citizen. His death occurred May 29, 1890, on the old homestead, when he was aged seventy-one years. His wife, who was born September 18, 1819, died a Christian in April, 1890.

Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher were the parents of eight children, viz.: (1) Arthur, a farmer of Belmont township, Portage county, married Sarah Handel (he served in the Union army throughout the Civil war); (2) Mary Ann is the deceased wife of Charles Wentworth, a farmer of Kansas, by whom she had one son, Louis, who married Margaret Gasman, and had two children—John and Perry; (3) William died in infancy; (4) Frank is the next younger; (5) Caroline is the wife of Gilbert Puaria, and they have six children—Charles, Fred, Daisy, Bessie, Ollie and Wayne (they reside in Buena Vista township); (6) Charles R., a farmer of Stevens Point, Wis., married Hattie Wanty, and they have four children—Pearl, Roy, Harry and Ray Arthur; (7) George, a farmer of Buena Vista township, married Emma Wanty, and they have six children—Eugenia, Irene, who died in infancy, John, Clara, Millie and Ward; (8) Herman D. is a car inspector in the employ of the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company at Stevens Point (he married Josie Grover, and they had three children—Guinevere, Gladys, and one that died in infancy).

Our subject was about seven years old when his parents came to America. He began his education in England and completed it in Buena Vista township; but much of his youth was spent in work upon the home farm. He also worked for others as a farm hand, and was in the lumber woods during two winters, also rafted lumber down the Wisconsin and Mississippi rivers as far as Hannibal. In May, 1874, he was married in Belmont, Wis., by Ira Whipple, justice of the peace, to Miss Sarah A. Berry, a daughter of Andrew and Angeline (Johnson) Berry, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the latter of Sweden. Mrs. Fletcher was born near Wausau, Wis., in the lumber region, where her father kept a boarding house. He was born August 4, 1814, and his wife on February 9, 1835. They still reside on the old homestead in Buena Vista township, Portage county; they had six children, of whom Mrs. Fletcher is the eldest; after her came Clara, born March 12, 1856, deceased wife of Nelson Winslow, a lumberman; Mary B., a milliner of Amherst, Wis.; William, who died in infancy; Andrew B., first married to Emma Young, and afterward to Barbara Young, by whom he has two children—Effie and Robert P.; Alice, born August 13, 1865, died in September, 1886.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher located on the farm which is still their home. His father had given him a deed to eighty acres of land, and to this he added 140 acres. For ten years they lived in a small frame dwelling, one of the first homes in the township, and in 1884 erected a commodious modern residence, in which they reside with their only child, Clarence, who was born April 6, 1878, and is now attending school in Buena Vista township. Mrs. Fletcher is a member of the Methodist Church at Liberty Corners, and takes quite an active part in Church work. In politics Mr. Fletcher is a staunch Republican, and has served as supervisor about eight years, being at present a member of the board

He has been clerk of the school board eighteen years, is a warm friend of the cause of education, and gives his hearty support to all worthy enterprises and interests calculated to prove of public benefit.

ALMON MAXFIELD holds a leading place among the enterprising and prominent men of Plover, Portage county, where he is now carrying on a successful mercantile business. He is a native of New Hampshire, born in Goshen, November 5, 1829, and is a son of Jonathan C. (a farmer) and Judith (Cheney) Maxfield, who had a family of three children: Almon, Electa E., wife of John Patterson, a lumberman (they have a family of children), and Leander, a miner of New Mexico.

The educational privileges of Almon Maxfield were but meagre, all the literary training he received being obtained in an old log school house. He was early inured to hard labor, however, and began life for himself at an early age. In 1840, accompanied by his parents, he moved with their children to Janesville, Wis., and here our subject was engaged in work by the day. Wisconsin at that time was considered on the frontier, and there were few inhabitants in the section where they located. Almon made his home in that vicinity until 1850, in which year he came to Plover. His mother for many years had been an invalid, and it was mainly on account of her health that the family had come west; her death occurred in Janesville in 1842. The remainder of the family arrived in Portage county in 1852, and for many years the father made his home at Stockton; he died at the home of our subject in 1892, at the age of eighty-three years.

Almon Maxfield engaged in general labor for about five years after coming to Plover, at the end of which time he purchased 120 acres of totally unimproved land. For two years he made his home with a family who were living upon his farm, and then on June 20, 1861, he was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Rice, a native of New York, and daughter of Benona and Mary (Livingston)

Rice, who also had a son, Lemuel G., a merchant of McDill, Wis. Her father followed the vocation of farming, and with his family emigrated to Wisconsin about the year 1852, locating in Plover; since 1894 both he and his wife have resided with our subject. Mr. Rice has now reached the ripe old age of eighty-three, his wife being eighty-one. To Mr. and Mrs. Maxfield have been born four children: Irene, now the wife of W. W. Dake, who operates her father's farm in Plover township; Cora E., now employed as bookkeeper for a merchant in Gladstone, Mich.; Marion E., attending the Normal School at Stevens Point; and Julian F., at school.

Until 1886 Mr. Maxfield carried on agricultural pursuits in Plover township, Portage county, and during that period cleared and developed his fine farm of 120 acres. In that year he removed into the village of Plover, and has since engaged in merchandising, carrying a stock valued at $3,000. He has a well-appointed store, in which he conducts a lucrative business, receiving a liberal patronage from the people of Plover and the surrounding country. Politically he always supports the Republican party, and on its ticket was elected supervisor for four years; he also served as justice of the peace. He possesses the entire confidence of the community in which he lives, and is held in the highest respect by all with whom he comes in contact. Mrs. Maxfield is a true Christian woman, and a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to whose Aid Society she belongs.

HENRY KOLLOCK, one of the early pioneers and successful farmers of Almond township, Portage county, was born in New Brunswick, November 12, 1828, son of Shepherd F. and Mary Eliza (Taylor) Kollock, both natives of New Brunswick.

Shepherd F. Kollock was by occupation a lumberman and fisherman, and the shifting center of the lumbering interests induced him several times to move. He lived for some years in Maine, and in 1836, soon after the death of his wife, he moved west, settling near Detroit, Mich., where he engaged in farming. Four years later he came to Waukesha, and followed lumbering, living with his eldest son, William, who owned land. Here the father died in 1843. He had nine children, as follows: William, who died in Kansas; Jane, who married Thomas Curry, a harness maker, and died in Michigan; Wellington, a resident of Buena Vista township, who was killed in the tornado of 1863; Ann C., who, as the widow of Michael Little, lives with her children at Detroit, Mich.; George, an hotel keeper at Merrill; Mary Eliza, wife of George Sanford, a farmer and lumberman at Hustisford, Dodge county; Henry, of Almond township; Nelson, a farmer of Almond township; and Frances, widow of B. F. Cooper, of West Superior.

Until the tender age of eight years our subject received some educational advantages in the East, and he can remember when a teacher could be employed for $1 per week; on coming west with his father his school days were less frequent. After the father's death, which occurred when Henry was fifteen years old, he remained at the home of his brother William for three years, then with his brother Nelson he came to Wausau, and for six years they worked in the pineries. Then, in 1852, the two brothers came to Almond township, where they bought a claim of 320 acres, at that time unsurveyed. They lived for a time with their brother Wellington, in Buena Vista township, and their nearest neighbor was John Moss, who occupied the land now known as the Dickson place. The brothers had oxen, and at once began breaking up the land. Henry was married, March 20, 1854, to Permelia Barber, daughter of Chester Barber, a cooper by trade, who had been a soldier of the war of 1812, and who came from New York to Waushara county, Wis., about 1847, engaging in farming until his death, several years later. When Henry Kollock was married about fifty acres of the land was under the plow. He built a frame house, 16 x 24, and here the two brothers lived. They speculated in land to some extent, and remained in partnership until 1873, when they divided 560 acres between them. Henry now owns 200 acres. He is the father of four children, as follows: Ella A., who married Walter Nugent, of Plainfield, Wis., and died at the age of thirty-five years, leaving one child, Cora E.; Cora D., now Mrs. William Brady, of Almond township; Edith, now Mrs. Charles H. Pratt; and Shepherd F., at home. All the children have been school teachers except Shepherd F. The latter was married November 12, 1894, to Anna Smith, daughter of Osborn and Sarah (Clark) Smith. Osborn Smith, a plumber by trade, is now a farmer of Buena Vista, and is the father of twelve children, as follows: William (deceased), Jennie, Anna, Alice, Ella, Maggie, William (2), Catherine Reece, Maria, Theresa, Adeline and James. Politically Mr. Kollock is a Republican, and in ante-bellum times he was, like his father, a Whig. He is a prominent member of Plainfield Lodge No. 208, F. & A. M., and is one of the most influential and most highly-respected citizens of Almond township.

FREDERICK SHOEMAKER. It has been said that the life of every man, if properly written, would be as interesting as a romance. Few lives perhaps have so well typified the rewards that come to a man of honor, bravery and fidelity after a prolonged battle against adverse fate, as that of him whose name appears above, one of the most highly honored citizens of Dayton township, Waupaca county.

He was born in Alsace, France (now Germany), August 27, 1826, son of Jacob and Elizabeth Shoemaker, the former of whom, who was a farmer, died when Frederick was fourteen years of age, the eldest of three children. The property was ample but incumbered, and upon the shoulders of the young lad fell the main burden of the fight against accumulating interest and foreclosure. The struggle was manful, and for a time kept the little family at home with the mother. In 1845 and 1846 there was a notable exodus of emigrants to the United States, the promised land of liberty and plenty. It was partially with the hope of placing his mother beyond want that Frederick, too, a lad of twenty, in the year 1846 resolved to try his fortune in the new country. Bidding his mother, brother and sister adieu, he proceeded via Strasburg, Paris, Rouen and Havre to New York, landing with but five dollars in his pocket. Unable to speak English, he in vain sought work for several weeks, and his little fund was exhausted. Finally he succeeded in borrowing ten dollars to take him to his uncle, who lived in Orangeville, Wyoming Co., N. Y. He reached Attica, ten miles from his destination, penniless, and started afoot for his relative's home. All night, in the blustering month of March, he tramped in the cold and snow, but lost his way and was compelled to turn back. Not daring to go to the hotel, for he was without money, he hung around the depot till directed anew, and this time he succeeded in reaching his destination. He remained there a month, then lived out at seven dollars per month with Marshall Cowdin, "if he suited," and remained seven months. Then he worked near Attica, N. Y., for eight dollars per month. Returning to Orangeville, N. Y., good fortune awaited him. His services were engaged by Truman Lewis, a prominent farmer and dairyman, and for three and a half years he remained on that farm. Better fortune still, he in 1850 married Miss Jane Lewis, daughter of his employer. She was born June 30, 1826, of Puritan extraction. Truman Lewis was one of the most prominent men of his county, and at one time was a member of the New York Legislature.

Yours truly
F. Shumaker

Having saved his money, though much of it was sent to his widowed mother, Mr. Shoemaker purchased a farm in Weathersfield township, Wyoming Co., N. Y., which he occupied two years. He then returned and worked for his father-in-law. In the spring of 1853 he started with his wife for a Western home. Oshkosh, Wis., was his destination, which was reached via the lakes, stage, and lake again. Here he met an acquaintance, and while looking around he was advised by an Oshkosh merchant to go to the Indian land then just opened up. Acting on the advice, he proceeded by boat to Gill's Landing. Leaving his wife here, he proceeded to Dayton township, and by chance met Lyman Dayton, formerly of Attica, N. Y., who he was surprised to discover was a personal friend of his father-in-law, Truman Lewis. Mr. Dayton interested himself in the newcomer, and gave him some valuable hints upon making a location. Mr. Shoemaker finally purchased the southwest quarter of Section 15 from Thomas Morgan, who had made some improvements on that place, clearing three acres and building a small house, and in May, 1853, in an ox-wagon, the purchaser brought his wife and small outfit to their new home. The first purchase of ninety acres was augmented from time to time until, in 1893, previous to the transfer of some 270 acres to his sons, the farm included 450 acres. Meantime matters had not prospered in the old country, for the old home was sold, leaving the mother in straitened circumstances. She lived to the age of seventy-five, and her support came largely from Wisconsin. Elizabeth, the only sister of Frederick, married Charles Haenel in Europe, and emigrated to the United States. Her husband died in New York City, and she returned to Alsace. Again coming to New York City, she married Christian Schuele, and died in that city in 1885. Jacob, the only brother of Frederick, entered the French army, and on account of his superior military presence became a member of Louis Napoleon's body guard. He is now a station agent at Moncel, on one of the government railroads of France. The children of Frederick and Jane Shoemaker are Lewis F., Lucy (now Mrs. A. R. Potts), Truman and Corinne, all residents of Dayton except Corinne, who is living at home.

In politics Mr. Shoemaker is a staunch Republican, and though he has not been an office seeker has twice served his township as supervisor. For thirty-five years he has been an elder in the Presbyterian Church, of which he and his wife are members. He was trustee also, for years was Sunday-school superintendent and chorister, and in 1883 was a delegate to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, at Saratoga, N. Y. While nearly seventy years old, he has the health and strength of a man many years younger. Thoroughness, honesty and fairness have been the characteristics of his successful life. He is one of the best types of self-made men, and is most happily situated at the old homestead, in the midst of his children, who are following in his footsteps and thus exemplifying a high citizenship.

JACOB H. VAN DOREN, an extensive manufacturer at Birnamwood, Shawano county, was born December 17, 1846, in Steuben county, N. Y., near Naples. Isaac O. Van Doren, father of our subject, was probably born in Holland, at any rate he was of Dutch descent; his father was married in New Jersey to Rebecca Smith, and they became the parents of six children: Abraham, Mary Ann, Isaac O., Jacob, William and Samuel. He was an early settler in New York, and came to Wisconsin in 1852, settling near Oshkosh, where he remained until his death in 1864; his wife passed away in 1862.

Isaac O. Van Doren, father of our subject, was married in Naples, N. Y., to Sarah Bush, who was born in that town in 1824, one in a family of eight children, viz.: Paulina, Sarah, Vinna, Jane, Myra, Rufus, John H. and Arthur. Both the parents died in New York. By this marriage Isaac O. Van Doren became the father of nine children, as follows: Adelaide, James, Jacob H., Alfrida, Ella, Wheeler, Frank, May and Charles. He was a farmer by occupation, and came to Wisconsin in 1854, settling on a farm in Winnebago county, near Oshkosh, also carrying on a hotel. The mother dying at this home in 1880, the father married again; he is now living in Brown Valley, Minnesota.

Jacob H. Van Doren, the subject of this sketch, attended the common schools in his native State, also after coming to Wisconsin, and assisted his father upon a farm until he was twenty-one years of age. He then went to Menasha and bought a livery stable, which he managed one year, when he sold out and embarked in the lumber business in Shawano county, remaining there one year. His next step was to buy a farm near Oshkosh which he operated two years, and then purchased a farm in Green Lake county. Here he lived for four years, when he again disposed of his property, and moving to Oshkosh engaged in the grocery business, which he carried on some eight years. In June, 1884, he sold out his store, and coming to Birnamwood bought a small mill. In July he sold a one-half interest in this to his present partner, B. B. Andrews, and they are now carrying on an extensive business, which has grown from an investment of $2,000 to the value of $50,000. Their plant consists of a sawmill, shingle-mill, stave-mill, planing-mill and an excelsior factory, and they employ forty men the year round; they also conduct a general store in connection with their establishment. These various industries, which have done so much for the growth and prosperity of this section of the county, are managed with much ability, and by the latest and most approved methods, and testify to the foresight and good judgment of their owners. The town, which numbered only one hundred people when these factories were started, now has a population of four hundred, and is a growing and prosperous village.

Mr. Van Doren was married March 20, 1870, to Miss Anna Cook, who was born in Winnebago county November 20, 1850, daughter of Levi and Harriet (Shelton) Cook, natives of Vermont, who came to Wisconsin in an early day, where the father engaged in farming. He died in 1879, leaving a family of six children: Clara, Anna, Charles, Albert, Julia and Flora; the mother is still living. To our subject and estimable wife five children have been born: Guy, who superintends the store and is bookkeeper for the company; Flora, now Mrs. Thomas Cannon; Ray, attending Wisconsin State University at Madison; and Dee and Clyde, both still at home. Politically Mr. Van Doren is a Republican, and he has been a school director six years, having ever taken a deep interest in the cause of education. He is self-made, and ever ready to help those who are striving to make a way for themselves in the world. Though an energetic business man, he yet takes time to do much charitable work, and is liberal to the Church and all worthy objects. He is highly respected in the community of which he is a valuable citizen. Birnamwood was organized as a village in the spring of 1895, and Mr. Van-Doren was chosen its first president. With his family he attends the Congregational Church. He was too young to go into the army during the Civil war, but one of his brothers, James K., when he was seventeen years old enlisted in the First Wisconsin Cavalry, and served throughout the war, in all five years. He had some exciting experiences, and was made prisoner three times.

REV. E. J. HOMME, owner and manager of the Orphans' Home and Home for homeless old people at Wittenberg, Shawano county, Wis., was born at Thelemarken, Norway, October 17, 1843, a son of John and Carrie (Lund) Homme.

John Homme, father of our subject, also a Norwegian by birth, born in 1817, was a cabinet maker in his native land, a business he made a success of, and was married in Norway to Miss Carrie Lund, by whom he had eight children, as follows: Evan J., subject of sketch; Ole, now a resident of Houston county, Minn.; Osmond, a wagon maker and carpenter in Wittenberg, Wis. (he is married and has five children); Miss Helga, who has charge of the boy's department in the Orphans' Home, Wittenberg, in the capacity of assistant matron; Birgitte, married and living in Clay county, Minn.; Annie, who married Oscar Frohling, and died leaving a family of children, three of whom are inmates of the Orphans' Home at Wittenberg; Andrew, an engineer with residence at Grand Forks, N. Dak.; and Frederick, foreman of Kemnitz Manufacturing Company, at Green Bay, Wis. In 1854 the parents came to America, locating in Dane county, Wis., where for two years the father worked at his trade, or until 1856, in that year moving to Houston county, Minn., settling on a piece of land, and there combined farming with cabinet making during the rest of his busy life, dying in 1885 at the age of sixty-seven years; his widow is now passing her declining years with her son, Ole, in Houston county, Minnesota.

Rev. E. J. Homme, the subject proper of these lines, after attending elementary schools, at the age of nineteen entered college, taking a two-years' course, and then proceeded to St. Louis, Mo., where, at Concordia Seminary, he commenced the study of theology, at the end of three years being ordained a minister of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America. He then, in 1867, took up his abode in Winchester, Winnebago Co., Wis., and was pastor of the Lutheran Church there some fourteen years, thence in 1880 coming to what is now Wittenberg, of which village he may be said to be the founder, there not being a human being in the place when he came to it. He walked all the way from Tigerton (a distance of nine miles), which at that time was the terminus of the Lake Shore & Western railroad.

From a pamphlet, published in 1894, at Wittenberg in the interest of the Orphans' Home at that village, is gleaned the following: The village of Wittenberg was founded February 13, 1880, by Rev. E. J. Homme, which event happened in the following way: The Norwegian Synod, to which Rev. Homme belonged at that time, had for several years discussed the great need of a home for orphan children and homeless old people, as no such institution existed among the Norwegian Lutherans of America. Rev. Homme declared his willingness to take the lead in this move toward the establishment of such a home, on the condition that he be at liberty to select the place for it. To this the Synod agreed, but declared that he should consider this as a private enterprise, and not undertake the erection of buildings with the idea that the Synod should be obliged to pay for them. On the other hand, the Synod promised to lend their support to every honest means he might make use of in furthering the cause. On the 27th of January, 1880, a number of German Lutheran clergymen resolved to form an association for the purpose of establishing a high school (an academy or progymnasium) for the congregations in this section of the State. Rev. Homme was a member of this association. The German brethren resolved to locate their high school in the same place where Rev. Homme thought of building his Orphans' Home. At the same meeting it was decided to select a location between Clintonville and Wausau on the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western railway, which was then being built through the western portion of Shawano county. A committee was elected to inspect and choose a site, said committee consisting of Jonas Swenholt, of Scandinavia, Wis., John Uvas, of Winchester Wis., Aug. Kraenke, of Reedfield, Wis., and Rev. Homme (at that time stationed at Winchester, Wis.). The committee accomplished its mission the 9th and 10th of February of the same year (1880), and chose this region for the founding of a Wittenberg.

Rev. Homme immediately wrote a petition to the railroad company, that the station which was then in contemplation of establishment might be named Wittenberg, to which the railroad company responded favorably. The railroad had at that time not reached that far, and the whole region about was a dark and lonely wilderness, devoid of the habitation of man. The first sign of civilization in Wittenberg was a log cabin made by the railroad company for some of its laborers; the first frame building in the town was a store, built in the spring of 1880 by Jonas Swenholt, of Scandinavia, Wis. The following year Rev. Homme built his residence there, and moved thither with his family November 4, 1881. By August 26, 1882, the Orphans' Home was completed, and on that day was opened with an enrollment of four children and one aged man. During the next summer, 1883, Rev. Homme built a second building (school house) for the use of the orphans, and on October 31 the whole institution was solemnly dedicated, Rev. A. Mikkelsen, of Chicago, officiating. This institution was located in the southern part of the village, on Blocks 30 and 31. The same fall of 1883 the German Lutheran clergymen had their high-school building completed, and school began on the 1st of September. After a course of six months, however, the building was utterly consumed by fire, and school was again resumed in Rev. Homme's Orphans' Home. In the summer of 1884

the building was rebuilt by Rev. Homme, but the school was not continued any longer. The next year the school was converted into the present German Orphans' Home.

In 1882, on motion of Rev. Homme, a committee was appointed by the Norwegian Synod to investigate what could be done in regard to the founding of an Indian mission in that vicinity. As the Synod did not take any steps to realize the Indian mission, this committee went to work independently to establish an Indian mission. It selected a place three and one-half miles west of the village of Wittenberg, where in the fall of 1884 a small school was established, and engaged a teacher for some Indian children.

In 1885 the committee resolved to move the Indian Mission School nearer to the village. A large building, the erection of which was superintended by Rev. Homme, was completed, and dedicated by Rev. J. Ellestad in the summer of 1886. Rev. T. Larson, of Harmony, Minn., was chosen by the committee as principal of this Indian mission. Rev. Homme made an application to the National Government for pecuniary aid for the Indian Mission School, which was complied with. In 1887 the Norwegian Synod obtained full possession of the Indian mission, and has continued it till the present date.

Through the exertions of Rev. Ellestad and Rev. Homme a Normal school was established here in 1887 in connection with the Orphans' Home. The school was continued for three years till the establishment of the United Lutheran Church, in 1890. In 1885 Rev. Homme built and equipped a printing office in connection with the Orphans' Home. From this institution "For Gammel og Ung" has been issued every week, and has reached its 14th volume. Out of this institution are also sent forth two weekly Sunday-school papers (Søndagskole Bladet and Sunday School Helper) respectively, the first Norwegian and English Sunday-school papers issued among the Norwegians in America. The Orphans' Home has been in existence for thirteen years, and during this time two hundred children and aged persons have at different times had their homes here. At present writing there are seventy-five children and nine aged people at the Home. On June 11, 1882, a Norwegian Lutheran congregation was formed, which now numbers forty families, exclusive of the inmates of the Orphans' Home. The trustees of the congregation are Peter Olson, Ole Johnson and Andreas Grimstad. The minister serving this congregation and the Orphans' Home is Rev. E. J. Homme; H. Madson is deacon of the congregation. The corner stone for this new Orphans' Home was laid September 23, 1894, by Rev. G. Hoyme, of Eau Claire, Wisconsin.—So much for what we glean from the pamphlet.

In truth it reads more like a fairy tale than a bare statement of facts, and a view of the grounds, whereon stand the Home and collateral industries, reminds one more of the work of an enchanter than of a single-handed mortal. Mr. Homme came to Wittenberg a poor man, yet fearlessly and hopelessly built and equipped a school which furnished a retreat for some seventy-five homeless boys and girls, which he soon began to realize was too small for his philanthropic purpose. Securing a tract of 360 acres of heavily-timbered land on the Embarrass river, one and one-half miles from Wittenberg, he there established a fine water power, and in 1892 erected a sawmill with a capacity of 35,000 feet per diem, a planer and matcher, and also a shingle-mill. In 1894 he began the erection of his new Home, which is now (July, 1895) under roof, and will be completed for occupation in 1896; when finished it will accommodate two hundred children, have an excellent school and a select library. The old building will be converted into a Home for homeless old people. He has also erected a factory, equipped with a sixty-five horse-power steam engine, and here it is his intention to manufacture church furniture, thus furnishing the children with employment, at the same time teaching them a trade, thereby making it as nearly as possible a self-supporting Industrial School. Mr. Homme has nearly one hundred and fifty acres of land under cultivation, where the boys are taught the science of agriculture, and in connection with the Home he will in the near future erect a gristmill, in addition to all which it is his intention to introduce other industries, thus making the locality a manufacturing center. It is stated in another part of this sketch that Mr. Homme was instrumental in founding and erecting the Indian Mission and the German Lutheran Orphans' Home, but he is now in no way connected with either.

In 1869 Rev. E. J. Homme and Miss Ingeborg Swenholt were united in marriage, and eight children have been born to them, named respectively: William (a graduate of Northfield College), Clara J., Carl J., Iuga, Martin, Anna, Francke and Gerhard. Mrs. Homme was born, in 1845, at Stone Bank, Waukesha Co., Wis., daughter of John and Ingeborg Swenholt, natives of Norway, who came to this country in 1844, finally settling in Scandinavia, Waupaca Co., Wis., where the father died and the mother is yet living. In his political preferences our subject is a staunch Republican, and he is one of the most highly respected citizens of Shawano county, popular in the extreme. In 1893 he was nominated against his wishes for the State Senate, and although defeated received a highly flattering support. In all his marvelous success, the result of indefatigable perseverance, assiduous industry, and sound judgment, Mr. Homme never forgets to give his amiable wife due credit for her share in the labor of love, which has by no means been a small one.

LUTE RICH, one of the most progressive and public-spirited young agriculturists of St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, is the adopted son of Henry A. Rich, a sketch of whom follows.

Our subject was born October 20, 1865, and when an infant of eleven months was adopted into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Rich. He attended the common schools of the vicinity of his new home, and also received instruction from his foster-mother, Mrs. Rich; was reared on a farm, and has spent some time in the lumber woods—never, however, being absent from his foster parents for more than two months. He was married December 10, 1884, at Ogdensburg, Waupaca Co., Wis., to Miss Ella A. Pray, who was born July 15, 1862, in Sherman township, Sheboygan Co., Wis., daughter of Edward and Mary J. (Sweet) Pray, both now deceased, the father, who was born in February, 1874, and was a soldier in the Civil war, dying July 18, 1864, of a wound, in a hospital at Philadelphia, the mother, who was born in July, 1824, passing away in St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, February 8, 1890. To Mr. and Mrs. Lute Rich have come two children: Ada M., born October 15, 1885, and Roy, born February 20, 1889. In his political preferences Mr. Rich was a Democrat until 1894, since when he has been as active in the ranks of the Republican party as he had previously been in those of the other. He is regarded as one of the exemplary young men of his township, a good farmer, possessed of sound business methods, and enjoying the esteem of many warm friends and admirers.

Henry A. Rich was born April 28, 1822, in the town of Bucksport, Hancock Co., Maine, a son of Benjamin Rich, a sailor by vocation, who by his wife Debora (Ayery), had a family of ten children—two sons, Benjamin, Jr., and Henry A., the former of whom was a farmer and died at Bucksport, Maine, at the age of eighty-five years, and eight daughters who all married and all died in their native State. Benjamin Rich, Sr., the father of these, died in Bucksport, Maine, in the full faith of the Universalist Church, of which all the rest of the family were members.

Henry A. Rich was reared on a farm, and remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-one years of age, at which time he went to sea as a cod fisher on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, being employed by parties who make that a regular business. This he followed six months, or until December, 1847, at which time he was married, an event that will be presently fully spoken of. He and his young wife then took up housekeeping on the Isle of Wetmore, Hancock Co., Maine, situated at the mouth of the Penobscot river, where he was employed cutting wood, thence in the spring of 1848 moving to near the town of Bucksport, same county, where for a couple of years he lived on a farm with his brother Benjamin, after which he removed to Prospect, in the same county, and during four summers was employed on the construction of Fort Knox, on the Penobscot river, holding the responsible and often dangerous position of head blaster on that work. In the fall of 1854 he removed to Wisconsin with his family, taking steamer from Bucksport to Boston, thence rail to Buffalo, from there by boat to Detroit, from which city they took rail to Chicago, then boat to Milwaukee, thence stage to Fond du Lac, again boat to Oshkosh, thence up Wolf river to Mukwa township, from the landing place to the home of Mrs. Rich's parents in Little Wolf township. [In 1850 Mr. Rich had visited Wisconsin, and was in the vicinity of Oshkosh and Wolf river prospecting for a home, but could find nothing to suit him, in fact was rather disgusted than otherwise, declaring that he would not accept a certain 160-acre tract of land (where Oshkosh now stands) "if it were tendered him as a gift."]

For a year Mr. and Mrs. Rich made their home with James Eldredge (her father). Mr. Rich's first work in his new western home being in the woods; then in the spring of 1855 he took a business trip to Maine, his wife during his absence filling the position of temporary teacher of the first school in Royalton township, which was held in a partially completed store room in the village of Royalton, that township, the regular teacher, Lizzie Crane, being sick. In the fall of 1855 he bought eighty acres of land in Section 24, St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, on which not a stick of timber had been cut by white man, and here a farm house was the first building to be erected, a good one for those times, and later on he bought forty acres of marsh land. The only inhabitants in that town when Mr. and Mrs. Rich arrived were: Judge Ogden and Dreutzer, Simeon Hopkins, Marshall Levitt, William Shambau, Henry W. Eldredge, Smith L. Wait, William Cain, Hiram Collier, Smith Collier, Henry Carrick, Levi Carrick and Peter Shepherd. Ogden &

Dreutzer were building the first mill at Ogdensburg, Henry Eldredge being the millwright. For fifteen winters after coming to Wisconsin Mr. Rich followed lumbering in the woods, his summers occupied in improving his farm. Mrs. Rich taught the first school in their district in her own house.

On December 29, 1847, Mr. Rich was married on the Isle of Wetmore, Maine, to Miss Elizabeth A. Eldredge, who was born December 29, 1829, in Bucksport, Hancock Co., Maine, daughter of James and Susan (Warren) Eldredge, both also natives of that State, the former a millwright by trade, born March 11, 1800, in Bucksport, the latter in Troy (near Augusta) May 28, 1801. They had a family of thirteen children, as follows: The first child died in infancy, David (at the age of seventeen years was lost at sea on the schooner Capt. Ginn, near Cape Cod), Henry W. (died at Little Wolf, Waupaca county, at the age of sixty-nine years), Elizabeth (deceased at the age of two years), James, of La Crosse, Wis. (a natural sailor, ex-captain of a Wolf river steamboat, and who served in the navy during the war), Elizabeth A. (Mrs. Rich); Harriet (married to Watson Wadwell, died in St. Lawrence township), Alvira (married to Smith Wait, and also died in St. Lawrence township), John (died in town of Little Wolf, Waupaca Co.), Isabella (married to Edson Casey, and died in St. Lawrence), also three that died in infancy unnamed.

In 1850 Mr. and Mrs. Eldredge migrated westward to Wisconsin, settling in Little Wolf township as pioneers of the almost unexplored region, and here hewed out a comfortable home. He and his wife both died in St. Lawrence township, November 9, 1861, and January 24, 1886, respectively, and sleep their last sleep in Ogdensburg Park Cemetery.

Henry A. Rich died August 18, 1887, after a two-years' illness, and also lies buried in Ogdensburg Park Cemetery. He was a medium-sized man, wiry and energetic, a good citizen and excellent farmer, leaving a comfortable competence, the result of his individual industry and perseverance. Since his death his widow has continued to reside on the old home farm. She is a most intelligent and interesting old lady, possessed of a very retentive memory, and consequently is a charming conversationalist. She is a member of no particular Church, believing in the broad and humane Church of Christ, and a straightforward course through life, with charity to all. She and her husband had no children, but adopted Lute Rich as related in sketch.

AUSTIN ALEXANDER BIERCE, treasurer of the village of Iola, Waupaca county, was born March 11, 1829, at Hudson City, Columbia Co., N. Y., a son of Alexander Neely Bierce, who was a native of Massachusetts, and a direct lineal descendant of William Bradford, who landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620, and was first governor of the Plymouth Colony. The mother, Deborah A. (Morrison) Bierce, was a native of New York.

When our subject was but one year old the family moved to Greene county, N. Y., where they resided until 1835, when they removed to Schoharie county, N. Y., and here our subject's boyhood was spent in laboring on the farm and in a sawmill. As one of the older children of a family of eight, his work during his younger days was necessarily severe. When he had reached the age of nineteen his parents, stricken with the western fever, again moved, this time in May, 1848, to Illinois, at that time a wilderness, and settled near the then small town of Dixon, the county seat of Lee county. Austin here apprenticed himself to one Charles Edson, and learned the trade of carpenter.

On July 4, 1850, at China, Ill., he was married to Lydia Alice Hopkins, daughter of William W. and Salome (Adams) Hopkins, both natives of Connecticut. Mr. Hopkins was a lineal descendant of Stephen Hopkins, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Mrs. Hopkins was a lineal descendant of Governor Bradford through another of his sons, of which he had three. Thus two distant branches of this Colonial family were united. Lydia Alica Hopkins was born September 21, 1832, at New Milford, Penn., and was brought by her parents to Illinois in 1845.

Mr. and Mrs. Bierce's first child, Martha J., was born May 26, 1851, and August 3, 1855, a son, Neely, was born, but lived only one short year, dying August 4, 1856. In 1858 the cry of new country struck into the minds of the young couple, and in May of that year they came to Wisconsin, settling at Iola, Waupaca county, where they now reside. Another daughter, Lenora May, was born to them, May 3, 1860. Shortly thereafter the voice of war began to be heard, and December 3, 1863, Mr. Bierce left his wife and children to answer to the call of his country, enlisting in Company K, Tenth Wis. V. I., as private. After serving in this regiment for eleven months he was transferred as corporal to Company K, Twenty-first Wis. V. I., where he was soon promoted to sergeant, and in which he served until the close of the struggle. His war service took him with Gen. Sherman on that memorable march to the sea from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Savannah, Ga., and through the Carolinas and Virginia to Washington, where he took part in the Grand Review of the war veterans. His regiment was then transported by train and boat to Louisville, Ky., where they were mustered out June 18, 1865. For nearly two years after the war Mr. Bierce was unable to work at his trade as carpenter, on account of rheumatism contracted in the service. Six months of this time were spent with relations in Illinois.

On May 30, 1868, his last child, Burton L., was born, and two years later, May 31, 1870, his eldest child, Martha, died. In 1885 Mr. Bierce was granted a pension of six dollars per month, and in June, 1890, this was increased to sixteen dollars per month. At this time, the old trouble, sciatic rheumatism, had made almost a cripple of him, and he is still most severely troubled with it.

Mr. Bierce settled in Iola when it could hardly be called a hamlet; where the now beautiful streets lie it was but a wilderness. For thirty-five years his residence has been on the same lot on which it now stands, his two remaining children being located near by—the son on one side and the daughter at the opposite side of the parental home. Mr. Bierce has been a Republican in politics from his first vote to the present time, his first vote for President being cast for "Rough-and-Ready" Zach. Taylor. Never an office-seeker, he has held at different times town offices, and in 1893 was elected treasurer of the village of Iola. He was re-elected in 1894, and is the present incumbent. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bierce have been active members of the M. E. Church for years, and are members of the M. E. Church at Iola at the present time. Mr. Bierce is also an active member of the G. A. R., and the present commander of Iola Post No. 99, Iola.

FINN LAWLER. The Province of New Brunswick, Canada, has given to the United States, and to the State of Wisconsin, especially, a goodly number of her stalwart, industrious and loyal citizens, among whom the subject of this sketch stands prominent.

Mr. Lawler was born in Douglas, Northumberland Co., New Brunswick, May 8, 1845, a son of John Lawler, who was of the same nativity, having first seen the light about the year 1825. The family are of Irish descent, grandfather Patrick Lawler having been born in Queen's County, Ireland, where he married Miss Margaret Finn. In 1824 they came to Canada, settling in Northumberland county, New Brunswick, where they died, the grandfather in 1877, the grandmother in 1880. They had a family of seventeen children, of whom only the names of the following six are remembered: John, James, Mary, Margaret, Jane and Elisha. Patrick Lawler and his wife were employed some thirty years in the Marine Hospital which was established in Northumberland county, N. B., by the British Government. John Lawler, father of Finn Lawler, is at present living at Newcastle, N. B., four miles from where he was born. He was educated at St. John, same province, and became a licensed school teacher, a profession he followed many years, some of his old scholars now holding government offices in both the United States and Canada, not a few of them being members of Parliament. In 1862 he was appointed register of deeds for Northumberland county, which office he still holds, and is also a magistrate by government appointment, his commission, which is dated 1863, bearing the signature of Queen Victoria. On November 6, 1844, Mr. Lawler was married to Miss Sarah Landy, who was born on the ocean, daughter of John and Sarah Landy, natives of Ireland, the former of whom worked in the shipyard at Douglas, N. B., and was drowned in the river Miramichi. Mrs. Sarah (Landy) Lawler had one brother—John—and three sisters—Ann, Mary and Betsy. To John and Sarah Lawler were born thirteen children, as follows: Margaret, Jane, Finn, Richard, James, Rogers, John, Eliza, Mary Ann, and four that died in infancy. On November 6, 1894, the parents celebrated their "golden wedding."

The subject proper of these lines, whose name appears at the opening of this sketch, received his education under his father's able tuition, and when the latter became register of deeds he took his son, Finn, into the registry office with him. Here the lad remained about three years, or until October, 1863, when, at that time eighteen years old, he went to New York City, where he found employment with a lumber company for the first three days as common laborer; but his employer, discovering his aptitude for figures, at once promoted him to the position of tally-keeper. In February, 1866, he came to Wisconsin, spending a few months among relatives at Shullsburg, Lafayette county, then in the spring moving to Chicago, whence after a short time he returned to Wisconsin, and in the then village of Oshkosh found employment in a clothing store some sixteen months. The proprietors of the store, concluding to open a branch establishment at Neenah, sent our subject there to take charge; but in 1868 he left that business, and moving to Shawano, Wis., clerked in a hotel there one winter, in the following spring taking up his residence in Portage, where he was once more employed by the clothing firm he had previously worked for. At the end of eighteen months the firm dissolved, and our subject, then turning his attention to the Wolf River Valley, in December, 1871, set out via the military road for Rice Lake (on the Wolf river), a place boasting at that time of but one house, and here, in company with William Johnson, he commenced trading with the Indians, so continuing some two years. During this time he had considerable experience as a woodsman, and in 1875, in company with one Perry, he came to Eagle River, where he has since resided, his chief occupation being connected with timber lands—prospecting, estimating, surveying, etc.—and for several years he served as deputy county surveyor. He handles hardwood, pine and spruce timber, and timber is estimated and sold on commission, taxes also being paid for non-residents. In this he is in partnership with A. A. Denton, the style of the firm being Denton & Lawler. They are also considerably interested in land in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

In his political preferments Mr. Lawler is a Democrat; was the first chairman of the town, first school clerk, and in the spring of 1895 was elected assessor. Much thought of by his neighbors, he enjoys the respect and esteem of many warm friends in Eagle River, in which rising young city he takes an active interest. Mr. Lawler has two brothers living in New Brunswick, the one, Richard A., a lawyer in Chatham, the other a commission merchant in Newcastle, who is also deputy registrar of deeds for the county of Northumberland; he has also two brothers, John and James, both residing at Eagle River, lumbermen by occupation. Our subject is the only one of them, no doubt, who can boast of being able to speak the Chippewa (Indian) language. He has just completed a cosy residence on the bank of Eagle river, in a grove of maples and balsams, among the trees which he loves and where he has spent a large part of his lifetime. He owns some village and considerable outside property which will in time no doubt become valuable. Mr. Lawler has not yet married, but unless all signs fail he may in the near future.

CHARLES E. SEARL, the pioneer jeweler of Merrill, Lincoln county, still continues in the same line in that city, where he is one of the leading business men. He was born in Grand Rapids, Wis., March 14, 1851, and is a son of J. K. Searl, a native of the Buckeye State, born on June 2, 1818. The paternal grandfather, Elisha Searl, was born in Vermont, and by his marriage with Miss Boborety, who was of German descent, became the father of six children, namely: William, Frank, J. K., a daughter whose name is not given, Loretta and Jemima. Near Dayton, Ohio, he carried on a hotel, but later removed to Illinois, locating near Rock Island, but afterward went to Iowa, where he passed his last days.

J. K. Searl, who was next to the youngest in his father's family, acquired his education in the common schools. On reaching man's estate he was married in Illinois to Miss Leah Kline, who was born in Nunda Valley, N. Y., in 1824, a daughter of George Kline. Her parents were both natives of Germany, where they were married, and to them was born a family of eight children: George, John, William, Elizabeth, Sarah, Leah, Charles and Mary. Her father was a contractor and builder, and on first coming west, located in Illinois, but in 1838 removed to Grand Rapids, Wis. His eldest son, George Kline, Jr., was among the first settlers of the latter place, arriving there in 1833. The son's wife was the first white woman north of Fort Winnebago; she was the widow of Daniel Whitney, who built the first sawmill on the Wisconsin river. George Kline, Jr., also erected a mill at Grand Rapids at an early day, and his father's death occurred there in 1853; the mother of Mrs. Searl died in 1870. George, Jr., went to California about the year 1851.

The father of our subject also located in Grand Rapids, Wis., in 1844, where he lumbered, afterward dealing extensively in horses, and was something of a politician, holding many minor offices. He departed this life in December, 1892, in Merrill, though his home at the time was at Wautoma, Wis. To him and his worthy wife were born twelve children, two of whom died in infancy. The others are Mary J., Alonzo W., Charles E., Lillian, Henry, Emma E., Elbert F., Ernest E., Nila B. and Vinnie D. E. The mother after her marriage taught the first school in Grand Rapids, or in fact north of Fort Winnebago; this was in 1846, and was a private school. She was called to her final rest January 4, 1888. The eldest brother of our subject served during the Civil war as a member of the Fifty-second Wis. V. I.

Until he had reached the age of eight—een Charles E. Searl was able to attend school, thus acquiring a good common-school education, and then carried the mail from Grand Rapids to Friendship, Wis., for his father. In the spring of 1870 he accompanied his parents to Adams county, Wis., but in the following fall he returned to Grand Rapids and commenced to learn the trade of jeweler with his uncle, William Kline, for whom he worked four years. In 1875 he went to Wautoma, Wis., and started in business for himself, at which place he continued three years, when he removed to Westfield, Wis., remaining there but one year, during the fall of 1879 closing out his business there and coming to Jennie, now known as Merrill. When he arrived here the village contained only about five hundred inhabitants, while now it is a flourishing little city of nine thousand. He was the first jeweler in the place, and still continues to conduct the same business, in which he has met with excellent success.

On December 23, 1875, Mr. Searl was united in marriage at Wautoma, Wis., with Miss Emma A. Bean, who was born in that city, in 1859, to Albert and Arvilla (Conner) Bean, both of whom were natives of New Hampshire, and is one of a family of eight children—Charles, John, Francena, George, Fred, Katie, Ed and Emma A. Her parents came to Wisconsin in 1856, where her father followed his trade of blacksmithing; his death occurred in 1872, that of his wife in 1880. To Mr. and Mrs. Searl were born six children, to wit: Ed, who is married and lives in Merrill; Harl, Ethel, Arthur and Nile at home; and Glen, who died at the age of about eighteen months.

Mr. Searl may be properly classed among the self-made men of Lincoln county, who by the exercise of their own industry and perseverance have not only gained for themselves a competence, but have materially assisted in the progress and advancement of the country around them. He has made many friends since coming to Merrill, and by all with whom he comes in contact is held in the highest respect. Socially he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, while politically he casts his vote with the Prohibition party as it embodies his views on the temperance question.

GOODMAN AMUNDSON, one of the honored and respected pioneers of Waupaca county, now makes his home in Iola. His birth occurred in Norway, December 27, 1843, and he is a son of Amand Olson, a farmer of but ordinary means. In 1849 the father with his family of five children left Norway for the United States, and were six weeks and five days on the ocean, landing on American soil in the latter part of August. From New York City they proceeded up the Hudson, and by the Erie canal to Buffalo, N. Y., thence around the lakes to Milwaukee. They located on a farm in the town of Muskego, Waukesha county.

In the summer of 1852 the father brought his family to Waupaca county, where land was cheaper and more of his countrymen then lived. There were no railroads at this time, and two yokes of cattle hauled them and their household goods, while their stock was driven. They came by the way of Berlin, Wis., the road being through a new country, and where now are good farms at that time was an unbroken forest. They located on a farm in Scandinavia township, it being in Town 23, Range 11 east, and was in this primitive condition, they making the first improvements. A portion of it was covered with timber, but the almost annual forest fires at that time had destroyed most of the trees, and nothing but bushes remained. After the settlers came in the fires were not so numerous, and soon clumps of oak trees grew up and are standing as timber today, where, easily within the memory of our subject, there was nothing but brush at one time. His father followed farming during the remainder of his active life, and his death occurred March 9, 1895, at the age of ninety years. His wife was called to her final rest in July, 1891, when she had reached the extreme age of ninety-seven years. Both were buried in the Lutheran Cemetery in Scandinavia, Wis., of which Church they were among the first members. The father possessed great vitality even at his advanced age, and shortly before his death performed labor becoming even a man sixty years his junior. He was a good farmer, very energetic, and was respected by all who knew him. In his political affiliations he was a Republican.

Mr. Amundson was reared as a pioneer farmer boy, and to quote him: "His education or schooling was begun in early life, and consisted principally in handling a yoke of cattle and a breaking plow." Much of this was to be done, and his attendance at school was quite brief, as few if any schools were in existence in the township when he arrived. He lived at home until the age of eighteen when he began the trade of a blacksmith with Samuel Silverthorn, at Waupaca, where he was at work when President Lincoln called for troops to aid in the preservation of the Union. Being a young man, robust and strong, Mr. Amundson enlisted in the service of his adopted country, becoming a member of Company G, Twenty-first Wis. V. I., August 12, 1862, at Waupaca. From there he went with the regiment to Oshkosh, Wis., later to Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., and thence to Louisville where the campaign opened. He was ill during the battles of Perryville and Stone River, so that his first engagement was at Chickamauga, after which he remained with his regiment, never losing a day off duty until August 6, 1864, when before Atlanta. He was struck with a bursting shell which exploded above him, the force of it hurling him fifteen yards. His companions thought that he was dead, and though badly hurt, he insisted on going with the regiment, which the doctors finally permitted, but for ten days was unable to do active duty. His regiment went with Sherman to Savannah, and he participated in the campaigns of North and South Carolina, later taking part in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C. He was discharged in that city June 25, 1865, but the regiment remained intact until reaching Milwaukee, Wis., where it was mustered out. Mr. Amundson immediately returned to Waupaca county, and in Scandinavia township, in 1867, married Miss Christina Hermanson, a native of Winneconne, Wis., daughter of Herman Hermanson, "Little Holt," who came from Norway to America in 1852. To them were born seven children: Augusta, wife of Rev. L. K. Abarg, of the Lutheran Church in South Dakota; Hattie, who died at the age of fifteen; and Agnes E., Lillian R., Hilda, Ada and Edna, at home.

After his marriage Mr. Amundson located at Amherst, Wis., where he built a shop, and for ten years carried on blacksmithing, after which he engaged in the same business for three years in Winchester, Winnebago county. He then returned to Amherst where he still owned property, which later he traded for a farm in Alban township, Portage county. After farming there for a year and a half, he in the fall of 1886 came to Iola, and for three years was in the employ of Frogner Brothers, since which time he has conducted a shop of his own with good success. For the last fifteen years he has suffered from rheumatism, which greatly handicaps him, but he is still enterprising and industrious.

Mr. Amundson has never taken a very active part in political affairs, but always votes with the Republican party, and for one year served as township treasurer. He was one of the organizers of Iola Post, No. 99, G. A. R., in which he has held various offices, and is now serving as senior vice commander. Himself and wife are connected with the Lutheran Church, and while a resident of Amherst he was one of the officers in that religious body. By his own industrious efforts he has become a well-to-do man, and still owns a good farm of one hundred and twenty acres in Alban township, Portage Co., Wis. He has seen the many changes that have taken place in the country where he lives; can remember when wild game was very plentiful; and deer could be shot from the cabin door. He has hunted the cows on the present site of Iola, when for miles and miles there were no fences. Farming was then carried on with very crude implements, and he used to come to mill at Iola in the cold winters on an old sled, wearing no overcoat or overshoes, yet could stand the cold better than with the modern equipments of the present day. He is well known in this community where he has long resided, and by all is held in the highest esteem.

ANTON G. WILLIAMS was born August 24, 1862, on the farm which he now owns and occupies in the township of Scandinavia, Waupaca county.

His father, Ove Williamson, was born in Norway January 20, 1819, was educated in the schools of his native land, and the days of his boyhood and youth were passed upon the farm. His marriage to Miss Annie Kjos took place in Norway in 1844, and five years later, in 1849, he crossed the Atlantic in a sailing vessel to the New World, where he hoped to secure a home and competence. He first located in Muskego, Wis., where he worked as a common laborer some three years, coming thence to Waupaca county in 1853. He was one of the first settlers, and is now the second oldest living resident in Scandinavia township. The hardships and trials of pioneer life are familiar to him, and the history of that county is known to him from the days when it was an almost unbroken wilderness, inhabited mostly by Indians. He has borne an important part in the work of development, transforming the land from its uncultivated condition into rich and valuable farms. Here he purchased 160 acres of wild land, on which not a furrow had been turned or an improvement made, and successfully continued its cultivation until 1884, when enfeebled health caused him to lay aside business cares, and he is now living a retired life. He worked for many years on the river rafting logs, and his career has been that of an industrious energetic man, bringing to him a well-merited competence. Mrs. Williamson, who was born in Norway, September 29, 1820, is also yet living. He is a staunch Republican in politics and has served in several local offices with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He filled the office of assessor for twelve years, and has also been township treasurer. He and his family are members of the Lutheran Church. The children were Annie, now the wife of August Larson, a resident of Wausau; William, who is living in La Crosse, Wis.; Andrew, the efficient sheriff of Waupaca county; Berit, deceased; Denah; Buck, who is located in Iola, Wis.; Edward Ove, of Waupaca; Anton G., subject of this sketch; and Lewis B., deceased.

Anton G. Williams conned his lessons in the public schools near his home, and acquired a good practical education. Under the parental roof he was reared to manhood, and at an early age he began work in the fields, so that he was soon familiar with farm work in its various departments. He now owns and operates the old home farm on which he was born, comprising 120 acres of land, the greater part of which is under cultivation and improved in a manner that indicates his practical and progressive spirit, and makes his farm one of the best in the community. He is accounted one of the representative agriculturists of Waupaca county, as well as one of its most prominent citizens. He has been called to official honors, having served as a member of the town board of supervisors and as treasurer of the school district, and in his political views has followed his father's example by always supporting the Republican party. Like the honored family to which he belongs he is connected with the Lutheran Church.

REV. JACOB PATCH. This venerable gentleman, now in the eighty-first year of his age and the forty-ninth of his ministry in the Presbyterian Church, is one of the best known and most highly esteemed clergymen of Portage county, an earnest Christian, and a zealous worker in the Lord's vineyard.

Mr. Patch was born in Groton, Mass.,

January 12, 1815, and is a son of Zara and Susan (Nutting) Patch, who were also born in Massachusetts, and were descendants of good old Puritan stock, the ancestors having come over during the year 1600. The grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary war of 1776, and the father a participant in the war of 1812. Zara and Susan Patch were the parents of eight children, of whom but two now survive: Zara, who is still living in Groton, Mass., and Jacob, the subject of this sketch; when the latter was twelve years old the father died.

At the age of sixteen our subject went to Sharon, Conn. He was educated at the Western Reserve College at Hudson, Ohio, and took his theological course at the Theological Seminary in the same town, graduating from the latter institution in 1845. Soon afterward he engaged in the ministry, his first charge being at Orland, Ind. In 1845, at Honeoye Falls, N. Y., Rev. Jacob Patch was married to Miss Jane Bush, and they became the parents of six children, of whom two are deceased. The following is a brief account of the four who are yet living: George H., an artist of more than ordinary merit, married Miss Lauretta Ramsey, of Barton, Washington Co. Wis., and they have a family of four children; Jennie B., an invalid, is now residing in California for the benefit of her health; Mary H., a physician, and now residing at Stevens Point, is a graduate of Holyoke College, Mass., also of the Medical College of Chicago, and of the Training Hospital for Nurses at Hartford, Conn.; Martha Ann, now the wife of Dr. Daniel Campbell, of Canfield, Ohio, is a graduate of the Oxford Female Seminary, of Oxford, Ohio, and was principal of Poynette Academy, Poynette, Columbia Co., Wis., for the first six years of its history.

At Lima, Ind., in 1846, Rev. Jacob Patch was regularly ordained a minister of the Presbyterian Church, and he was pastor of the parish of Orland, Ind., for twenty years. In 1866, on account of ill health, being obliged to resign the pastorate of this parish, he removed to Stevens Point, Portage Co., Wis., where he took charge of the First Presbyterian Church, which at that time had a membership of only ten persons, but under his ministrations of four years it increased to forty. In 1872, having regained his health, he was solicited to return to his old parish at Orland, Ind., and accordingly he again ministered to the spiritual wants of that parish, continuing there for a period of three years, then returning to Stevens Point. Since that time he has been engaged principally in missionary work, in towns along the line of the Wisconsin Central railroad, though frequently occupying pulpits in various other churches. He was also the organizer of the Presbyterian Churches at Phillips, Price county, Wis., and Marshfield, Wood Co., Wis. In social life Rev. Mr. Patch is a man of ardent and sincere attachments, ever ready and willing to serve his friends, often in the face of responsibility or personal risk. When duty has called, he has gone forward without faltering or shrinking by reason of apparent difficulty or threatened dangers, by day or by night, at home or abroad. An earnest worker in the field of his Master, a genial and companionable friend, an able organizer and executor, ready for any task that can rightly bring help or comfort to the burdened, he has won the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends, and been endeared to them by his Christian walk in life.

AUGUSTUS SCHROEDER, a prosperous agriculturist of Little Wolf township, Waupaca county, is a native of Prussia, Germany, born October 22, 1838, a son of Henry and Caroline (Ulrich) Schroeder, who were the parents of eight children: Minnie (who, and four others, died in Germany), Augustus, Caroline (now Mrs. Weisgerber, of Weyauwega, who has five children), and Albert (a farmer of Lind township, Waupaca county).

In 1857 Henry Schroeder, with his wife and children, emigrated to the United States, and coming to Wisconsin, settled in Lind township, Waupaca county, where he purchased forty acres of land, none of which was cleared except two acres, but not having much timber growth on any portion. A dwelling, 16x24 feet, had been erected, and here the family commenced their New-World home, numbering among the first settlers of that locality, Waupaca being then but a small village. Later the father purchased another eighty-acre tract adjoining his first purchase, and he and his wife are yet living on the old homestead, he at the advanced age of eighty-two years, she being some four years younger. For his age the venerable father is unusually active, and it is worthy of mention that in 1893 he walked from his own home to that of his son, a distance of twelve miles.

The subject proper of these lines, whose name introduces this sketch, received a fairly liberal common-school education, and was reared to practical farm life under the instruction of his father. At the age of twenty-one years he rented a small piece of land near the homestead, in Lind township, Waupaca county, and worked it with his father's implements and team, so continuing until 1862, when he purchased eighty acres of wild land in the same locality, which he improved and cultivated till the fall of 1864. At that time, on October 15, he enlisted in Company C, Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., which regiment was sent to Nashville, there remaining on guard duty, as part of the reserve force until February, 1865, at which time it was sent to Kentucky. Here our subject was stationed until August, 1865, when he was discharged and returned home, and once more he devoted his time and attention to the improvement of his land. In 1872 he moved into the village of Weyauwega, and there opened a meat market which he conducted altogether about two and one half years, after which he bought a hotel in the same village, being proprietor of the same some six years, or until 1882, when he traded the hotel property for the farm he now owns in Little Wolf township, consisting of 115 acres, twenty of which are in good arable condition. On January 11, 1866, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Rhoda (Smith) Van Vorst, whose husband, Asa Van Vorst, died in the Civil war, leaving two children: Dora (now Mrs. Fred Zastrow, of Royalton), and William (living at the present time with his step-father).

To Mr. and Mrs. Schroeder were born two children: Alice (married to George A. McKinley of Iowa, but died leaving one son, Neil, who passed from earth in infancy) and Mary (now a school teacher, and living at home). In politics our subject has been a Republican for the past twelve years, and Mrs. Schroeder and her children are all members of the Methodist Church, in which she takes an active interest.

Mrs. Rhoda Schroeder, wife of Augustus Schroeder, was born November 29, 1838, in Herkimer county, N. Y., daughter of Oliver and Lydia (Cross) Smith, well-to-do farming people, who had a family of twelve children, as follows: Oliver, a carpenter of Shiocton, Wis.; Elizabeth, now living in Weyauwega, Wis.; Owen, who now lives in Royalton, Wis., retired; Sarah, Nancy and Mary, all three deceased; Rhoda, Mrs. Schroeder; Jerome, who died in the war; Lydia, now wife of William Kurtz, a farmer of Dayton; John, deceased; Garrett, and Lucretia, wife of Isidore Como, in the employ of a railroad company at Stevens Point, Wis. In 1850 the family came to Wisconsin, settling in Lind township, Wau-paca county, where the father bought 160 acres of land, at which time Weyauwega was a hamlet of but two or three shanties. Here the parents of Mrs. Schroeder passed the rest of their honored lives, dying, the father December 1, 1860, the mother January 23, 1879.

RICHARD A. COOK, proprietor of the Central City Iron Works, at Stevens Point, Portage county, is a highly esteemed citizen and one of the leading manufacturers in that city. He was born of English ancestry in Netherton, near Huddersfield, England, May 24, 1850, and is a son of John and Jane Cook, who were the parents of five children, three of whom survive, namely: Richard A.; Mary Etta, wife of John D. Shaffer, a prominent dry-goods merchant of Stevens Point, and George W., a machinist and roundhouse foreman on the Wisconsin Central railroad at Waukesha, Waukesha county, Wisconsin.

John Cook, with his family, came to the United States about the year 1855, located in Burlington, Racine county, Wis., and there pursued his vocation of woolen manufacturer. In 1866 he removed with his family to Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac county, and died there soon afterward; his widow still survives, and resides in Stevens Point. The son, Richard A., who was a five-year-old lad when the family came to the United States, was reared and educated in Burlington, Racine Co., Wis., went to Fond du Lac with his parents in 1866, there learned the trade of machinist, and resided there until 1875. In that year he removed to Stevens Point, where, in connection with Daniel Seyler, he purchased the Pinery Iron Works, and conducted business under the firm name of Seyler & Cook for four years. About 1879 this partnership was dissolved and a new one formed with George A. Packard, under the firm name of R. A. Cook & Co., under which the business was carried on until 1883, when Mr. Cook purchased Mr. Packard's share in the business.

The works were destroyed by fire in October, 1889, and during the following summer the extensive establishment known as the Central City Iron Works was erected.

In April, 1882, at Sheboygan Falls, Sheboygan Co., Wis., Richard A. Cook was united in marriage with Miss Eliza A. Trowbridge, and two children were born to them, one of whom survives, Alice Estelle. Mrs. Cook died at Stevens Point, October 4, 1888, and May 19, 1890, Mr. Cook married Miss Delia E. Damp, of Oshkosh, to which union has been born one child, Ralph A. Mr. Cook is a member of Evergreen Lodge, No. 93, F. & A. M., of Crusade Commandery, No. 17, and of Forest Chapter. He is a stanch Republican in his political views; in religious affiliation the family attend the Episcopal Church. Mr. Cook has the most extensive and best equipped foundry in Stevens Point, if not in the whole of northern Wisconsin, turns out everything connected with sawmill and gristmill machinery, as well as other classes of iron work, and furnishes the Wisconsin Central Railroad Company with all their castings, with the exception of car-wheels. He is a prosperous and progressive manufacturer, of unusual culture and brilliant faculties, takes a deep interest in matters tending to the welfare of the city and county generally; is represented in the city council from the Second ward, having been elected at the last election for the term of two years. Mr. Cook has a high character for honesty and integrity, and his genial manner has won him hosts of friends.

JAMES E. ROGERS. This well known and popular citizen of Stevens Point, Portage county, was born in Jefferson county, N. Y., December 18, 1842, and is a son of James N. and Eliza (Adams) Rogers, who were born in New York State, and who came to Wisconsin in June, 1852, locating in Hartford, Washington county.

James N. Rogers, father of the subject of this sketch, worked at his trade of blacksmith in Hartford, Wis., in connection with the building of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, and in 1853 removed with his family to Mayville, Dodge county, where he resided till 1868. A portion of this time he worked at the blacksmith trade, and later engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1868 they removed to Portage county, and purchased a farm in the town of Stockton, where they passed their remaining years, each living to an advanced age. They were the parents of seven children, of whom five are living, namely: Maria, wife of Ira Johnson, residing in the State of Washington; James E.; Cornelius L., residing in Stevens Point, Portage county; Josephine, wife of George Rhodes, residing in Dakota; and Henry, residing in Stevens Point. There is also a daughter by a former marriage, now the wife of N. C. Lawrence, residing in Stevens Point. Mrs. Rogers died in March, 1890, at the age of eighty-one, and Mr. Rogers in November of the same year, aged eighty-three.

James E. Rogers, subject of sketch, came to Wisconsin with his parents when he was but ten years of age, received a common school education in the village schools of Mayville, Dodge county, Wis., and was afterward employed during the summer on his father's farm, and in the winter teaching school. In the spring of 1871 he was elected clerk of the courts for Portage county, and filled that position till January, 1881. In the fall of 1880 he was elected to the Legislature, representing Portage county one term. In the summer of 1881 he received an appointment as examiner in the pension office at Washington, resigned after one year, on account of ill health, and returned to Stevens Point. After remaining here about a year, and having regained his health, he was re-appointed to the pension office, returned to Washington in the spring of 1883, and remained there through the summer. In the fall of the same year he was detailed from the office as a special examiner for a portion of the State of Iowa and of southern Dakota, and filled that position four years, at the end of which time, or in the fall of 1887, he returned to Washington, and was engaged in quarrying two years. In the spring of 1890 he was chosen city clerk of Stevens Point, which position he resigned July 11, 1895, having discharged the duties thereof for upward of five years, with honor to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the citizens generally.

In December, 1890, in Waupaca, Waupaca county, Wis., James E. Rogers was married to Miss Mary Baker, of Stockton, Portage county, and to this union have been born two children, only one of whom, Mabel, is now living. Mr. Rogers is an active member of the Republican party, and represented the Second ward of Stevens Point during 1879 and up to the spring of 1881. He is an enterprising and progressive citizen, and has many friends. The family are consistent members of the Baptist Church.

NATHANIEL POPE, one of the leading farmers of Lind township, Waupaca county, and an expert and successful cattle buyer, was born in Chautauqua county, N. Y., June 3, 1829, son of Nathaniel and Ida (Mattox) Pope, the father a native of Connecticut, the mother of Vermont.

Nathaniel Pope, Sr., was by trade a shoemaker, and in addition to following that vocation made an effort to win a better livelihood by farming. The family of children consisted of George M., who died in Lind township; Sarah A., widow of A. Gardner, of the same township; Pliny, a lake captain, who was drowned in Lake Michigan on the brig "Tuscarora;" Alexander, of Erie county, Penn.; Alvin, of Nebraska; Alfred, who died in infancy; Nathaniel; Albert, of Lind township; and Mary Ida, now Mrs. David Parrish, of Waupaca.

Nathaniel, the subject of this sketch, received such an education as the schools of Erie county, Penn., afforded. He was a studious lad, with an active and inquiring mind, and he preferred the fireside with a book of instruction or adventure to the wilder sports of country boys. Yet his father's means were limited, and the boy could not indulge his studious habits to any great extent. At the early age of fourteen he commenced for himself the battle of life. While yet a mere boy he began to sail on the lakes, and as early as 1847 touched Green Bay, Wis., and visited other ports in that State. For six years he was on the lakes. A desire to see more of the world, and perhaps, too, the greater opportunities open to an ocean sailor induced him, in 1849, at the age of twenty years, to take a trip from Racine, Wis., to New Orleans. There he shipped for New York, Philadelphia and Boston, making one trip from New York to Philadelphia as mate. The California gold fever was then raging throughout the United States, and in 1849 he went round the "Horn" on the schooner "Kate." The vessel put in at Valparaiso to refit, and Mr. Pope, leaving her, reshipped on a Spanish bark which reached San Francisco on the Sunday morning of the great fire which destroyed that city. Remaining in San Francisco for about a month, he spent eighteen months in the gold-mining country, and then returned to New York via the Isthmus; reaching his father's home in Erie county, Penn., a few days later, he was seized with a fever which disabled him for two years. The young man had seen the world, and was ready to settle down. In the spring of 1853 he started with his brother Alvin for Wisconsin, the brothers reaching Sheboygan by boat, thence proceeding across the county to Oshkosh embarked on the steamboat for Gill's Landing, and made their way through the wilderness to Lind township, Waupaca county, where Nathaniel and his brother Alvin purchased 160 acres of land in Section 16. A few weeks later the parents joined him, and made their home thereafter with him until their death, which occurred many years later.

In 1855 Mr. Pope was married in Waupaca county to Miss Eliza J. Loomis, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1838, daughter of Lyman Loomis. Their children were as follows: Ella, now Mrs. Leroy Jones, of Lind township; Pliny, also of Lind township; Charles L., who died at the age of twenty-six years; Rush L., of Lind town; Alice, who died aged three years; Ola, now Mrs. Henry West, of Lind township; Gale, Guy, Albert, Bertha, Lyle, all of Lind township, and Ethel, who was drowned at the age of fourteen years. Mrs. Pope, who was a member of the M. E. Church, died July 21, 1886.

Mr. Pope has prospered greatly during his residence of more than forty years in Lind township. It was here that he did his first farming for himself, and here that he drove his first ox-team. In addition to general farming he began to deal in stock soon after his arrival, and for forty years he has bought and sold cattle. A better judge of cattle it would be difficult to find, and it has been his keen perception of the value of stock, together with his business ability, that has made him so successful as a dealer. He now owns about 360 acres of land. Politically Mr. Pope is a Democrat in principle, and he supports the party when its principles are maintained. He has filled many local offices, including those of supervisor, clerk, treasurer, pathmaster and school director. He is a self-made man, for his capital in early life was only his courage and ambition. He gave himself a thorough practical education, and has always been a hard worker. In his youth he was as poor as a young man could well be, yet he not only has amassed a competence, but to his parents he gave aid and comfort throughout their lives. When young he spent money freely, but he afterward acquired a practical knowledge of its value. His first suit of clothes, after the homespun with which in his boyhood he was attired, he earned as a sailor. He had taken advantage of his father's trade when a boy, and could at one time make an excellent pair of boots or shoes. Gifted with mechanical aptitude and powers of observation, Mr. Pope was equipped by nature to make a success in life. Casting his lot among the pioneers of northern Wisconsin, he has rightfully risen to the commanding esteem and respect in which he is held by his fellow men.

ALBERT A. DENTON. This gentleman, who is well known as a prominent and enterprising citizen of Eagle River, Vilas county, was born in Kent county, Mich., near Grand Rapids, June 18, 1847. His grandfather Denton was a British soldier during the Revolutionary struggle, and at one of the battles received a bullet in his leg, which memento of the war he carried to his grave.

John W. Denton, father of our subject, was born in Pennsylvania, of English ancestry, and had four brothers—Samuel, George, William and Daniel—and three sisters—Mary Ann, Caroline and Joanna. He married Minerva Bartholomew, by whom he had six children: Mary J., L. Bradley, Albert A., Charles F., Ella M. and John W., Jr. In 1839 he moved to Michigan, for a time making his home in Kent county, near Grand Rapids, whence, in 1850, he moved to Mill Point, Ottawa county, same State. In 1852 he built a large store and hotel at Eastmanville, also in Ottawa county, Mich., known as the "Denton House," which in 1861 he sold, and then removed to Grand Rapids, purchasing an elegant dwelling there; but in 1862 he moved to a farm south of Lowell, Kent county, which and his city property, however, he soon afterward traded for a fine farm in Keene township, Ionia county, also in Michigan. In the fall of 1868 he and his two sons took a canoe trip up the Muskegon river to Houghton Lake, a distance of some two hundred miles, hunting, fishing and looking up pine lands, after which he made annual trips to the same locality, ultimately locating a homestead at Houghton Lake, renting his Keene township (Ionia county) farm and moving his family to his new property. In the fall of 1877 he returned to the farm, and passed the rest of his days thereon; he died in 1885, while on a visit to his son Albert; his widow is still living. He built the first logging railroad in Michigan, which was known as the "Barbers railroad." In his political leanings he was a strong Democrat, but never aspired to office, and he had the reputation of a worthy, honorable citizen, kind-hearted and charitable.

Albert A. Denton, the subject proper of these lines, was educated at the common schools of the locality of his boyhood home, and remained under the parental roof until his marriage. In 1870 he went to Houghton Lake, and for ten years was there engaged in lumbering, taking a homestead. In 1880 he sold out and bought property at East Saginaw, Mich., whither he removed his family, and then took a trip to Central America for the purpose of looking up valuable timber, coming direct from there to Eagle River, Wis.; but this was not his first visit to Wisconsin, as he had already, some years before, traveled considerably throughout the State. Here his family rejoined him, and in April, 1884, he bought property, built the "Denton House," which he conducted six years, or till July, 1890, when he sold it. Mr. Denton then went on an exploring expedition to northern Minnesota, passing three years there, having located government land, and then returned to Eagle River, where he has since made his home, his chief occupation being that of land broker and timber estimator.

In 1868 our subject was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Hart, who was born in 1848, daughter of Lewis and Nancy (Sherman) Hart, natives of Herkimer county, N. Y., where they were married, and whence they came to Michigan about the year 1845, settling in Keene township, Ionia county, where their daughter Elizabeth was born. They were the parents of eight children, their names being: Henrietta, Mary, Phebe, Elizabeth, George, Franklin, Mayland and Milo. The father of these died in 1888; he was a Republican in politics, and served his county as treasurer, also holding many minor offices. The mother is yet living. The family are descendants of German immigrants who settled in the Mohawk Valley many years ago. To Mr. and Mrs. Denton has been born one child, a son, Louis, at present attending school at Valparaiso, Ind. In politics our subject is a Democrat, and has been chairman of the town; was assessor and also postmaster under the Democrat administration; while a resident of Michigan he served as postmaster, was county treasurer, also sheriff, and held various other offices; he assisted in the organization of Roscommon county, Mich.; was also a member of the county board at the time of the setting off of Oneida county, Wis. He is and has been all his life a typical frontiersman, and is recognized as a useful citizen and member of the community.

FRED M. MASON, county superintendent of schools, Oneida county, with residence at Rhineland, was born at Charleston, S. C., June 3, 1842, a grandson of James Mason, a native of England, whence, when a boy, he came to Virginia with his parents.

Morgan Mason, father of the subject of these lines, was born in Virginia in February, 1799, at the proper age entered college, and was a graduate of Yale, and of Harvard Law School. In the State of New York he married Anna Morgan, daughter of General Morgan of the Revolutionary army, and soon after marriage they settled in Charleston, S. C., where, with the exception of the four years during the Civil war they lived in Cleveland, Ohio, the father passed the rest of his days; the mother died in June, 1842. They had a family of children as follows: Edward B., Edith A., John Y., Edwin, Ada, Anna, and Fred M. For his second wife Morgan Mason married Mrs. Catherine Potts, by whom he had two children: Adefine and Ida. The father departed this life in 1893, a strong loyal Southern man to his last hour. He was a large planter, owning considerable land, and was a judge of the supreme court of the State, recognized as an able jurist; during the Mexican war, he was colonel of the Second South Carolina Infantry, serving in that memorable struggle with distinction.

Our subject, whose name introduces this sketch, received his earlier education at the State Military Academy, Columbia, S. C., and for three years was a cadet at West Point, but did not complete his course. In April, 1861, he was detailed into the army as instructor of military tactics, and assigned to duty at Cleveland, Ohio. In July, same year, he reported to Gen. McClellan, who at the time was in West Virginia, and had just assumed command of the army, from which time Mr. Mason served under Gen. Rosecrans. That same year he was taken prisoner by the Confederates, and for about eight months was confined in prison, chiefly at Salisbury, N. C., and in Libby. Being exchanged, he was assigned to duty in the U. S. Signal Corps, Army of the Potomac, and with that branch of the service he remained until Lee's surrender. On June 17, 1864, he was promoted on the field in front of Petersburg, to first lieutenant, by Gen. Grant, for bravery displayed in securing and conveying information to Burnside's line in that day's fighting. He remained in the regular army until December 16, 1868, when he resigned on account of impaired health, the latter part of his soldier life being passed in the Topographical Department of the army. After resigning he went to Bay City, Mich., and for four years was manager of A. Ballou & Co.'s general store, after which he was, in 1871, elected county superintendent of Bay county, which incumbency he filled four years. In 1876 he went to Reed City, Mich., where for one year he filled the office of county superintendent of schools, and three years that of deputy United States timber agent. In 1890 he came to Rhineland, where he took up the business of contractor and builder, and in 1894 he was elected county superintendent of schools of Oneida county.

On October 13, 1870, Mr. Mason was married at Bay City, Mich., to Miss Rhoda Ammerman, who was born January 3, 1842, daughter of Isaac and Mary (Drake) Ammerman, all natives of New Jersey. The mother was a direct descendant of Sir Francis Drake, admiral of the British navy during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The parents of Mrs. Mason came to Michigan from New Jersey, and both died there, the mother in 1891, the father in 1893. To our subject and wife were born five children, three of whom are living: Maude, Eva and Theresa. Politically, Mr. Mason is a Republican, socially, he is a member of the F. & A. M., I. O. O. F., and G. A. R.

JAMES E. LYTLE. This well-known and most highly esteemed resident of Stevens Point, who is probably the oldest living pioneer settler in Portage county, was born in Richmond, Va., May 17, 1816. James Lytle, father of our subject, and a Southerner by birth, followed the trade of ship carpenter. He married Miss Hannah Stent, who was born in England, a daughter of an English sea captain who owned vessels; but losing her parents when young she was adopted by a wealthy Virginia family. James Lytle was accidentally drowned through the capsizing of a boat in a wind squall, within sight of his home, and while returning to Richmond after a year's absence.

After the death of his father, James E. Lytle, then a six-year-old lad, removed with his mother to Franklin county, N. Y., where he was reared to manhood, receiving a limited education in the district schools, afterward following the occupation of teamster and stage driver until he was about twenty-five years old, when he purchased a farm in Hopkinton township, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., where he continued farming until April, 1846, the date of his coming to Wisconsin, and locating in Pederville (now called Waukesha). At the end of three years he removed to Plover, Portage county, being among the pioneer settlers of the place, and here engaged in the trades of mason and plasterer for about three years, after which he again followed agricultural pursuits up to the year 1870, when, his health failing, he rented his farm and took up the subscription-book business as agent for a Chicago publishing house, in which line he continued till 1889, when he returned to Stevens Point, and retired from active business life.

In 1840, at Fort Covington, N. Y., Mr. Lytle was married to Miss Frances Maria Diamond, daughter of Enos and Miranda (Richmond) Diamond, and nine children were born to them, four of whom survive, as follows: George Hamlin, residing in Rome, Ga., married to Miss Alice Smith, a daughter of Charles and Mary Smith (they had a family of four children, two of whom survive: Frankie May, wife of John Ferguson, residing in Knoxville, Tenn., and James, at home); Alfred, city engineer of Merrill, Lincoln Co., Wis., married to Miss Sarah Nutting (they had four children, two yet living: Arthur E. and Bertie A.); William, residing in Stevens Point, Wis., married June 19, 1878, to Miss Jennie Pierce, a daughter of Ira and Rosetta (Whitney) Pierce, natives of Penobscot, Maine (they had six children, four of whom are living: Maudlin, Earl D., Blanch E., and Chester E.); John D., residing in Atlanta, Ga., married to Miss Nellie Smith (now deceased) has one living child named Elsie Lylian).

The mother of the above named family, who was born in Magog, Canada, passed peacefully from earth, December 3, 1893, at the age of seventy-five years, twenty-five days. She was an exemplary Christian woman, a devoted mother and faithful wife, for fifty-four years a consistent member of the Methodist Church, as has also been her husband. At her demise the following lines were contributed by a friend:

Religion filled her soul with peace,
Upon a dying bed;
Let faith look up, let sorrow cease,
She lives with Christ o'erhead.

Yes, faith beholds her where she sits
With Jesus clothed in white,
Our loss is her eternal gain;
She dwells in cloudless light.

Politically, Mr. Lytle was originally a Whig, and since the organization of the party has been a staunch Republican, though not an active one during the past six years. He has served faithfully as treasurer of Stockton township, Portage county, and also as assessor for six consecutive years, and he is known by his neighbors as a friend in time of need, a counselor in trouble, and a genial companion at all times.

JENS HANSEN, an extensive wagon and carriage manufacturer of Waupaca, was born in Boesholm, near Helsingor, Nort Sjeland, Denmark, in July, 1838, son of H. C. Rasmusson, a blacksmith, who made the best wagons and carriages in all that region. The father married Meta Marie Larson Monk, and to them were born the following children: Peter (deceased), Jens, Bertha L., Anna C. and Marie (deceased), Petronelle, Rasmina, Bentine and Peter, besides two children who died in infancy. The mother died in 1857, and the father subsequently married Marion Anderson, by whom he had two children: Andrew M., and one who died in Denmark.

Our subject learned the trade of blacksmith and carriage-maker from his father, and received a good common-school education, attending the schools from the age of seven to fourteen years. In 1864 he enlisted in the artillery service of his country, serving fourteen months in the war between Denmark and Germany, and retiring with the rank of corporal. Returning home, he assisted in his father's shop until 1869, when he emigrated to the United States. Waupaca was his destination, and there he found work with H. D. Prior, but before the close of the year he had purchased the business for himself. In 1870 Mr. Hansen returned to Denmark, and brought back with him his father, who until his death in 1879 worked in the son's shop. Each year Mr. Hansen's business has increased. His motto—"Live and let live"—is prominently displayed on the shop, and the principle is religiously observed in a business way. Mr. Hansen employs about twelve men, and manufactures wagons, carriages and sleighs, besides doing a general blacksmith business and handling farm machinery of all kinds. In 1890 he built the handsome and substantial shop which he now occupies; he has also made some extensive investments in city real estate.

Mr. Hansen was married on Christmas Day, 1869, to Miss Johanna M. Person, a native of Sweden. Her father died in that country and the widow with her children—two sons (both now deceased) and two daughters (both yet living)—came to America. Politically Mr. Hansen is a Republican. Though frequently urged to permit the use of his name for office he has invariably refused. His religious affiliations are with the Danish Lutheran Church, and he is a member of the Danish Home Society. Mr. Hansen is a thorough business man, and one of the substantial and influential citizens of Waupaca county.

CHARLES GIBSON (deceased) was for many years one of the leading citizens of Lind, Waupaca county. He was not content in business matters to follow beaten paths, but branched out into original and successful enterprises. He was energetic in his methods, but his actions were controlled by conscience. Integrity and regard for others marked every deed, and his active sympathies and weighty influence were enlisted in whatever good causes for the public welfare became the questions or issues of the day.

Mr. Gibson was born in St. Armand, Canada, April 3, 1833, son of Royal and Harriet (Thorn) Gibson. He was reared a farmer boy, attending the common schools of his home district. In 1853 he came to Wisconsin, when a youth of twenty years, and settled in Lind, Waupaca county, following his brother, Hollis, who had migrated to the new country the year previous. He was married, at Weyauwega, March 27, 1875, to Miss Fannie L. Rice, who was born in Chautauqua county, N. Y., January 10, 1847, daughter of Alvaris and Sarah A. (Darron) Rice, who migrated to Wisconsin soon after, when it was yet a Territory, living for several years in Racine county, and in 1851 removing to Waupaca county, settling in Lind, there becoming prominent pioneers. Here on the frontier of civilization Mrs. Gibson was reared. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are Ira R., born January 18, 1876; Paul R., born April 24, 1878, and Brena C., born July 18, 1881.

Mr. Gibson died at his home December 4, 1889, and is buried in Lind Cemetery. During earlier life he was a Republican, but later became, by conviction and principle, a staunch Prohibitionist. He was a leading member of the Wesleyan Church. Perhaps none were more active and zealous in religious devotion than he. A liberal contributor and an officer of the Church, he was one of its staunchest supporters. During the civil conflict Mr. Gibson took up arms in defense of the Nation's perpetuity, and served creditably and honorably from the time he enlisted to the close of the war. In civic life he served his fellow men in various local offices. Mr. Gibson was distinctively a self-made man. For many years he owned and operated a threshing machine throughout the county, making solid friends of whomsoever he met in a business relationship. He built and operated the pioneer cheese factory of his section, and the superiority of the product was known far and wide. It took the sweepstakes premium at the Wisconsin State Fair, also in Iowa and other fairs. The factory which he built is still in operation. Though generous in donations for religious and other deserving causes, Mr. Gibson was a thorough business man, and he left his family in comfortable circumstances. Since his death his widow has had charge of the business which he left, and has displayed rare judgment and ability in her management. She is a member of the Wesleyan Church, and is most highly esteemed and respected by her hosts of friends.

W H. ELSBURY, one of the brave defenders of the Union who served nearly all through the war of the Rebellion, is a farmer by vocation and one of the oldest settlers in his section of Larrabee township, Waupaca county. He was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., in 1840, the son of James and Mary (Kief) Elsbury, natives of England, who came to Essex county, N. Y., in an early day.

James Elsbury was a farmer, and after settling in Essex made that for the most part his home; his death occurred in 1854, and that of his widow in 1881, in Essex county, N. Y. They became the parents of the following children: James, residing in Essex county, N. Y.; Martha, widow of Amos Boardman, of Essex county, N. Y.; Thomas, residing in Essex county, N. Y.; John, who enlisted for three years in the Eighty-fourth N. Y. V. I., and was killed June 20, 1864, in front of Petersburg, Va.; W. H., subject of this sketch; and Mary Ann, wife of Peter Long, of Buckbee, Larrabee township, Waupaca Co., Wisconsin.

W. H. Elsbury was reared in Essex county, N. Y., to farm life, and educated in the schools of that county. In November, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, Ninety-sixth N. Y. V. I., for three years or during the war, and was mustered into service at Plattsburg, N. Y. He was first in the Seventh Army Corps, and was in the Peninsular Campaign. At Williamsburg, in 1863, he was transferred to the Eighteenth Army Corps, and was at Goldsboro, N. C., Newbern, and Suffolk, N. C. In 1864 he again enlisted, in the same company and regiment, for three years or doing the war, and went to City Point, Va., Drury's Bluff, Fredericksburg, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and thence in front of Richmond, Va., and was stationed there and at Fredericksburg. He was honorably discharged at City Point, Va., February 6, 1866, and mustered out as corporal. He then returned to Essex county, N. Y., remained till July, 1866, then came to Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., Wis., and worked at day's labor until, in 1869, he came to Clintonville, Larrabee township, Waupaca county, then a small place, and remained there two years. At that time there were in Clintonville and in all Larrabee township only forty-two voters.

At Clintonville, Waupaca Co., Wis., in 1869, W. H. Elsbury was united in marriage with Miss Catharine Quinn, and they have become the parents of seven children, namely: Michael, Mary Ann (wife of Louis Bohanan, of Keshena, Shawano Co., Wis.), William, Frederick, Maggie, John and Martha. Mrs. W. H. Elsbury is the daughter of Michael and Margaret (McGrath) Quinn, natives of Ireland now deceased. Mr.

Elsbury bought a tract of eighty acres in the woods with no clearing, in Section 21, Larabee township, where he now resides, and here located in 1871. At that time there was only one other family in this section, and he cut a road through the forest to get to his farm. This property he has since improved, and he now has fifty acres cleared. In 1888 he erected here a story-and-a-half frame house, 18 x 26 feet in the main part, and with an L 16 x 24 feet. As a pioneer of this section of Waupaca county he has seen much of its development from its primitive condition. In political belief Mr. Elsbury is a Republican, and takes an active interest in the affairs of the party. He has been a member of the school board, and chairman of the township for one term.

WILLIAM H. MCINTYRE is one of Portage county's native sons. He was born in Belmont township, September 16, 1861, and comes of one of the honored pioneer families of Wisconsin. His father, William McIntyre, was born in New York about 1829, and in an early day came with his parents to the Badger State, the family locating in Milford township, Jefferson county. His school privileges were those afforded in the neighborhood, and he was reared upon the home farm, the days of his youth being quietly passed. In the family were five children, Abraham, William, Henry, Eliza and Amanda, and they shared in the experiences and hardships peculiar to life on the frontier.

In Belmont township, Portage county, in December, 1860, at the home of the bride, was celebrated the marriage of William McIntyre, Sr., and Clara Turner, who had removed with her family from Jefferson county. The young couple began house-keeping in Milford township, Jefferson county, upon a farm owned by the husband, but after a time took up their residence in Belmont township, where October 2, 1861, Mr. McIntyre joined the Third Wisconsin Light Artillery and went to the war. On December 1, following, he returned to Jefferson county, where his wife had passed the time of his absence with his parents.

Two weeks later he was taken with measles and after a five-days' illness passed away, January 3, 1862, his remains being interred in Milford township. In politics he was a Republican, and he was a highly respected citizen. After his death, Mrs. McIntyre went to her father's home, and afterward married John M. Collier.

William H. McIntyre, who is the only child, acquired his elementary education in the schools of the neighborhood, which was supplemented with a short attendance at the State Normal School, where he prepared himself for teaching, a profession he followed in District No. 5, Belmont township. He lived with his mother for some time after her second marriage, or until his own marriage, which was celebrated in Waupaca, Wis., April 12, 1888, the lady of his choice being Miss Anna Wagner, who was born in Almond township, Portage county, June 20, 1863, a daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (Rice) Wagner, the former a native of France, the latter of Illinois. Mrs. McIntyre obtained her education in the Oshkosh Normal School, and at the age of nineteen began teaching, which profession she successfully followed eleven terms. By her marriage she has become the mother of an interesting little son, Milan H., born June 21, 1890.

Upon his marriage, Mr. McIntyre rented the farm which is now his home, and in 1891 he became its owner, the tract comprising 150 acres in Section 17, Belmont, one-half of which has been placed under the plow and yields to him a good income in return for the care and labor he bestows upon it. He is recognized as a prosperous young farmer of good business and executive ability, who through his own efforts has become well-to-do, and is an intelligent young man, highly esteemed by all who know him. By his ballot he supports the Republican party.

JOSEPH GLINSKI, one of the most enterprising and successful tailors of Stevens Point, Portage county, is a native of Poland, born September 17, 1858, in Valental, County of Starogart, a son of Joseph and Josephine (Pawlowski) Glinski, who were born in same country. The father was a stock buyer, becoming a very successful man. At his death, which occurred in 1868, he left five children, all of whom are still living, to wit: Frank, a saloon keeper at Stevens Point; Joseph, subject of sketch; Jacob, a tailor of Stevens Point, now in the employ of his brother, Joseph; Effie, wife of Joseph Jakobowski, who is also employed by our subject; and Mary, wife of E. L. Blodgett, a merchant of Stevens Point.

Mr. Glinski, whose name appears at the beginning of this record, received his education in the common schools of Germany, and then at the age of sixteen commenced to learn his trade. In 1872 the family started for America, embarking on the sailing vessel, "Agda," and after a long and stormy voyage of eleven weeks and three days they landed at Quebec, Canada. They did not remain long in that city, however, but came direct to Milwaukee, Wis., where they made their home some eight months. On leaving the latter city the family removed to Stevens Point, where Mr. Lubinski purchased 160 acres of wild timberland, and our subject aided in clearing and developing the same. The farm was sold, however, at the end of a year and a half, and the family then removed to Stevens Point, where the step-father began working at the tailor's trade, which he still continues. The mother's death occurred in the fall of 1891, at the age of sixty-three years. Mr. Glinski was employed by others until 1881, when he began business for himself. In 1891 he purchased a lot and erected a two-story brick building 82 x 25 feet, in which he now carries on business and has an excellent trade. By good management he has gained a liberal patronage, and now has in his employ fifteen men. He has one of the leading tailoring establishments of the city.

In 1879 Mr. Glinski was united in marriage with Miss Paulina M. Boyar, a daughter of John and Marthina Boyar, and one of a family of children, as follows: Paulina M., Leo, John, Jr., Frank, Ragan, Joseph, Mary, Anna, August and Adam (twins), Catherine, Alexander, Anthony, Bernard, all of whom are living with the exception of Anthony. The parents of this family were both born in Poland, in which country the father was engaged as a brewer, and also followed the same business after coming to America; but he and his wife are now living retired at Stevens Point. The family crossed the Atlantic in 1863. To Mr. and Mrs. Glinski have been born the following children: Mary, Joseph, Jr., John, De Loss, Varona, Ganewefa and Chesley, all of whom are still with their parents.

Mr. Glinski has held a number of offices of honor and trust in Stevens Point, including that of alderman, which he filled for five years—from 1888 to 1893. He has always been faithful to every trust reposed in him whether public or private, and is held in the highest esteem and confidence. With St. Peter's Catholic Church he holds membership, and has served as secretary of the same, while socially he belongs to the Catholic Knights of Wisconsin, Catholic Foresters of Wisconsin, St. Peter's Society, and the Sacred Heart Society.

EMIL RUDER (deceased), who for some twelve years conducted the well-known brewery owned by him at Merrill, Lincoln county, was born November 29, 1859, at Stevens Point, Wis., a son of George and Louisa (Schmidt) Ruder.

George Ruder was born September 7, 1827, in Nuremberg, Bavaria, and was a son of Wolfe and Katrina Ruder. The family are of German ancestry, and Wolfe Ruder, as was his father before him, was born in Germany. George Ruder was educated in his native land, and in early life learned the trade of brewer in his father's brewery, afterward worked at his trade in some of the large cities of Europe, and traveled extensively through Germany. In 1854 he came to the United States, locating first in Milwaukee, where he worked at his trade upward of two years, and then, in 1856, he removed to Stevens Point, Portage county, purchased a brewery there, and conducted it some four years. At Stevens Point he married Miss Louisa Schmidt, who was born in the Province of Posen, Germany, April 25, 1835, and children as follows were born to them: Louis, Emil, Herman, Louisa, Clara, Emma (wife of Henry Mombart, residing in Wausau), Edward (in Merrill, Lincoln county), Henry (in Wausau, Marathon county), William and Lena, of whom Emil, Louisa and Lena are now deceased. In 1860 George Ruder removed to Wausau, Marathon county, and there erected a brewery which he conducted up to 1887, when he retired from active business, the following year, accompanied by his wife and daughter, Emma, visiting his native land, and spending upward of twelve months in travel and sight-seeing, among other places visiting Berlin and Munich. His death occurred December 29, 1893, at Milwaukee, Wis., whither he had gone for medical treatment, and was buried in Wausau cemetery. He was a member of the I. O. O. F., was president of the village, and alderman of the city of Wausau four years.

Emil Ruder, whose name appears at the opening of this sketch, on leaving school entered his father's brewery in Wausau, in order to learn the business, and in 1882 accompanied him to Merrill. Here in 1886 he bought the brewery built by his father, and which he enlarged and improved, conducting same until his death, which occurred May 23, 1894. He left a widow and six children to mourn the early taking away of a loving husband and kind, indulgent father, besides many sorrowing friends who knew him as an active business man, generous-hearted and highly respected by all. Politically a Democrat, he served the city of Merrill as alderman; socially, he was a member of the Sons of Hermann, and a member of the Order of Druids of Merrill, and of the German Benevolent Society.

On July 27, 1884, Mr. Ruder was married, in Wausau, Wis., to Miss Mary Laessig, who was born in Chicago, Ill., daughter of Edward and Janette (Baenen) Laessig, who were the parents of twelve children: Edward, Mary, Henry, Augusta, Minnie, Frederick, Frank, Charles, Louis, Julia, Anna and Nellie, the last named dying in infancy. The father was born July 15, 1835, in Saxony, Germany, whence when a young man he came to America, and for several years worked as a common laborer. In 1856, in Chicago, Ill., he married Miss Janette Baenen, who was born in Holland, in January, 1838, and same year came to America with her parents, who had a family of seven children, namely: Frank, Mary, Janette, John, Henry, Bell and Minnie. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Laessig moved to Green Bay, Wis., and there resided nine years, when they moved to Wausau, and at the end of four years bought a farm in Marathon county, Wis., whither they removed and where they are yet residing. The children born to Emil Ruder are Lena, Lizzie, George, Edward, Willie and baby Emil.

William Ruder, a younger son of the late George Ruder, by his wife, Louisa (Schmidt), was born in Wausau, Wis., Aug. 12, 1873. Until he was fifteen years of age he attended school at Wausau, and then went to Milwaukee, where he took a course in a business college in that city, graduating from same in June, 1889. In the following August he came to Merrill, where he entered the employ of his brother Emil, in the capacity of bookkeeper, collector, etc., positions he held until the death of the latter, since when he has had entire charge of the business for behoof of the widow. Though yet a young man, he has made many friends among the business men of Merrill. In his political affiliation he is a sound Democrat, while socially he is a member of the Sons of Hermann, the German Benevolent Society and the Order of Druids of Merrill, of which latter he is secretary.

On April 24, 1894, William Ruder and Theresa Bott were married at Wausau, Wis. She is a native of Illinois, born at Rockford, daughter of Marcus and Eva (Harris) Bott, who were the parents of five children: Theresa, Tillie, John, Frank, and one that died in infancy. Mr. Bott was a native of Germany, and came to America when a young man; a mason by trade, he followed it successfully until his death in Merrill, April, 1885. His widow was born in Wisconsin, near Milwaukee; she remarried, her second husband being Henry J. Hampel, by whom she has two children: Henry and George.

CALVIN CHAFEE, proprietor of a first-class livery stable in Rhinelander, Oneida county, is a native of New York State, born October 25, 1835, in Hulburton, Orleans county, of Scottish ancestry.

Isaac Chafee, grandfather of our subject, was born December 26, 1768, perhaps in Scotland, but more probably, it is thought, in America; he was married in the latter country to Mary Burnside, born in the New England States. Nine children were the result of this union, viz.: Rufus, Adolphus, Mary, Isaac M. (1), Walter, Lucinda, Isaac M. (2), Lloyd and Isaac M. (3), of whom Isaac M. (1), Lucinda and Isaac M. (2) are deceased. The father of these, who was a musical instrument maker, died March 8, 1835, the mother in December, 1848.

Lloyd Chafee, father of Calvin, was born at Guildhall, Essex Co., Vt., May 12, 1812, and married Elizabeth Garnsey, who was born at Stamford, Conn., October 7, 1817, daughter of Ezra and Lanah (Bennett) Garnsey, natives of Connecticut, the father born April 12, 1780, the mother on March 11, 1787; they both died in New York State, he in 1857, she February 3, 1856, the parents of twelve children, named respectively: Catherine, Rosetta B., Sarah A., Jesse H., Solomon S., James B., Phoebe S., Elizabeth, Samuel B., William H., Ezra M. and Leonard H. To Mr. and Mrs. Chafee were born fourteen children—Calvin, Emily M., Edward and Edwin (twins), Charles, Sarah, Emline S., Franklin, Henry, Leonard, Ezra G., Lanah B., Rufus and Rosetta E.—nine of whom lived to maturity. In 1845 Lloyd Chafee brought his family to Wisconsin, and for one year he worked at his trade, shoemaking, at Watertown, Jefferson county, and then for eight years carried on agricultural pursuits on a farm near Oshkosh, after which he moved to Waushara county, passing the rest of his days on a farm there, at the same time working at his trade. He died in Waushara county, November 28, 1872, his wife surviving him until September 25, 1893. Mr. Chafee was a well-read man and well-informed on all topics, a leader among men, holding many local offices of honor and trust, and taking a wide interest in educational affairs. Socially, he was a member of the F. & A. M.

Calvin Chafee, the subject proper of these lines, who was ten years old when the family came to Wisconsin, received a fairly liberal education at the common schools of the period, and being the eldest in the family early in life commenced assisting his father in clearing the farms, so continuing until he reached his majority. He then worked in the lumber woods, winters, and running the river, summers, until his marriage, when he settled on his farm in Waushara county, which he successfully conducted till 1891, the year of his coming to Rhinelander, and engaging in his present prosperous livery stable business. In June, 1861, he was married to Miss Tamar E. Rozell, who was born October 30, 1841, in Tioga county, Penn., daughter of Hopkins D. and Catherine (Cooper) Rozell, the former of whom was a son of James Rozell, who in his younger days was a dyer, in later life a farmer, and was married to Lucia Byron, by whom he had five children: Hopkins D., Edwin, Alfred, William and Susan. The family came to Wisconsin in 1855. Hopkins D. Rozell was a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., born June 23, 1873, and died in Waushara county, Wis., January 6, 1891. He was a shoemaker by trade, and also followed farming. His wife, Catherine (Cooper) Rozell, was born in New York, in 1814, and died in February, 1894, in Wisconsin. To Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Chafee were born six children: Robert E. (now a druggist in Rhinelander), Catherine E. (married to William M. Weld, a farmer of Waushara county, Wis.), Frank H. (deceased at the age of three years), Leonard H., Letta (who died in infancy) and Charles E.

On November 21, 1863, Mr. Chafee enlisted in Company G, Thirtieth Wis. V. I., and received an honorable discharge September 20, 1865. His regiment served in the West, chiefly on detail duty, only one company at a time being stationed at any point. Our subject has been a Republican since the organization of the party, and held public offices of trust in Waushara county some twenty years. He has been an active Freemason for a long time, and is a member of the G. A. R. The entire family are identified with the M. E. Church.

JOHN F. SAWYER, a substantial citizen of Wausau, Marathon county, was born in Hampden, Maine, November 8, 1851. His parents, Emerson M. and Sarah Patterson Sawyer, were both born in the State of Maine, of English and Scotch ancestry, and were early settlers of Waupaca county, Wis., having located in the township of Dayton, in that county, in 1855.

To Emerson M. Sawyer and his wife was born a family of nine children, of whom six are living, namely: R. Dwyne, a member of the Wausau city fire department; Charles H., residing in Minneapolis, Minn.; John F., the subject of this sketch; Arthur E., residing in Chicago; Rual Willis, an agriculturist in the township of Dayton, Waupaca county; and Edward C., in Traill county, N. Dak. James O. Sawyer, the eldest son in the family, served in Company G, Eighteenth Wis. V. I., and died in hospital in Indiana from the effects of hardships incurred during the war. After locating in Dayton township, in 1855, Emerson M. Sawyer engaged in agricultural pursuits in Dayton township, and in Marion, Dupont township, Waupaca county, until about 1884, when he retired from active business life and made his home with his son John, coming with him to Wausau on his removal here. He is still living, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. His wife, Sarah, mother of the family above mentioned, died at Marion, Dupont township, Waupaca county, in 1888.

John F. Sawyer was reared a farmer's boy, and educated in the public schools of Waupaca county. After leaving school he engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1883, during which period he operated a threshing machine throughout Waupaca county. In the village of Ogdensburg, St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, August 6, 1871, John F. Sawyer married Annie Shannon, and they have three children, namely: Schuyler C., a harness maker, residing at Rhineland, Oneida Co., Wis.; Clyde S., a harness maker at Wausau, Marathon county; and Erdix A., at home. The parents of Mrs. Sawyer, John and Harriet (Dewey) Shannon, were born on Wolfe Island, Canada.

In 1883 Mr. Sawyer went to Marion, Dupont township, Waupaca county, and was in the livery business there until 1893, in February of which year he removed to Wausau, Marathon county, continuing here the same occupation. For eight or ten years he was engaged in teaming provisions, etc., from Wausau to the lumber camps as far as Eagle River, Oneida Co., Wis., and also to Escanaba, Mich., the round trip occupying thirteen days, and during this time he had many thrilling adventures with wild animals. Mr. Sawyer conducts one of the largest and best equipped livery stables in Wausau, and is highly respected as an honorable and upright business man and a valuable citizen. In political views he is liberal. The family attend the Methodist Church.

GILBERT GILSON belongs to that class of sturdy Norwegians who have been an important factor in the upbuilding and development of Waupaca county. He was born June 1, 1839, in Norway, as was his father, Gilbert Christenson, whose birth occurred in the year 1800. The latter followed lumbering in his native country, and was there united in marriage with Martha Larson, whose birth occurred in Norway in 1802. The grandfather, Christen Erickson, was a man of considerable prominence and influence in the community in which he made his home, and two of his sons were soldiers in the war which occurred between Norway and Sweden from 1807 to 1814, and helped to gain for the former her freedom and her new constitution.

In 1852 Mr. Christenson left his old home, and bidding good-by to friends and native land sailed with his family for the United States. He located in Norway township, Racine Co., Wis., where he worked as a common laborer for about a year. In 1853 he came to Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, and purchased 160 acres of land, to the development and improvement of which he devoted his energies until his death, which occurred in 1877. His wife survived him two years, passing away in 1879. They were adherents of the Lutheran faith, and in politics he was a Republican. Gilbert Gilson, our subject, was thirteen years of age when he came to America. He attended school but three months; but being naturally talented and fond of study he through his own efforts obtained a good education, and is recognized as one of the most intellectual men of his township. His early boyhood days were passed upon his father's farm, but when he was still quite young he engaged as a postal clerk in the Waupaca postoffice, in which position he efficiently served for three years. He was then employed in a drug store in Waupaca for a period of two years, after which he worked in the pineries until the breaking out of the Civil war. He was deeply interested in the events which attended the opening of that struggle, and in 1863 he offered his services to the government, becoming one of the "boys in blue" of Company K, Tenth Wis. V. I. Afterward he was transferred to Company D, Twenty-fourth Wis. V. I., and subsequently became a member of Company B, Third Wisconsin Veteran Regiment. He took part in the battles of Resaca, Altoona, Kenesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek, and when the South had laid down its arms, and the war was over, he was honorably discharged at Louisville, Ky., in July, 1865. He now receives a pension from the government, for the hardships of army life caused disability from which he has never yet fully recovered.

When his services were no longer needed, Mr. Gilson at once returned to his home, and purchased a farm of 100 acres in Scandinavia township. Since that time he has followed farming, and is numbered among the representative agriculturists of the community, for his practical and progressive ideas make him a leader among his fellow townsmen. His life has been a busy and useful one, yet he has found time to devote to public interests, having filled various offices of honor and trust in his township. He has served as township supervisor, for three years was chairman of the board, was assessor, is now serving as town clerk, and for twenty-two consecutive years has been justice of the peace. His long service well indicates his fidelity to duty and the confidence and trust reposed in him. In his social relations he is connected with the Grand Army Post, while in religious faith he is connected with the Lutheran Church, as are the members of his family.

Mr. Gilson was married in Waupaca, November 26, 1862, to Miss Emily Jagers, daughter of Jager and Betsy Thompson, who were natives of Norway, in which country Mrs. Gilson was born in 1837. They became the parents of six children, of whom Martha, and two sons, both named Gilbert J., are now deceased. Josephine B. is the wife of Nels Dahlson; Gustave Martin and Louis Christian are at home.

ADELBERT S. HARTWELL was born in Milwaukee, Wis., October 21, 1850, and is descended from ancestors who have long resided in this country. His grandfather, William Hartwell, was born in New York, and followed the occupation of farming. He wedded Betsy Heath, and their six sons were named John, William, Horace, Orin, Lewis and George. During the war of 1812 grandfather Hartwell served as an infantry soldier.

John Hartwell, father of our subject, was born in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., in 1814, and he, too, carried on agricultural pursuits. In the Empire State he wedded Mary Ray, daughter of John and Mary Ray, the former of whom was a major general in the Revolution, serving with great distinction in that struggle. In his family were five children—Otis, Mary, Marcia, Augusta, and Caroline. John Hartwell and his wife had four children—Theresa, Frances, Augusta and Adelbert. The father became one of the early settlers of Milwaukee, Wis., and purchased a farm which is now comprised in the center of that city. The family located in Shiawassee county, Mich., in 1855, and there the mother died the following year, after which the father wedded Mrs. Merriam, a widow lady. The children on the death of their mother had returned to Wisconsin to live with their grandfather, who in the meantime had removed from New York to Pewaukee, Waukesha Co., Wis., where he died in 1875. John Hartwell passed away in 1877.

Adelbert S. Hartwell was a child of only six summers when his mother died, and he then went to live with his grandfather with whom he remained until 1860, when he went to the western part of the State and resided with an uncle two years. At the age of fourteen he commenced the battle of life for himself, sometimes working on the river, and again on a farm in Minnesota. At the age of fifteen he went into the lumber woods and securing employment in a sawmill worked his way steadily upward, having for the past six years held the responsible position of head sawyer with the Upham Manufacturing Company.

In 1879, Mr. Hartwell married Miss Imogene Manning, a native of Jefferson county, Wis., and daughter of Adkins and Helen (Grover) Manning, the former a native of New York, the latter of Wisconsin. They lived upon a farm in Jefferson county and had three children: Imogene, Lucia and Clara. The mother died in 1866, the father in 1880. Mr. Hartwell was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife in 1888, and in October, 1891, he married Anna Judson, who was born in Rome, Jefferson Co., Wis., a daughter of Lyman T. and Angeline (Foss) Judson. Her father was born in Canada in 1829, and during the Civil war served for three years in the First Wisconsin Artillery, when he was honorably discharged. His wife was a native of Wisconsin, and died in 1884, leaving three children. Anna, Willis E. and Ernest. The father is now living with his daughter, Mrs. Hartwell, who by her marriage has one son, Earl Adelbert.

Mr. Hartwell exercises his right of franchise in support of the Republican party, and has been honored with several local offices, including that of alderman, while residing in Merrill, Wis. He belongs to the Masonic, Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen fraternities, and is a plain, unassuming man, devoting himself to his business interests, and by his quiet, upright life has won the respect and confidence of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

AW. SHELTON, a leading attorney at law of Oneida county, with residence at Rhinelander, is a native of Minnesota, born in 1859 at Newport, a son of Charles N. and Ann Shelton.

He graduated from the University of Wisconsin in the engineering course in 1883, in the law course in 1885, and in January of the following year commenced the practice of law in Rhinelander. From 1891 to 1893 he served as district attorney of Oneida county, and from 1894 to 1895 was city attorney of Rhinelander. In 1892 he bought the Rhinelander Herald, and organized the Herald Publishing Co., of which he is president, Mrs. Shelton being secretary. Our subject has been connected, with uniform success, with all of the municipal litigation which followed the organization of Oneida county, which litigation has been considerable, and, some of it, important. In 1886, at Oregon, Wis., he was united in marriage with Mary M. Howe, daughter of Judge Isaac Howe and Sarah Howe. Mrs. Shelton graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1884, and received the degree of Master of Science in History from that institution in 1892. After her marriage she was superintendent of schools for Oneida county from 1887 to 1889, and, again, from 1893 to 1895. At the present time she is a member of the School board of the city of Rhinelander.

MARTEN HANSEN. The love of home and native land, and the love of liberty and wider opportunities, have waged a long warfare in the mind of this most estimable citizen and prosperous merchant of Wau-paca. Thrice he has emigrated to America, and twice has he returned to the Danish hearthstone intending to remain there. The love of home is strongly implanted in the heart of the Dane, and it costs a great struggle to cast aside relatives and lifetime, or even inherited, associations, and to transplant one's self to an unknown soil where conditions are new and strange. This intense affection for home is one of the strongest and most valuable traits of humanity. It is the feeling which makes patriots of the highest type, and it is a happy circumstance indeed that the Upper Wisconsin Valley has been settled so largely by people of this class.

Marten Hansen was born in Denmark April 1, 1840, the son of Hans and Ellen (Hansen) Jacobson, whose six children were Jacob, Bodel, Kaun, Marten, and two who died in infancy. Hans Jacobson was a weaver of cloth, and died in 1849 when Marten, the youngest living child, was nine years old. Marten attended school until he was fourteen years of age, and in 1855 was apprenticed to a shoemaker, for whom he worked three years for his board. He was ambitious, and in 1860, at the age of twenty, he started a shop of his own in the village of Karleby. But his advance toward a competence was slow, and in 1866 he came to America. For two years he worked steadily at his trade in Oshkosh, Wis., and in 1868 he came to Waupaca, becoming a workman in the shop of Ole Larson. Here he remained four years, laying by a neat little sum of money. In the summer of 1872 he returned to Denmark, and while there married Karen Jergensen, by whom he has had three children: Christian H., Charles and Erwin Hansen. Remaining in his native land ten months Mr. Hansen, in the spring of 1873, returned with his wife to Waupaca. Here he worked for others until 1876, when he started in business for himself. Though he prospered he was not yet wholly reconciled to America, and in 1883 he returned to Denmark with his family, intending to remain there. But he saw the contrast between the new and the old, and the conditions of life under the old order of things grew distasteful. After a ten-months' visit Mr. Hansen crossed the Atlantic ocean for the fifth time, and once more become the industrious and faithful shoe merchant at Waupaca. In 1893 he erected the handsome and substantial block in which his store is now located; he has also built for himself a fine residence. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, and in politics he is a Republican. His eldest son is a photographer; the second is a clerk in the city postoffice. Mr. Hansen is pleasantly situated in life, and is one of the prosperous and successful business men of Waupaca.

ALBERT F. GERWING is numbered among the self-made men of Marshfield, Wood county, and has been prominently connected with the business and political history of that city. Public-spirited and progressive, he labors for the best interests of the community in which he resides, and in public and private life is both an honored and respected citizen.

Mr. Gerwing was born in the town of Hubbard, Dodge Co., Wis., March 23, 1853, and is of German lineage. The grandfather, William Gerwing, was born in Germany, and there died of cholera at the age of forty-five years, leaving a widow and three children—one son and two daughters. The son, who also bore the name of William, was born in Germany in 1818, and, learning the trade of a brick maker, followed that pursuit for a number of years. Ere leaving his native land he married Wilhelmina Risse, daughter of Fred Risse, who for seven years, from 1807 to 1814, was a soldier in the German army. During his service he was twice wounded, and he carried the King off the field when he was wounded. In 1848 Mr. Gerwing sailed with his family for the New World, and located upon a farm in Dodge county, Wis., which is still the home of himself and wife. He too was a soldier for three years while living in Europe, and in America he has ever been a loyal citizen, faithful to the interests of his adopted land. In the family were seven children, of whom William, Charles and Albert F. are living; August, Ernstena, Louisa and Henry are deceased.

Upon the old homestead Albert F. Gerwing was reared, attending the common and parochial schools, and remaining with his parents until nineteen years of age when he began to earn his own livelihood. He was employed in various ways during the succeeding five years, working as a farm hand, in the lumber woods and in hotels. He then married, and settling in Marathon county, Wis., five miles north of Marshfield, on a tract of wild land, he at once began to clear and improve it, continuing its cultivation through the succeeding seven years. In 1883 he entered into a general merchandise business in Boyd, Chippewa county. There he remained a year and a half, coming in 1884 to Marshfield, where he carried on the same line of business until his establishment was destroyed in the great Marshfield fire of 1887. He was a heavy loser, but with indomitable perseverance he began anew and continued the business until the fall of 1891. In the spring of 1892 he was appointed city marshal and has thrice been re-appointed, serving in a highly creditable and able manner. In this community his name inspires confidence in the honest man and causes terror to the evil doer. Fearless in the defense of his duty his trustworthiness and fidelity are well known, and he is accounted one of the most capable officers that has ever served as city marshal.

In 1876 Mr. Gerwing married Cornelia Jacquot, who was born in 1854 in Outagamie county, Wis., a daughter of John Jacquot, a native of France, born in 1820, and who came with his parents to America when quite young. His father, John Jacquot, a soldier of the French army, married Blanche Malarr, and had a family of seven children. The father of Mrs. Gerwing wedded Mary Linton, a native of Germany, who came to America with her father when a maiden of eleven summers, the mother having died in Germany. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Jacquot resided in Greenville township, Outagamie county, the father carrying on agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1883; his wife survived him until 1891. Their family numbered six children—Alexander, Cornelia, Helen, Seraphine, Martin and John. Mrs. Gerwing's uncle, Lawrence, was a soldier in the Civil war for three and one-half years, bravely aiding in the defense of the Union.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gerwing, two of whom are yet living: Helen and Ida; Mary died at the age of fourteen, and Henrietta in infancy. The family have in Marshfield a fine home which is always open for the reception of their many friends. In politics Mr. Gerwing is a Democrat, and served both as alderman and supervisor while living in Marathon county. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., has filled all the chairs in the local lodge and has also attended the grand lodge. His life has been one of industry and enterprise, plain and unassuming, yet honorable and upright, and thus living so as to win the respect of all he has gained a large circle of warm friends.

CHARLES TYRRELL, a successful agriculturist of Bear Creek township, Waupaca county, was born April 18, 1845, in Ontario, Canada, and is a son of John and Mary (Le Grue) Tyrrell.

Charles Tyrrell remained at home until 1865, when he assumed his own responsibilities, and has since maintained himself. On November 6, 1865, he was married to Mary Margaret Tyrrell, his cousin, and who is the daughter of George and Angeline (Perry) Tyrrell. Seven children have been born to them, as follows: Harry Albert, September 28, 1867; Lorenzo Irving, December 8, 1869; William F., March 16, 1871; Lida Etta, April 10, 1873; Addie Addelide, May 24, 1876; Ada Elhora, June 2, 1879; and Charles E., July 28, 1882. Of these, Lorenzo I. died October 24, 1885, and Lida E. February 28, 1874. After their marriage they lived on the farm owned by Mrs. Tyrrell's father for about three months, and then removed to the farm of Mr. Tyrrell's father, Charles Tyrrell going to work in the woods. He was engaged in the woods from the time he was fifteen years old until about the year 1888.

About three years after his marriage our subject bought forty acres of partly-improved land in Section 36, Bear Creek township, and lived there about five years. After this had been sold to good advantage he bought sixty acres in Section 36, adjoining the former tract on the east, and nearly all improved, and here he has lived twenty-one years. He has now thirty acres of land in tillable condition, to which he devotes all his time. Politically Mr. Tyrrell is a Republican.

BENJAMIN A. CADY. This well known and popular lawyer of Birnamwood and county attorney of Shawano county, who also has a warm place in every loyal heart as a veteran of the Civil war, is a native of Vermont, having been born in the town of Granville, Addison county, February 11, 1840.

Jacob and Betsy (Coolidge) Cady, parents of our subject, were also natives of the Green Mountain State, the father born about 1807, a son of Isaac Cady, a soldier who served under Gen. Stark at the battle of Bennington. The mother's parents were natives of Vermont and New York, respectively. The Cady family is of Scotch and English descent, and the grandfathers on both sides were early settlers in America, most of their descendants being farmers. Jacob Cady came to Wisconsin from Lowell, Mass., making the trip from Buffalo to Milwaukee in a sailing vessel, and settling near the latter city April 6, 1850. His eldest son, Philander, walked all the way from Buffalo to Milwaukee with his brother-in-law, J. J. Richardson. At the home of this relative, near Milwaukee, Jacob Cady and his family visited for a while, then fitted out an ox-team and went to the Indian lands near the city of Berlin. Here Mr. Cady located near a stream now known as Cady's Creek, and proceeded to clear the land and make a comfortable home. He spent the remainder of his life on this place, and there passed away in 1885; the mother still resides on the old homestead with her grandchild. Jacob Cady, although he had only a common-school education, was a man of unusual ability, and a leader among men. He was possessed of strong will power, was generous to the poor, liberal to the cause of religion and of unbounded hospitality; in the expressive parlance of those early days, it was said that "his latch-string was always out." He was no politician, but was made chairman of the town board, and held other minor offices. The children of this worthy pioneer were five in number: Lucinda L., Philander H., Mary A., Artemus W., and Benjamin A.

The subject proper of this sketch, whose name appears at the opening, was but ten years old when his father settled in the wilds of Wisconsin, and his early days will never be forgotten. Wolves and deer were to be seen in the forests, snakes crossed the path through the underbrush, and the nearest neighbor was an Indian whose wigwam was a mile away. There were no schools for five years after their arrival in the county, but fortunately the boy had been in school in Lowell before he left the East, and under the instruction of his parents pursued his studies at home until he was eighteen years of age, when he entered the high school at Berlin, later going to Milton College. On November 24, 1863, he enlisted in Company I, Thirty-seventh Wis. V. I., of which company he was made clerk; in the spring of 1864 the regiment joined the Ninth Army Corps, at Cold Harbor. Mr. Cady was in several engagements in front of Petersburg, in one of which, June 19, 1864, he was wounded in the right hand, in consequence of which he was sent to Lincoln Hospital, at Washington, thence transferred to Madison, Wis., where he received his discharge, April 20, 1865. He then returned to the farm, took up the study of law, and in March, 1867, was admitted to the bar of Waushara county, Wis. Opening up an office in his own house, he commenced practicing, at the same time carrying on his farm and raising stock. He continued this busy life until 1881, when he sold out his interests there and removed to Wood county, engaging in lumbering at Milladore where he remained two years. In the fall of 1883 he closed out that business and came to Birnamwood, where he had made some investments, and entered into the mercantile business which he carried on (at the same time continuing his law practice) until 1892, since which time he has devoted himself entirely to his profession, in which he has been remarkably successful.

Mr. Cady is a Republican in his political views, but has always been too busy to become an office-seeker; his fellow-citizens, however, have honored him by placing him in various public positions. He is now district attorney of Shawano county, having been elected in the fall of 1894. He had previously held the same office in Waushara county, two terms, and for eighteen years was chairman of the town board, during two years of which time he was chairman of the county board; he has been a member of the county board in his county, and is now chairman of the Senatorial committee of this Senatorial District. Socially he is a Royal Arch Mason, being a member of Berlin Chapter and of Pine River Lodge No. 207.

On May 3, 1864, Mr. Cady was married to Julia A. Shepherd, daughter of Orson A. and Mary (Buck) Shepherd, natives of New York, whence they came to Wisconsin in an early day, first locating in Walworth county, later removing to Waushara county; both are now deceased. By this marriage Mr. Cady became the father of five children, as follows: Julia E., who married George Smith, and resides near her father; Artemus A., married and residing at Birnamwood; Frank P., a carpenter in Waushara county; Maggie M., residing at home; Myrtie R., who married George Cottrill, and lives in Waushara county. Mr. Cady's second marriage took place October 16, 1881, the bride being Miss Ada L. Empie, who was born in the town of Lake Mills, Jefferson Co., Wis.; two children have been born to this marriage: Blanche A. and Arthur L. Mrs. Cady's parents, John H. and Mary (Montgomery) Empie, were natives of New York, coming to Wisconsin at an early day; they are still living in Shawano county. They had three children: Lawrence H., Ada L. and Alice F. Mr. Cady is a self-made man with a strong will and great energy, up to forty years of age was a tireless worker in the various pursuits in which he engaged, and still continues to labor zealously in his chosen profession.

MATT JENSEN. The subject of this sketch, who for many years was a prominent and extensive business man of Waupaca, has inherited the indomitable pluck and perseverance of the hardy Norsemen, a race to which he belongs. He has demonstrated by his life how a boy of determination, without means or advantages of any kind, may rise superior to circumstances and win for himself an honorable and enviable position in society. He was born on the bleak shores of Jutland, Denmark, January 21, 1850, son of Thomas and Mary (Fransen) Jensen, and was one of a family of ten children, of whom only six now survive: Enger, Sine, Matt, James, Minnie and Nels. The father died in Denmark; the mother now lives with her son in Waupaca.

Young Matt attended the country schools until he was fourteen, and then hired out to a gentleman for a year. When sixteen he determined to learn the tailor's trade, but after working two years the conviction impressed itself upon him that he had made a mistake. Here his grit stood him in good stead, for he threw away his two-years' service and set about learning the butcher's trade, working for three years without any wages. In 1872 he landed in America with but fifty cents in his pocket, and with a debt of $50., incurred in paying his passage. At Stockbridge, Calumet Co., Wis., he found work in a brickyard for three months, then worked at his trade in Oshkosh with Henry Midelstadt for a short time. Hiring out in a sawmill for a while, he next spent six months in the woods. For a year he worked at his trade in Neenah, and in March, 1874, with a capital of $60., opened a market of his own at Waupaca. Gradually he gained experience. For six months he conducted the shop, and during the ensuing winter he butchered for others. Reopening his shop in 1875, he remained its proprietor until fire in 1879 consumed all his possessions and left him penniless, for he carried no insurance. Forming a partnership with Hans Peterson, he erected a brick building on borrowed capital, and therein conducted a meat market for five years. In 1884 he bought and built the place of business where he successfully followed his chosen occupation until March, 1895, when he sold out, though he is still engaged to some extent in buying and selling stock. Until 1892 he bought cattle and hogs, slaughtered them, and shipped the products to many points in the north. His success as a business man is sufficiently attested by his present investments. At Waupaca he owns four stores, four dwellings, and ten acres of land besides his own commodious and handsome home, one of the finest in the city.

Mr. Jensen was married, at the Danish Lutheran Church in Waupaca, to Lena Jensen, who when nine years old emigrated to America from Denmark with her parents. Her father was a farmer in Lind township, and she has one brother now living, Soren Jensen. In politics Mr. Jensen is a Republican, casting his first vote for Gen. Grant. He served his city one term as alderman, and both he and his wife are members of the Danish Lutheran Church. They visited his old home in Denmark, in 1882, remaining about six months.

NICOLAY NEGAARD, one of the prosperous farmers of St. Lawrence township, like many of Waupaca county's best citizens, is a native of Norway, where he was born November 11, 1855, a son of Nels Nelson, who supported his family by day's labor.

Our subject received a good education in his native land, being able to attend school until seventeen years of age, after which he entered the Government Military Academy, from which he graduated in less than three years. For some time during the winter seasons he was employed in scaling logs, and then engaged in the lumber business for himself. He concluded to come to the United States, however, where better opportunities are afforded young men, and, in the spring of 1883, bidding farewell to his home and friends, he left Christiania for England, where at Liverpool he took passage on an Anchor Line steamer for America. After eighteen days he arrived in Waupaca, Wis., having stopped three days en route, and with him came Miss Mary

Strand, who was to become his bride a few days later. They were married at Scandinavia, Wis., in July, 1883, and by their union were born two children who are yet living: John, born April 12, 1884, and Norman M., born August 26, 1888; the mother was called to her final rest September 7, 1888, after a continued illness, and lies buried in Ogdensburg Cemetery. In St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, in July, 1890, Mr. Negaard wedded Miss Jennie M. Westcot, only child of Lyman and Dorcas (Howland) Westcot, and to them has come a daughter, Alma D., born July 30, 1891.

After his first marriage Mr. Negaard rented a house and worked at anything by which he could earn an honest dollar, chiefly employed, however, on farms and in the lumber woods. In 1887 he was able to purchase one hundred acres of land in Section 12, St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, and began its improvement; it was wild undeveloped land, which he sold. He now has in his possession 170 acres of rich, arable land, in company with his father-in-law, and, although he has experienced the trials and difficulties of life in a new country, he is now reaping his reward. He started out a poor boy; but by perseverance and good management has become a well-to-do citizen, held in the highest esteem by the entire community, and is an intelligent, well-educated man, being far above the average farmer of his nationality in that respect. On election day he never fails to cast his vote in support of the Republican party, but gives no time to politics, although he has held office in his School District No. 2.

Lyman A. Westcot, father of Mrs. Negaard, was born in Sudbury, Vt., August 20, 1833, son of Oliver and Mary (Howland) Westcot, also natives of Vermont, where they carried on agricultural pursuits. In the family were eight children—five sons and three daughters—in which Mr. Westcot was the sixth in order of birth. He attended the district schools until the age of fifteen, when for three months he pursued his studies in the high school, after which he began teaching, receiving a salary of ten dollars per month, while the highest wages paid at that time was only fifteen dollars. On January 1, 1862, in Brandon, Rutland Co., Vt., Mr. Westcot was united in marriage with Dorcas J. Howland, who was born in Pittsford, that county, August 11, 1842, a daughter of Oliver and Pernelia Howland, who had seven children—four sons and three daughters—of whom Mrs. Westcot was second. By her marriage were born three children, of whom Clyde O. and Addie A. both died young; Jennie M., born March 21, 1866 (now Mrs. Nicolay Negaard), being the only one living.

Mr. and Mrs. Westcot began their domestic life in Hubbardton, Vt., where he engaged in farming. He had previously come west in 1855, locating at Stoughton, Dane Co., Wis., where he clerked in a store, but becoming ill with fever and ague returned east at the end of one year. On September 10, 1866, with his wife he started from Hubbardton, Vt., for Stoughton, Wis., where he had relatives living, and there spent the following winter. He rented a farm and made preparations to put in a crop, but in April, 1867, went to the town of Cato, Manitowoc county, where his brother, Alfred H., resided. There our subject was employed in a sawmill during the summer, then in the fall purchased twenty acres of improved land, being able to pay but $50 on the same, having to go in debt for the remainder. He was very successful in this line, and added to his original tract until at one time he had over eighty acres. He lived in Manitowoc county until coming to St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, in March, 1882, where he had bought two hundred acres in Section 11 in June of the previous year. He later sold some of this, still owning, however, 170 acres of rich farming land in company with his son-in-law.

On February 13, 1891, Mr. Westcot was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who is interred in Ogdensburg Park Cemetery. That he has made life a grand success is due to his untiring energy, affability, integrity and judicious business management. Politically he is independent, casting his ballot for the best man, regardless of party principles.

ANDREW LUTZ, JR., proprietor of a leading livery stable in Stevens Point, Portage county, was born in Baden, Germany, April 4, 1845, eldest surviving son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Gaber) Lutz, also natives of the Fatherland.

In 1853 our subject came to the United States with his mother, the husband and father having preceded them, in 1852, in order to prepare a home for them in Almond township, Portage Co., Wis. Here the young lad was reared and educated, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1888, when he removed to Stevens Point and opened out his present livery stable, which is one of the best in the city.

In Almond township, Portage Co., Wis., October 30, 1867, Mr. Lutz was united in marriage with Miss Mena Krohn, daughter of Fred and Mena Krohn, both natives of Germany, now residents of Stevens Point, and to this marriage were born twelve children, four of whom survive: Charles, Frank, Henry and Annie. In religious faith the family attend the services of the Lutheran Church. In his political views Mr. Lutz is a staunch Republican. He is a progressive, wide-awake citizen, standing high in the estimation of all who know him, or have had any dealings with him, for his personal integrity and straightforward honest principles.

HIEL HEATH, a retired farmer of Amherst township, Portage county, was born in the town of Randolph, Orange Co., Vt., May 22, 1812, and is the son of James Heath, born in Connecticut April 22, 1776, and Sarah (Gloyd) Heath, born in Charlestown, Mass., in 1774.

The first of the Heath family to emigrate to this country were two brothers, natives of the north of England, who came about the end of the seventeenth century, landing at Boston, Mass. One located on a farm in the suburbs of that city, and the other went farther west and was never afterward heard from by his brother. Reuben Heath, a great-uncle of Hiel Heath, was born in Massachusetts, and was one of a family of four brothers who fought at the battle of Bunker Hill. Reuben and William alone surviving. The children of Reuben were Nathaniel, Rachel, Sarah and Mary. Grandfather Heath owned a farm near Boston, where he died. His children were as follows: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, a Methodist minister, who preached a few years in Randolph, Vt., was called to Pennsylvania, and there died; and James, the father of Hiel Heath. The children remained on the home farm until after the death of their mother, then located on a farm in Randolph, Vermont.

James Heath was educated and married in Massachusetts. He followed the trade of shoemaker there, and for a short time in Randolph, where he resided with the family for a few years. He then located on a farm in Middlebury, Addison county, Vt., where his wife died in 1852, and he in 1854 at the age of seventy-eight. Their children were as follows: Charles (deceased), born in 1796, married to Caroline Chadwick, by whom he had four children, the three eldest being named Henry C., Benjamin Franklin and George; for his second wife Charles married Rosanna ———, by whom he had four sons: James, born in 1798, a lumberman on the St. Lawrence, died at the age of twenty-seven; Libbeus, born in 1800, was engaged in the lumber business in Manitowoc county, Wis., where he died, unmarried, in 1844. Daniel, born in 1804, was a horse dealer in Vermont and New Hampshire; he married Mary Wadleigh in the latter State, and had six children, the four eldest being named Elizabeth, Mary, Joseph and Daniel. Rebecca J., born in 1806, married Charles Pratt, a farmer in Fond du Lac county, Wis., by whom she had the following children: Emeline, Norman J., Albert, Celestine (deceased), Sarah and H. Ellen. Maria, born in 1808, was twice married, her first husband being Dickerman, a lumberman, in Middlebury, Vt., her second, Sherman, a farmer near Ft. Ticonderoga, N. Y. Sarah, now deceased, became the wife of Eber Coggsell, by whom she had five children. Hiel is the subject of this sketch. Ann, born in 1814, married Kneeland Olmstead, a carriage manufacturer, by whom she had six children, all daughters. Louisa, now deceased, born in 1818, was the wife of Solomon Thomas, a farmer in Addison county, Vt., by whom she had four children, all daughters.

Hiel Heath received a common-school education in his native town, attending school three months in the year until he was eighteen, then, in the winters, until he was thirty years of age, he went to the woods and drew logs with his father's team. In 1842 he journeyed to Wisconsin, going to Albany, N. Y., by stage, to Buffalo by canal, and by the way of the lakes, on the steamer "Great Western," to Milwaukee, arriving in May, 1842. Sailing from there for Manitowoc, Manitowoc county, he stopped at Port Huron, the captain being obliged to attend a lawsuit at Green Bay. Mr. Heath proceeded on foot to Sheboygan, where his vessel met him, and took him to Manitowoc. He was accompanied on his journey from Vermont by Hiram Champlin, who had bought a half interest in a thousand-acre tract of timberland and in a saw-mill in Manitowoc. Mr. Heath had only two shillings after his arrival, engaged board at a public house, and requested the landlord to trust him until he got employment. He worked for Mr. Champlin over a year. Mr. Heath's brother Libbeus, who had come from Vermont to work for Mr. Champlin, was taken sick, and he nursed him for seventy-two days, being relieved but five nights during all that time. His brother died, unmarried, September 16, 1844, aged forty-four years and eight days. Mr. Heath owned and drove the first lumber wagon in Manitowoc.

On December 28, 1852, in Waterford, Racine Co., Wis., Hiel Heath was united in marriage with Sarah L. Sheldon, who was born in 1825 in the town of Madrid, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., a daughter of Jonah and Sally P. Doane, both born in Massachusetts and at one time residents of Vermont, whence they removed to Madrid, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Jonah Doane had children as follows: Norman M., a shoemaker, who died in Caldwell, Racine Co., Wis., April 24, 1893; Mary, who is the widow of William Gilmore, by whom she had three children—Charles (now deceased, who was a farmer in Madrid, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., married to Ellen Martin), Clark W. (with whom his mother is now living; he is now an attorney in Pipestone, Minn., was formerly a school teacher in Wisconsin and Minnesota; he married Carrie Mount, now deceased, by whom he had five children, three of whom are living) and Emma who was a school teacher in Wisconsin, and is married to Samuel Percy, a jeweler in Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Azubah, deceased; Sarah L., wife of Hiel Heath; and Oliver, a farmer in Vacoma, Washington Co., Nebraska.

Mr. Heath bought 120 acres of government land in the town of Cato, Manitowoc Co., Wis., in 1849, made a clearing, and built a rude log cabin, into which he moved after his marriage. In this the family lived some ten years, when he built a more pretentious home. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hiel Heath are as follows: Martha E., born in Cato December 30, 1853, died in infancy; Harriet E., born in Cato May 23, 1855, married Charles Simmons, a carpenter in Caldwell, Racine Co., Wis., by whom she had three children—Earl, Pearl and Carol; Angeline, born in Cato January 21, 1857, received her education in Cato, taught school for four years, attended the Oshkosh Normal School for three months in the spring of 1879, taught a year in Beaver, Minn., has taught twelve terms in Amherst, and is presiding sister of the Amherst Social Temple of Honor, being an indefatigable worker in the cause of temperance; Charles Henry, a farmer in Grand Rapids, Wood Co., Wis., married Carrie Norton, of McDill, Wis., and Oliver Kyle, born in Cato in 1861, attended school at Cato during the winter months until twenty years of age, since which time he has managed the home farm.

In April, 1883, Hiel Heath disposed of his farm, of which seventy-four acres were then cleared, and he had a beautiful home and good outbuildings. His present farm, consisting of a quarter of Section 16, he bought in the latter part of April, 1883, since which time he has remodeled the house, and, with the assistance of his son, made great improvements on the farm.

Mrs. Hiel Heath passed away in July, 1894, and was buried in Greenwood cemetery, Amherst. Ill health had for some time prevented her usual active participation in Church matters; she was an estimable lady, an excellent wife, a good and kind mother. Her family and a host of friends in Cato and Amherst deeply mourn her decease. Mr. Heath, though in his eighty-fourth year, enjoys good health, and is straight as an arrow. He is a staunch Republican, was assessor for some years in Cato, and was elected justice of the peace there three times, but would not accept the office. In religious affiliation the family are Methodists.

OLIVER K. HEATH, the son, worked in the woods in the winter of 1884, and for six consecutive winters afterward was employed with team in taking supplies to lumber camps. Since his father has been unable to work he has had charge, and has proved a most successful farmer. He takes an active interest in political matters, and is a strong advocate of temperance and the Republican doctrine.

JOHN ELSÉN In the career of this gentleman we find an excellent example for young men just embarking in the field of active life, of what may be accomplished by a man beginning poor, but honest, prudent and industrious.

A native of Wisconsin, Mr. Elsen was born July 25, 1858, in Kenosha, a son of Adam Elsen, a native of Germany, who was one of a family of sixteen children, five of whom are yet living, the eldest being eighty years old. In December, 1817, in the Province of Rhine, the father was born, and there wedded Susan Neises, whose birth occurred in 1823. Seven children were born of this marriage: J. Albert, Peter A., and John, who are still living; one who died in infancy; Jacob and Mary, who have also passed away; and Mathias, who died at the age of twenty-three. The father came alone to America about the year 1847, first being employed as foreman on a canal in Ohio, and in 1850 he returned to the Fatherland, the following year bringing his wife to these shores. For a time he engaged in farming near Kenosha, Wis., but later sold out and opened a grocery store and hotel in that city. For many years he carried these on, though later he was the proprietor of a butcher shop; he was also employed in the lumber woods. His death occurred in Kenosha in 1886. Mrs. Elsen still makes that place her home; she is one of a family of twelve children. Her father, who was a farmer of Germany, also belonged to a large family numbering fourteen children, and his parents were also agriculturists.

In the public and parochial schools of Kenosha, Wis., John Elsen pursued his studies until the age of thirteen, remaining under the parental roof, however, until he was twenty, giving the benefit of his labors to his father. At that time he went to Kansas, where for one year he followed farming. On his return to Kenosha, he remained there only two months, when he moved to Racine, Wis., there working as a molder for three years, which trade he had previously learned in his native city. In 1882 he arrived in Merrill, where for four years he was employed by the McCord & Wright Manufacturing Company in their sash and blind factory. He then went to work for A. H. Stange, who was engaged in the same line of business; after a short time he was made foreman of the works, and, later, assistant superintendent. In January, 1895, when the A. H. Stange Manufacturing Company was organized he was made vice-president and now holds that position; they have a sawmill, and are engaged in the manufacture of sash, doors and blinds. It is one the leading firms of Merrill, and they are now doing an excellent business. For two years our subject was also engaged in the hardware trade; he has dealt in real estate to some extent.

On January 27, 1883, at Merrill, Mr. Elsen was married to Miss Augusta Stange, daughter of Carl and Caroline Stange, and to this union have been born three children—two sons and a daughter—Albert A., William P. and Helen S. In politics Mr. Elsen is independent, desiring to cast his vote for the man whom he thinks best qualified to fill the office, regardless of party ties. For two years he has served the people of the Fifth ward of Merrill as alderman, and one year on the county board. He was a charter member of the first volunteer fire company organized, in 1887, in Merrill, and has since been actively connected with it, having been foreman several times. At present he is president of the company, and with the exception of two years, has been since it was organized. He has the reputation of being a first-class business man, reliable and energetic, and is a citizen of whom Merrill may be justly proud.

EDWARD AND HENRY O. EVENSON, hardware merchants of Tomahawk, Lincoln county, comprise the firm of Evenson Brothers, and carry on the leading store in their line in that city. They are men of energy and good judgment, finely adapted to their present business, which they take pride in conducting on the best known plans. Their stock is of the best grades, and they thus enjoy a liberal patronage.

These brothers were born in Waupaca county, Wis., Edward on January 6, 1861, Henry on October 23, 1863. Their father, Harold Evenson, was born in Norway, in June, 1824, and is a son of Aaron Evenson, also a native of the same country. The grandfather was married in Norway and in his family were Harold, Halver, Erick and Ole, who accompanied their parents to America in 1845. The latter both died in Dane county, Wis. The maternal grandparents with their children also came to the United States at the same time. Harold Evenson, the father, married Carrie Helgeson, in Norway, in 1845, and they immediately set sail for the New World. Locating near Madison, Wis., the father began contracting on the railroad, but later removed to Waupaca county, Wis., where he purchased land from the government, and there still resides. He had a family of ten children, all born in Wisconsin: Edwin H., who graduated from the college at Decorah, Iowa, and the university at Madison, Wis., was superintendent of schools in South Dakota, and professor of Greek and Latin in the State Normal there, and in Milton College of Wisconsin, but now lives in Seattle, Wash.; Edward and Henry O. come next in the order of birth; Clara H. is now Mrs. Frogner, and lives in Iola, Wis.; Joseph T. comes next; four children died in infancy; Gustave A., who was also a graduate of the college at Decorah, Iowa, died at the age of twenty-eight years. Politically, the father is a Republican and a leader in his party in the county where he makes his home. He has held many public offices in his town, where he is an influential and highly-esteemed citizen, and the fine improvements on his place indicate him to be a progressive and prosperous farmer. Educational matters have always received his earnest support, and he has given his children the best of school privileges. He is now passing his declining days at his pleasant home in Scandinavia township, Waupaca county.

The brothers, whose names stand at the beginning of this sketch, were reared upon the home farm, their childhood days being passed in attendance at the country schools, and later in the village schools of Iola, Wis. Henry also became a pupil in the high school of Waupaca, Wis., after which they both took a business course in Milton College. On leaving the schoolroom they assisted their father, who was a natural mechanic, mason, carpenter and painter, and with him learned those trades, but soon started out in life for themselves. They followed those occupations to some extent during the succeeding four years, and Henry also clerked in a hardware store, during which time he partially learned the trade of a tinner. Edward was employed in the lumber woods during the winter seasons, and for one year conducted a general store for T. Thompson, in Iola, Wis. They were very saving with their earnings, and in the fall of 1887, with their combined capital, Henry built and opened up a hardware store in Tomahawk, under the name of Evenson Brothers, and Edward who was clerking at the time soon gave up his position and joined his brother. It was the first store of the kind established in Tomahawk, and they have since continued business with excellent success. For two years they also dealt quite extensively in lumber and real estate—both city property and pine lands.

Henry O. Evenson was married in June, 1891, to Miss Blanche Spaulding who was born in Outagamie county, Wis., daughter of James and Matilda (Hulbert) Spaulding, farming people, who have two children, Charles and Blanche. The parents are both natives of Maine; the father served as a soldier during the Civil war, in which he was wounded. The Evenson brothers are Republican in politics, and though neither of them are politicians, Edward was prevailed upon by his friends to accept the office of school commissioner, which he held for two years, and is now serving on the county board, being elected from the Third ward. Religiously, they are members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. They are industrious, energetic and progressive in nature, and are highly esteemed and respected by all who know them.

SAMUEL W. SMITH, the genial and courteous "mine host" of the "Denton House," Eagle River, Vilas county, and present postmaster, was born April 16, 1850, in Marquette county, Wisconsin.

Judge A. D. Smith, father of our subject, was a native of New York State, born in 1813, in Ulster county, a son of John Smith, who had a family of seven children, as follows: Robert, Doll, Benjamin, Angeline, Susan, Rachel and Abraham D. The parents of these both died in New York State, and the father was well known as a great lover and successful breeder of fast horses. Judge A. D. Smith was a well-educated man, a carpenter by trade, becoming superintendent on the construction of the docks and locks for the Lehigh Valley waterway. He was married, in 1834, at Wilkesbarre, Penn., to Miss Pollie Bennett, who was born there in 1819; she had two brothers: Samuel and Josiah. To Judge and Pollie Smith were born children as follows: Angelina (Mrs. L. B. Best), Susan (Mrs. O. N. Hillyer), Addie (Mrs. Henry Douglass), Rachel (deceased), Eliza and Sarah (both deceased in infancy), Josiah B., Robert N. (deceased), Samuel W., Benjamin F., John A., Clara (Mrs. Galbraith), and Charlotte O. (Mrs. McDonald). Judge Smith came with his family to Wisconsin in 1846, the journey from Pennsylvania being made with a covered wagon drawn by horses. They remained in the southern part of the State two years, and then established a homestead near Briggsville, Marquette county. The judge owned some 300 acres of land, partly in Marquette and partly in Adams county, and hereon he died in July, 1890, his wife following him to the grave in 1892. He was a loyal, patriotic American, but would never accept public office; a firm temperance man, yet never obtrusive in his opinions on that subject, and was strong in his likes and dislikes, a sincere friend and a generous enemy.

Samuel W. Smith, the subject proper of this sketch, was reared on a farm, and educated at the district school, remaining at home most of the time till he was twenty-three years old, working in the woods, winters. After his marriage, in 1873, he commenced for his own account, his first venture being cranberry raising, and for three years he followed agricultural pursuits, after which he commenced lumbering as a jobber. Taking up his residence at Grand Rapids, he there, with the exception of two years, worked a farm. For six years he logged for the Sherry & Cameron Co., and, having both a logging and railroad outfit, filled railroad contracts during the summer seasons. In 1889 he came to Eagle River and bought his present property, known as the "Denton House," the leading hotel in the young city, which he has considerably added to and greatly improved since assuming charge of it. He has taken an active and prominent part in the building up of Eagle River, particularly, also, in the organization of Vilas county, much of his time being spent in Madison for that purpose. In politics he is a Democrat, and he was appointed postmaster at Eagle River by President Cleveland. He is a strong advocate of temperance, and a useful, popular citizen.

Samuel W. Smith was married to Miss Alice Walsh, who was born in Quebec, Canada, daughter of Patrick and Bridget (Murphy) Walsh, both of whom were of Irish nativity, the father born in Athlone. They were married in Canada, and had eight children, as follows: Jennie, Alice, Thomas, William, Patrick and James, living; and Mary and Sabina, deceased, the former when thirteen years old, the latter when fifteen. In 1868 the family came to Wisconsin, settling at Grand Rapids, Wood county, whence, in 1893, the father, who was a farmer by occupation, moved to Eagle River, Vilas county, where he died December 4, same year; his widow is yet living. John Walsh (father of Patrick Walsh), an only child, born in 1789, married Sabina Finn, by whom he had eight children—three sons and five daughters. In an early day the family emigrated to Canada, moving from there to Wisconsin, where John Walsh, the father, died in April, 1874. Mrs. Bridget Walsh, mother of Mrs. S. W. Smith, was fifteen years old when she came to Canada with her parents, who both died there; she had one brother, Thomas Murphy (who was a soldier in the British army twenty-one years), one sister, Alice, in Australia, and another, Mrs. Mary Crowe, in San Francisco, Cal. Mrs. Bridget (Murphy) Walsh's mother was a Barry; she had two brothers—Luke and Timothy—who were educated for the Church, and were professors.

FREDERICK WILLIAM BURT, the popular assistant postmaster at Grand Rapids, well deserves mention in the history of Wood county. From time immemorable it has been the custom of all nations to extol in story and in song the gallant deeds in time of war, but it has been left to civilized nations to commemorate that truer manliness, that nobler courage which enables one to live uprightly and deal justly, seeking no preferment or approval save that of the Higher power and their own consciences. Shall a soldier hero receive a greater tribute of respect than one who silently and uncomplainingly takes up his burden and fights back the thousand adverse fate, that seek to block his pathway to success? The deeds of a good man should live after him, and in these days of wide dissemination of thought and doctrine, the transmission of the story from the father to the son is inadequate. Only through written record can we perpetuate his memory and extend his influence, making life an example for future generations.

Of those of whom it is said that the world is better for his having lived is Mr. Burt. He was born in Newark, N. J., April 24, 1830, and is a son of William Hubbard and Elizabeth M. (Jones) Burt, both natives of New Jersey. The father, a shoemaker by trade, died of cholera in 1833, in New York City, directly opposite the residence of his sister. He had gone thither for the purpose of purchasing stock for his business. Three years later, in 1836, the mother and three of her children removed to St. Catharines, Canada, and there they resided until Frederick was ten years of age. In the meantime his mother married again and then removed to Short Hills, about eight miles from St. Catharines, where our subject remained until 1850.

Mr. Burt was educated in a private school at St. Catharines, spent one term in a district school in New York, and then engaged in farming, also learning the carpenter's trade. He continued in Canada until 1850, when he came to Wisconsin, locating first in Dane county, where he carried on agricultural pursuits. Later he removed to Portage county, but after a few months, in the fall of 1855, he removed to Grand Rapids. Here he worked at carpentering until August, 1861, when he went into the harvest fields. In September, same year, he enlisted at Grand Rapids in Company G, Seventh Wis. V. I., and was discharged March 28, 1862, on account of illness contracted in the service. He at once returned to his home, and upon his recovery obtained a position in the post office as assistant postmaster, serving until 1870, and also acting as clerk in a general store. In 1869 he was elected clerk of the circuit court, which position he filled six years; in January, 1875, he again became assistant postmaster, and had charge of the office until 1890, when he was elected postmaster, serving until January, 1894. He was then succeeded by E. B. Brundage, with whom he has since served as assistant.

Mr. Burt was married in Portage City, Wis., June 17, 1855, to Miss Celeste Eliza, daughter of Peter and Calista (Sampson) Jessey, natives of Vermont. Seven children were born to them: Jessie Eva, wife of George Brampton, a resident of Hartford, Conn.; Fredericka W., who died at the age of two years; Harry Andrew, who makes his home in Rhinelander, Wis., and is employed as a traveling salesman for the Flanner Lumber Company; Frederick W., who is living in Wausau, Wis.; Walter Edwin, manager of the yard and purchasing agent for the Flanner Lumber Company of Rhinelander, Wis.; William, who makes his home in Green Bay, Wis.; and Carson Otto, living with his father in Grand Rapids.

The worth and ability of Mr. Burt have been recognized by his fellow townsmen who have called him to office; in 1855 and 1856 he served as justice of the peace, and he has also filled the position of town clerk. He takes considerable interest in civic societies, and is a member of Grand Rapids Lodge, No. 128, F. & A. M.; Forest Chapter, No. 34, R. A. M. of Stevens Point, Wis.; and of Grand Rapids Lodge, No. 91, I. O. O. F.; also of Shaurett Encampment of the same fraternity. For a half century he has been a consistent member of the Methodist Church—his life being in harmony with his professions and true to his convictions of right and wrong. In his political views he is a stalwart Republican, is a public-spirited and progressive citizen, enjoying the high regard of all who know him.

PATRICK SULLIVAN, one of the representative farmers of Lanark township, Portage county, was born May 31, 1858, in Hull township, same county, son of Jeremiah and Bridget (Touhey) Sullivan, natives of County Cork, Ireland, who came to America in 1849.

Jeremiah Sullivan was a poor man, and made his living by day's labor, for a number of years working on railroads. In 1857 he came to Portage county, and in Hull township, homesteaded a farm, there remaining until his death January 15, 1862, which resulted from an accident. His children were as follows: Margaret, who married John Hopkins, and died in Lanark township; Ellen, a maiden lady; Patrick, subject of this sketch; Catherine, now Mrs. Edward Cooney, of Lanark township; and Daniel, a farmer, also of Lanark township. After the father's death the widow and her children became members of the family of Patrick Leary, whose wife was a sister of Mrs. Sullivan. Through the kindness of Mr. Leary the Sullivans remained with him until they had grown up, and were able to provide for themselves. Mrs. Sullivan now resides with her son Patrick.

Our subject received a fair education in his boyhood days, but schools were not very numerous in those pioneer times, and he often had to walk from two and a half to three miles to school. He was reared a farmer's boy in the new country, at the age of ten years removing to Lanark township with his foster parents, who settled in Section 16, which at that time was all forest, their first house being a board shanty. As soon as Mr. Sullivan was old enough he went to work on the farm, and has successfully followed agriculture ever since. He was married, November 22, 1888, in Buena Vista township, Portage county, to Miss Alice O'Connell, born in that township January 5, 1868, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Tracy) O'Connell. After marriage they began housekeeping on the farm which they have ever since occupied. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan were as follows: Mary, Daniel J. (deceased), Patrick J., Alice, and Agnes. Politically Mr. Sullivan is a staunch Democrat, and has served as supervisor and as school treasurer in District No. 7 five years. In 1893 he was elected chairman of the township, the youngest man who has ever filled that office in Lanark township. Though his own educational opportunities were meagre, he is an earnest friend to the cause of education, and a strong advocate for better schools. While chairman he voted for the erection of a Normal School, but this display of enterprise and public spirit seems to have been somewhat in advance of the times, for certain voters of a non-progressive nature combined to defeat him at the next election. Mr. Sullivan and family are members of the Catholic Church. He is an excellent farmer, and one of the best known young citizens in the township.

DAVID D. TARR, a representative of one of the honored New England families who for generations have made their home in Maine, was born in Salem, that State, in May, 1839. His father, Mark P. Tarr, also a native of Maine, married Sophrona P. Merchant, who was born in Massachusetts, and they became the parents of three children—Hiram F., Mary E. and David D. The father, who was a farmer and lumberman, died in the Pine Tree State in 1889, where his wife had passed away two years previously. The paternal grandfather, John Tarr, lived all his life in Maine, and by his marriage became the father of eight children—John, Abraham, William, Rufus, Abigail, May, Harriet and Mark P.

David D. Tarr, the subject of this sketch, was educated in the high school, and remained at home until he had attained his majority. In May, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Second Maine V. I., becoming corporal, serving three months, during which time he participated in the first battle of Bull Run. At the end of that time he re-enlisted for two years, remaining in the service until the spring of 1863, as a member of the Army of the Potomac. He was in the siege of Yorktown and Hanover Court House, and in the Chickahominy Swamps he was taken sick, on which account he was sent to the hospital at York, Penn., from which in time he was discharged, but after returning home he did not recover his health for over a year. For a time Mr. Tarr was employed in a mill, after which he made a trip to Omaha, Neb., for his health, and, in 1868, went to Minneapolis, Minn., where for a year he clerked in a hotel. At the end of that time he went to Big Rapids, Mich., being in the employ of O. P. Pillsbury & Co., remaining there ten years, serving in different capacities, including the positions of scaler, foreman and, later, as superintendent of their upper river branch. He also engaged in general merchandising in Stanwood and Hersey, Mich., and on selling out that business returned to Maine, where he remained one year. In May, 1884, he came to Wisconsin, in the employ of the Merrill Boom Company, which belonged to the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company. O. P. Pillsbury sent for Mr. Tarr to come to Merrill and accept the position of superintendent of Merrill Boom, in which capacity he still continues to serve, being held in the highest regard by his employers. This company employs about eighty men, and handles as high as one hundred forty million feet of lumber for Merrill, and one hundred million for parties down the river.

On September 16, 1880, Mr. Tarr wedded Sarah Jane Palmer, who was born in Nobleboro, Maine, October 10, 1845, and is a daughter of Elisha R. and Sarah (Dunbar) Palmer, who had eight children: Halsey H., Arlinda R., Bertha A., Orlando A., Gulingus C., Sarah J., Byron W. and Sanford K. The parents were natives of Maine, where the father was employed as a ship-builder and carpenter until his death, which occurred November 10, 1868; the mother now makes her home with Mr. Tarr. She is of Scotch lineage, being a direct descendant of Earl George Dunbar, who on the occasion of his marriage was knighted by King James I. For a time he stood very high in the King's favor, but in March, 1425, he was arrested and imprisoned on suspicion, his estates being confiscated to the Crown. The Dunbar family occupies a conspicuous place all through Scottish history. To Mr. and Mrs. Tarr were born, June 18, 1882, twins: Arthur Jay and Alta May. Our subject takes a warm interest in public affairs, and uniformly casts his vote with the Republican party. For three years he served as postmaster at Stanwood. Socially he is identified with several civic societies, belonging to the F. & A. M., in which he is a Knight Templar, and the Grand Army of the Potomac. He is frank and open in the expression of his opinions, and has the confidence and respect of all.

MRS. MARY BYRNES, of Grand Rapids, is a native of the Emerald Isle, born in County Down, February 15, 1836, a daughter of Felix and Mary (Hale) Magenity, who were also natives of County Down, where they spent their entire lives.

Their family consisted of seven children, four of whom still survive, and of these Mrs. Byrnes is the eldest. The others still living are Alexander, who is serving as inspector of customs in New York City; Alice, wife of William Mead, a resident of Belturbet, County Cavan, Ireland; and John, who is still living in County Down. One of her brothers, James, was drowned in the Columbia river, Oregon; another brother, Thomas, was a civil engineer in the employ of the British government, became a captain in the "Gordon Highlanders," and with his command took part in the Crimean war, his death occurring at Bombay, India, while in the service. Religiously this family were all connected with the Roman Catholic Church. The parents both died in Ireland.

The lady, whose name introduces this sketch, spent her maidenhood days in her parents' home in the land of her nativity, and after she had reached womanhood she gave her hand in marriage to Edward Byrnes, the wedding being celebrated in 1855, and the same year they crossed the Atlantic to America. Mr. Byrnes was also a native of County Down, Ireland, born November, 1, 1825, a son of Bernard and Margaret (Byrnes) Byrnes. His childhood was similar to that of most farmer lads of his time, and the educational privileges which he received where those afforded by the public schools. He was one of a family of eleven children, and with five others he has passed to the life eternal. Those still living at this writing (the early part of 1895) are Elizabeth, wife of Timothy Hurley, a resident of Centralia, Wis.; Thomas, who makes his home in Grand Rapids; Margaret, wife of John Quirk, who is located in Saratoga, Wood Co., Wis.; Rose and Mary Ann, both of whom are still living in Ireland.

The wedding tour of Mr. and Mrs. Byrnes consisted of an ocean voyage—a trip across the Atlantic to the United States in search of a new home. They at once came to Wisconsin, locating first in Oshkosh, but after a few-months' residence there they came to Grand Rapids, where Mr. Byrnes continued until his death. He was one of the first settlers of that place, and took an active part in its development, being prominently identified with its upbuilding. For a few years after his arrival here he engaged in lumbering, but in later years he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, which he successfully carried on throughout his remaining days, being recognized as one of the leading farmers of the neighborhood.

To Mr. and Mrs. Edward Byrnes nine children were born as follows: James, born March 4, 1856, was drowned May 31, 1864, in the Wisconsin river; Edward A., born August 11, 1858, now makes his home in Merrill, Wis.; George Andrew, born February 28, 1860, died August 27, 1862; Mary Alice, born May 16, 1862, is now the wife of John Corbett, a resident of Glidden, Ashland Co., Wis.; William James, born September 17, 1864, was drowned in Grandfather Falls, Wisconsin river, May 10, 1895; Margaret Theresa, born December 14, 1866, is a teacher in the schools of Morse, Wis.; Andrew Eugene, born May 16, 1869, is living in Merrill; Rose Ellen, born June 9, 1873, is now successfully engaged in teaching in the public schools of Lincoln county, Wis.; and Martha Elizabeth, born September 1, 1875, is also a school teacher of recognized ability.

Mr. Byrnes was a man of sterling qualities, commanding the respect and admiration of all who knew him, as one of the useful, honorable and public-spirited men of the community. He passed peacefully away October 19, 1891, leaving a widow and seven children to mourn the loss of a loving husband and a kind and indulgent father.

EDWARD T. BODETTE, a practical shoemaker, and an old and universally respected citizen of Grand Rapids, Wood county, was born at Three Rivers, in the Province of Quebec, Canada, November 9, 1846.

He is a son of Nelson and Amelia Bodette, also natives of Canada, who left that country for Rochester, N. Y., both dying in Churchville, a village about fourteen miles from that city. Their family numbered five children, of whom we give brief mention as follows: Agnes, now the wife of John Spitzmer, is a resident of Churchville, N. Y.; Nelson is also living in that place; Edward T. is the subject of this sketch; Elijah is living in Churchville; Mary, now the wife of William Faily, is located at South Byron, New York.

When a year old, Edward T. Bodette was taken by his parents to the Empire State, and was reared to manhood in their home, while in the common schools of Churchville he obtained a fair knowledge of the common English branches of learning. On making choice of an occupation which he wished to follow for a livelihood, he determined upon shoe making, a trade he learned and has followed throughout his entire life. In the spring of 1857, when a youth of eleven years, he came with his parents to Grand Rapids, Wis.; but they were not favorably impressed with this country, which was then a wild and undeveloped region, and after a six-months' residence here returned to Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Bodette, however, again sought a home here in 1869. This time he came alone, and seeing a good opening for a shoemaker, he decided to remain, and established a shop which he has since conducted. His excellent workmanship, his pleasant and genial manner, and his efforts to please his customers, soon brought him a liberal patronage, which increased as the town became more thickly settled, and he has done a good business. Indolence is not found in his nature, and idleness forms no part of his composition. He has led a busy and useful life, and has won the confidence and esteem of all with whom business or social relations have brought him in contact. Mr. Bodette exercises his right of franchise in support of the men and measures of the Republican party, and in religious faith he and his family hold membership with the Roman Catholic Church.

In November, 1873, our subject married Miss Bertha Zeaman, a daughter of Louis and Mary Zeaman, both of whom were born in Germany, but are now residents of Sigel township, Wood Co., Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Bodette are the parents of eight children, six of whom are yet living, as follows: Joseph Edward, Francis Nelson, William Arthur, Edward, George and Mabel Amelia.

MART. HIRZEL, a prosperous and representative business man of Vilas county, is a native of New York State, born in Erie county, March 26, 1864, of German descent.

Grandfather Hirzel was born in Baden, Germany, where he married and whence he came to the United States, settling in an early day in Buffalo, N. Y., where he was proprietor of a meat market. This honored pioneer couple had five children, named respectively: George, Fred, Martin, David and Sarah. The parents of these and also their son George subsequently returned to Germany, and there died. Another son, David, father of our subject, was born at Williamsville, Erie Co., N. Y., in 1834, and for many years was a stock man in the Buffalo (N. Y.) stock yards. He there married Mary Sturt, who was born, in 1836, in Philadelphia, Penn., of German parents, who emigrated to this country shortly after their marriage, and died in Philadelphia the parents of three children: Martin, Godfrey and Mary. To David and Mary Hirzel were born ten children, named respectively: Mary, David, Emma, Godfrey, Martin, Albert, Alvin, William, Ella and Emil. Mr. Hirzel, in 1874, left Buffalo, and made his last earthly home on a fruit farm at Williamsville, N. Y., where he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1883. The widowed mother sold this farm in 1893, and now lives with her daughter, Mrs. Schaffer, at Clare, Mich. David Hirzel's brother, Fred, died at Yorkshire, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., and the other brother, Martin, lives at Whitehouse, Ohio, with the sister, Sarah.

Mart. Hirzel, the subject proper of these lines, received his education at an academy at Williamsville, both in English and German. When seventeen years old he moved west to Michigan and worked in the woods, lumbering, until coming to Eagle River, August 28, 1885, where during the first summer he was employed in a sawmill—in the winter in the woods, and in the spring on the "drive." In the spring of 1888 he embarked in his present wholesale and retail coal, wood, ice, lime, brick, hair and cement business, in addition to which he is also agent for the Pabst Brewing Co. of Milwaukee.

On July 22, 1891, Mr. Hirzel was married, at Eagle River, to Miss Rosa B. Allen, who was born at Norfolk, Va., August 18, 1871, daughter of Perry C. and Fannie (Wise) Allen, natives of Pennsylvania, who were the parents of three daughters: Lettie, Rosa B., and Hattie. The mother of these now lives at Eagle River. Mr. and Mrs. Hirzel have no children. They have an elegant and attractive home in Eagle River, in addition to which our subject owns other city property, besides land in another part of the county. In his political predilections he is a Democrat, and he has served his city as supervisor and as superintendent of the water works. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 109, Eagle River, of which he is recording secretary. As a typical self-made man, one who has, unaided, "hoed his own row," Mr. Hirzel stands conspicuously in the front rank of the successful ones.

JOHAN AND JAMES RICE, members of the well-known firm of John Rice & Brother Co., proprietors of foundry and machine shops, etc., and dealers in coal, agricultural implements, etc., Stevens Point, Portage county, rank among the most enterprising and progressive business men of the Northern Wisconsin Valley.

They are natives of County Louth, Ireland, born, John in 1838, and James in 1843. James Rice, their father, born April 15, 1811, came to America in 1842, when John and James were small boys, the family first locating at Geneva, N. Y., thence proceeding to Milwaukee, Wis., and from there to Nekimi, Winnebago county, where the father carried on farming pursuits, and was also engaged in railroad work as foreman. He was "boss" of a large gang of men employed on the construction of the "Darlington railroad," and was regarded as one of the most efficient foremen or superintendents in that line of work in the State. He subsequently moved to Eden township, Fond du Lac county, about eleven miles from the city of Fond du Lac, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until moving to Oshkosh, in which place he was employed in Campbell's shingle mill. From there he next removed to Seymour, Outagamie county, and here bought a farm of fully 200 acres where he lived until February 15, 1884, the day of his death, which was caused by an accident. He was returning from a visit to the village of Seymour, two miles distant, was walking along the track, and being muffled up, and, moreover, somewhat deaf, being seventy-three years old, did not hear the approaching train, which struck him, producing such injuries that he died nine days after, retaining consciousness to the last.

The brothers were reared on the farm, John after a time learning the trade of carpenter, while James continued working on the homestead, also engaging in getting out logs by contract, each thus continuing for some years. John went to the gold fields "out West," and for seven or eight years met with remarkable success, having struck one of the richest and most productive fields in the entire "diggings." On his return he engaged in the sawmilling business in Oconto, becoming in course of a short time a partner in the industry, the firm name being Amy, Rice & Fitzgerald, which continued some four or five years, when Mr. Rice sold out and moved to Oshkosh, becoming interested in the tannery business in partnership with Mr. Reuben Dowd, under the firm style of Dowd & Rice. His next enterprise was in the Wolf River Transportation Co., of which he became part owner; then in partnership with Reuben Dowd he embarked in the logging business on Wolf river, James Rice acting as their foreman, this industry continuing until 1872, in which year John and James Rice entered into partnership in the establishment of a foundry and machine business in Weyauwega, Waupaca Co., Wis., and after five years, in 1877, they located a branch business at Stevens Point (South Side), Portage county, where is now the John Week planing-mill, in 1880 removing their entire plant to their present site on Clark street, Stevens Point, which has since been carried on successfully under the firm name of John Rice & Brother Co., with John Rice as president and James Rice as vice-president and general manager. They do a large business all around, giving employment in the foundry and machine shops alone to some twenty hands when running their full capacity. Among the leading articles turned out by the firm may be mentioned edgers, trimmers, bolters, pulleys, rope-feeds and sawmill carriages and machinery generally; also engines, boilers, all kinds of engine brasses, etc., in fact, everything connected with mills and mill machinery in general. The brothers also operated a sawmill in Bayfield county, Wis., at Benoit, on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha railroad, commencing business December 3, 1889, and conducting same until July 4, 1892, when it burned down. The firm was known as the Benoit Lumber Co., of which James Rice was president and John Rice secretary and treasurer. They still own 320 acres of land in that vicinity. At the time of the construction of the Wisconsin Central railroad they took a large contract, which included the piling and bridging at Gill's Landing, across the Wolf river and adjoining bayous.

JOHN RICE was married September 14, 1869, to Miss Elvira Jones, a lady of Welsh descent, and three children were born to them, namely: Ellen, Ada and Margery, the last named being deceased, having been suffocated to death at the burning of the Sisters' school at Lake Villa, near Madison, Wis., in 1893. John Rice served as chief of Stevens Point Fire Department, and was a member of the county board of Portage county.

JAMES RICE was married at New London, Wis., January 1, 1872, to Miss Helen Jane Micklejohn, and four children were born to them, as follows: Theodore James, a fireman on the "Soo" railroad, who one stormy, sleety trip, November 25, 1892, fell (how was never known) a distance of 65 feet from his engine at Marine Station, Madison Co., Minn., and was instantly killed; John Francis, now studying law; Earl M., and Hazel May, both attending school.

In political proclivities the brothers are both Democrats, with liberal and independent tendencies, never aspiring to office, and they were both reared in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church. They are enterprising in the true sense of the term, and have deservedly prospered, have done much toward the improvement of the city of their adoption, and at the present time, 1895, are interested in the Stevens Point Land Improvement Company, and hold stock in the District Fair Association, toward which they liberally subscribed. James Rice was chief of the Fire Department in 1891; he is a stockholder in the Citizens National Bank, Stevens Point.

W P. NICHOLS, the well-known and popular treasurer of Dupont township, Waupaca county, claims Ireland as the land of his nativity. He was born January 24, 1847, and is a son of Patrick and Johanna (Griffin) Nichols, who were natives of County Limerick, Ireland. There the father spent his entire life, his death occurring in that county in 1851.

In 1853 the mother brought her family to America, locating first in Syracuse, N. Y., from there going to Carlisle township, Lorain Co., Ohio, in 1858. Five years later she came to Dupont township, Waupaca county, and the Nichols were the tenth family within its borders. Here the mother spent her remaining days, being called to the home beyond February 9, 1885, leaving two sons, W. P. and Daniel

J., both farmers of Dupont township. These boys accompanied their mother on her various removals, and the first named was educated in the common schools of Lorain county, Ohio, where he first engaged in business for himself, as a farm hand. Subsequently he followed teaming in Cleveland, and at the age of eighteen years he became a resident of Dupont township, Waupaca county, where he aided in clearing the home farm. He also worked in the lumber woods on Pigeon river, and in those early days became familiar with all the experiences and hardships of frontier life.

In New London, Wis., April 9, 1871, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Nichols and Miss Fannie Ruddy, who was born in Grafton township, Ozaukee Co., Wis., daughter of John and Bridget (Conniff) Ruddy, pioneers of that county and natives of the Emerald Isle. Her father came to this state a single man, and here met, wooed and won his estimable wife. For some years he was engaged in work on the river, running boats between New London and Oshkosh, and to Berlin. He afterward turned his attention to farming, locating a tract of wild land on Bear creek, Waupaca county, where he cleared and opened up a farm and spent the remainder of his life. He passed away February 20, 1883, and his widow, who still survives him, is yet living on the old homestead. They reared a family of children as follows: Mrs. Nichols; William, a resident of Grant township, Shawano Co., Wis.; Charles, who is living in Idaho; James Fairbanks, also of Shawano county; Mrs. C. E. Beedle, of Clintonville, Wis.; Mrs. Landon, of Minneapolis, Minn.; and Louis, at home. In 1871, Mr. Nichols located on his present farm, on which not a furrow had been turned or an improvement made. He built a small log house, 16 x 20 feet, and it was his place of residence until 1892, when he erected a good frame dwelling, one story and a half in height, 16 x 24 feet with an L, 16 x 20 feet. He also erected a large barn, 40 x 54 feet, with 16 foot posts, and his farm comprises eighty acres of land. In addition to its cultivation, he is also engaged in the lumber business, and successfully manages both interests, being a man of good business and executive ability, energetic and progressive.

In politics, Mr. Nichols is a Democrat, a leader of his party in this section of the county. In 1871, he was elected town treasurer, had previously been town clerk, and has since served as town clerk and town supervisor. In 1893 he was again elected treasurer of Dupont township, and is now filling that position in a creditable and acceptable manner with the same fidelity with which he discharges every trust reposed in him. The cause of education finds in him a warm friend, and he does all in his power for the promotion of the schools of this community. Both he and his wife hold membership with the Catholic Church.

EDWARD CLEARY, conductor on the Ashland division of the Chicago & North Western railroad, with residence at Antigo, Langlade county, was born in Lancaster, Worcester Co., Mass., October 25, 1855, son of Michael Cleary, who was born in Ireland about the year 1827, son of Edward Cleary, who died in Ireland when Michael was but ten years of age, leaving a widow and six children, viz.: Maurice, Garret, Edward, Patrick, Michael and Ann.

Michael Cleary, father of the subject of this sketch, came to America when twenty years of age, or in 1847, and settled in Massachusetts. Here he was married to Mary Powers, who was born in Ireland in 1830, one of a family of seven children—Catherine, William, Patrick, John, Michael, Edmond and Mary—born to Edward and Margaret (Hayes) Powers, the former of whom was a farmer and fisherman. In 1855 the family came to America and settled in Massachusetts where the father died in 1867; the mother passed away in Appleton, June 11, 1894, aged ninety-eight years. To Michael and Mary (Powers) Cleary were born eight children, viz.: Maurice (who died in 1879 at the age of eighteen), Edward, Michael, Ellen, Katherine and Margaret, and two deceased in infancy. Michael Cleary, the father, came to Wisconsin, in 1863, first locating in Appleton, from which place he moved soon after to a farm and returned to Appleton where, in March, 1895, he died. Mrs. Ellen Cleary, widow of Edward Cleary and mother of Michael, followed her sons to America, and died at Michael's home in 1878.

Edward Cleary, the subject proper of this sketch, was given the advantages of the common schools, and remained at home on the farm with his parents until he was nineteen years of age. He then went into the lumber woods, and worked there during the winters of four years, returning home in the summers to assist his father on the farm. In June, 1878, he was engaged on the right of way for the new railroad, chopping ties, and in the following December commenced braking on what was then the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western railroad, now the Ashland division of the Chicago & North Western. He has railroaded ever since, being one of the oldest men on this division, and has been promoted from time to time until in 1884 he was given a passenger run. In 1886 he took up his residence in Antigo, and having great faith in the prospects of the town, has done everything in his power to help in building it up; in 1891 he erected a fine block, and moreover is interested in several other blocks here. He is president of the J. C. Lewis Hardware Co., and has dealt extensively in outside lands.

Mr. Cleary was married, in 1882, to Miss Margaret Morrissey, of Appleton, daughter of Patrick and Margaret (Landers) Morrissey, natives of Ireland, who emigrated to the United States, making their first New-World home in Massachusetts where they were married. They had a family of eight children: Patrick, John, Thomas, Catherine, Ellen, Margaret, Johannah and Mary Ann, three of whom are deceased, viz.: Patrick, Catherine and Mary Ann. Patrick was ordained a Catholic priest in 1875, and died at St. Louis, Mo., May 10, 1892; John, who was ordained a priest in 1883, is now pastor of a congregation at Oshkosh; Thomas is married and lives in Antigo, Wis., where he is manager of the Delaglise estate; Ellen is a Sister of Charity at St. Agnes Convent,

Edward Cleary

Fond du Lac, Wis. The family came to this State in 1850, where the father followed agricultural pursuits; the mother died in March, 1885. To Mr. and Mrs. Cleary have been born five children: John E., Agnes M., Raymond W., Emmet V., and Aloysius F.

In his political predilections our subject is a Republican, and has served his adopted city as supervisor one year, and alderman two years. Socially, he is a member of the Order of Railroad Conductors of America; was a delegate to Toledo, Ohio, in May, 1893, and a delegate to Atlanta, Ga., in 1895, from the lodge at Ashland, Wis.; he was first chief conductor of the lodge at Ashland in 1889, and elected twice afterward, serving in that incumbency three years in all. In religious faith the entire family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Cleary owns one of the handsomest homes in the city of Antigo, and figures as one of the representative men of the place. Being public-spirited, he is ever ready to advance any cause that he thinks will permanently aid the growth and prosperity of the city. He is much respected by all who know him, the more so because he is known to have commenced at the bottom of the ladder, and with no assistance, save his own energy and attentiveness to business, worked himself up to a position of prominence and affluence. He is justly proud of the fact that, though he has been a railroad man nearly all of his life, he is not unfitted for other lines of usefulness, and he is counted one of the practical business men of Antigo.

ERICK JACOBSON ISELAND.

Among the energetic and progressive farmers of Iola township, Waupaca county, is this gentleman, who is engaged in general farming in Section 28, where he has a good farm of eighty acres, which he has developed from its primitive condition.

Mr. Iseland was born in Norway in December, 1825, and is a son of Jacob Erickson, a farmer of moderate circumstances. He is the only one of the family who grew to adult age, and was but two and a half years old at the time of his mother's death, after which he was reared by others. His father also died when he had reached the age of thirteen, leaving very little property. His early life was that common to all farmer boys in Norway, and his opportunities for acquiring an education were quite limited. His only home was with the farmers for whom he worked, but he saved his wages until he had enough money to bring him to America, knowing that his chances of obtaining a home by his own efforts in Norway were few. In company with Knute Erickson, now of Iola township, Waupaca county, he in the spring of 1849 left Skeim, Norway, on a sailing vessel, which after a voyage of six weeks landed him on American soil.

Mr. Iseland at once came to Waukesha county, Wis., and at the time had $70, but this all went to pay doctor bills. He was then employed as a farm hand, receiving from $10 to $15 per month, and remained in that county four years, at the end of which time he concluded to come to northern Wisconsin. As many of his countrymen were living in Waupaca county, he decided here to locate. With two others he made the trip in a single wagon. Knute Erickson, with whom he had crossed the ocean, was then living in Iola township, and he made a temporary home with him some three years. He then bought his present farm, which comprised 120 acres, but he has since sold forty acres of it. The land was then in its primitive condition, mostly covered with timber and scrub oak, though there was a small piece of natural prairie. He immediately began clearing and developing this land, and erected a small log house, the first building upon the place.

In Iola, on Christmas Day, 1858, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Iseland and Miss Mary Johnson, a native of Norway, born January 1, 1843, and a daughter of Nels Johnson, who was a miner and common laborer in his native land. In the spring of 1853 the father brought his family to America, there being at that time two children—Mary and Jens P. Nelson. He first located in Chicago, securing work on the railroads in Illinois, but the following spring came to Iola township, making his home on a farm in Section 33. He soon after went to Stevens Point, where he kept a boarding house for a time, after which he returned to Iola township and engaged in agricultural pursuits. His death occurred in South Dakota at the age of sixty-nine years; his wife passed away in Iola, at the age of seventy-seven. Mr. and Mrs. Island began their domestic life on his farm in their little shanty, which at that time had not even a window, which he bought later at Stevens Point. Their home was brightened by the birth of ten children: Annie, now the wife of Carl Evenson, of Wausau, Wis.; Julia, who was the wife of Andrew Danielson, and died September 23, 1891, at Stevens Point; Nellie, wife of Hans Olson, of Hazelhurst, Wis.; Julius, at home; Henry, a farm hand; Nettie, who died at the age of eighteen; Edwin, of Hazelhurst, Wis.; Josephine, a dress maker of Wausau, Wis.; and Gena and Lewis, at home.

For ten months Mr. Island served his adopted country as a soldier during the Civil war, enlisting in the fall of 1864 in Company C, Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., under Capt. Vaughn, and was mostly engaged in doing guard and patrol duty in Nashville, Tenn., during the winter of 1864-65. In the spring he went to Paducah, Ky., where he received his discharge and returned home in August, 1865.

In the early days during some seasons the crops were poor, and Mr. Island would then work on the Wisconsin Central railroad, which was then being constructed, in order to support his family, leaving the farm, where it was a difficult matter to get enough to live on during a drought. All the improvements now found upon the place have been the work of himself and sons, who are industrious, enterprising young men, and his wife has also proved a faithful helpmeet. The family holds a high place in the esteem and confidence of their fellow citizens which they justly merit. Mr. Island is a Republican in politics, but he does not care to take an active part in public life, though he cordially supports any measure that will benefit the community or State at large. With the Lutheran Church of Scandinavia, himself and family hold membership.

JACOB STAUB is familiarly known to the people of Scandinavia township as one of the most enterprising and progressive farmers of Waupaca county. He is a native of Switzerland, born in the village of Thalweil, Canton of Zurich, April 4, 1850, and is a son of Jacob Staub, who was a farmer of ordinary means, and the father of nine children, eight of whom crossed the broad Atlantic to the New World.

Our subject attended the schools of his native land, and remained under the parental roof until August 16, 1867, when he left the old home, determined to come to America, where he believed that better opportunities were afforded young men. At Havre, France, he took passage on board the "Guiding Star," which left port on the 21st of August. His destination was Vandyne, Wis., where he had acquaintances living, and near there he obtained work as a farm hand. At the end of two months, however, he came to Helvetia township, Waupaca county, and obtained employment with J. H. Leuthold with whom he remained during the winter of 1867-68, and then worked at whatever he could find to do in order to gain an honest living.

In the spring of 1868 the parents of Mr. Staub started from Switzerland for the United States, but while en route, the father died at Detroit, Mich., and was there buried. The widowed mother then came on to Helvetia township, and as our subject, being the oldest son, was regarded as the head of the family, he lived with her until 1872 when he came to Scandinavia township, where his eldest sister, Wilhelmina, wife of Jacob Aeberle, resided. During the summer he rented a farm, but in the fall of that year purchased the same, which was 160 acres in Section 9, going in debt for the whole amount—one thousand dollars—on which he had to pay eight and ten per cent interest.

At Black Wolf, Winnebago Co., Wis., on November 14, 1872, Mr. Staub was married to Miss Anna Laager, who was born January 10, 1854, in the city of Mollis, Canton Glarus, Switzerland, a daughter of Nicholas Laager, who was a decorator in a woolen factory. When sixteen years of age

Mrs. Staub came alone to America, sailing from Havre, France, on the "Erie," and at the end of seventeen days landed at New York, from which city she came to Oshkosh, Wis. She had attended the common schools in her native land, but never an English school. In Mollis she began work in a woolen factory as decorator, saving her money, to which she added by borrowing from her brothers and sisters until she had $68, enough to bring her to the United States. Here she worked as a servant girl until she could repay the money, which required a year and a half's industrious labor. Mr. and Mrs. Staub began their domestic life in a very modest little home on his farm, to which he has added until he now owns 290 acres in Scandinavia township, and eighty acres in Helvetia. Two children have been born to them: Erick N., a farmer, born January 9, 1874; and Walter J., at home, born May 7, 1875.

In political faith Mr. Staub is a Democrat, a stanch follower of the doctrines as formulated by that party, but gives little attention to political affairs, his time being fully occupied by the labors of his farm. For the prosperity that has come to him through his persistent efforts and intelligent management, he is greatly indebted to his wife, who has assisted him by every means in her power. Their comfortable residence is surrounded by a beautiful grove, and everything about the place denotes the owner to be a progressive, industrious and energetic man. He has succeeded in life without the help of an education in English, but has observed closely, and thus prospered. He holds membership with the Reformed Church.

N A. COLMAN. This gentleman, one of the busiest and most prominent citizens of Vilas county, is a native of Wisconsin, born in Greenbush, Sheboygan county, May 4, 1860.

His father, Charles B. Colman, was born February 4, 1822, in Warren, Litchfield Co., Conn. The family is of English origin, the ancestry being traced back to three brothers who came from England to America in an early day, one of them making his home in Warren, Connecticut.

Hon. C. B. Colman received his education at the Warren Academy. After finishing his education he taught school for some time, and in 1842 started out to see "the West." He was pleased with Wisconsin, and took up a homestead in Sheboygan county, twenty miles west of Lake Michigan. Thus he came alone to Wisconsin leaving father, mother, one brother—Fredrick—and three sisters—Lucia, Sarah and Elizabeth—in Connecticut. After being successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits for some time, he married Miss Emma Carter, of the same county, but after a brief married life she died leaving an infant daughter, Orpha E.

Mr. Colman took for a second wife Miss Anna S. Stoddard, a native of New York, whose parents, Jonathan and Phebe (Carter) Stoddard, were natives of Canada. By this marriage five children were born, viz.: Florence, Niles A., Henry J., C. Francis and Emogene. The father of N. A. Colman is a stanch member of the Democratic party, and has always taken an active part in political affairs. He has filled many town and county offices, besides serving as member of the Assembly from Sheboygan county. He is a man of well-known ability and mental activity. Hon. C. B. Colman and wife now make their home in Dunn county, Wisconsin.

In June, 1892, N. A. Colman was married at Eagle River to Miss Bessie B. Shank, who died March 8, 1894, leaving, a daughter, Bessie D., nine days old. Mrs. N. A. Colman was a native of Michigan, born, in 1874, in Osceola county, and a daughter of Alonzo M. and Essie Shank, who had four children—Cora, Byron, Bruce and Bessie B. Mr. Shank is a lumberman by occupation.

During the youth and early manhood of Mr. Colman he remained on his father's farm in Sheboygan county, attending the schools of Greenbush up to the age of eighteen when he commenced to teach in the district schools, continuing thus two years. After this he attended school at Oshkosh, and in the fall of 1884 entered the University of Wisconsin at Madison. In 1887 he entered the Law Department of the University, attending until June 19, 1889, when he graduated—being admitted to practice in all courts.

Mr. Colman educated himself, teaching and studying alternately, and while in Madison was in the office of William F. Vilas. In July, after being admitted to the bar, he came to Rhineland, Oneida county, remaining there four months in the office of Alban & Barnes, and on December 1, 1889, opened a law office at Eagle River under the firm name of Alban, Barnes & Colman. This partnership continued two years. Messrs. Alban & Barnes withdrawing at the end of that time. Mr. Colman has since practiced alone, meeting with flattering success in his chosen profession, a success which he well deserves.

Like his father before him, he is public-spirited, and the people, recognizing in him one who would attend to their interests with all the zeal and ability at his command, have chosen him to various offices of trust, the duties of which he has ever faithfully discharged. In 1893 his assistance was proven valuable in the work of getting Vilas county set off from Oneida. His wide acquaintance with public men making him a strong ally; he spent much time at Madison, and finally, with others equally interested, succeeded in having the new county of Vilas formed and the county seat fixed at Eagle River. On the organization of the county he was made district attorney, resigning the position of superintendent of schools of Oneida county (to which he had been elected in 1892) to accept. In the fall of 1894 he was elected district attorney on the Democratic ticket, although the county otherwise went strongly Republican, a compliment which he did not fail to appreciate.

MATTHIAS ELLINGSON, who at present is living retired on his farm in New Hope township, Portage county, was born in Norway, June 23, 1838, a son of Elling and Karen (Mortonson) Johnson, natives of the same country, where the father engaged in farming, an occupation he made his life work.

In the spring of 1857, accompanied by his wife and children, Mr. Johnson emigrated to America, sailing from Christiania on the "Argo," which dropped anchor in the harbor of Quebec at the end of seven weeks, and from that city they came immediately to New Hope township, Portage county, making the journey by water, rail and wagon. On his arrival the father purchased eighty acres of wild land, on which not a tree had been cut or an improvement of any kind made. After clearing enough space he built a log house, where the family lived for many years and where his death occurred. The mother then sold that place and bought another home in New Hope township, but died at the home of her son Ole. The other children of the family besides our subject, who is the eldest, were John, a farmer of Dakota, who enlisted in the Twelfth Wis. V. I. during the war of the Rebellion, and served throughout the struggle; Christian, also a farmer of Dakota; Rhoda, wife of Nels Loberg, of New Hope; and Sina, deceased wife of John Johnson.

In the common schools of his native land our subject acquired a very good education, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. After coming to America he hired out as a farm hand, and was also employed for some years in a sawmill, and in the lumber woods near Merrill, Wis. For four or five seasons before entering the Union service during the Civil war, he "ran on the river." In Scandinavia, Wis., August 27, 1864, he enlisted as a private in Company A, Forty-second Wis. V. I., under Capt. Duncan McGregor, and was enrolled for one year's service. After enlistment he went into camp at Madison, Wis., for a short time, whence he was sent to Cairo, Ill., where he remained until the close of hostilities, with the exception of an expedition he accompanied down to New Orleans, conveying prisoners. At that city they remained about four days, when they returned to Cairo. At Madison, Wis., on June 20, 1865, he was honorably discharged.

On returning to New Hope township Mr. Ellingson, in company with his brother

Christian, bought 160 acres of land, of which only ten had been cleared, and, prior to his brother's going to Dakota, he purchased the latter's interest. His farm, which is located in Sections 9 and 10, is one of the best in the township, and he has built thereon a comfortable dwelling. He now makes his home with the people who have rented his farm, as he is living retired. He affiliates with the Republican party, and is one of its most active adherents, though in no sense a politician. Religiously he is a communicant of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of New Hope, and he is one of the highly esteemed and honored citizens of the neighborhood.

LYMAN J. COOK, member of the firm of Dickinson & Cook, the leading general merchants and real-estate dealers of Eagle River, Vilas county, is a native of New York State, born September 17, 1850, in North Norwich, Chenango county.

Lyman D. Cook, father of our subject, first saw the light in Dutchess county, N. Y., being a son of Joseph Cook, who was of English descent. The latter was by occupation a farmer and carpenter, and during the war of 1812 served as second lieutenant. In an early day he established a colony in Chenango county, purchasing a large tract of river flats, now part of the "Chenango Valley," no little sport being excited by his investing in such low land; but he lived to see his purchase become very valuable. He and his wife both died there, the parents of a numerous family: Lyman D., their son was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he made his life vocation. He was twice married: First to a Miss Fannie Fisher, by whom he had eight children who lived to maturity, viz.: Egbert, Alonzo, Almon, Thompson, Mary, Olive, Philena and Rachel. After the death of the mother of these, Mr. Cook married Mary A. Bacon, by whom he had one child—Lyman J. This Mrs. Cook was a daughter of Horace and Mary (Rommer) Bacon, the former of whom was of English descent, the latter of French, her more immediate ancestors, whose names were Chevalier, having come over to America from France with La Fayette during the Revolutionary war, and served as soldiers under him. Lyman D. Cook participated in the Mexican war. In 1867 he came to Wisconsin, purchasing a farm in Black Creek township, Outagamie county, whereon he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1875; he was a strong Democrat in his political predilections, but voted for Lincoln. The widowed mother, after her husband's death, lived with her son Lyman J. up to her death, which occurred in 1889.

The subject proper of these lines was reared on the farm, receiving his elementary education at the common schools, which was supplemented with two terms at the Union schools, and one term at select school. Early in life he assisted materially in the support of his parents, employing himself at both farming and lumbering until he was eighteen years old, when he went into the woods and for one winter wielded the axe in felling the trees. During the following eleven years or so he was engaged for his own account, alternately at farming in the summers and lumbering in the winters, which brings his life history down to 1879, in which year he moved to Marathon county, and in the village of Norrie built the second frame house, where he made his home nearly four years, conducting a general mercantile and drug business in partnership with George P. Dickinson. In the spring of 1884 the firm removed to Eagle River, Vilas county, hauling their goods and chattels by wagon from Three Lakes, and for some time carrying on their business, which consisted of general merchandise, drugs, etc., in a tent, to which, later, they added real-estate dealings. Not long afterward a postoffice was established at Eagle River, Mr. Cook being appointed the first postmaster, and holding the position up to the time of Cleveland's first election; he had previously been postmaster at Norrie, and was filling the incumbency at the time of his leaving that village for Eagle River. The firm of Dickinson & Cook conduct the largest general store in this rising, hustling place, and are largely interested in lumbering, buying pine lands quite extensively.

Mr. Cook has been twice married, first time to Miss Anna Eliza Butler, who was born in Sandusky, Ohio, daughter of Manara and Sarah Butler, natives of Ohio, who came to Wisconsin in an early day, and who had a family of two sons and four daughters: Daniel E., Nathan S., Dell, Emma E., Ettie C. and Anna Eliza. To this marriage were born three children: Grant D., Jay B., and one that died in infancy. The mother of these dying in 1877, Mr. Cook married, for his second wife, in 1883, Miss Florence P. Thompson, who was born in Maine, near the city of Augusta, daughter of George W. and Charlotte Thompson, and this union has been blessed with five children: Paul L., Lawrence (deceased at the age of seven years), Morton, Mary and Florence.

In politics our subject is a staunch Republican; served as town treasurer of Eagle River six years, and was chairman one year; was active in securing the organization of Vilas county, spending nearly an entire winter at Madison for that purpose. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F. Prior to embarking in mercantile pursuits Mr. Cook passed some two years in the South, with the view of locating there, but not liking the country returned to Wisconsin. He is one of the most influential business men in the county, and in a large measure enjoys the respect and esteem of his fellow men.

ARTHUR TAYLOR, a highly respected citizen of Rhinelander, Oneida county, is a native of England, born in Ripley, Derbyshire, April 16, 1858, son of Dr. Percival and Eliza (Bradley) Taylor.

Benjamin Taylor, grandfather of our subject, was postmaster at Ripley, Derbyshire, many years, and died in 1874, at the patriarchal age of ninety-eight years, while holding that office; his wife lived to the great age of one hundred and two.

Percival Taylor, father of our subject, was a graduate of medicine in England, which profession he more or less practiced until within the past few years. In his native land he married Miss Eliza Bradley, by whom he had ten children, named respectively: William, Samuel, Walter, Mary, Hannah, Arthur, Ella, Anna, Percival H. (who died in 1868) and Percy. In the last named year, in the month of February, the father and two of his sons—Samuel and Walter—crossed the Atlantic to Canada, locating in Montreal, the rest of the family following them in the month of June. In Sept., 1869, they moved to Upper Canada, settling on a large tract of land at Bracebridge, Muskoka District, Ontario, and there remaining until 1882, in which year they came to Marinette, Wis., where they sojourned until 1885, then returning to Canada, to the old homestead in Ontario. In March, 1891, Dr. Taylor sold out and he and his wife moved to Chicago, Ill., thence to Austin, Ill., where he is now leading a retired life after practicing medicine over thirty years. On each of his children's birthdays he writes him or her a letter.

Arthur Taylor, whose name introduces this sketch, was ten years old when the family left the shores of Old England for Canada, and at the age of thirteen he left the parental roof to begin "hustling" for himself, working as a farm hand in summers, and for lumbermen in the woods, winters, occasionally visiting the old home. In October, 1879, he came to the United States, making his residence in Schoolcraft county, Mich., till April, 1881, when he and his brother, Walter, moved to Marinette, Wis., and here leased a hotel; but not liking the business, Arthur sold his interest to his brother, and again worked in the lumber woods. He thus continued till November, 1887, at which time he and his brother Walter commenced the manufacture of soda water in Marinette; but in December, 1890, our subject sold out, and at once coming to Rhinelander purchased his present soda-water plant, which he has since enlarged to treble its capacity, having a ready sale for the product in the smaller towns within a radius of sixty miles.

On May 3, 1883, Mr. Taylor was married to Miss Mary E. Richardson, who was born at Cheboygan, Mich., February 10, 1865, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Beloit) Richardson, who had eight children, viz.: Maggie, Joseph, William, Addie and Eva (twins), Mary E. and Harriet S. (twins) and Thomas. To Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were born four children, only one of whom survives—Douglas A.; Henry died in infancy; Lulu and Daphne died in 1891, the one on December 3, at the age of six years, the other on December 6, aged four years. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are members of the Congregational Church of Rhinelander, of which he is secretary-treasurer and a trustee; politically he is a Democrat, and has served on the school board. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M. (Blue Lodge), and R. A. M., Royal Arcanum and Knights of Pythias; in the first named Order he has been secretary of his Lodge three years, and is now filling the chair of senior warden. He is a wide-awake, useful and loyal citizen, one of whom Oneida county may well feel proud.

CASPAR SMITH, a worthy representative of the agricultural interests of Portage county, was born in the village of Volkershausen, Bavaria, August 21, 1820, and is a son of Andrew and Barbara Smith. The father was also born in that village, and was a well-to-do farmer; the mother was born in the village of Stadten. In Church matters he was prominent, was a highly-esteemed man, and when called to his final rest in the fall of 1853 his death was much lamented. His wife survived him ten years, when she too departed this life. Of the children: John operated the old homestead until his death; Eva, wife of Adam Burkhart, died in Germany; Caspar is the next in the family; Elizabeth is the deceased wife of George Hochrein; Maria M. is living in Bavaria, and is totally blind; Margaretta came to America in 1854, shortly after married John Frank, and died in London, Wis., in 1890.

Caspar Smith attended the common schools of his native town until thirteen years of age, and then worked at any employment that he could secure until his twenty-sixth year. In 1846, he married Margarette Frank, a native of Bavaria. She owned a farm in Volkershausen, and thither the young couple removed, but after a year sold out, preparatory to emigrating to America. They had three children born in America: George W. and Martha, who came with their parents to America, and one that died on the voyage. In 1862, Mr. Smith took passage on a sailing vessel at Bremen, accompanied by his family, and after a voyage of forty-seven days landed at New York, whence they proceeded direct to Chicago, where Mr. Smith was employed as a laborer for a short time. He then removed to Madison, Wis., where they were all taken ill with typhoid fever and the wife and daughter died. Placing his son George in the care of a family in Madison, Mr. Smith went to Waupun, where for three months he was employed on the construction of the prison. Returning to Madison, he for a time worked in a hotel, and leaving that place went to Lake Mills, where he was employed in various capacities.

There, on August 13, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, Twenty-ninth Wis. V. I., and was mustered into the service on September 27. The troops joined the Army of the Southwest, and from the 9th of January until the 10th of April were engaged in various expeditions. They were then assigned to the Thirteenth Army Corps, aided in the siege of Vicksburg, and going down the river to Milliken's Bend there disembarked and marched to Perkin's plantation. After participating in the battle of Port Gibson and many skirmishes, they were stationed in the rear of Vicksburg and aided in its capture. On July 5, they were ordered to Jackson, engaged in the siege of that place and after its capture returned to Vicksburg, whence on August 16, they proceeded down the river, stopping at Natchez for a few days. On they went to Carrollton, La., and on September 15, proceeded by rail to Brashear City. From that time until January 1, 1864, they were with Gen. Banks' army in the operations in Louisiana. On January 5, they embarked on ocean steamers for Texas, and did picket and out-post duty at Pass Cavallo until February 18, when they returned to Algiers and started on the Red river campaign under Gen. Banks. On April 8 occurred the hotly contested battle of Sabine Cross Roads, where the Union army was forced to retreat. This was the first time that the Twentieth-ninth had met defeat since entering the service, and had it been properly supported the catastrophe would not have occurred. The troops gradually fell back to Alexandria, where they remained from April 25 until May 14, doing picket duty. There the Twentieth-ninth was detailed to help construct the great Red river dam at that point for the purpose of getting the gunboats over the rapids, and when this was completed they started for Morganza, where they arrived May 23. On June 15 they reached Carrollton, La., and thence were ordered to Kentucky. Their rations were frequently limited, they often had no tents, had poor clothing, and all the hardships of war were endured by them. Mr. Smith contracted rheumatism, but with the exception of a short time when confined in the hospital he was always with his regiment, faithful to every duty that devolved upon him. On June 13, 1865, Mr. Smith was mustered out and at once returned to Lake Mills, Wis. Shortly afterward he came to Amherst township, Portage county, and bought forty acres of land, which he traded for a house and lot in Amherst Center. In October, 1879, he bought 110 acres of land, paying $900 in cash, and giving his home in town. His farm is located in Sections 28 and 29, Amherst township, and 90 acres of the tract are cleared and under a high state of cultivation, yielding to the owner a golden tribute in return for the care and cultivation he bestows upon it.

Mr. Smith for his second wife was married, at Lake Mills, in 1855, to Amelia Feemier, a native of Germany, who died February 21, 1892. The children by this union are as follows: Sophia, wife of Bertram Harvey, a farmer of Amherst township (they have one child, Verne); John G., a barber of Amherst, who married Anna Shattuck, and has two daughters, Mona and Ruth; and Caspar A. and Mary, both at home. George W., Mr. Smith's eldest son, married Miss Sarah Wilson, and has four sons—DeForest D., F. Clifford, Alfred G. and Willard W.

Prior to 1861, Mr. Smith was a Democrat, but when the Republican party upheld the government during the war, he joined its ranks and with it afterward affiliated. He is a member of Captain Eckels Post, G. A. R., of Amherst, and is an active member and leading worker in the Methodist Church. He has met with many reverses in life; but through energy and determination, diligence and capable management he has attained an enviable position among his fellow men, and acquired a handsome competency, which numbers him among the substantial citizens of his adopted county. [Since the above was written Mr. Smith died at his home of apoplexy March 21, 1895.]

GEORGE C. NEWBY, as one of the leading citizens of Portage county, well deserves representation in this volume. He was born in the town of Vaughan, Canada, July 5, 1830, a son of Thomas and Deborah (West) Newby.

His father was a native of Yorkshire, England, and emigrated to Nova Scotia, where at the age of twenty he married, and the two eldest children were there born. He then removed to a farm near Vaughan, where his wife died about 1851. In the spring of 1855 he came to Buena Vista township, Portage county, and purchased 160 acres of government land in Section 19, where his children (with the exception of two daughters who had married and remained in Canada) joined him the following fall. In this county the father subsequently married Mrs. Elizabeth Stewart. His death occurred on the old homestead in November, 1877. His children, all born of the first marriage, were as follows: John, deceased, was a farmer of Plover, Wis.; he married Delilah Uptgrove, by whom he had six sons and two daughters, and for his second wife wedded Lavina Vanderwort. William, a farmer of Plover, Wis., married Matilda Barnett, now deceased, and had three sons and three daughters. Ann is the wife of Jacob Stimmers, of Canada. George C. is the next younger. Esther is the deceased wife of Christopher Hisley Thomas, a merchant of Buena Vista, Wis. married Jane Brown, by whom he had four children, and after her death wedded Mrs. Sarah (Russell) Newman, widow of John Newman. Robert, a farmer of Idaho, is living with his second wife. Mary Jane became the wife of Charles Barker, and after his death wedded William White, of Plover, Wis. Jemima is the wife of Jay Bennett, of Buena Vista, Wisconsin.

Upon the home farm our subject was reared, and his educational advantages were very limited. Having arrived at years of maturity, he was married in Cayuga, Haldimand Co., Canada, May 10, 1852, to Elizabeth Martha Russell, who was born between Rutland and Wallingford, Vt., December 18, 1836, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Shannon) Russell, natives of County Tyrone, Ireland. There they were married and two children, Margaret and Samuel, were there born to them. They emigrated then to Newfoundland, where their eldest son died shortly after, and where their third child, George, was born. Removing to Vermont, they lived in that State until 1841, after which they spent a number of years in Toronto, Canada, then lived upon a farm near Rainham, in Haldimand county, until 1855. Settling then in Iowa, the mother died there the following year. After a short time Mr. Russell came to Portage county and purchased forty acres of land in Pine Grove township, but after several years he disposed of that property, and went to live with his daughter, Mrs. Thomas Newby, in Buena Vista township, where he died in 1879.

The members of the family were as follows: Margaret and Samuel, deceased; George; Sophia Jane, Mrs. Newby; Mary Ann, deceased; and Sarah. Our subject and his wife have eleven children: Margaret Ann, born April 17, 1853, is the wife of Mark A. Woodbury, of Ada, Minn., and has two children, Pearl and Lillie; Jemima Jane, born May 25, 1855, is the wife of Fred H. Huntley, of Stevens Point, Wis., and their children are Hattie Belle and Ollie May; Thomas, born March 11, 1857, married Julia Shelburn, and has three children—Minnie, Mamie and Thomas; Harriet S., born March 6, 1859, became the wife of Charles Thompson, by whom she had two children, William and Lula, and after the death of her first husband she married Frederick Allen; Letitia May, born December 18, 1860, is the wife of Charles Stewart, and has two children, Estella May and George L.; Eli Benjamin, born April 29, 1862, died at the age of two years and six months; Charles Austin, born September 9, 1863, wedded Rose Pereau and with their daughter, Cecil Burdell, they reside in Wautoma, Wis.; Belle Joanna, born May 8, 1868, is the wife of John Springer, of Lone Pine, Wis.; Cora Alice, born April 9, 1870, is the wife of William Fisher, of Stevens Point, and has one child, Violet; William R., born February 20, 1872, is at home; Mable, born December 10, 1876, is a school teacher in Belmont, Wis. At the age of five Mrs. Newby went to live with a family in Canada, and from the age of nine until her marriage she supported herself by working as a domestic. She is devoted to her home and her family, and is a most estimable lady.

After his marriage, Mr. Newby operated his father's farm for a season, and then purchased land at Rainham, Canada, where he resided until coming to Buena Vista township in the fall of 1855, when he disposed of his old home. On reaching this place he operated his father's farm, and then hired as a farm hand. In 1858, he purchased eighty acres of land in Section 19, Buena Vista township, Portage county, to which he has added 120 acres. He continued farming until March, 1864, when he enlisted in Company C, Fifty-second Wis. V. I. He went to Madison, and after drilling for three weeks proceeded to St. Louis, Mo., and three weeks later was ordered to Iron Mountain, same State. For two weeks he did duty against the bushwhackers, and after a few days spent in St. Louis he started for Leavenworth, Kans., where two months were passed. The command was then ordered to return to Madison, where Mr. Newby was honorably discharged in September, 1865. Returning at once to his home he resumed farming, which he has since successfully followed. He has never sought political preferment, but is a stalwart Republican. His career has been an honorable and useful one, and is that of a man who has done his duty to himself, his neighbors and his country.

J S. JACOBSON, a well-known citizen and enterprising and progressive business man of Ogdensburg, Waupaca county, is now extensively engaged in dealing in potatoes. His birth occurred in Section 30, St. Lawrence township, the same county, January 16, 1860, and he is a son of Stephen Jacobson, one of the well-to-do farmers of Scandinavia township, Waupaca county.

The father was born in Norway, May 16, 1834, and is the son of Jacob Jacobson, also an agriculturist. In the spring of 1852, the latter, with his wife and seven children, left Stavanger, on the sailing vessel "Rugland," and at the end of seven weeks they were landed in New York, June 10, the voyage being a stormy one. They had first intended to go to Dane county, Wis., but being in company with a family whose sons had previously located in Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, they decided to go there. They took a boat to Albany, thence up the Erie canal to Buffalo, and on the lakes came to Green Bay, Wis. They drove to Neenah, via Appleton, Wis., where they boarded a boat for Gill's Landing, and, by team, came to Scandinavia. The grandfather purchased 160 acres of partially improved land in Section 27, on which a log house had been built, but he did not live long to enjoy his new home, dying February 10, 1853, of pneumonia, at the age of sixty years, and was buried near the school house, in district No. 1, where it was intended to make a cemetery, but later the idea was abandoned. The grandmother, who long survived her husband, died at the home of a son in Minnesota, in the spring of 1884, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. In their family were seven children: Betsy S., wife of Stephen Torkolsen, of Minnesota; Tallak, who died in that State; Mary, widow of Ole Raan, of the same State; Stephen, father of our subject; Carrie, who died in Scandinavia township in the fall of 1852; Elizabeth, widow of Ole Jorgensen, of Minnesota; and Torkel of Minnesota.

In the common schools of his native country Stephen Jacobson acquired his education, and at the age of eighteen years, at the time of his arrival in Scandinavia township, there were only three or four families and no schools had been established. Besides his farm duties, he also followed fishing on the west coast of Norway, and on coming to the United States spent six winters in the pineries of this State. He also ran on the river, taking lumber to various points along the Mississippi.

On April 13, 1857, in Scandinavia, Stephen Jacobson wedded Miss Tora Knudson, who is also a native of Norway, born May 18, 1840, and came with her parents to America in 1853, locating in Scandinavia township. In his native land her father had followed carpentering, but, on his arrival here, gave his time and attention to the operation of his farm and to the sawmill business. To Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson were born the following children: Jacob S., of this sketch; Benny, who died at the age of nineteen years; Ann C., wife of Halver Thorson, a merchant of Scandinavia; Stena, at home, as is also Thomas, Carl and Marten; Sophia, who is attending the academy in Scandinavia; Benjamin, who died in infancy; and Elvine B., at home.

After his marriage the father located in St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, where for one winter he was employed in a sawmill, but since then has given his entire attention to the cultivation of his land, a tract of 120 acres, of which eighty are under a high state of cultivation, well improved with good buildings. He has seen almost the entire development of the township and county, as at the time of his arrival there were only a few families in Scandinavia township, and some of these still lived in their covered wagons. He is one of the trustees of the Lutheran Church to which his family also belong. He was one of the leading members of the Republican party in his township, where he has held many official positions, and his public service has always been marked by a faithful and competent discharge of duties.

We now come to the personal history of Jacob S. Jacobson, whose name introduces this review. His chances for securing an education were quite meagre, and the district schools he attended were not as good as those of the present day. At the age of sixteen he left the school room, so that he might give his whole time to the labors of the field. It was then the custom to put children to work as soon as old enough, and usually when the best years for learning were arrived at, the school days were over. Such was our subject's case. He remained under the parental roof until eighteen years of age, when he went to Goodhue county, Minn., where the land was new and afforded splendid opportunities to the early settlers who wished to secure homes. Work was plenty for a farm hand, and, being a robust young man, he commanded good wages, receiving $20 per month, most of which, however, he sent home. In the second year of his residence there he engaged some in speculating in stock, etc., such as his limited capital would permit.

At the end of two years Mr. Jacobson returned to Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, where his parents were living, but was soon after taken ill, and was unable to perform any labor for some time. As soon as he had sufficiently recovered he began farming for himself on rented land in Scandinavia township, which occupation he followed for one year, when he began dealing in potatoes at Scandinavia in connection with Neil Krostu, now of Chicago, the firm name being Jacobson & Krostu. For two years this partnership continued when Olson & Johnson were admitted to the firm, carrying on business at several different places and buying large quantities of potatoes.

In January, 1888, Mr. Jacobson was married in Scandinavia township, the lady of his choice being Miss Emma M. Hopkins, a native of St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, and a daughter of Spencer Hopkins. To them have been born three children, Archie and Bernard, deceased, and Ellery. In the fall of 1887, Mr. Jacobson began purchasing potatoes in Ogdensburg, where he has since continued business with remarkable success. The increase in his business necessitated the erection of a warehouse, where his stock is stored. He has now been longer in the business than any other man in the village, and has paid out many thousands of dollars to the farmers during his experience in potato buying. He stands high in the estimation of the community as an honorable, upright and trustworthy young business man, and justly merits their respect. In Ogdensburg he has erected a very cozy home on a lot he purchased from J. R. Moses, from whom he also obtained the land on which his warehouse stands. Though not a politician in the sense of office seeking, he is deeply interested in the success of the Republican party, and religiously he and his wife are Lutherans.

HERMAN J. PANKOW, editor and proprietor of the Marshfield Democrat, and conducting one of the most successful German papers of the West, is a gentleman of ability, standing high among the representative citizens of Wood county. Wisconsin claims him as one of her native sons, for he was born in Lebanon township, Dodge county, April 27, 1847. His father, Rev. Erdmann Pankow, was a native of Prussia, his birth occurring in 1818, and he was there reared and married, Sophia Moldenhauer becoming his wife. By that union were born eight children, four of whom are now deceased—Sophia, John, Augustine and Michael—while Minnie, Herman, Erdman, and the second, Michael, are still living. The family came to America in 1843, stopping first at Watertown, Wis., where they remained one year. The father then removed to a farm and taught school for a number of years, when he was called to the ministry of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and has since engaged in preaching the Gospel. His wife died in 1859, and he subsequently married Louisa Michaels Dambach. They have become the parents of nine children, of whom Augustine is now deceased, those living being Albert, Adolph, Anna, Oswald, Eva, Pauline, Agnes and Angella. The grandfather of our subject, Michael Pankow, was a common laborer in Prussia, where he married and had two children who came to America—Erdmann and Minnie; he and his wife both died when Erdmann was quite young.

Herman Pankow, whose name heads this sketch, received his education in the district and private schools until attaining his fourteenth year, when he went to work on the home farm, there remaining until twenty-two years of age. In 1872 he started out in life for himself as a commission merchant in Oconomowoc, Wis., remaining in business there for one year, when he learned the art of photography, which he followed for some time; in 1878 he taught a private German school in Dodge county, Wis. He came to Marshfield in 1879, opening a hotel, which he conducted until 1886, being quite successful in that line of work. The purchase of the Marshfield Democrat was made in 1884, he buying the paper from his brother Adolph, who had established it some six months previous, and has ever since been engaged in its management. The paper is conducted on a broad and liberal basis, giving clear and impartial views of the questions of the day, the editorials showing deep culture, marked withal by sound common sense.

In 1875 Mr. Pankow was married to Otilie Schelpeper, who was born in Washington county, Wis., a daughter of Fred and Augusta (Derge) Schelpeper, both natives of Germany. By their union six children were born: Ella, Alma, Otilie, Martha, Irena and Adelie, of whom Martha and Irena are now deceased. The mother of these, who was one of a family of five children—Augusta, William, Emily, Otilie and Ida—passed away in 1887, and Mr. Pankow was again married in 1892, on this occasion to Emma Froehlke, a native of Wisconsin, and daughter of John and Johanna (Mahnke) Froehlke, of Manitowoc, Wis. Mr. Pankow was burned out in the Marshfield fire of 1887, but immediately started in business again, which he has since carried on with marked success. In politics he is a supporter of the Democratic party and served as supervisor of his ward for two years. For the same length of time he also held the office of city treasurer, and has also been municipal judge, as well as filling other minor offices. He is a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and has for fifteen years acted as its secretary, his social and moral worth giving him a high place in the regard of his fellow citizens.

SAMUEL S. MILLER, senior member of the well-known leading firm of attorneys at law—Miller & McCormick—in Rhinelander, Oneida county, is a native of the State of Wisconsin, having been born July 17, 1850, in Christiansiana township, Dane county.

Stephen Miller, his grandfather, who was born in America of Scottish ancestry, married Miss Phoebe Hyde, a lady of English descent, related to the historic family of Hyde whose property, many years ago, on account of their religious views, was confiscated. To Stephen and Phoebe Miller were born five children: Anbrose, Benjamin S., Edward, Gordon and Phoebe, the parents of whom both died in New York State. Benjamin S., the second in the family, was born in 1825, in New York State, received his education at the public schools of his boyhood period, and learned the trade of carpenter. In his native State he married Miss Martha Coon, who was born in 1820, and eight children came to them, as follows: Samuel S., Elmer, and Frances H. (now Mrs. Judge Bardeen, of Wausau), living, those deceased being: Florence (who married Joseph Stout, but left no issue), and Olive, Ida, Eugenie and James, all four of whom died in early life. The family came to Wisconsin in 1847, settling on a farm in Christiansiana township, Dane county, where the father followed his trades, those of carpenter and cabinet maker, in connection with agriculture. In 1876 he removed to Wausau where he and his wife are now living. During the Civil war he served as first lieutenant and quartermaster. He was no-politician, but held several positions of trust, such as township clerk.

The subject proper of these lines received his elementary education at the common schools of his native township, later attending Albion College, Dane county, where he graduated in 1871, after which he took a course at the State University Law School, of Wisconsin, graduating from there in 1873. He then entered the law office of Meggett & Teall, at Eau Claire, Wis., where he continued in the more practical study of law until 1877, in the year following opening a law office in Whitehall, the county seat of Trempealeau county, Wis., where he practiced ten years or till October, 1887, removing to Rhinelander, Oneida county, where in partnership with Judge McCormick, under the firm name of Miller & McCormick, he has conducted a prosperous general business in law and equity.

In 1878 Mr. Miller was married to Miss Anna M. Mosher, a native of the State of Maine, daughter of Charles P. (a mill-wright by trade), and Susan (Nash) Mosher, also born in Maine, parents of four children: Anna M., Emma, Clara and Charles. The Mosher family came to Wisconsin in 1856, settling in Eau Claire where the parents are still residing. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been born three children, to wit: Helen E., Florence M. and Margaret J. In his political predilections our subject is a stanch Republican; while a resident of Trempealeau county he served as district attorney six years, and since coming to Rhinelander has been district attorney of Oneida county two years. In 1887 he was sent by the vote of the people to represent Trempealeau county in the Assembly, and gave eminent satisfaction to his constituents. He has served as chairman of the County Republican Committee, and has been a delegate to State conventions; he has been a member of the Rhinelander school board five years, during which time he has proved himself an active and tireless worker in the cause of education. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. O. F. He is essentially a self-made man, his present enviable position at the bar being due to his own unaided efforts, and he paid for his college tuition entirely out of salaries he received for school teaching, a profession he commenced at the early age of seventeen years.

JAMES A. NEWSOM is a practical and progressive farmer of Dayton township, Waupaca county, and is the owner of extensive landed interests, which he successfully operates, and secures a good income thereby. His land is well tilled, and everything about the place kept in good repair, and the owner bids fair to become one of the wealthiest agriculturists of Waupaca county. He was born in Section 26, Dayton township, December 19, 1868, and is a son of Joseph and Lecta M. (Larkin) Newsom. The family is one of English lineage. The father was born in Steuben county, N. Y., November 1, 1833, and when a young man migrated westward to Waupaca county, where he arrived in the autumn of 1854. Here he was first employed as a farm hand, but subsequently acquired land and carried on farming in his own interest. He first located in Section 36, Dayton township, but afterward removed to Section 26. In that township he accumulated 400 acres of land, and acquired forty-five acres elsewhere—the reward of his own well-directed efforts.

Joseph Newsom was married April 18, 1860, in Waupaca county, to Miss Larkin, who was born in New York, October 5, 1834. They became the parents of the following children: Jennie A., who was born January 29, 1862, and is still living on the old homestead; Mary N., who was born November 22, 1864, and died at the age of six years; James A.; Mary B., who was born September 19, 1875, and died in infancy. In January, 1881, Mr. Newsom and wife adopted into their family Mary Padgum, then a child of four years, who is still at home and one of the family. In his political views the father was a Republican, and both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His death occurred in July, 1889, and his wife passed away in March, 1888.

On the home farm James A. Newsom was reared to manhood, and, as soon as old enough to handle the plow, began work in the fields, becoming familiar with farm life in all of its various departments. His education was acquired in District School, No. 3, Dayton township. As he was an only son much of the work of the farm devolved upon him, especially after his father's health began to fail, and he has since devoted his time and energies to the development and cultivation of the old homestead.

Mr. Newsom was married August 30, 1893, in Farmington township, Waupaca county, the lady of his choice being Miss Abbie E. Ottman, a native of Onondaga county, N. Y., born September 12, 1871, and a daughter of Jeremiah and Margaret (Krake) Ottman, who came to Wisconsin in 1873. One child has been born to our subject and his wife—Leslie O., born June 28, 1894. Mrs. Newsom is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Newsom votes with the Republican party, but takes no active part in political matters, preferring to give his entire time and attention to his business interests, in which he is meeting with good success.

OLE A. MYHRE, an old soldier in the Union army, is now one of the prominent and representative farmers of St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, where he owns a good tract of 160 acres. He is a native of Norway, born August 29, 1826, and is a son of Andrew and Ann (Syne) Myhre, farming people of that country, where their deaths occurred. In the family were the following children: Ingelbret, Sven, Elsie and Amond, deceased; Ole A., of this sketch; Elsie, wife of Morton Gulickson, a farmer, of Norway; Anna, deceased; Simon, who died while in the service during the War of the Rebellion; Peter, who died in this country; Hans, a farmer of Waupaca county, and Hans and Simon, who both died in infancy.

Ole A. Myhre began life in Norway as a common laborer, never having learned a trade, and his chances for securing an education were very poor. In June, 1857, he reached the shores of the New World, landing at Quebec after a voyage of five weeks in a sailing vessel. He came direct to St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, making the journey by boat as far as New London, Wis. For two years he was engaged as a day laborer, when, in 1859, he bought forty acres of land in Section 18, which still forms a part of his present fine farm. His first home was a log cabin 14 feet square, and for a year he had to perform the arduous labors of clearing and developing the land without the assistance of a team. He made the shingles that covered his little home. There were no roads in the vicinity, and Scandinavia contained but one store.

In 1859 Mr. Myhre led to the marriage altar Sarah Johnson, a native of Norway, who, in 1859, came to America with her parents, John and Martha Martinson. The parents located in St. Lawrence township, where they opened up a farm, on which they lived until the mother's death, when our subject bought the place, and the father went to Scandinavia township to live with his daughter, Mrs. Ole Wroldstred, whose husband is a farmer. By this union Mr. Myhre became the father of two children: Serena married Halman Peterson, a farmer of St. Lawrence township, and they have five children; and Andrew, who is still with his father. The mother of these children died, in 1865, of consumption, at the age of twenty-seven years, and now lies buried in the Scandinavia cemetery. In 1867, Mr. Myhre wedded a cousin of his first wife, and to them have been born three children: John, Severt and Alfred, all at home.

By his own industrious and well-directed efforts, Mr. Myhre has become the possessor of 160 acres of land, seventy of which have been cleared, broken and placed under a high state of cultivation. He has been ably assisted in his labors by his excellent wife and sons, who are industrious, painstaking young men. He enlisted, August 28, 1864, in Company A, Forty-second Wis. V. I., and was mustered into service at Madison, Wis., whence the troops were sent to Cairo, Ill., where they did guard duty until their discharge June 3, 1865. Since casting his first vote Mr. Myhre has been a staunch Republican, always supporting the men and measures of that party. In religious belief he is a Lutheran. Since coming to the county he has gained many warm friends, and he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

HARVEY J. MORGAN, a representative pioneer farmer of Belle Plaine township, Shawano county, is a native of New York State, born June 20, 1836, in Galen township, Wayne county.

Patrick Morgan, father of our subject, a stone mason by trade, was born May 1, 1802, in County Down, Ireland, and, in 1827, came to America, locating for a time in New York State. He married Miss Lovina Graves, who was born in Vermont about the year 1806, and nine children came to them, as follows: Elizabeth, who married, and died in Fond du Lac county, Wis., leaving a husband and three children—Mary Ann, Eliza and Bernard; John, who was a farmer and carpenter, and died in Fond du Lac county, Wis., leaving a wife and one child, Harvey Thomas; Catherine, Mrs. John Patrick, of Greenbush, Sheboygan county, Wis.; Harvey J.; Roger, a farmer and blacksmith in Fond du Lac county, who is married and has children; Edward, also a farmer of Fond du Lac county; Francis W., a farmer and carpenter of Fond du Lac county, who is married and has a family; and two that died in infancy. In 1848 the family came west to Wisconsin, locating in Fond du Lac county, where the father bought 160 acres of wild land, distant some ten miles from any clearing, whereon they built a log shanty, covering it with split logs, the floor of it, both summer and winter, being simply Mother Earth, devoid of the slightest covering. Here they lived about eighteen months, at the end of which time a more commodious and substantial house was built in its place, and a few more of the comforts of a comparatively modern home were added. The nearest village of any kind was Fond du Lac, some fifteen miles distant, whence the father had to carry the family provisions on his back, frequently conveying thither in the same manner homemade maple sugar which he would trade at the rate of three cents per pound. A byroad, ten miles in length, leading to the main road, was cut entirely by the family. At that time game of all kinds, including deer, was plentiful, while bears, wolves and panthers ("painters") roamed the forest, howling and growling as they went in search of prey. The farm implements of the family were simply an axe and grub hoe, and they were assisted in their work with their ox-team and logging chain. The parents died on the homestead, the mother in 1879, the father in 1883.

Pretty early in life did our subject "get into harness," as it can readily be understood, consequently his school experiences were very meagre, fourteen months being all the attendance he was ever able to give. His first writing lessons were of a very primitive description, being nothing better than tracing his "A B Cs" on the surface of the snow with the end of his whip, while he would be engaged in hauling logs in the woods. In 1856, having decided on commencing business on his own account, he moved to Shawano and engaged in the manufacture of shingles, then embarked in the lumber trade, which he followed some years, or until 1875, the time of his purchasing in Belle Plaine township 110 acres of partly improved land, his present farm; since when he has been actively and successfully engaged in both agricultural pursuits and lumbering. He has been enabled from time to time to increase his possessions, and at present owns 200 acres of land, eighty of which are under cultivation.

In 1859 Mr. Morgan was married to Miss Laura A. Wilbur, daughter of Russell Wilbur, and born, in 1838, in Massachusetts, whence when a girl she came to Wisconsin with her parents, locating in Shawano county. To this union were born four children, all yet living, as follows: Milton E., at home; Francis H., in Shawano; William Albert, residing at Whitcomb, Shawano county; and Josephine, now the wife of E. A. Guernsey. The mother of these died April 18, 1873, at Shawano, and for his second wife our subject wedded Miss Anna P. Ollison. Politically Mr. Morgan is a Republican; socially he is a member of the Union League, and no one in Shawano county stands higher in the esteem and regard of his fellow citizens.

HERMAN MEISNER. In compiling, for the edification of the present generation and generations yet to come, a record of the lives of those men whose names are so closely interwoven with the history of certain portions of northern Wisconsin, the list would indeed be incomplete were prominent mention not made of the gentleman whose name is here recorded.

Mr. Meisner is a native of New York State, born at Lockport April 2, 1856, a son of John D. and Justina (Krumbach) Meisner, natives of Brandenburg, Germany, who in 1855 came to the United States, in 1863 settling in Belle Plaine township, Shawano Co., Wis., where they followed agricultural pursuits; since 1884 they have been residents of Clintonville, Waupaca county. Of their thirteen children nine are yet living, as follows: John F., a merchant of Clintonville, Wis.; William, a farmer of Belle Plaine township, Shawano county; Herman, subject of this sketch; August, also a resident of Clintonville; Augusta, wife of Herman Beyer, of Grant township, Shawano county; Anna, wife of John Frank, also of Grant township; David, living on the old farm; Emma, wife of Herman Prey, of Clintonville; and Albert, married, and residing in Clintonville.

As will be seen, our subject was about six years old when his parents brought him to Wisconsin and to Belle Plaine township, Shawano county, and here he was reared to manhood. Education, however, does not always come by reading and writing. The boy was possessed of vigorous, natural abilities, and the boy was father to the man. His opportunities for acquiring knowledge were indeed few, but he applied his powers of observation upon the things which were nearest him, and thus became self-educated. Work was plentiful in his boyhood days, and being a strong, robust lad he found ample employment about the farm and parental home. At the age of fourteen years he started out in life for himself, leaving Shawano county for Fond du Lac, his first work being on a farm in that county, which was followed by a somewhat versatile yet decidedly active experience, for a time in the lumber woods of the Upper Wolf, Red and Embarrass river countries, then in the Lake Superior (north shore) copper regions, Canadian side—all the time engaged in various capacities, sometimes as common laborer in the summer time, then in sawmills and in the woods during the winter months. In the spring of the year he "ran the river," and at one time was employed in the Extract Works at Clintonville, Waupaca county, where from hemlock bark was extracted the decoction use in tanning. At the age of twenty-three years he married, by which time he had saved a little over one hundred dollars in cash, and owned forty acres of wild land, which he had not yet commenced to work. After his marriage he found employment on the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western railroad, on supply trains, hauling cordwood, etc.; later was employed on government vessels engaged in making improvements on the Fox river, and, still later, in a blast furnace at Appleton, to which city he removed. Concluding, however, to become his own employer, he in April, 1883, came to Wittenberg, which at that time was a mere hamlet in the midst of a dense forest, and here for twenty-five dollars bought a lot on Main street, which he at once commenced to improve. From the railroad station only one house, or rather shanty, was visible—the old "camp" built by the railroad company, and once occupied by their employes—and our subject's first shelter here was a blanket stretched over the tops of a few poles placed in the ground. He had left his wife behind at Clintonville until such time as he should have a place prepared for her reception; but one day he was not a little surprised to see his faithful spouse alight from a train at the Wittenberg depot. In answer to his inquiry as to why she came and where she expected to live, she replied: "To be beside you, and stay wherever you stay;" that settled it, so the blanket-roofed "wigwam" was the family house till the building he had commenced was completed. As soon as everything was ready, our subject embarked in the hotel business, the first to open out in that line in the young village, his hostelry being known as the "Wittenberg House." After about a year he sold out the tavern and purchased the ground where his present business block now stands, his next speculation being in the lumber industry, following the river in the proper seasons, and in general lumbering, chiefly as jobber until May, 1887, when he commenced mercantile trade in Wittenberg, his first stock of goods amounting to about $25., the business month by month increasing until May, 1894, when he sold out, retiring from mercantile pursuits with a comfortable competence. For the past six years he has been largely interested in real estate, at the present time interested in eighteen tracts of timber land, some of which is improved, besides village property, and he represents large tracts for other parties.

In 1879 Mr. Meisner was married, at Clintonville, Wis., to Miss Augusta Heitzke, a native of Germany, coming to the United States with her parents, John and Louise (Koshel) Heitzke when she was ten years old. To this union have come seven children: Ella, George, Esther, Eva, Katie, Grover and Philip, all born in Wittenberg and all yet living at home. In his political preferences our subject has always been a stanch Democrat, a leader in the party in this part of the State, has been a member of the Congressional Committee, and at the present time is serving on the Democratic County Committee. He has twice been honored with appointment as postmaster at Wittenberg, the first time in 1887, serving about two years, again in 1893, and he is at present filling the incumbency. He has served as deputy and under sheriff four terms; has been treasurer of Wittenberg township, also supervisor, and was school treasurer nine years; for a time he served as game warden for Shawano and Marathon counties. At present he is a director and trustee of the German Lutheran Orphans' Home at Wittenberg. In religious faith he and his wife are consistent members of the Lutheran Church, and toward the erection of the house of worship for that denomination in Wittenberg he rendered substantial assistance.

CHRISTIAN JOHNSON, a native of Denmark, lived to the age of thirty-seven years in his native land and found himself approaching the noon-time of life with scarcely more of this world's goods than he had when he started in life for himself with only a clear brain and a pair of willing hands. He came to America, and has since become one of the prosperous and well-respected citizens of Waupaca. It was not due alone, perhaps not principally, to the change in location that resulted in a change in his fortunes; rather it was the result of the thoroughly honest and reliable character which Mr. Johnson possessed, and which has enabled him here to acquire and retain a modest competence.

Mr. Johnson was born in Denmark November 28, 1826, son of John and Mary (Nelson) Johnson, who were farmers. Christian was the youngest of five children—John, Soren, Nels, Sophia and Christian. The latter was reared on his father's farm, and attended the schools in the vicinity of his home. At the age of twenty-three years he entered the artillery service of the Danish government, and for three years participated in the war then waging between Denmark and Germany over the possession of the provinces of Schleswig and Holstein. His military duties ended, Mr. Johnson returned to farming, and he worked for others until his marriage, in 1856, to Dora Larson. It was in 1863 that he emigrated to America, and his financial resources were so slender that he reached Waupaca with an indebtedness of fifty dollars hanging over him. He commenced working on a farm at twelve dollars per month, and for nine years worked as a common laborer. By that time he had accumulated a little capital, and he decided to utilize it for his own advancement in life. Accordingly, in 1874 he purchased a half interest in a tannery at Waupaca, and five years later he bought out the other half. He has since then continued in business, and at present he owns a pleasant residence, three well-located pieces of property, and two choice business locations on Main street. The tannery he has recently sold out, for he has decided to retire from business. Mr. Johnson has not lost his affection for his native land. He visited Denmark in 1882, and again in 1888, and during the winter of 1894-95 was arranging for a third trip across the Atlantic. Mr. Johnson has no children, but an adopted son, Anton Johnson. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and he has served in the city council of Waupaca four terms. He is a member of the Scandinavian Lutheran Church. Mr. Johnson enjoys the esteem and respect of all who know him, and is one of the solid and influential business men of Waupaca county.

JOHAN H. EBBE has fairly won the name of being the father of Lincoln township, Wood county. He was a poor man when he came to the township in 1867, a year before it was organized. He took an active part in the organization in 1868, and was its first supervisor. He was elected chairman in the year 1878, and held the office seven successive years and for three terms since then. For twenty-five years he has served as a school director, and he was a justice of the peace for many years. He has always been a leader in public affairs. He laid out roads, helped to organize schools and churches; even made from slabs the coffins in which many of the early dead among the families of the pioneers were laid away at rest. He built many of the first dwellings in the township, and erected the first house in Marshfield. These and many other things were part of the pioneer record of John H. Ebbe.

He was born in Denmark May 28, 1826, son of Hans and Bodel (Hanson) Rasmussen. Hans Rasmussen was born in 1792, and was one of a family of six children, consisting of himself, Peter, Robert, Carrie, Cecil and Anna. He was a farmer by occupation, but was for four years a soldier in the bodyguard of the King of Denmark. In 1823 he married Bodel Hanson. Their children were Rasmus, John H., Hans, Lewis, Christian, Crist, Hannah, Anna, and two who died in infancy. The father died in 1847, the mother in 1888.

John H. Ebbe was educated in the common schools of Denmark, which he attended up to the age of fourteen. He learned reading, and always stood at the head of his class. He remained on his father's farm until 1848; when he was drafted into the Danish army. He served two and a half years in the infantry during the insurrection of Holstein, and participated in four severe engagements, one lasting four days and four nights. He escaped injury, but narrowly, for several times bullets pierced his clothing. After his honorable discharge, in 1851, he spent a year and a half in learning the wagon maker's trade. In 1863 his brother Crist came to America, and the year following John H. followed with his family. He had in February, 1853, married Maria Hendersen, in Denmark, and his four children were Mary, Hans, Hannah and John, of whom, Hans and Hannah are deceased. Mr. Ebbe when he came to Wisconsin in 1864, rented a farm in Lake Mills township, Jefferson county. Here his wife died, and in the autumn of 1865 he married his present wife, Julia Oleson, who is of Norwegian birth. By this marriage he had seven children: William, Henry, Julia, Albert, Clarence, and two who died young. Mrs. Ebbe by a previous marriage had three children: Martha, Thomas and Lewis. In the fall of 1867 Mr. Ebbe came to Wood county, and settled on his present farm of 160 acres in Lincoln township, making the journey with an ox-team, which he had hired. The land was covered with pine stumps, and at that time was considered very poor land, Mr. Ebbe paying only $100 for the property. He was poor, and was obliged to work in the woods to support his family, but he continued to improve his farm, and to-day has one of the finest properties in the township. He has also bought and sold other land extensively, and has given to his sons fine farms, upon which they have settled near him. Mr. Ebbe gave his attention to the lumber interests of the county many years ago, and his sons are still in the lumber camp. He was very prominent in the early history of the township, and is still regarded as one of the most public-spirited citizens of the county. In politics he is a Republican, and in religious affiliation he and his wife are members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church.

REV. ANDERS LAUSEN JENSEN SOHOLM, pastor of the Danish Lutheran Church at Waupaca, is the sole representative of his father's family in America. He came as a missionary, in 1872, to help keep together in spiritual bonds the many members of the home Church who had in recent years crossed the ocean to found new homes and new associations in a foreign land. For six years he labored in his ministerial capacity in the East, and then, in 1878, came to Waupaca and took charge of the Danish Lutheran Church here. It has been a fertile field for Church growth, for the hardy Danes have in large numbers peopled the shores and forests of the Upper Wisconsin Valley, and have made homes to bloom where before there was only dreariness and waste. Rev. Soholm in looking after the spiritual needs of this strong and honest race has done faithful and zealous work, as the flourishing charges now under his care most thoroughly attest.

He was born in Jutland, Denmark, June 16, 1844, son of Jens S. and Kirsten (Jensen) Soholm, to whom were born eight children: Soren, Karen, John, Marie, Mary, Mads, Hans and Anders L. Jens Soholm was born in Fyen, Denmark, in 1791, and was a farmer by occupation. He served as a soldier in the Danish army, and died in 1849, when Anders L., the youngest child, was but five years old. Anders lived at home with his mother until he was eighteen years old, then attended college for four years, thus completing his education in 1869. During the next three years he taught school, excepting eight months when he was in the military service of his country, serving in the infantry, and during that time he employed a substitute at the school. When Rev.

Soholm came to America, in 1872, as a minister he located at Perth Amboy, N. J., twenty-five miles distant from New York City, remaining there six years. Then, in 1878, he took charge of the Danish Lutheran charge at Waupaca, and has remained there, an earnest and devoted pastor, ever since. The Church has a membership of 400; Rev. Soholm also has four other charges in his care, including one at Belmont, one at Saxeville, Waushara county, one in Union township and one at Poy Sippi, Waushara county. Politically he is a Republican.

On September 14, 1872, in New York, he was married to Anna Marie Kirstine Fogtman, who was born in Denmark and who emigrated to America that year. To Rev. and Mrs. Soholm seven children have been born, as follows: Emma, Dora, Walter, Clara, Hilda, Matilda, and Albert. Dora, one of the daughters, was married to Mr. W. Jersild December 27, 1894. He has a fruit and confectionery store at Waupaca.

JOHAN D. BEGGS was born in Grand Isle county, Vt., August 12, 1823, and is a son of Archibald and Sarah (Dodds) Beggs, who were early residents of Vermont.

Archibald Beggs was a farmer by occupation. His wife was born in Vermont, and her father, John Dodds, was one of the early settlers there. Mr. and Mrs. Beggs were the parents of eight children—John D., the subject of this sketch; Jane, now widow of B. Worden, and residing in Almond township, Portage county; Hulda, now Mrs. John O'Neil, of Fond du Lac county, Wis.; Robert, deceased; James, deceased, who lived in Almond township; Matilda, deceased; Albert, who died at the siege of Petersburg, and William, a resident of Plainfield, Waushara Co., Wis. The children remained at home until of adult age. Finally, one by one, as they married, they left home. In 1840 the parents sold the homestead in Vermont, went to Clinton county, N. Y., and bought a farm on which they lived until 1850, when they sold out and came to Wisconsin. From Milwaukee they came by wagon to Almond township, Portage county, and pre-empted 160 acres of land, on which they squatted, as it was termed. The land had just been bought from the Indians, and had not yet been surveyed. There were numerous openings, as they were called, partly timber and partly prairie. Clearing was at once commenced, but progressed slowly, as they had only rude tools with which to work. Lumber was brought from Stevens Point, Portage county, and a frame house built. First wheat was sowed, the land was strong, and, as the clearing was enlarged, they began to succeed better. Here the parents resided for the remainder of their lives, the death of Mr. Beggs occurring about 1865, and that of his widow, Mrs. Sarah Beggs, about 1888.

John D. Beggs received only a common-school education. Being the eldest of the children, he was taken from school and had to assist in the work of the farm. He made the cradle with which the first wheat was cut on his father's farm in Almond township, and cradled that day an acre of wheat. In New York State, on July 11, 1851, John D. Beggs married Susan Tucker, who was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., November 14, 1829. They came to Wisconsin the year following their marriage, and still live on the homestead in Almond township, Portage county, where they first settled. There have been born to them twelve children, namely: Gertrude M., Mrs. Asay Abbott, of Almond township; Edwin O., deceased; Everett O., a resident of Pine Grove, Wis.; Robert R., in Almond township; Frederick W., in Almond; Clara C., in Almond, widow of Mr. Abbott; Nelson H., living in Almond; Warren J., deceased; Catherine L., now Mrs. S. Vroman, of Oasis; Herbert B., at home; Jessie S., in Almond; and Myron W., at home.

The parents of Mrs. John D. Beggs, Joseph and Catherine (Church) Tucker, reared a family of eleven children, as follows: Adeline, now Mrs. A. Willard, of Oregon; Orilla J., in Almond; Harvey, who died in the war; Marvin, deceased; Susan, Mrs. Beggs; Maria, deceased; Catherine; Joseph, in New York, on the old homestead; Cephas, deceased; and Nelson and Joshua, in Sparta, Monroe Co., Wis. The father was a successful farmer. Both parents always lived in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., and died there, Mrs. Tucker in 1863, Mr. Tucker in 1864.

Mr. Beggs is a Democrat, and has always supported that party. He has been justice of the peace for probably thirty-five years; was the first town clerk; was assessor for twenty-five years, and treasurer for twenty-three years. Coming to Almond township in an early day, he is widely and favorably known, and highly respected in the community as a substantial citizen and for his many sterling qualities.

LARS S. LARSEN is one of the energetic and successful citizens of Waupaca. He is senior member of the firm of Larsen & Yosham, who own the finest meat market in the city, and do the largest business in that line. He is energetic simply because he cannot help it. He is one of those fortunate men who are born with an unusually large stock of vitality, which if directed aright is certain to bring to its happy possessors success in whatever field of enterprise they engage. And Mr. Larsen has held his vitality well in check, for his life has been governed by good business principles. As a consequence he has been of service to the community in which he lives in many ways by means of his wise counsel and the exercise of his energies.

He was born near the city of Holbek, Island of Sjeland, Denmark, November 14, 1857, son of Ole Larsen, a farmer. Ole Larsen had for a year served in the Danish army during the campaign in the West Indies. He had a family of seven children, four of whom—Peter, Andrew, Maggie and Lars S.—lived to emigrate with him to America in 1860. This was the second Danish family to settle in Waupaca township, Waupaca Co., Wis. On his arrival Ole Larsen purchased forty acres of land in Waupaca township, but five years later he moved to Lind township, and for fifteen years superintended the farm of his son-in-law. Returning to Waupaca, this pioneer

Dane died in that city in November, 1883, surviving his wife two years.

Lars S. Larsen, the youngest son, attended the district schools of Lind township until he was fourteen years old. He then went to work for a farmer, contracting to remain eight months at twelve dollars per month. The thrifty habits of the boy may be seen from the fact that when his term of service was ended $91 remained to his credit. In the eight months he had drawn only five dollars. For two years he thus worked and saved, but the money earned did not go to his own use. It was devoted to the purchase of a home for his father in Waupaca. When seventeen years old he began going into the woods in winters, and working in sawmills during the summers. He kept up this life for three years, and at one time injured his hand severely with the saw. He was an athletic young fellow, weighing 175 pounds, and the strongest in a gang of seventeen lumbermen. Lars was married, in December, 1876, to Nicalena Anderson, a native of Denmark. After marriage he rented a farm in Lind township and worked it for three years. It was by the merest accident that his efforts were directed to the butchering line. Having five head of cattle for sale he found it impossible to dispose of them, and in sheer desperation he killed the animals and sold the meat. It proved profitable and the young man bought some more beeves and disposed of them in the same way. The following spring he bought a farm of four forty-acre tracts, unimproved, built a house, and cleared the farm in summer and butchered in winter. Four years later he sold the farm, moved to Waupaca, and for a year worked in a butcher shop. Then, in 1884, he went into business for himself, and has continued it ever since.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Larsen consists of Carrie M., Charles, Fred, Oscar, Emma, Marie, Eva and Jessie. Himself and wife are members of the Lutheran Church. Politically he is a Republican. He has been ward policeman, and for seven terms has been chief of police. He is a member of the Knights of Honor, of the Modern Woodmen, and is serving as chairman of the board of health. Besides his business, Mr. Larsen owns a fine residence and eleven city lots. He has attained to an influential position in the civic affairs of Waupaca.

ERICK JACOBSON. Quite a number of the leading and prominent citizens of Merrill, Lincoln county, are of alien birth, and among these there is none that is better known or more widely respected than the gentleman whose name appears at the beginning of this sketch. He is a native of Sweden, born November 12, 1854, in Dals Land, and is a son of Jacob and Britta S. (Olson) Isaacson. His father was a blacksmith and wagon maker by trade and followed those occupations in Sweden until his death, which occurred in 1892. The paternal grandfather, Isaac Stam, was a soldier in the Swedish army, and by his marriage had five children, three sons and two daughters, of whom the daughters died while young; one son was accidentally shot; and another was killed in a flouring mill. The maternal grandfather, Nels Backfalt, was also a soldier. The mother of our subject was the daughter of Ole Backfalt, and had one brother and three sisters: John, Lizzie, Kassa and Mary S. By her marriage she became the mother of two children, namely: Erick and Sophia, and since her husband's death she has come to the United States and now makes her home with her son.

Mr. Jacobson obtained his education in the common schools of Sweden and remained at home until 1882, when he decided to come to America. In his native land he had part of the time worked on a railroad. On landing in New York City in April, 1882, he went direct to Chicago, where he obtained a position in a rolling mill. He there remained for a year and a half, or until the fall of 1883, when he came to Merrill and worked in the woods during the winter, but the following spring returned to Chicago and again worked in a rolling mill for six months. At the end of that time he removed to Iowa, where for eighteen months he was employed in a coal mine, after which he again came to Merrill, and has since made this place his home. He obtained a position in a lumber yard during the summers, while in the winter he was in the woods for two seasons, and at the same time kept a boarding house. This he followed until May, 1893, when he opened a temperance saloon, which he conducted for three months, and then put in a stock of groceries, which business he still continues with marked success.

In 1884, in Chicago, our subject was united in marriage with Charlotte Aronson, who was born in Sweden, July 30, 1859, and is a daughter of Aaron and Mary L. Anderson, who were the parents of fourteen children, nine of whom are still living; Anna, August, Charlotte, Ricka, Eliza, Minnie, Charles, John H. and Walfrid. Mrs. Jacobson came to the United States in 1883, but her parents still reside in Sweden, where the father is engaged in farming. Her paternal grandfather, Andrew Anderson, was also an agriculturist, and by his marriage had a family of four children, all of whom are now deceased, with the exception of Anderson.

Mr. Jacobson has never taken an active part in politics, but in performing the duties of an American citizen at the polls votes the straight Prohibition ticket. In religious matters he and his wife are consistent members of the Swedish Lutheran Church and their genuine social and moral worth gives them a high place in the regard of their fellow citizens.

ALBERTA. JEFFERS, a well-known farmer of Portage county, was born in Jefferson county, N. Y., and is a son of George and Belinda (Cadwell) Jeffers. The grandfather, Thomas Jeffers, was a native of Connecticut and a descendant of Judge Jefferys of England, who was the founder of the family in America, and changed the name to its present spelling. George Jeffers was reared on a farm in New York, and in 1855 came to Wisconsin, locating on a farm in Farmington township, Waupaca county, where his remaining days were passed. His wife, who was born April 21, 1806, in the State of Connecticut, is still living, and, though she has reached the age of eighty-nine, enjoys very good health. She makes her home with our subject and with her daughter, Mrs. Penny, of Sheridan. The children of the family are: Seymour, Eliza A., Henry C., Cornelia J., Truman G., Ellen M., Julius M., Albert A., Emma S., Earle L., Laura S., Winfield S. and Washington B.

On the maternal side Mr. Jeffers traces his ancestry back through many generations. His grandfather, Phineas Cadwell, was a son of Ashbel, and through Nehemiah, Edward, Abraham, William Nehemiah, Matthew Edward, Daniel, David, Joseph Timothy, Aaron and Moses to Edward Cadwell, who, with his brother Matthew, sailed from England on the "Mayflower" in 1620. The family had gone to that country from Holland and previously lived in Scotland. The wife of Edward reached the advanced age of one hundred and three years. Phineas Cadwell, grandfather of our subject, was born in Hartford, Conn., and at the age of two years went with his parents to Litchfield county, where at the age of eighteen he entered the Colonial army, serving in the Revolutionary war until independence was achieved. He married Eleanor Hayden, and lived with his parents until the death of his father. In 1794, he removed his family to Town Hill, where he remained until 1800, keeping a public house for two years. He then went with his family to Litchfield, Conn., and in December, 1801, took a trip to New York, and purchased a farm, to which he removed the following summer, the location being in Chenango county, now Madison county. In 1808, he removed to the shore of Oneida lake, locating in the wilderness, where for a time he was engaged in farming. In the spring of 1845, he went with his daughter to Fabius, and in 1849 took up his residence at the home of his son, E. S. Cadwell, in Madison county, N. Y., where he died February 11, 1857, at the age of ninety-nine years, eleven months and ten days. In 1856, he received from the government, for services rendered in the Revolution, a land warrant for 160 acres, which he located in Racine county, Wis. His children were Polly A., born July 13, 1781; Polly A., born August 25, 1783; Mahala, born September 17, 1785; Ebenezer S., born October 7, 1787; Eleanor, born April 13, 1793; Emma, born October 16, 1795; Ashbel, born August 11, 1799; and Belinda, born April 21, 1806.

We now resume the personal history of Albert A. Jeffers, who acquired his education in the district schools of Waupaca county, and was reared upon his father's farm, remaining at home until his marriage. He wedded Jessie Le Prevost in Weyauwega, Wis., November 21, 1860. She was born in the town of Halifax, Nova Scotia, March 12, 1847, and is a daughter of Capt. Nicholas M. and Jennie (Streeter) Le Prevost. Her father was born on the Island of Guernsey, off the coast of France, was a son of Sir Nicholas Le Prevost, who owned a large estate on that island. The baronial castle was left to his daughters, who are still residing therein, and on the death of those ladies the estate will descend to George F. Le Prevost, a brother of Mrs. Jeffers, now residing in Philadelphia, Pa. He is a gentleman of culture, a graduate of one of the leading universities of this country. He was twice married, and his first wife, who died fourteen years ago, had three children, but all are now deceased. The sisters of Mrs. Jeffers are Mary J., wife of Alfred Tasker, a wealthy cotton and woolen manufacturer who with his family spends the winter in London, England, and the remainder of the year in their beautiful summer home in the heart of Kent county; Louisa R., wife of William Warfel, who is living near Prairie Center, Neb.; and Margaret L., who became the wife of J. H. Morgan, and died December 28, 1893, leaving six children. Captain Le Prevost was at one time an extensive ship owner; he is now deceased.

During her early girlhood, Mrs. Jeffers attended a private school in Halifax. With her parents she sailed from that place, June 9, 1856, on the "Eastern State," which in a dense fog collided with an inward bound vessel which sank immediately, not a soul being saved. The "Eastern State" was seriously damaged and this experience Mrs.

Jeffers will never forget, for the shrieks of the doomed people could be plainly heard by those who were unable to render any assistance. For three weeks the Le Prevost family visited relatives in Boston, where the Captain served as chief witness and was instrumental in securing the acquittal of Capt. Ward, commander of the "Eastern State," to whose carelessness the accident was charged. The family then came to Farmington, Wis. Mrs. Jeffers is a remarkably well-informed lady, a fluent and pleasing talker and her kindliness and benevolence have won her the respect and love of all.

To our subject and wife were born the following children: George N., born September 6, 1866; Henry W., born December 14, 1872, and is a graduate of the business college of Dixon, Ill.; Ellen M., born November 7, 1874, and for several terms a teacher, now attending the Normal School at Stevens Point; Bessie L., born April 29, 1878, now attending school in Lanark, Wis., and Martha B., born December 11, 1880, who possesses considerable musical talent, and is now attending school in Lanark.

During the Civil war, Mr. Jeffers enlisted at Waupaca, October 7, 1861, in Company B, Fourteenth Wis. V. I., and after three weeks' drill at Weyauwega, joined his regiment at Fond du Lac, whence the command was ordered to St. Louis, thence to the South. He participated in the battles of Shiloh and Vicksburg, and a wound received at the latter caused his detention in the hospital for three months. He was also in the battles of Iuka, Pleasant Hill, Cloutersville, Cane River, Marksville, Yellow Bayou, Tupelo, Old Town Creek, Fort Blakely, Spanish Fort, Nashville, and Augusta. He was mustered out of the service at Mobile, Ala., October 12, 1865, immediately returned home and purchased 125 acres of land in Lanark township, Portage county. He afterward disposed of a part of this and purchased land in Amherst township. He still has ninety acres, of which fifty acres are cleared, and he is rapidly transforming it into rich and fertile fields. In politics he is a Republican and keeps well informed on the issues of the day. He is a Protestant in religious belief, and is a man who has the confidence and high regard of neighbors and friends, having won their esteem by his well-spent life.

OLE LARSON, a prominent merchant of Waupaca, now conducts a thriving grocery store, and for many years has been identified with the growing business interests of this city.

He is a native of Denmark, where he was born in December, 1826, son of Lars and Anna (Hanson) Hanson. Lars Hanson was a farmer, and had a family of twelve children, of whom Ole, the second son, is now the sole survivor. Ole was reared on a farm, and received a good common-school education. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker and learned that trade in his native land. In 1856, at the age of twenty-nine years, he decided to emigrate to America. He located first at Pine Lake, Wis., where for a short time he worked on a farm. He then removed to Muskegon, Mich., and for three years worked in a sawmill. Returning to Wisconsin in the fall of 1859, he was occupied in different ways at Waupaca until in 1861 he resumed the trade of his youth and opened a shoe shop. It proved a successful venture, for the business grew rapidly and he prospered. At one time he employed five men, and carried an extensive stock of goods. About 1870 he sold out his boot and shoe business and with L. Pedersen as a partner opened a grocery store. Disposing of his interest to his partner the next year Mr. Larson cultivated a small farm for a number of years, or until 1887, when he again entered the grocery business, and is now at the head of a mercantile establishment which commands a good trade.

Mr. Larson was first married, in 1865, to Elizabeth Austin, of American birth. One son, Lewis Austin Larson, was born to them, and he now assists his father in the store. The mother died in 1878, and six years later Mr. Larson was married to Hannah Everson, a native of Norway. Politically Mr. Larson is a Republican, and for two terms he has served his ward as an alderman in the city council. He has been a member of the Danish Lutheran Church since 1859, and is a member of the Dane Home. Coming to America a poor young man, Mr. Larson has by his adherence to principles of honor and integrity won the confidence and high regard of the people of Waupaca and vicinity. He is now one of its most influential and enterprising citizens.

JOHAN M. STAUBER. Wood county has many well-to-do and successful business men who are the architects of their own fortunes, and have been connected largely with its prosperity. Among these is the subject of this personal history, who at present is engaged in the manufacture of cigars in Marshfield, where he is conducting an excellent business, having in his employ three men most of the time.

Mr. Stauber was born in Bohemia on the 6th of May, 1858, and is a son of John Stauber, who is a farmer by occupation and is a land owner of Bohemia, where he and his wife are still living. The father married Elizabeth Thrlbeck, and they became the parents of eight children, as follows: Anton, Joseph, Fannie, Mary, Theresa, John M., Charles and Andrew. Our subject has one brother and one sister now residing in this country—Charles and Theresa.

John M. Stauber was reared on his father's farm, and thus in early life became familiar with the work devolving on a general farmer. He attended the common schools of his native land, acquiring a good German education. He remained in Bohemia until twenty-three years of age, when he determined to make America his future home, and in June, 1881, crossed the Atlantic. At the age of eighteen he had entered the army of his native land, in which he served four years as a musician. After landing in this country he came direct to Wisconsin, stopping first at Manitowoc, where he had friends living. There he learned the trade of cigar-making, and remained in that city until September, 1882, when he settled in Marshfield, which has since been his place of residence. He here worked at his trade in the employ of others, until December, 1890, when he started in business for himself, which has since been successfully carried on. May 1st he made a change in his business to that of a bakery, confectionery and grocery store, which is styled the Marshfield Bakery. He is one of the self-made men of the community, having landed in the United States with only $20 in his pocket.

On April 27, 1885, Mr. Stauber was united in marriage, at Marshfield, with Anna M. Kohl, a native of Washington county, Wis., and by this union have been born four children, namely: Joseph J., Rosa M., Frank A., and Dora B. In politics our subject is a Democrat, but has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking. He holds membership with the Catholic Church and also belongs to the Catholic Knights, and to the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a great lover of music, and is now serving as chief bugler of the Second Regiment Wis. N. G. He organized the Marshfield Band, consisting of eighteen pieces, and is at present its leader, a position he is well qualified to fill. Mr. Stauber is a man of good financial ability and of excellent judgment, and since becoming a resident of this city has won the respect and confidence of the community, and occupies a leading position among its influential citizens.

NEWELL GROVER, dealer in liquors at Amherst Junction, Portage county, was born in the town of Alleghany, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., July 27, 1854, and is a son of Isaac Reed and Rosella (Devreaux) Grover, natives of the Empire State. In 1855, the father came west in search of a location, and purchased eighty acres of wild land in Amherst township, Portage county, upon which he made a clearing, then built a log cabin. In the spring of 1856, he sent for his family who joined him, and upon the first farm they lived for a year, when the father disposed of that property and bought a large tract of wild land on Waupaca river. There he built a log house and lived for two years, when he again sold out and bought forty acres on which Amherst Junction now stands. Later he purchased seven acres of what is called the old Turner farm. He erected the first house in Amherst Junction, a frame building and there lived for many years. This old house is still standing, though now in a dilapidated condition.

While the father was in the Civil war, our subject and his brother made a number of improvements upon the farm. Newell attended the public schools until seventeen years of age, and worked in the fields during the summers. Later he was employed at various occupations, engaging in railroad-ing for eight years, after which he rented and operated a farm near Buena Vista, Wis., for one year. During the succeeding four years he was a traveling salesman, and upon his return to Amherst Junction engaged in the livery business with Charles Dwinnell. At first they had only three horses, but when Mr. Grover sold out they had six horses and an excellent stock of carriages. In February, 1891, he purchased the saloon which he still conducts, and in the spring of 1893 he repurchased a half interest in the old livery barn, and in the autumn became sole proprietor. In August, 1894, he sold the livery business, but again bought it back in March, 1895. In May, 1893, he and Mr. Dwinnell purchased the Guyant saloon, which is conducted by the latter. By persistence and enterprise, Mr. Grover has accumulated considerable property, and the only aid he ever received was a gift from his father of a lot on which he himself built a house shortly before his marriage. This was his home until 1885.

Mr. Grover was married in East Granville, Wis., April 8, 1877, to Betsey M. Hopkins, daughter of C. Perry and Martha (Woodard) Hopkins, the former born in Macomb county, Mich., April 10, 1828, and the latter in Indiana in 1831. Mr. Hopkins is a son of Sherman and Miranda Hopkins, natives of New York, who after their marriage emigrated to Michigan. In 1834, they located in Milwaukee, Wis., and were among its first settlers. Sherman Hopkins was an intimate friend of Solomon Juneau, said to have been the first white settler of Milwaukee. After leaving that city in 1854, he resided in various places in this State. During the war of the Rebellion, he served as drum major. He was born in New York, March 17, 1808, and his wife was born in 1812. They are still living with their son George, at the ages of eighty-seven and eighty-four years, respectively. Their children are: C. Perry; George, a farmer of Dale, Wis.; Jane, widow of Jesse Crouch, of Appleton, Wis.; James, a farmer of Nebraska; and Russell, a carpenter of Antigo.

When a young man, Perry Hopkins learned the mason's trade in Milwaukee, and in that city was married. He located on a farm a short distance from Oshkosh, Wis., in 1854, and hiring a man to operate his land, worked at his trade in the town during the summer season. He there lived about fifteen years, when he sold out and removed with his family to Stevens Point, Wis., where for twelve years he followed mason work. Within that time his wife died, September 4th, 1870. He then took his family to Appleton, Wis., where he lived for three years. There he married Anna Alder, by whom he had one child that lived but eight months. His wife died two years later, and he then returned to Stevens Point, where he wedded Miss Phoebe Faulkner. Since 1894, he has resided in Amherst Junction. The children of the first marriage are Mary E., widow of Edward Tobie, of Amherst; William Wallace, a section foreman in the State of Washington; and Mrs. Grover (who supported herself from the age of fifteen until her marriage, at which time she was keeping house for her uncle, Daniel Small).

The children of Isaac R. Grover were George, who married Mahala Post, lives at Rockford, Iowa, and is the father of Stella M., Perry M., and Herbert; Melvina L., the wife of Edmund Turner, a farmer of Marshall county, Kans., and is the mother of Fred, Hattie, Ida and Charles; Ransom D., who married Sophia Dwinell, and died leaving a daughter, Edith; Alzina R., wife of William H. Worden, and is the mother of Delbert, Burdette, Eli, Henry and Bertie; Newell and Martin, the latter a farmer of South Dakota, who married Katy Lesshart, and is the father of one child, Earle.

The mother of our subject died on the old homestead, and the father was married in March, 1873, to Selina Russell, by whom he had five children: Ira; Agnes, deceased;

Lilly; Esther and Frank. In 1861, Isaac Reed Grover enlisted at Amherst in Company H, Third Wis. V. C., and served throughout the war. His death occurred January 12, 1883, and the community thereby lost one of its best citizens. He was a stalwart Republican, and a self-made man, who started out in life a poor boy, but became the possessor of a valuable property.

Newell Grover is also a staunch Republican. His only child, Hattie M., was born January 1, 1882. Mr. Grover is a well informed man, of pleasant and genial disposition, and his circle of friends is extensive. In October, 1894, he purchased his present place of business, which he has since remodeled and to it made additions. He has also built on this lot a new dwelling house.

REV. CHARLES BEYERLE, pastor of St. Peter and St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church, Grand Rapids, Wood county, was born in Strassburg, Alsace, Germany, on August 12, 1848, and is the son of Phillip Frederick and Anne (Gobelin) Beyerle. He was reared in the city of his birth, and in its schools acquired his education, excepting one year's attendance at St. Francis Academy in Milwaukee, Wis., after his emigration to the United States. Being fitted for the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church, he was ordained for his chosen life work at the Pro-Cathedral of Green Bay, Wis., by the Right Rev. Bishop Melcher, June 16, 1871, and was assigned to duty in the parish of Duck Creek, together with other missions. There he performed his work faithfully for six years, on the expiration of which period he was transferred to Marinette, Wis., where he had charge of a church until 1878.

In that year Father Beyerle came to Grand Rapids, and has since been stationed here, his pastorate covering a period of more than sixteen years. He is a zealous worker, earnest and untiring, and is highly esteemed by the members of his large congregation. During his administration in this parish through his instrumentality has been erected a house for the Sisters, a large school building, which is now completed and ready for occupancy, and there have been added eight lots to the church property. He is an able minister of his denomination, and his long continuance with the church in Grand Rapids shows the place that he has won in the hearts of his parishioners.

NAAMAN BELKNAP is a native of Massachusetts, born July 8, 1828, a son of Joseph and Saber (Onthank) Belknap, who were also natives of the Bay State. There were ten children born to them, six of whom are dead. The four who are yet living are as follows: Levi, a farmer residing in Dunn county, Wis.; Ebenezer, a resident of Milford, Mass.; Valentine, who carries on agricultural pursuits at Hopkinton, Mass.; and Naaman. The parents of this family are both now deceased. They departed this life in Hopkinton, and their remains were interred in the cemetery at that place.

No event of special importance occurred during the boyhood and youth of our subject, which were quietly passed upon the old home farm. He aided in the labors of the fields through the summer months, and in the winter seasons attended the common schools of Hopkinton until fifteen years of age, when, wishing to learn a trade he took up shoe making, and, having mastered it, made the business mainly a life work. During the past twelve years he has abandoned the bench and given his time to farming. He continued to reside in the State of his nativity for some time after he had attained his majority, but at length bade adieu to home and friends in the East and started for the Mississippi valley. In 1856, he located in Waupun, Wis., where for two years he resided, going thence to Ripon, Wis., where the succeeding year was passed. He then went to Stevens Point, this State, where he also spent a year, and in June, 1860, he came to Grand Rapids, which has now for more than a third of a century been his place of abode. Here he carried on shoe making for some time and did a good business along that line, but, as before stated, he took up farming about twelve years since, and has given his time and energies to the pursuit to which he was reared.

In 1865, at Grand Rapids, Mr. Belknap was united in marriage with Mrs. Lavina Ketchum, a widow lady of this place, and to them were born two children, a daughter and son, Lida M., wife of George Shearer; and Charles James. Both are still residing in Grand Rapids. The family attend the Congregational Church, and in the community where they reside they have a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Belknap casts his ballot in support of Republican principles and is a wide-awake and progressive citizen, who has taken an active part in all interests and enterprises calculated to advance the general welfare. His life has been well spent, and all who know him hold him in high esteem for his sterling worth and strict integrity.

WILLIAM RADLEY, one of the most highly respected citizens of Waupaca county, well deserving of mention in this volume, was born in Yorkshire, England, June 11, 1830, and his parents, John and Grace (Mosley) Radley, were also natives of the same country.

In his youth the father worked as a farm hand, and at the age of twenty began learning the weaver's trade. In August, 1830, with his wife and two children, Ann and William, the latter only nine weeks old, he came to America. Two children, Joseph and James, died in their native land. For two years John Radley followed weaving in New York City, and, having saved a few dollars, went to Buffalo, where he intended to purchase land, but was robbed by foot-pads and left for dead. He recovered, however, and returned to New York City, but after a short time removed to Dutchess county, N. Y., where he was employed for eighteen years in a calico factory. In 1846, he removed to Spring Prairie, Walworth county, Wis., and worked a farm on shares. On going to this county he left his family in the East, but they followed him, arriving there July 4, 1847. They traveled the entire distance by water. At this time the children of the family were: Ann, who had become the wife of Simeon Wilde, whom she married in Dutchess county, N. Y., and had two sons, John and William; our subject, next in order of birth; George, now of Dayton; Allen, of Lind; Martha, who died in infancy; Mary, now Mrs. David Taylor of Farmington township, Waupaca county; and Eliza, wife of Charles Hutton of Pine River, Wis. It was in Walworth county that the sons were initiated into farming, for previously they had been employed in factories of the East amidst discipline and system, and in this new country they had unlimited sway. In later years the family, with the exception of our subject, removed to Green Lake county, Wis., and three years later came to Lind township, Waupaca county, where the father died at the age of seventy-seven. His wife, surviving him two years, passed away at the same age. They were buried in Lind cemetery. In politics he was first a Democrat, but afterward allied himself with no party.

Our subject obtained the greater part of his education at Sunday schools and at night schools, there being no free schools in the neighborhood. At the tender age of nine years he began to earn his living in the factories of the East, being employed for several years in a calico factory and afterward in a comb factory. The first free school he attended was in Walworth county, whither he came at the age of seventeen. In that county he married Cordelia C. Robbins, December 19, 1848, she being a native of Herkimer county, N. Y., born October 17, 1832, and a daughter of John A. and Lucy (Holridge) Robbins, who settled in Walworth county during the territorial days of the State. In their family were eleven children, Mrs. Radley being the eldest.

In the spring after his marriage, Mr. Radley rented a farm, and for a year was employed in a nursery. In the spring of 1850, he removed to Lind township, Waupaca county, which was a sparsely settled region; but, anxious to get a home, he bravely endured the hardships incident to pioneer life. His first house was a log cabin 20 x 14 feet, and the farm comprised forty acres, purchased at the government price,

$1.25 per acre, and to pay for it he had to sell his yoke of cattle, which he had raised from calves. Before the removal to this farm a son, John A., was born August 12, 1849, and two sons were added to the family in Lind township, William W., who was born November 27, 1853, now a carpenter and skilled mechanic of Rural, Wis.; and Giles H., who was born August 5, 1856, now a resident of Dayton township. The other children were born in Dayton township, and are Charles M., born April 7, 1863, a teacher and carpenter of Rural, Wis.; and George A., born February 23, 1866, also a carpenter of Rural.

Mr. Radley, in 1861, traded his forty acres of land for eighty acres of wild land in Section 20, Dayton township, on which stood only a rude board shanty that was supplanted by a better home the following summer. He has developed one of the best farms in Waupaca county, highly cultivated and yielding to him a golden tribute in return for the care and labor he has bestowed upon it. For over forty years he has made a study of the diseases of horses and cattle and is a practical veterinary surgeon, who has been extremely successful in his treatment of domestic animals. On questions of national importance, Mr. Radley votes with the Democracy, but in local elections where no issue is involved casts his ballot independent of party questions. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Radley had but 12 shillings, and for their success in life deserve great credit. They are charitable and benevolent people, in whom the poor and needy find friends, and in Dayton township no one is more highly respected than this worthy couple.

ROBERT G. MARSHALL, who for ten years has been a trusted employe of the Upham Manufacturing Company, is numbered among the leading and influential citizens of Marshfield, Wood county, prominent in public affairs and devoted to the best interests of the community in which he makes his home. Anything calculated to promote the educational, social and moral welfare of the community receives his endorsement and support and he therefore well deserves mention among the representative men of the county.

Mr. Marshall was born in Toronto, Canada, June 20, 1864, and is a son of Alexander Marshall, who was born in Canada in 1804. By occupation the father was a farmer, following that pursuit throughout the greater part of his life. About 1834 he married Martha Livingston, and to them were born twelve children, of whom James, Alexander, Mary, Martha, Ann, Lizzie, Robert, Maggie and Louisa are still living; Sarah, the eldest, died in February, 1894; William died in Council Bluffs, Iowa, at the age of thirty-five, leaving a widow and three children; George died in 1867. The father of this family was called to his final rest July 16, 1886. He was a highly respected man, honored with a number of public offices of trust, and his well-spent life of more than eighty years furnishes an example deserving of emulation. His widow still survives him.

The Marshall family is of Irish origin. James Marshall, the grandfather of our subject sailed from the Emerald Isle to Canada when a young man. He there married Clarissa Winnie, and they became the parents of the following children: William, Margaret, James, Mary, Nellie, and two others of whom we have no record. The grandfather carried on agricultural pursuits and remained in Canada until his death. On the maternal side Robert Marshall is of Scotch descent, his grandparents both being natives of Scotland. In their family were seven children: Sallie, John, Martha, Fanny, Mary, Jane and William, the last named a soldier.

The gentleman whose name opens this record remained on the old home farm until sixteen years of age, when he began learning the carpenter's trade, serving an apprenticeship of two and a half years. During the winter of 1879 he went to Clinton, Iowa, where his brother James was living, remaining in that place for a year. He was there married in 1880, after which he took up railroading, but followed that pursuit only a short time, when he secured a position as saw-filer in the sawmill belonging to W. J. Young & Co. On leaving that position he leased a farm in Iowa, which he cultivated for three years, and then changed his place of residence, coming to Marshfield in February, 1885. Here he entered the employ of the Upham Manufacturing Company, first working in the yards, but winning promotion from time to time until, in 1887, he was given the position of lumber inspector. He still serves in that capacity, faithfully discharging his duties, and has the entire confidence of his employers.

The wedding celebrated in Clinton, Iowa, on the 25th of November, 1880, united the destinies of Mr. Marshall and Miss Helena M. Loucks, a daughter of Dewitt C. and Charlotte D. (Clendenen) Loucks. They now have one son, Ernel Roy. Mr. Marshall is a supporter of the men and measures of the Republican party, and was elected alderman of the Third ward although the city is Democratic. This fact shows the esteem in which he is held by his fellow townsmen, a fact due to his personal popularity. He belongs to the Order of United Workmen, and is a charter member of the Marshfield Camp of Woodmen of the World. He and his wife hold membership with the Presbyterian Church and are deeply interested in its success and upbuilding. His life has not been marked with thrilling experiences, but is not without its points of interest as is that of every man who has done his duty to himself, his neighbor and his country.

REV. RUFUS H. COLBY. In the person of this well-known minister, who is pastor of the Baptist Church in Waupaca, the city has a representative of Puritan stock and of a family that for generations has been actively identified with the best growth, material, intellectual and spiritual, of the United States.

Mr. Colby was born in Erie county, N. Y., near Buffalo, in June, 1835. His father, Jesse Colby, a farmer, was a native of Vermont, where he was born in 1805. The father of Jesse was Ezekiel Colby, a native of New Hampshire, and the father of the latter was also Ezekiel Colby, who was commissioned a captain by King George to serve in the French and Indian war. And so the genealogy goes back to honest-hearted old Anthony Colby, who for the sake of his religious convictions crossed the ocean with the Pilgrim fathers and located a tract of land whereon to earn a livelihood, at the mouth of the Merrimac river. The family lineage is traced back to 1560 at Oldstead Hall, and to Roos Hall, Beccles, England. The family name to Norfolk, 1199.

Ezekiel Colby, Sr., great-grandfather of Rufus H., married a Miss Fowler, of an old Welsh family of Baptist faith. They had a family of eight children of whom Ezekiel, Jr., married Ruth Davis. They reared a family of nine children, eight sons and one daughter, and in 1810 became pioneers of western New York. Ezekiel served as a non-commissioned officer in the war of 1812, and his son Jonathan held the rank of colonel. Jesse, who was next to the youngest son of Ezekiel, married Mary Ann Odell, in 1833. She was born in Junius, Seneca county, N. Y., daughter of Jeremiah and Prudence (Lamphier) Odell, pioneers of western New York. Jeremiah Odell, who was a man of some literary tastes and ability, died in middle life, about 1820, leaving a widow with ten children. But Prudence Odell was a remarkable woman, of Spartan courage and force of character, and proved equal to the task before her. She raised the entire family of three sons and seven daughters to manhood and womanhood. Jesse Colby, while a farmer, was a man of deep religious nature. He was an excellent musician, and closely attached to his home, which he endeared to his children. His tastes were quiet, and in no manner did he seek notoriety. The children of Jesse and Mary Ann Colby were Rufus H.; Caroline, now wife of Rev. E. W. Green, of New York; Seymour J., who served in the Rebellion and who now lives at Ogdensburg, Waupaca county, and Nathan, who died in boyhood. The father in 1863 removed from New York to Wisconsin to be near his children, but died two years later at Waupaca, aged fifty-nine years. The mother died in New York in 1875.

Rufus H. Colby, the eldest child, remained on the farm until eighteen years of age. He then taught school in New York and in Canada, and the winter of 1856-57 he taught near Madison, Wis. Subsequently attending school at the Springville Academy. Completing his education at the old Chicago University and the Theological Seminary, he entered the ministry in 1859, at the age of twenty-four years, his first call being at the Baptist Church at Weyauwega. Here he remained seven years, and then filled a pastorate for three years at Lamartine. In 1869, he accepted a call from his old church in Holland, Erie Co., N. Y., with which he had united as a member as a young man. In 1877, he was called to Buffalo, and there organized the Emanuel Church, serving for six years. Serving a number of other Churches in the East, the last being at Dundee, Rev. Colby in 1892 came west again as pastor of the Church at Waupaca. Since entering the ministry Rev. Colby has built up a number of new and weak Churches, having shown a great capacity for that important branch of ministerial labor.

In 1861 he was married to Miss Mary E. Sanders, daughter of David and Chloe (Tucker) Sanders and granddaughter of Job Sanders, a sea captain, who married Nancy Chase, an aunt of Alvin Chase, of Recipe Book fame. Mrs. Colby died at Gowanda, N. Y., and was buried at Strykersville, N. Y., her native home. By this marriage Rev. Colby has four children—Merle D., Jesse Clair, Charles C. and Ray Harold. In 1892 he married Mrs. Mary (Lowell) Oakes, daughter of Rev. Josiah Lowell, of New York. Rev. Lowell was a native of Maine, and one of a family of six brothers, three of whom were ministers and three lawyers. He married Mary Wilcox, a native of Vermont, whose parents became early settlers in western New York. To Rev. Josiah and Mary Lowell four children were born: Childs, Adams, Josiah and Mary. Seth M. Oakes, the first husband of Mrs. Colby, was a native of New York. They were married in 1860, and the following year settled on a farm in Waupaca county, Wis. Mr. Oakes, in 1876, opened a general store at Wau-paca and remained in active business until his death in 1888. Mrs. Oakes continued in business for three years, and then sold out. Mr. Oakes was a strong temperance man, a Republican in politics, and was actively interested in the welfare of Waupaca. He was a member of the I. O. O. F., with which Order Rev. Colby is also connected.

JOHAN MERCER (deceased), who was one of the most prominent architects and contractors of Wausau, was born at Mona Mills, Canada West, May 10, 1837. His parents, Robert and Mary Mercer, were residents of Canada for many years. There were born to Robert and Mary Mercer a family of ten children, of whom four are now living, namely: Thomas L., residing at Orangeville, Province of Ontario, Canada; James A., at Tottenham, Ontario, Canada; Martha, wife of James Snell, at Mona Mills, Ontario, Canada; and Elizabeth, wife of Robert Richardson, at Bay City, Michigan.

John Mercer was reared to manhood and educated in Mona Mills, Canada. After leaving school he learned cabinet making, but later studied architectural drawing, and engaged in carpenter work. At Orangeville, Canada West, June 12, 1859, John Mercer was united in marriage with Miss Agnes Moore; and to their union were born three children, as follows: Alzina A., at Port Elgin, Canada West, July 18, 1863; Jeannette M., at Grand Rapids, Wood Co., Wis., May 17, 1870, and Thomas B., at Port Edwards, Wood county, Wis., February 20, 1872. The parents of Mrs. Mercer, Adams and Jane (Currie) Moore, reside at Lisbon Center, N. Y. Mr. Mercer removed to Saginaw, Mich., in 1862, and was engaged there in contracting and building for about a year; then to Superior, Douglas Co., Wis., where he resided about two years. In 1865, he went to Grand Rapids, Wood Co., Wis., made his home there for seven years, and, in 1872, removed to Wausau, Marathon county, where he resided up to the time of his death, which occurred July 26, 1894.

Mr. Mercer was a prominent member of the Masonic Fraternity, also of the Knights Templar. He was the architect and builder of most of the handsome edifices which adorn the city of Wausau, noticeable among which are the Plumer residence, First National Bank, and many other handsome and substantial buildings, both public and private. In his death Wausau lost a most valuable and public-spirited citizen, his wife a devoted husband, his children a kind and indulgent father, and his memory will long be cherished.

EDWARD H. MOREHOUSE, who is engaged in the milling business in Amherst township, Portage county, was born in Stockholm, N. Y., September 27, 1852. His great-grandfather, Nathan Morehouse, was a native of England, and in that country was educated for the ministry. On crossing the Atlantic to America he settled on the present site of the city of Manchester, N. H., and in the Granite State followed his chosen calling for a number of years. He was then called to the pastorate of the church in St. Albans, Vt., where he spent his remaining days, dying at a ripe old age. He was, undoubtedly, one of the most noted preachers in that section of the country. His son Nathan was born in Manchester, N. H., was reared on a farm and with his parents went to St. Albans, Vt., where he was married and lived for some time. He then took his family to Alburgh Springs, Vt., where he departed this life. There were thirteen children in his family, and the record which our subject has of them is as follows: Ira (father of Edward H.), the eldest; Mary A., the wife of William Martin of Ross Point, Vt.; Skiharzy, who married Moses Bohannon of Alburgh Springs; William, who served during the late war and died soon after its close from disease contracted in Libby prison; Minerva, the wife of Finn Helecar, living at Hay Island, Vt.; Morrill, who was killed in the war of the Rebellion; and five children who died in infancy.

A native of Alburgh Springs, Vt., Ira Morehouse was reared in the usual manner of farmer lads, and in Shoreham, that State, wedded Mary McCue. Immediately thereafter he removed to Stockholm, N. Y., where he located upon a farm. Mrs. Morehouse was born in Ireland, and at the age of fourteen came with her two brothers to this country, landing in New York, where she made her home for four years. She then went to Shoreham, Vt., where she was employed as a domestic. To Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse were born five children: Nathan, who married Ada Batchan, and is living in Portage, Wis.; Edward H.; Brainard and Edna, deceased; and Edna, the second of that name, now Mrs. Prescott of Lebanon, New Hampshire.

From early youth Edward H. Morehouse has been dependent on his own efforts, and may therefore truly be called a self-made man. He attended the schools of his native town until fourteen years of age, when he began learning the milling trade, serving a two-years' apprenticeship in Chautauqua, N. Y., and completing the business in Rochester, N. Y. Removing thence to Ashtabula, Ohio, he there worked at milling for three years, and subsequently spent a few years in the same business in Belleville, Ill. Returning east to Springfield, Mass., he was then employed for two years as head miller for John Bangs & Brother.

In 1875, while in the East, Mr. Morehouse was married in Holyoke, Mass., to Miss Sarah Batchan, daughter of Eli and Minerva (Silver) Batchan of that place. Her father being dead, Mr. Morehouse is now looking after the estate of her mother. The young couple took up their residence in Springfield, where their home was blessed with one daughter—Edna, born May 20, 1876. In the spring of 1877, with his little family, Mr. Morehouse removed to Minneapolis, Minn., and after thirteen months went to Grand Rapids, Wis., where he was employed for a year in the mill of Coleman & Jackson. His next place of residence was in Plover, Wis., where he was employed in the mill of J. C. Harvey, and a year later he located in Amherst, obtaining the situation of head miller with Jerome Nelson. That position he has filled continuously since in a most capable manner. He thoroughly understands his business in all its details, and his excellent knowledge, combined with fine managerial ability, makes his work most satisfactory to his employer.

In 1891, Mr. Morehouse was called upon to mourn the loss of his wife, who died on the 3d of July. He was married March 2, 1892, to Miss Jane Bangle, of Amherst, who was born at Stevens Point, Wis., September 23, 1848, and is a daughter of Philip and Polly (Long) Bangle, who were natives of Pennsylvania. In 1853, this family settled on a farm of 157 acres in Section 34, Amherst township, Portage county, becoming pioneers of this locality. The father is now deceased, but the mother is still living on the old homestead with her daughter, Melissa. She is noted throughout a wide extent of territory for her most wonderful memory. Her children were as follows: Melissa, at home; Stanton, deceased, who served in the Civil war; Charles, who was a soldier of the Union army and died during the war; Mrs. Morehouse; Ella, wife of Charles Griffiths, of Iowa, and Effie, wife of G. F. Hicks, of Clarksville, Iowa.

Mr. Morehouse always votes the Republican ticket, but has never been an office seeker. He is a man highly esteemed throughout the community, keeps himself well informed on all public questions, and is a pleasant and genial gentleman. In 1888, he visited the home of his childhood and his mother, who is now living with a daughter in Lebanon, N. H. The members of this family are cousins of the late Governor Morehouse of Missouri.

SAMUEL S. CHANDLER, JR. A pioneer, a patriot, a prominent and prosperous lumberman and farmer, and a popular politician and official, perhaps mark in rough outline the leading features of the life of Mr. Chandler. He hails from the State of New Hampshire, which has sent to the West so many of her favorite sons, having been born in Hanover, Grafton county, August 8, 1842.

Samuel S. Chandler, Sr., father of our subject, was born August 11, 1809, and was married to Sarah G. Colcord, who was born January 12, 1815, died February 20, 1872, at Iola, Waupaca Co., Wis. Their children were as follows: D. Augustus, born April 24, 1834, died at Iola, Wis., August 5, 1865; Mary C. (Dewey), born May 1, 1836, lives in Chicago; Sarah F. (Osborn), born March 27, 1838, died at Iola, Wis., May 12, 1868; William Henry H., born April 5, 1840, died in the army June 25, 1864, while serving in the Thirty-eighth Wis. V. I.; Samuel S., Jr., is the subject of this sketch; Harriet J. (Dorr), born May 24, 1845, lives in Antigo, Wis.; and Martha F. (Levissee), born February 14, 1848, lives in Clintonville, Wis. The father of this family is still hale and hearty, can read to some extent without the use of glasses, can shoot with rifle with any of the young men or boys, and can walk at least ten or fifteen miles per day.

The subject proper of these lines when but four years of age came with his father to Racine, Wis., three years later moving to Waupaca county, and consequently became familiar with the privations, as well as the pleasures, of pioneer life. From his earliest youth he has been very fond of hunting and other field sports, having been accustomed to handling a gun from the age of seven years, thereby becoming an expert in its use. He hunted all the game in the county, and one fall, when but thirteen years old, killed seven deer and one bear; one year he killed as many as nineteen deer. He also hunted bear, a number of those animals falling victims to his gun, and he still enjoys an occasional autumn trip to the woods, when time permits, to camp and hunt. He received his education in the common schools, on the farm and in the mill.

He had just passed his twentieth birthday when, August 12, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, Twenty-first Regiment Wis. V. I., which was attached to the army of the West, and served under Grant and Sherman in their memorable and resistless campaigns. He was erroneously reported wounded at the battle of Atlanta, and though frequently under fire his nearest approach to injury was at Bentonville, in the afternoon being hit by a ball so hard that at first he thought his leg must be badly injured, but on examination he found only a bruise on the knee, and later in the day was struck by a spent ball. At Nolensville, during the battle of Murfreesboro, he was, while sick, taken prisoner by Wheeler's cavalry, but was subsequently paroled. Promoted to sergeant for gallant service, he carried the colors of his regiment on the march of Sherman from Atlanta to the sea. Participating in the Grand Review at Washington, in 1865, Sergt. Chandler returned with his regiment to Wisconsin, and was discharged at Milwaukee June 17, 1865. During the ensuing winter he attended school, then for some fifteen years followed farming in summer and lumbering in winter in Wisconsin.

In November, 1868, Mr. Chandler was married to Ella E. McKenzie, a native of New York and daughter of John J. and Eunice (Baldwin) McKenzie, the former of whom, a cabinet maker by occupation, of Scotch descent by birth, migrated from Nova Scotia to Waupaca county, Wis., many years ago; the mother was a native of Batavia, N. Y. The children of Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie were John M., Phoebe G., Ella E., Adel, Julia and May. Both parents and Julia died in Waupaca. The next spring after his marriage Mr. Chandler purchased a farm in Iowa, which he tilled in summers, returning to the lumber regions of Wisconsin during the winters. From 1868-70 to the present time he has been quite extensively interested in locating lands and estimating timber, following this employment as well as farming and lumbering for about twenty years, and locating many thousand acres of land in Wisconsin, besides estimating some in Minnesota and Michigan during the past ten years. In 1873 he sold his Iowa farm and purchased his present home, consisting of 192 acres in Waupaca township, Waupaca Co., Wis., one and three-fourths miles from the business part of the city of Waupaca. He ranks among the leading and energetic farmers of his county, and justly prides himself upon his Red Poll cattle and fine buildings and property. An active and earnest Republican, he has been nominated for numerous local positions of trust, and has found time to serve his township and county in a number of offices; he was chairman of his town for three years; after filling the office of township treasurer for three years and assessor for one year, he was, in 1892, elected register of deeds for the county, a position for which he was renominated by acclamation in 1894. Socially Mr. Chandler is a member of the G. A. R., and of the A. O. U. W. His family consists of two children—Arthur M. and Clarence C.

REV. LOUIS THOM, the esteemed pastor of the Lutheran Church of Marshfield, Wood Co., is numbered among Wisconsin's native sons, born in Watertown, February 19, 1857. He comes of a family of German lineage, and his father, Carl Thom, was born in Germany, in 1818, and in that country married Friedericke Heise, the wedding taking place in 1849. Five years later they sailed for the New World, and in 1854 were numbered among the early settlers of Watertown, Wis., where the father supported his wife and son, their only child, by working at the mason's trade. The mother died in December, 1893, but the father is still living and makes his home with the subject of this review.

One of the most highly respected citizens of Marshfield is the present pastor of the Lutheran Church, whose consistent life and sterling worth commands the confidence and admiration of all. His early education was obtained in the public and private schools of his native city, which he attended until fourteen years of age, when he entered the Northwestern University of Watertown, a school conducted under the auspices of the Lutheran Church. There he completed the full course of seven years, being graduated from that institution in 1878, after which he attended the Lutheran Theological Seminary of Milwaukee, graduating from that school in February, 1882. He had determined to devote his life to the work of saving others and was thus fitted for his ministerial labors.

Mr. Thom was first married in April, 1882, the lady whom he wedded being Miss Rosa Weimer, who was born in La-Crosse, Wis., where she departed this life in July, 1885, leaving a daughter, Emma. Her parents, Valentine and Caroline (Splitter) Weimer, were both natives of Germany, and her father became one of the well-known business men of La Crosse. Both he and his wife are dead, but three of their children still survive them. Mr. Thom was a second time married on the 25th of July, 1889, when Miss Ida Kemnitz of Fort Howard, Wis., became his wife. She is a daughter of Theodore and Catherine (Simon) Kemnitz, who were born in Germany, crossing the Atlantic from that country to America. Her father, one of the most prominent business men of Fort Howard, is president of the furniture company of that city. Mrs. Thom is one of a family of nine children, as follows: Otilie, Ida, Ferdinand, Adelaide, Theodore, Edmond, Louis and Kate. Three children were given Mr. and Mrs. Thom—Theodore, Elsie and Karl, the daughter dying in infancy. The lady has been a true companion to her husband, and of great assistance to him in his work.

The first pastorate of Mr. Thom was at Eldorado, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., where he remained from 1882 until September, 1885, when he accepted a call from the Lutheran Church in Marshfield, over which he has since presided with mutual benefit to the congregation and community. When he located here there was a membership of only twenty-five, but now 135 families are on the church roll. An elegant brick edifice has been erected, a fine parsonage has been built, and in connection with the church there is a parochial school of ninety students. In the pulpit Mr. Thom is an earnest, fluent and forcible speaker, and in pastoral work he is a genial, social man who wins friends by being one. Not only in his own congregation, but throughout the community is he held in the highest esteem, and the ministry of the Lutheran Church numbers him among its able members.

FALBERT RUEDIGER was born June 26, 1843, in the town of Weisenfels, Saxony, Germany, and is a son of John and Concordia (Gebler) Ruediger. The father was born in the same town

October 30, 1807, the mother in the village of St. Michel, Saxony, February 24, 1805. The former was a nail manufacturer, as was his father before him. The latter was a native of that locality and there spent his entire life, dying at the age of sixty-seven. His children were Frank, Charles, John and Theresa. The father of our subject died in the town of his nativity at the age of eighty-seven, and his wife at the age of seventy-eight. Their children were Ernest, Augusta, Henrietta and F. Albert.

The last named acquired his education in the common schools, and when a mere boy sailed from Bremen, April 4, 1857, on the "Juverland," which after a stormy voyage of five weeks dropped anchor in the harbor of New York. A friend of his father, living in Greenbush, Wis., had promised to leave money with a certain man in New York to pay Mr. Ruediger's fare to this State, but he learned that the money had not been deposited as agreed upon. The gentleman with whom it was to be left then offered him a home until he could get word to his friends in Wisconsin, whom he wired and forthwith received the money. He reached Greenbush in due time, and spent two years in the employ of that gentleman, after which he began work as a farm hand in Oakfield, Wisconsin.

Mr. Ruediger enlisted November 26, 1862, in Company I, Thirty-first Wis. V. I., and during nearly three years' service was never absent a day. The regiment reached Columbus, Ky., March 3, 1863, where it did picket and provost duty and other service. Near Cairo, Ill., the following fall, they went into camp, and on October 5 left Nashville, marching to La Vergne, Tenn., where they did guard duty until the 25th, then marched to Murfreesboro, where the regiment went into winter quarters. On the 6th of June, 1864, the regiment started to Nashville, where it was assigned to post command and did guard and provost duty until the 16th of July, when they went by rail to Marietta, Ga., thence to Peach Tree Creek battle ground, where they joined the brigade on the evening of the 20th. Then came the attack on Atlanta, and for many days during the siege the company to which Mr. Ruediger belonged was constantly under fire. His division was assigned the important duty of guarding the railroad bridge across the Chattahoochee river, and the regiment was stationed within the fortifications of Atlanta, save when engaged in two foraging expeditions, until they started on the memorable March to the Sea. On the 9th of December, the progress of the vast column was stopped near Savannah by the enemy whose guns swept the road, across which fallen trees had been placed, making that route impassable. A swamp lay on one side and through this the Thirty-first Wisconsin was ordered to march and dislodge the enemy, which it did, its flag being the first to wave over Fort Harrison. During the attack on Savannah, it also did valiant service. Near that city they were obliged to go into camp on account of impassable roads caused by heavy rains, but on the 28th of January resumed the march and in Carolina engaged in many skirmishes and battles. On the 1st of March, 1865, the Thirty-first Wisconsin formed part of the advance column in the attack on Chesterfield, at Averysboro it was in the front line, and at Bentonville, with two other regiments, it was thrown forward without any support. They were attacked in front and on both flanks, but after retreating a quarter of a mile they reformed in battle line and three times repulsed the enemy. On the 4th of March, at Goldsboro, N. C., the Thirty-first was provided with new uniforms and equipments; on the 10th of April reached Raleigh, and were present at Johnston's surrender on the 26th of that month. Four days later they started on the homeward march, and on the 24th of May participated in the grand review in Washington, then going into camp three miles east of the city, where orders came to go to Louisville, Ky. They reached that place June 15, 1865, and there Mr. Ruediger was mustered out on the 8th of July. Three days later he reached Madison, Wis., and on the 20th was at his old home in Greenbush.

After his return from the service he worked on a farm and in a stove factory until September, when he determined to visit his parents and sailed from New York on the 21st of December, 1865. He had worn his army coat, and in Liverpool was sneered at, but the millionaire in his broadcloth felt not prouder than he in his faded blue blouse. On the "Sea Swallow" he sailed for Hamburg, and three days after reaching that place arrived at home. He had not written of his coming, and determined to surprise the family. They were all congregated in a room of the house, and a son-in-law, hearing a slight noise went out and found Mr. Ruediger, whom he took to be a burglar, dispatching his sister for a policeman. All this time our subject had not spoken, wishing to see if his mother would know him. At the approach of the officer she came out of the house, and notwithstanding the change in appearance recognized her son in an instant. His return was followed by general rejoicing in the family, and he continued in the Fatherland for seven years.

In August, 1873, Mr. Ruediger again came to America, and for six weeks was engaged in the fur trade, when his employer failed, and he then went to Del Norte, Colo., where he was employed as a clerk at $30 per month. Six months later he began prospecting, and with a complete miner's outfit started on foot for Elizabethtown, N. M. At Costilla, that State, he hired a Mexican to take his outfit over the mountains, and, when within ten miles of his destination, one of his horses broke its leg and he had to continue on foot over an unknown road, deeply covered with snow. He was accompanied by another prospector, and one would have to sleep while the other watched, to keep the wolves and wild animals away. Their food gave out, their money was gone, and, on reaching Elizabethtown, they could secure nothing to relieve their distressed condition. One day passed, and at noon of the next day, as Mr. Ruediger was crossing a bridge he found a little roll of money. Hastening to his hut he counted it and found the amount to be $8.30. He then secured some food, the first he had eaten in about three days. Just as he was ready to partake of the meal a stranger came up, begging for food, and the scanty supply was shared. With his remaining money he purchased provisions, and accompanied by this stranger started for Del Norte. The Rio Grande was much swollen, and they had to travel twenty-five miles before they could cross. On reaching their destination, Mr. Ruediger secured a position as clerk, but, after a few months, with two companions started out prospecting, and, two days later, located a mine, which they at once began to work. Our subject secured a third interest, and four weeks later purchased another third. They called the mine Frederick William, and operated it until their money gave out, when Mr. Ruediger returned to Del Norte and worked for a few months as a bartender.

While at Del Norte, he received a letter from parties in New York wishing him to look after their interests in Florida, and, leaving his mine in the care of his partner, he went to the Empire State, and thence to Florida, where for some time he was employed by John McDonald at $25 per month and board. He then engaged to manage the Fletcher grove at $50 per month, and continued with that employer until 1878. His mother's death occurred about this time, and he was forced to return to the Fatherland to look after his interests there. When his affairs were arranged at home, he went to Leipsic, Germany, where he engaged in the manufacture of shades and window curtains until 1882, when he sold out and sailed from Hamburg to New York on the steamer "Fresna." He started at once for Montana, but at Racine, Wis., met an old war comrade, Charles Schilling, who persuaded him to remain there, and he procured work in the J. I. Case factory. After two years thus passed, he was employed in a hotel for several years, then went to Plainfield, Wis., to visit friends, where for a year he engaged in the saloon business. Selling out, he spent two years in working at the painter's trade in Chicago.

During his stay there, Mr. Ruediger became acquainted with Christina Shaffer, and they were married. She is a daughter of Maximillian and Katrina (Miller) Shaffer, and was born in Phillipsburg, Baden, Germany, in 1859, coming to America in 1882, on the vessel, "Rotterdam."

She at once joined her brother in Chicago, and there worked as a domestic until her marriage. She belongs to the Catholic Church, and has become the mother of five children: Alma T., Hetwily C., Augusta E., Arthur E. and Charles C.

On his marriage, Mr. Ruediger purchased a farm of eighty-four acres in Section 35, Amherst township, Portage Co., Wis., and has since been successfully engaged in farming, the greater part of his land being under a high state of cultivation. In religious belief he is a Lutheran, and in political affiliations is a strong Republican. He possesses a jovial, genial disposition, and can relate many interesting incidents concerning his eventful career.

JAMES MORGAN, a representative hustling self-made man, and a representative citizen of Eagle River, Vilas county, is a native of England, born, in 1847, in the county of Sussex.

His father, also named James, and of the same nativity, married Sophia Carey, by whom he had ten children, three of whom died in infancy, the others being James, Mary, Peter, Alfred, Fannie, Caroline and Elizabeth, all still living in England (as are also the parents) except James (our subject), and Mary, who is in Australia. Our subject received a liberal public-school education in his native country, where, later, he worked in a gunpowder factory. In 1869 he paid a visit to America, and returning to England was married October 30, 1873, to Miss Anna Gander. The young couple soon afterward emigrating to the United States and to Wisconsin, making their first New-World home in Menominee, Mich., to which locality Mr. Morgan had already paid a visit. Here they remained till 1877, in which year they moved to Clintonville, where they followed farming until 1887. Mr. Morgan not making a success of this, sold out there and removed to Wittenberg, Shawano county, and established a grocery and bakery in which business he made a fair success during the four years he carried it on; but seeing better advantages at Eagle River, he sold out and removed thither, building his present fine store and bakery, where he conducts a lucrative business, keeping a large stock of goods, and discounting his own bills. Five children have been born to himself and wife, named respectively: Louis, Emma L., Alfred B., Perry L. and Arthur S., all at home.

In politics Mr. Morgan was formerly a Republican, but has been a Democrat since 1885. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M., and treasurer of his Lodge. The family are members of the Congregational Church.

MURRAY BROTHERS is the name of one of the leading farming firms of Ogdensburg, Waupaca county, the originators being John and George C. Murray, enterprising and successful farmers, and representatives of one of the leading families in Waupaca county.

Their father, A. B. Murray, was born in New Brunswick, May 12, 1834, and is a son of William and Elvira (Bunten) Murray. William Murray was born in County Down, Ireland, January 9, 1811, was reared on a farm, and at the age of twenty-one emigrated to New Brunswick, where the following year he was married to Miss Bunten, who was there born in 1815. William Murray followed farming in New Brunswick, and there his children were born, namely: A. B.; Asenath, wife of William Leach, of Oshkosh, Wis.; Mary, wife of T. H. Farrow, of Oshkosh; Robert, of Little Kaukauna, Brown Co., Wis.; Martha, wife of G. H. Buckstaff, of Oshkosh, ex-Senator from his district; John, of Oshkosh; Myra, wife of Samuel Chase, of Oshkosh; Charles, who died in New Brunswick, at about the age of seven years; and Elvira, who there died at about the age of seven months. The mother of this family died in July, 1853, and Mr. Murray later married Miss Martin, of New Brunswick, by whom he had the following children: Alice, who married a sea captain and lives in New Brunswick; Annie, on the old home farm; Florence a school teacher of Oshkosh; Clyde and William at home. The grandfather, William Murray, followed farming throughout his life and acquired a comfortable competence. He died in March, 1889, and his widow is still living on the old home place in New Brunswick.

A. B. Murray was reared on the farm, educated in the common schools, and October 1, 1855, left home for Oshkosh, Wis. He had saved the money to pay the expenses of the trip, and on his arrival he engaged in lumbering, which he had previously followed in New Brunswick. On July 4, 1861, he was married, at Ogdensburg, Wis., to Isabel Warren, who was born November 15, 1841, in Belfast, Me., a daughter of Mark and Abigail (Piper) Warren, who, in the fall of 1859, came with their family to Wisconsin. The father was a farmer and settled in St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county. In the fall of 1855, A. B. Murray was in Ogdensburg en route for the lumbering regions, but did not make his home in this city until after his marriage. He then purchased eighty acres of land in Section 24, St. Lawrence township, of which only two acres were cleared. He built the first house upon the place, and gave his time to the cultivation of his land during the summer, and in the winter worked in the lumber woods from the fall of 1855 until the spring of 1873, with the exception of the winter of 1864-5.

On October 23, 1864, A. B. Murray enlisted at Oshkosh, in Company C, Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., and with his company was stationed at Nashville until March, 1865, when he went to Paducah, Ky., doing guard duty at both places. He was there mustered out and was honorably discharged at Madison, Wis., August 28, 1865. He then resumed farm work, and added to his farm until at one time it comprised nearly three hundred acres in St. Lawrence and Union townships, but he has since divided with his children—John and George C. His wife died December 10, 1893, and was buried in Ogdensburg Park Cemetery. In April, 1891, Mr. Murray removed to Ogdensburg, where he has since lived retired. He is a Republican in politics, and has served as supervisor and school director for several years. He is a charter member of Chester A. Arthur Post, and the present Senior Vice-Commander. A well known citizen, he is highly esteemed for his sterling worth, and is the head of one of the most prosperous families of St. Lawrence township.

JOHN MURRAY, a member of the firm of Murray Brothers, was born on the farm in Section 24, St. Lawrence township, August 10, 1862, and acquired his education in a block school house, where he pursued his studies until nineteen years of age, when he spent two terms in the northern Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso. He spent several winters working in the lumber woods, but continued to make his home with his parents until his marriage. He worked for nine winters in the woods, and ran the Little Wolf and tributary rivers for two seasons. April 2, 1885, at New London, Wis., he married Miss Emma Axtell, who was born in St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, November 4, 1862, a daughter of William and Salina (Parks) Axtell. They now have three children: George Ray, Allen R. and Lina Belle. In his political views, John Murray is a Republican, and takes quite an active interest in political affairs. He has filled the office of supervisor, and for nine years was school treasurer. He owns one hundred and sixty acres of land, and is one of the well-to-do farmers of St. Lawrence township. An intelligent and esteemed citizen, he is wide-awake and progressive, and has a host of warm friends.

GEORGE C. MURRAY was born on the home farm March 22, 1864, and he also pursued his lessons in the old block school house, his first teacher being Miss Belle Richie. At the age of seventeen he went to the Normal School of Valparaiso, Ind., and by reading and observation he has made himself a well-informed man, and keeps thoroughly posted on the questions of the day. Working in the lumber woods through the winter season for nine years, he often had with him a team, and frequently made as high as $85 per month. For seven summers he ran on the Little Wolf river, and led a busy and industrious life, laying the foundation for future success. He is now the owner of a valuable farm of two hundred acres in St. Lawrence township, and is the most extensive farmer of his age in that locality. Like the other members of the family, he keeps his land under a high state of cultivation, the place is well improved, and all is neat and thrifty in appearance.

George C. Murray was married September 23, 1885, at Ogdensburg, to Miss Kittie S. Livermore, who was born in Section 28, of the same township, July 23, 1866. She engaged in school teaching at the early age of fifteen, and followed that profession for four years. The young couple began their domestic life on the home farm, where they resided until in December, 1893, when they removed to Ogdensburg. Their home is blessed by the presence of three children: Francena Isabell, born June 5, 1886; Reid F., born October 16, 1887, and Myra A., born November 12, 1893.

Supporting the men and measures of the Republican party, George Murray takes a deep interest in political affairs. He is a benevolent man, a friend of the poor and needy, and an advocate of all worthy interests which are calculated to promote the general welfare. The members of the Murray family are all highly respected citizens, and the sons, with their excellent business ability and capable management, will no doubt some day become very wealthy men.

OLAUS O. FOXEN, a representative farmer of New Hope township, Portage county, Wis., January 24, 1859, and is a son of Ole K. and Sigred Jacobson, who were natives of Norway. They were married in that country, and soon after, in the spring of 1849, sailed from Drammen to New York, whence they came direct to Dane county, Wis. There he purchased forty acres of wild land, which he cleared, building a home thereon, and making it his place of residence until June, 1861, when with his family, he removed to New Hope township, Portage county. Here he bought eighty acres of wild land, and erected a part of the dwelling which is now the home of Olaus O. Foxen, making it his place of abode until his death, which occurred March 29, 1877. His wife, who was born January 6, 1818, is now living with our subject. Of the children born to Ole K. and Sigred Jacobson, Jacob O., born September 14, 1851, is a banker at Amherst, Wis., married Mary Ann Jensen, by whom he has a daughter, Mabel; Cornelius O., born February 18, 1853, is a farmer in the Red River Valley, N. D., married Lena Selmer, and their children are Emma, Ella, Ada and Oscar; Christina S., born November 18, 1854, married M. D. Sitzler, a farmer at Stockton, and their children are John, Webster, Lillie, Lewis, Myrtle and Carrie W.; Ann E., born February 18, 1857, is the wife of F. O. Sitzler, a farmer of North Dakota, and their children are Nellie, Hiram and Dottie; Olaus O.; Sigvert T., born March 7, 1861, married Elvina M. Jensen, and with their children, Minerva, Edna and Belva, reside in Amherst, Wisconsin.

Our subject was educated in the district schools near his home, was reared on the farm and has followed agricultural pursuits throughout his life. On his father's death he succeeded to the ownership of the home farm, and today he is one of the most intelligent and scientific farmers of the county, owning a place whose neat and thrifty appearance well indicates his careful supervision. The fields are well tilled, and the improvements are such as are found upon a model farm of the 19th century.

Mr. Foxen was married in New Hope, Wis., June 29, 1882, by Rev. N. B. Berg, to Sina Rebecca Melun, who was born in New Hope, April 2, 1859, a daughter of Thory A. Melun, deceased. His children were: Lena, wife of O. Wrolstad, of Scandinavia, Wis.; Simon, who wedded Carrie Olstad; Nettie, the wife of John Oleson, of New Hope, Wis.; Thea, the wife of Charles Oleson, of Clark county, Wis.; and Olaf, who wedded Ida Oleson, and resides in New Hope. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Foxen: Oscar R., born March 17, 1883; Theodore J., born June 20, 1884; Henry S., born January 3, 1886; Stella M., born August 18, 1887; Nora, born September 16, 1889; Elma, born February 13, 1892; and Alice, born November 26, 1893. Mr. Foxen is now serving as clerk of the school board, having acceptably and creditably filled that office for many years. He is a staunch Republican in politics, and warmly advocates the principles of his party. He and his wife are members of the United Norwegian Church of New Hope, and he is a popular and honored citizen, whose upright life commands the respect of all.

L EONARD B. KABAT is successfully engaged in the manufacture of cigars in Tomahawk, Lincoln county, and is one of the leading citizens, a well-educated man, an interesting conversationalist, and one who has many friends in the community who esteem him highly for his genuine worth. The record of his life follows:

Mr. Kabat was born in the city of Genasen, Province of Posen, Germany, February 1, 1852. His father, Michael Kabat, was also born in that place, and there married Henrietta Jones, by whom he had six children, namely: Michael, Leopolt, Julia, Amelia, Leonard and Matilda. In 1854 he brought his family to America, going to Detroit, Mich., and within a few days after their arrival the father was killed. The mother then removed with the family to Watertown, Wis., and subsequently married Matthew Hauer. She is still living and by her second marriage had five children—Abelt, Theodore, Ferdinand, Rose and Henry.

Leonard Kabat came with his parents to America, and remained at home until thirteen years of age. He was then apprenticed to a shoemaker, but after six months his health failed and he was obliged to give up that undertaking. He was next apprenticed to Wignihorn Brothers, cigar makers, with whom he served for eighteen months, and at the age of fifteen years he went to La Crosse, Wis., where for two years and a half he followed his trade. He spent three months in St. Paul, Minn., then going to the East remained for a similar period in Buffalo, N. Y., and for six months in Westfield, Mass. During the next seventeen years he led a roving life, going from place to place. He is an expert cigar maker, and worked at his trade in every State east of the Mississippi, besides going to England in the spring of 1874, where he remained for four months.

In August, 1882, Mr. Kabat was united in marriage with Minnie G. Weller, who was born in Peoria, Ill. They now have two children—Leona M. and Aneta M. In 1887 the husband went to Minneapolis, where a year later he was joined by his family, and in that city he engaged in the manufacture of cigars for the firm of Winckey & Doerr, wholesale dealers, who employed eight men. He continued in their service six years, or until 1892, the year of his arrival in Tomahawk, where he built a residence and at once began the manufacture of cigars. He sells his goods in the surrounding towns, and the excellent quality insures a liberal patronage. He is an enterprising and industrious man, and whatever success he has achieved in life is entirely the result of his own well-directed efforts.

In politics Mr. Kabat was formerly a Republican and later became a Populist, but, in the spring of 1895, was elected on the Democratic ticket as alderman from the Third ward. In the fall of 1894 he was nominated by the Populists for the position of Representative, and made a thorough canvass of his district, declaring his principles and receiving a handsome support from many who were members of the old parties. He is a man well informed on all general subjects. His educational privileges were very meagre, but after he had attained the age of seventeen he realized how necessary is knowledge to a successful life, and began to read and study until he is now one of the most intelligent and best posted citizens of this locality. He has been especially interested in the study of astronomy, and in 1881 purchased a good telescope in order that he might further pursue his investigations.

E S. MIX, a farmer and prominent citizen of Lind township, Waupaca county, was born in the village of Waterford, Laporte Co., Ind., November 13, 1849, and is a son of Dr. Miles

Mix, who was born in the southwestern portion of New York, toward the vicinity of Erie, Pennsylvania.

Dr. Mix, who is a graduate of Racine College, Wis., married Louisa Wheeler at Laporte, Ind., by whom he had the following children: E. S., the eldest, of whom this sketch treats; Jane, now Mrs. Almon Otterburn, of North Dakota; Sarah, who married Amos Skillings, and died at Berlin, Wis., in the spring of 1884; Caroline, now Mrs. Clark Page, of the town of Berlin; Miles, Jr., a farmer of Green Lake county, Wis.; Horace, of Richland county, N. Dak.; and Wheeler, of Green Lake county, Wis. About 1850, Dr. and Mrs. Mix came to the vicinity of Delhi, Wis., in the Fox River Valley, and were among the pioneers of that locality, the Doctor being then a man of but limited means. They lived near Delhi only a short time, and then removed to Berlin, where he practiced medicine, and where he yet lives at the age of seventy-six. His wife was born in Vermont, was a member of the Baptist Church, and died in March, 1877. Dr. Mix is also a member of the Baptist Church. He has never been a politician, but has confined himself to his practice. He was a Whig, later a Republican, and is now a Prohibitionist.

E. S. Mix attended the common schools, and then the high school at Berlin, and remained at home the greater part of the time until nineteen years of age. Previous to this he had worked eighteen months in a drug store, his father conducting a drug store at Brandon, Fond du Lac county, and a branch store at Berlin. Failing health induced him to give up this work, and, as his father had a farm near Berlin, Mr. Mix began work on it, and there remained employed until the spring of 1884.

On September 28, 1872, in Lind township, Waupaca county, Mr. Mix was united in marriage with Miss Martha Gardner, who was born in the town of New Lyme, Ashtabula Co., Ohio, April 3, 1850; and they have had the following children: George R., who died in infancy; Nellie E., now a dress-maker in Berlin; Sarah L., who died at the age of sixteen; Mary E., who died in 1884; Winfield L., now at home; Mabeth, who died in infancy; Edna V., at home; Carrie J., at home, and her twin brother, Joseph C., deceased.

The parents of Mrs. Mix, Alonzo and Sarah A. (Pope) Gardner, came to Wisconsin, and located in Section 20, Lind township, Waupaca county, when Mrs. Mix was but a child, coming by boat to Gill's Landing, and then by team to Lind township, and made the first improvements on the place. At this time there was plenty of game, deer, bears, etc., in that locality. Mr. Gardner engaged in the manufacture of shingles, finding a market in Berlin. Their children were: Llewellyn, now deceased; Winfield, who was a soldier in the Fourth Wisconsin; Ida E., deceased; Sarah, living in the town of Dayton, Waupaca Co., Wis.; Hattie, deceased; Martha; Ruth, deceased; and Ada, living at Cable, Wis. The father, Alonzo Gardner, was born in Buffalo, N. Y., November 6, 1810, and in early life was a sailor. He built the house in which our subject now resides. Mr. Gardner died February 26, 1891, at the age of eighty-four years, and was buried in Lind township. He was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church (as is his widow), was a Republican in politics, and later a Prohibitionist. Mrs. Gardner was born in Vermont, July 31, 1817, is a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and since her husband's death has been living with her son-in-law, Mr. Mix.

After his marriage Mr. Mix went to house-keeping on a farm which his father had, near Berlin, and lived there till the spring of 1884, as noted in a preceding paragraph. Leaving there in March, he came to Lind township, and has since resided here, in Section 20, engaged in farming, and for five years worked at threshing. In his political affiliations he was formerly a Republican, but is now a Prohibitionist. He has served as pathmaster, and was for three years treasurer of the township. In the spring of 1890 he was elected chairman of the township, and re-elected in 1894. He did not announce himself, but the office was tendered to him, as was the office of treasurer, which he was urged to accept. He is one of the political leaders of Lind township.

and that he is popular is shown by the fact that he supplanted an old citizen of the township as chairman, without even asking for the office. He is a well-known and prosperous man, and both he and his wife are members of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

WE. S. JONES. No man in Waupaca county is probably more worthy of representation in this work than the gentleman whose name introduces this record. He has been identified with the agricultural interests of this county from an early day, and now makes his home on his fine farm of one hundred and fifteen acres in Section 19, Helvetia township. The place is one of the best farms in this section of the country, and indicates in its appointments the supervision of a man of intelligence and sound judgment.

Mr. Jones was born at Trenton, Oneida Co., N. Y., in September, 1832, and is a son of Robert and Sophia (Evans) Jones, the former also a native of Oneida county, N. Y., where his death occurred when his son was quite young. In the family were six children, two sons and four daughters. At the age of seventeen years, our subject removed to Granville, Licking Co., Ohio. His mother died in Wisconsin, at the home of her daughter in Portage county, when past the age of sixty years. While in Licking county Mr. Jones was in the employ of Salisbury & Pond, driving a team for which he received $8 per month. He hauled whiskey and pork barrels, provisions, rakes, cradles, etc., to the surrounding towns before the railroads had been completed. He there remained three years and a half when he was joined by his brother John, who was more than two years his junior, and they emigrated to Coles county, Ill., driving the entire distance. Our subject there secured work on a farm, where he spent one summer, when he went to Oshkosh, Wis., but as he failed to find work in that city, he hired with C. J. Lewis, of Fond du Lac, to repair a sawmill at Shawano, Wis., whence he went by boat to New London, and then by an Indian trail the remainder of the distance. No wagon roads led through the country, and there were only three houses between New London and Shawano. At the latter place he remained a few months, when he returned to Illinois for a short time, but later came to Weyauwega, Waupaca county, where he was employed for a time as a cooper. On leaving that city he removed to Iola, the same county, where he worked at the carpenter's trade.

At Weyauwega, Mr. Jones had bought a lot and erected on it a small house, to which he took his bride. He was married in that city to Morilla Hunt, a native of New York, and to them a daughter was born—May, now Mrs. Eugene Brazelton, of Hortonville, Wis. The mother died after the removal to Iola. On October 6, 1860, at that place, Mr. Jones wedded Miss Minerva Hopkins, who was born in New Milford, Pa., December 7, 1843, and is a daughter of William and Salom (Adams) Hopkins, the former a native of Rhode Island and the latter of Connecticut. Her parents later removed to Illinois, where her father died, after which her mother became the wife of Anthony Stearns, who came to Iola about 1857. Mrs. Jones received an excellent education, having attended the high school of Amboy, Ill., after which she taught for five terms, receiving $6 per month and boarding around among the scholars. She was engaged in teaching for three terms in District No. 2, Iola township, Waupaca county. By her marriage she has become the mother of five children—Josephus B., a farmer of Iola township; Edith C., who became the wife of Halver Amberson and died in Stetsonville, Wis.; Effie, at home; Martha, a school teacher; and Lucy, at home.

In December, 1863, our subject became a member of Company K, Tenth Wis. V. I., under Captain Roby, who was then commander of the regiment, which had been terribly slaughtered, having only thirty-five men at the time of Mr. Jones' enlistment at Fond du Lac, Wis. They then went to Madison and were put in charge of three hundred conscripts, after which they proceeded to Chattanooga. The first engagement in which Mr. Jones participated was at Buzzard's Roost. In the spring of 1864, he was taken ill and sent to the hospital at Nashville, where he recovered consciousness. The authorities wished to send him home, to which he objected, and he did patrol and picket duty at Murfreesboro until the fall of 1864, when he rejoined his regiment at Marietta, Ga., which only had a few members remaining, and was later consolidated with the Twenty-first Wis. V. I. At Savannah he was detailed to go to the first division hospital of the 14th Army Corps as carpenter, which trade he followed during the remainder of the campaign. After participating in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C., he proceeded to Louisville, Ky., where he was discharged August 14, 1865, from the Third Wis. V. I., to which he had been transferred. He sustained his worst injuries on the forced march to Richmond, Va., after the conflict had closed.

Soon after his second marriage our subject had removed to a tract of unimproved land in Section 18, Helvetia township, and their home consisted of a little shanty twelve feet square. They had to set one bureau on top of another in order to have any room in their small house, but in the fall of 1863 they removed to the village of Iola, where Mr. Jones returned at the close of the war. During his absence his wife was left in a destitute condition; cut off from all communications with her husband, she was compelled to work at various kinds of labor, such as a man would usually do in order to support the family. She deserves great credit for her labors, and it was often the woman who remained at home who suffered most during that great struggle. For two years Mr. Jones endeavored to work at his trade of carpentering in Iola, but on account of his injuries was forced to give it up. He then removed to Section 19, Helvetia township, where he purchased seventy-five acres of land from Joseph Keating, and has since made that place his home, though he has added to his original tract until he now has one hundred and fifteen acres. All the buildings upon the place stand as monuments to his thrift and enterprise, having been erected since his residence there. Mr. Jones has ever been a patriotic and loyal citizen, serving his country faithfully in days of peace as well as on southern battlefields, where he was one of the boys in blue and so valiantly aided in the defense of the stars and stripes. As an honest man and worthy citizen he deserves the respect and esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens. In politics he is a Republican, intelligently supporting his party by voice and vote, and before the war was ever a stanch Abolitionist. For a few years he has been supervisor of his township, and has held a number of offices in the school district.

STILLMAN H. SAWYER is not only one of the best-known citizens of Belmont township, but also has a wide acquaintance throughout Portage county, and is held in high esteem by a large circle of friends. A native of Maine, he was born in Gardiner, Columbia county, on the Kennebec river, November 2, 1819, and is a son of James and Octavie (Libby) Sawyer. The father was a farmer, and died when Stillman was only twelve years of age, leaving a large family, of which our subject was the seventh child and third son. He attended the common schools of his native county, and remained upon the home farm until fifteen years of age, when he went to live with a brother-in-law in Bangor, Maine, there continuing his studies. He also learned saddlery and trunk making, and was employed along that line as a journeyman for some time.

In the fall of 1845, at Bangor, Mr. Sawyer married Lucy Fogg, who was born in that city, in 1826, daughter of Greenleaf Fogg, a commission merchant in the lumber business. Soon after their marriage they removed to Ellsworth, Hancock Co., Maine, where Mr. Sawyer opened a shop. There his wife died in the fall of 1851, leaving four children: Georgiana, now Mrs. Royal M. Jones, of Wausau, Wis.; Edla, wife of George W. Rogers, of Winchester, Winnebago Co., Wis.; Charles M., who is living in Rochester, Minn.; and Frederick, of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

son Fred was adopted by a farmer, and went to California, around Cape Horn, on the brig, "Page," that was built for passenger service between New York and New Orleans. On the voyage they encountered "head winds," but after six months and six days landed at San Francisco. Our subject had intended working at his trade, but could find nothing to do there, so went to Stockton, Cal., thence to the mines in Tuolumne county, and along the river of that name. He began mining with some of the party which came with him from Maine, but signally failed in that work. He then hired as a cook in a restaurant at $80 per month, and, though he had had no previous experience in that line, succeeded. Later he was engaged in prospecting near Sonora, Cal., and in carrying on a shop at that place until his return to the East in August, 1855. He made the journey by the way of the Panama and Aspinwall route, going on the vessel, "Golden Gate," to the latter place and thence on the ship, "George Law," to New York, reaching Bangor in September.

Deciding to try his fortune in Wisconsin, Mr. Sawyer went by rail to Chicago, by boat to Sheboygan, then drove across the country to Fond du Lac, by boat to Gill's Landing, by team to Waupaca, and on to Portage county, where he purchased, in Section 11, Belmont township, a tract of land. He afterward bought eighty acres in Section 12, his present farm. He then returned to Bangor, Maine, and wedded Mary M. Fogg, a sister of his first wife, and brought her and his children to the new home. Here the family circle was increased by the birth of the following children: Herbert A., of Stevens Point, Wis.; Clarence A., a carpenter; D. W., of Belmont township; Luella, wife of William Morey, of Belmont, Wis.; and Irvin, who follows carpentering. Mrs. Sawyer died in 1880, and was buried in Belmont township. She held membership with the Methodist Church, and was a most estimable lady, whose loss awakened deep regret throughout the community. Mr. Sawyer gave the land on which to build the Methodist Church of East Belmont township. He has at different times been an extensive land owner, and now has a valuable tract of 240 acres.

The political views of our subject are in harmony with Republican principles. At a meeting held in Lanark township for the purpose of organizing Belmont township, he was chosen as the first clerk of the township, and as such served several years. In January, 1867, he became register of deeds of Portage county, and served for two terms of two years each. In 1871 he was appointed deputy county treasurer, and served until elected to the office of treasurer in the fall of 1880, after which he was twice re-elected, acceptably filling the position for six years. His frequent re-election was the highest testimonial of his fidelity to duty that could be given, and it also manifested his personal popularity and the confidence reposed in him.

Mr. Sawyer went to the defense of the Union, December 10, 1861, enlisting at Plover. He served as recruiting sergeant of Company E, Eighteenth Wis. V. I., and after the company was organized for duty in Milwaukee, it went to St. Louis, March 29, 1862, thence down the river to Pittsburg Landing, and participated in that battle which was its first engagement. After the battle he was the highest in rank left in the company, and commanded it until the 4th of July. He participated in a number of important engagements prior to November, 1863, when he was sent back to Wisconsin as recruiting sergeant. In April, 1864, he went to Madison, then joined his regiment at Huntsville, Ala., continuing with it until October, 1864, when he was taken prisoner with three companies who were captured by the rebels when guarding a bridge a mile south of Altoona Pass. He was sent to Milan, Ga., and after a captivity of forty days was taken to Savannah, where he was exchanged in November, 1864. He was then in the hospital at Annapolis, Md., until December 1, when he was granted a thirty-days' furlough and returned home. On the 22d of January, 1865, he was honorably discharged at Milwaukee. He has long been recognized as one of the leading and influential citizens of the community in which he now makes his home, and in his declining years he is quietly living a retired life on the old homestead, surrounded by many warm friends and acquaintances.

ERNST MAAS was born in Prussia, Germany, July 11, 1841, and is a son of John and Charlotte (Silbersdorf) Maas. The father was an architect and followed that business for fifty years. In 1851, accompanied by his family, he sailed for America, landing at New York, and settled near Lockport in the Empire State, where they lived for three and a half years, during which time the father was engaged in day labor. He then started West, traveling by boat to Sheboygan, Wis., by wagon to Fond du Lac, by boat to Menasha and by team to New London. In that locality he purchased 200 acres of wild land. Two of his sons had previously come to this State and located the farm; also erected a log cabin. The work of clearing was at once begun, and was accomplished mostly with axe and grub hoe. Mr. Maas continued farming throughout his remaining days, and his land became a valuable, productive tract. His death occurred at the age of eighty-eight, and his wife passed away at the age of seventy-two. Nine children were born to John and Charlotte (Silbersdorf) Maas, namely: Frederick, Charles, Christian, Caroline, William, Henrietta, Wilhelmine, Ernst and Franz. Five of the number are living.

Amid the wild scenes of the frontier Ernst Maas was reared and educated, and an important event in his life was his enlistment in the Union army January 1, 1862, as a member of Company I, Twelfth Wisconsin Battery, which was mustered into service at Milwaukee, and sent thence to Jefferson Barracks. He participated in the battles of Island No. 10 and Fort Pillow, and reached Shiloh after the engagement. Being taken ill he was confined in the hospital at Jefferson Barracks for about three months, and was discharged on account of disability June 22, 1862. He returned to his home, but as soon as he had recovered, he re-enlisted on March 18th, 1864, in Company I, Seventeenth Regiment, Wis. V. I., and, after being mustered in at Green Bay, Wis., was sent to Madison, and thence to Cairo, Ill., where the Seventeenth Corps was reorganized. With that command he went to Huntsville, then to Big Shanty, to Marietta and to Atlanta, and after a three-weeks' illness again joined his regiment at Atlanta, and went with Sherman on the celebrated March to the Sea. The army then went to Beaufort, N. C., to Columbia, S. C., to Goldsboro and to Raleigh, N. C., to Fredericksburg, to Richmond and to Petersburg, Va., and participated in the grand review in Washington. Mr. Maas then went with his command to Madison, where he was honorably discharged July 14, 1865, and returned at once to New London, Wisconsin.

A short time after his return Mr. Maas married Miss Amanda Kittner, daughter of Ferdinand and Caroline (Schultz) Kittner, who were of German lineage and came to Wisconsin in 1859. Her mother is now living with her children in Illinois, but her father died in 1872. Ten children graced the union of our subject and his estimable wife: Albert, Anna, Minnie, Ida, William, Amos, Martha, Benjamin, Ollie and Louie.

On his marriage Mr. Maas purchased a farm, but soon sold it and removed to Bovina, Outagamie county, Wis., where he again bought land and immediately began its cultivation. He continued its improvement until 1875, when he sold out and removed to Dupont township, Waupaca county, purchasing 120 acres of land in Sections 28 and 29. He could not drive to his farm, as no road had been cut, and, leaving his team with H. H. Quimby, he proceeded to it, a distance of three and a half miles, on foot. He built a log cabin 16 x 22 feet, and in that primitive home the family lived until 1888, when it was replaced by their present frame residence. Today seventy acres of the farm is under cultivation, and many good improvements upon the place stand as monuments to his thrift and enterprise. Mr. Maas has led a busy and useful life, and is now the possessor of a comfortable competency in reward for his labors. The Republican party finds in him a stalwart advocate, and the Grand Army Post of Clintonville, Wis., numbers him among its leading and influential members. Himself and wife are members of the Seventh Day Adventist Church.

ALFRED VINTON GEARHART, superintendent of the Water-works Department at Wausau, and one of the most active and enterprising young business men of that city, was born in Plainfield, Waushara county, March 22, 1858, son of Charles H. and Louisa A. (Tabor) Gearhart, now residents of Chelsea, Taylor Co., Wis., where the father is engaged in the lumber and hotel businesses.

Charles H. Gearhart is a native of Livingston county, N. Y., but his father and grandfather were both born in Pennsylvania. Louisa, wife of Charles H., was also born in Livingston county, N. Y. Her grandparents were natives of Maine, and were relatives of the noted Rev. Dr. Vinton. To Charles H. and Louisa Gearhart six sons were born, as follows: Dennis, deceased at the age of twenty-one years; Frank, who died in infancy; George L., a Wisconsin Central railroad engineer, killed in a train collision at Marshfield, May 29, 1894; Albertus A., of Chelsea, proprietor of a saw-mill; Alfred Vinton; and Nathaniel O., a conductor on the Northern Division, Wisconsin Central railroad. The father served for three years during the Rebellion in the Sixteenth Wisconsin Battery of Artillery, and while in service contracted disabilities which have since unfitted him for active life.

Alfred V. Gearhart was reared on his father's farm in Almond township, Portage county, until he had reached the age of twelve years. He then returned to Plainfield with his parents, who for several years conducted a hotel at that village, and in 1874 removed to Chelsea, Taylor Co., Wis. Alfred was educated in the public schools of Portage, Waushara and Taylor counties. In 1878, at the age of twenty years, he was appointed station agent of the Wisconsin Central railroad at Auburndale. He was thence transferred to Ledgeville, Brown county. A year later he entered the train-dispatcher's office at Milwaukee, where he remained a year. Mr. Gearhart was then appointed assistant dispatcher at Stevens Point. He was thence transferred to station work at Colby, Westboro and Junction City, respectively, and in 1881 he accepted a position as assistant station agent at Wausau, for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, and for the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western road. Two years later he was appointed manager for the Western Union Telegraph Company in Wausau, and he filled that position eleven years. He resigned to accept the superintendency of the Water-works Department, a position he now fills.

On December 31, 1884, Mr. Gearhart was married to Miss Ada I. Barnum, daughter of Mark H. and Phœbe Barnum. Mr. Barnum is editor of the Torch of Liberty. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gearhart, Louise and Marcus Vinton. Mr. Gearhart is senior warden of Forest Lodge No. 130, F. & A. M. He is a member of Wausau Chapter No. 51, and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. The family attend the Universalist Church, and in politics Mr. Gearhart is a Republican.

REV. JACOB VAN RENSSELAER HUGHES, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Merrill, Lincoln county, was born September 11, 1844, at Cape May, N. J., where, in 1689, Humphrey Hughes, the first of the family to come from Wales, made a settlement—indeed four brothers came to America at the same time, Humphrey being one of them.

Jacob Hughes (a farmer), great-grandfather of our subject, was born in 1711, and died in 1773; married Priscilla Hughes, who was born in 1710, and died in 1758. Jacob Hughes, grandfather of our subject, was born Aug. 9, 1746, and died March 20, 1796; married Ann Lawrence, who was born in August, 1753, daughter of Rev. Daniel Lawrence, and after the death of Jacob Hughes she married Jeremiah Edwards; she died November 27, 1817. James R. Hughes, her youngest son by her first husband, was born in Cape May county, N. J., in 1791, and was married January 9, 1815, to Eliza Eldridge, who was born at Cold Springs, N. J., July 6, 1791. Twelve children were born to this union, named respectively: Ann L., Jeremiah E., Daniel L., Joseph L., William G., Harriet N., James P., Hannah E., Mary B., Emma M., Amelia F. and Jacob Van Rensselaer. Three of the sons—Daniel L., James P. and Jacob Van R.—are ministers of the Gospel; and three of the daughters are married to ministers, to wit: Harriet N., to Rev. C. M. Oakley; Emma M., to Rev. John S. Roberts, who has been a missionary to China for the past ten years; and Amelia F., to Rev. John Kershaw, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The father, though devoting the greater part of his life to agricultural pursuits, was a well-educated man, possessed of a thorough academic education, and taught school many years.

The subject proper of this sketch attended school at Cape May, N. J., until he was eleven years of age, and then studied at Edgehill School, Princeton, N. J., under the preceptorship of his brother James, who was one of the professors of that institution. While there he united with the First Presbyterian Church, was graduated at Princeton (N. J.) College in 1867, and then entered the Theological Seminary at the same place, graduating from there in 1870, in the spring of which year he was licensed and ordained to preach by the Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick, N. J. Mr. Hughes then taught in Bellefonte (Penn.) Academy, from April, 1870, till June, 1873. His first charge as pastor was at Unionville, Center Co., Penn., where he was installed in 1874, remaining there about five years, or until 1878, when he accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church at Kilbourn City, Columbia Co., Wis. Here he continued three years, at the end of which time, in 1881, his health failing him, Mr. Hughes resigned the charge, and was looking about him for other fields of labor when his friends prevailed upon him to accept the postmastership of Kilbourn City, which was open to him, and he held the incumbency over four years. Having by this time regained his health, he received a call to a Presbyterian Church at Shawano, Wis., which he accepted, and here he labored in the vineyard from 1886 till October, 1894, the time of his coming to Merrill to fill the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church at that place.

Rev. Hughes has been twice married: First time July 27, 1870, to Miss Elizabeth C. McGinnis, daughter of Rev. J. Y. McGinnis, of Shade Gap, Penn., by which union there were four children: Lyda, Mary F., Harold D. and Alice M., the first named dying in infancy. The mother of these died May 11, 1888, a true Christian woman, greatly beloved by all who knew her. On September 17, 1891, Mr. Hughes was married in New Jersey to Miss Mary C. Ayres, a native of that State, born in December, 1858, daughter of Samuel and Margaret E. (Vail) Ayres, well-to-do farming people, also of New Jersey birth, who were the parents of four children: Frederick V., Mary C., Emma L. and Arthur. The parents are yet living. Mr. Ayres was twice married, and by his first wife had two children: Henry C. and Jane L. The Ayres family trace their ancestry as far back as 1637, to John Ayer (for so the name was then spelled), who came in that year from (probably) Nottinghamshire, England, to Newbury, Mass., and of his nine children all except Obadiah remained in New England, where they have numerous descendants. Obadiah Ayer married Hannah Pike, and in 1669-70 moved to Woodbridge, N. J.; he also had nine children, the fourth of whom was named Obadiah. This Obadiah had ten children, all born at the old homestead near Strawberry Hill; Robert, the seventh of these, had seven children, of whom, Frazee, the eldest child, had five children. Ellis, the first born of these five, had eleven children, and Ezra, the seventh child, had ten children, one of whom is Samuel Ayres, the father of Mrs. Jacob V. Hughes. The Vail family trace their ancestry in England as far back as 1630; those of them in this country were farmers in New Jersey, and it is known that several skirmishes during the Revolutionary struggle were fought on their farm. By his second marriage Mr. Hughes has two children: Margaret Vail Hughes and Arthur V. Our subject is a genial, whole-souled, popular man, broad and charitable in his views, and, withal, a thorough Christian gentleman.

THOMAS COURT, an influential, successful and self-made farmer of Dayton township, Waupaca county, has lived an eventful life full of stirring incidents, and compassing its boundaries a goodly portion of the globe.

The son of an English brick maker, he was born May 5, 1839, in Milton, County of Kent, England. When ten years old his father died leaving the widow and her two sons—Thomas and George—in circumstances so limited that the two lads were in early life thrown upon the world. "Tom" was a venturesome boy, and when fifteen years old he was apprenticed on the brig "Active," which was engaged in the coal trade between Whitstable, Kent, and the northern part of England, our subject's first voyage being between Whitstable and Newcastle, at which latter place the vessel was loaded with gas coal for New York. From the latter port she sailed to Wilmington, N. C., where she was loaded with turpentine, with which she sailed to Hull, England, where she discharged her cargo and then returned to Whitstable, after that making a few coasting trips. All this time young "Tom" Court was serving on her in the capacity of cabin boy, but received such severe treatment that he and another boy on the ship decided to run away from the vessel, so one evening they put their plans into execution by starting off on foot for the great city of London, their intention being, when they got there, to ship on board some vessel on which they might run a chance of receiving better fare and less harsh treatment; but when they had tramped about forty miles on their journey they were unfortunately caught and sent back to their ship at Whitstable, the skipper having discovered their absence and telegraphed ahead of them. The next six months was a hard time for the poor boys, for they were subjected to still worse treatment than before, and

"Tom," driven to desperation, resolved to make one more attempt to escape from such tyranny—this time alone—an opportunity presenting itself just about six months after his first effort, while the vessel, the "Active," was lying at Swansea, Wales. "Tom" slipped away quietly, and escaping from the ship walked forty miles to Cardiff. This was the "blackest night" Mr. Court says he ever experienced—without money, without friends, and with the constant dread of again being captured and taken back to the ship, there to suffer a repetition of his hardships. It was a dismal trip indeed for the plucky boy; but he ultimately arrived safely at Cardiff, where he at once found employment at loading railroad iron on the ship "John Bunyan." When this vessel was all ready for sea, Mr. Court shipped aboard her in the capacity of "boy before the mast," and helped to navigate her to New York, at which port he shipped on the United States brig "Zachary," bound for the West Indies. In this vessel he made several trips, making in all five ports in Cuba and five in San Domingo. He next shipped at New York, on a vessel bound for several South American ports, including Enanam and Para, but after this voyage, and on arriving at New York, he left the vessel for a berth on the bark "Montauk," bound from New York to Galveston, Texas, and return. On this trip, while returning to New York and when off Cape Hatteras, they for seventeen days experienced such severely cold and stormy weather that seven of the crew were frozen so badly in the hands and feet as to be rendered helpless, only four able-bodied seamen, including our subject, being left to assist the captain in handling the vessel; after much hardship, however, they succeeded in navigating her as far as the quarantine point at the entrance to New York Bay. Here they found the bay so full of ice that all small or light steam vessels, including tugs, were laid up, and a steamboat of the larger class had to be employed to tow the "Montauk" from quarantine to the New York wharfs, for which service the vessel owners had to pay one thousand dollars. She arrived January 28, 1858, in the depth of a most severe winter, the ice in the East river being frozen so hard that heavily-laden teams were enabled to cross on it between New York and Brooklyn. Mr. Court passed between eight and nine years as boy and able seaman, during which period he made two trips to England, one to Hamburg, Germany, one to Nova Scotia, passing through the Bay of Fundy, also, during the same time, putting in three or four months on the Erie canal, which probably was the first step toward his coming to and finally settling in the West. For two seasons he followed the lakes in the summer, in winter time returning to New York, whence he made voyages to the West Indies—thus enjoying summer weather the year round. While on one of his lake voyages, and business being dull, he concluded to try his hand in the harvest field, so proceeding to Walworth county, Wis., he readily found employment at that work there. At that time and place he also met the lady who afterward became his wife—"met by chance, the usual way." The following winter was passed in Milwaukee, and in the spring he shipped as a sailor on the brig "Twilight," but he did not long remain with her for, on July 4, 1862, we again find him in Walworth county, working as a farm hand, which occupation of course was not what brought him there; it was "metal more attractive," no doubt.

An Arcadian life such as that, however, did not seem to satisfy Mr. Court's restless disposition. The Civil war being now in full blast, he had to prove his loyalty to his adopted country by enlisting at Lyons, Walworth county, August 14, 1862, in Company C, Twenty-second Wis. V. I., and on the twenty-sixth of the same month he was married at Racine to Miss Adeline C. Lewis—the "sweetheart" he had met in Walworth county. His regiment being ordered to Covington, Ky., it was then equipped for active service, which it soon saw, for during the winter of 1862-63 it was operating against Gen. John Morgan, and in the spring of 1863 embarked on transports at Louisville, Ky., bound for Nashville, Tenn., arriving at Fort Donelson the morning after the second battle at that place. From Nashville they were ordered to Franklin, Tenn., reaching that point in time to take part in the battle of Spring Hill, where half the regiment was captured (Mr. Court, being on detail duty at the time, escaped capture), the remainder of the Twenty-second retiring to Brentwood, Tenn. On the following Sunday our subject was detailed with four others to take as many (five) teams and wagons to Franklin, Tenn., where he was detained by the officer in charge, and so again escaped falling into the hands of the Confederates, as the remainder of the regiment was captured by Forrest and VanDorn at Brentwood, the same week. During the following six months Mr. Court was detailed as teamster, and kept with the ammunition train as far as Chattanooga, Tenn., when, his regiment having in the meantime been exchanged, he rejoined it at Murfreesboro, where it became embodied with Hooker's Twentieth Army Corps. Mr. Court took active part in the remainder of the campaign, participating in the battles of Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek, at which latter he was severely wounded in the left shoulder by a gunshot, the event occurring at 2:30 p. m., July 20, 1864, in consequence of which he was sent to the field hospital, and then to Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn. After a furlough home in Walworth county, Wis., he returned to Nashville, and was orderly for Quartermaster Hubbs at Gen. Rousseau's headquarters, the regiment having gone with Sherman on his famous march to the sea. He participated in the fight at Nashville December 15 and 16, 1864, remained in that vicinity until the close of the war, and was discharged at Madison, Wis., June 14, 1865, after thirty-four months of service.

Mr. Court as already stated had been married to Adeline C. Lewis, who was born near Middlebury, Vt., October 4, 1844. They began housekeeping in Lyons township, Walworth county, on rented land, and in the fall of 1867 went to Milwaukee, where he was engaged in teaming through the winter, and in the following spring they removed to Manitowoc. In the fall of 1869 Mr. Court and a partner took a lumbering contract in Glenmore township, Brown county, and here in Section 26 he bought some timber land and settled. In the spring of 1883 he removed to Dayton township, Waupaca county, for a few months living on a rented farm, but in June of the same year he bought 180 acres of unimproved land in Sections 14 and 15, that township; the improvements he has made here are substantial well-constructed buildings. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Court consists of George F., a farmer of Dayton township; Romelia J., wife of Oscar Gotham, of the same township; Burtis C.; Thomas Edgar, and Frank W., at home. In Glenmore Mr. Court was a justice of the peace for some seven years. He has been a delegate to many county Republican conventions, and was a delegate to the Congressional Convention at Stevens Point in 1894, which nominated E. S. Minor for Congress. Socially, he is a member of the R. A. M., at Waupaca, Chapter 39, and of Lodge No. 153, F. & A. M.; also a member of Garfield Post, No. 21, G. A. R. Mrs. Court is serving her second year as president of Waupaca Relief Corps No. 93, auxiliary to Garfield Post. She is also a member of the M. E. Church at Parfreyville, and among the foremost in church work.

Mr. Court has, by an extensive course of reading, and by observation and travel, more than overcome the educational disadvantages under which he labored in his youth. He is one of the best informed men of the township, and an authority upon many matters of vital interest to the farmer. His sympathies and efforts can be enlisted in any good movement for the general welfare. He is blessed with an intelligent and kind-hearted wife, possessed of an excellent farm, and endowed with a ripe and generous judgment. His influence is wide and his friends are innumerable.

CHAUNCEY K. RICHARDSON is classed among the leading and influential citizens of Spencer, Wood county, where he has now made his home for twenty years. He is a native of Canada, born February 18, 1832, in Compton, Province of Quebec, and is a son of Daniel C. Richardson, who was born in Plymouth, N. H., in 1793. The grandfather, David Richardson, who was born in 1764, was a farmer by occupation, and he and his father, Zebediah Richardson, served as soldiers during the Revolutionary war.

When but eight years of age the father of our subject removed with his parents to Canada, where he grew to manhood and there married Olive Huntington, a native of Connecticut, born in December, 1801. They had a family of five children, one of whom died in infancy; those still living are Chauncey K., Emma H., Louisa O. and David F. The father was drafted into the British army in the war of 1812, and participated in the battle of Plattsburg. He was a miller by occupation, owning a grist and saw mill, which he operated for many years. His death occurred in Canada in 1845, his wife surviving him several years, and dying in January, 1876. After the death of Mr. Richardson she married Benjamin Hitchcock.

The subject proper of this sketch was but thirteen years of age when his father died, and as his mother remarried two years later, he started out in life for himself. He had received a substantial education in the schools of his native country, and at the age of eighteen began teaching. In the spring of 1850 he came to Wisconsin, locating in Delton, where he taught school and also engaged in lumbering, there residing for eleven years, making his home with his uncle, L. Huntington, a brother of his mother. In September, 1861, Mr. Richardson joined "the boys in blue," becoming a member of Company E, Twelfth Wis. V. I., commanded by Col. George E. Bryant. He served for a year and a half, being discharged in March, 1863, with the rank of sergeant. He belonged to the Western army, and valiantly aided in the defense of his adopted country. After his return to Wisconsin, Mr. Richardson continued teaching during the winter months, while in the summer he was employed in mills, but later engaged in farming in Sauk county, Wis., at which occupation he remained four years. In November, 1875, he came to Spencer, Marathon county, where he taught school one term, when he again engaged in milling, but later became a lumber grader and shipper. This business he followed until 1886, when on account of failing health he laid aside all business cares and has since lived a retired life.

On September 24, 1861, Mr. Richardson was united in marriage with Amanda M. Tyler, who is also a native of Canada, born in 1840, daughter of Rev. Amos and Emogene (Todd) Tyler. By this union have been born three children, one of whom died in infancy; Daniel V. and Verna are still living, and the former is now married and edits the Loyal Tribune, of Loyal, Wis. In political opinions Mr. Richardson sides with the Republicans, and is an important member of that party, though not a politician. He has been justice of the peace and town clerk, serving in those offices to the satisfaction of all concerned. In religious belief he is a member of the Free Baptist Church, while socially he belongs to the Order of Good Templars, and also holds membership with the Grand Army of the Republic. His hand is never withheld from doing good, and he is a benevolent man as well as a worthy citizen, having the respect and confidence of the entire community.

JUDGE WILLIAM HIRTH, one of the representative citizens of Marshfield, Wood county, who is now serving as municipal judge, was born in Prussia, Germany, January 1, 1844, and is a son of Christian Hirth, who was born in the same locality in 1803. He enlisted in the German army as a private, but meritorious conduct won him promotion to the rank of lieutenant, and for eighteen years he did service under his country's flag. In his native land he married Minnie Frank, and they had eight children, all born in Germany, namely: Albert, Frederick, William, Ernest, Amelia and Minnie, all living; and Henry and Julius, now deceased. These brothers were both soldiers in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion, and one was killed at the battle of Vicksburg, while the other died in a Rebel prison—thus giving their lives in defense of their adopted country.

In 1848 the father resigned his position in the German army, and with his eldest son Albert, came to America. Later he returned to the land of his birth, sold his farm and other property, and brought his family to the United States, settling in Dodge county, Wis., on a farm near Mayville. This was in 1850, and he remained upon that farm until within four years of his death, when he removed to the city of Mayville, where he died in 1872. He was a man of scholarly attainments, highly educated, and was very popular, winning a host of warm friends. In political affairs he took an active interest, and was a stalwart advocate of the Republican party. The mother of our subject died in 1853, and the father afterward married Lenna Matta, by whom he had six children: Charles, Christian, Lenna, Arlenna, Emma and Bertha. The mother of this family is still living.

William Hirth was a lad of only six summers when by his parents he was brought to Wisconsin. Upon the home farm he was reared to manhood, and in the log school house of the neighborhood his education was acquired. He aided his father in the labors of the fields until seventeen years of age, and then began work in his own interest, being employed as a farm hand until twenty-four years of age. Mr. Hirth was then united in marriage with Miss Johanna Miller, the wedding being celebrated in May, 1868. The lady is a native of Germany and a daughter of Mathew and Fredricke (Redle) Miller, farming people who came to America in 1852. Their family consisted of six children, namely: Fredericke, Johanna, Christine, Mary, Carrie and John. To Mr. and Mrs. Hirth have been born two children, Emma and Charles.

After his marriage Mr. Hirth took up work at the carpenter's trade which he successfully followed until 1892. He came to Marshfield in 1882, and continued carpentering, many evidences of his handiwork being seen in this place. At various times his fellow citizens have called him from private life to public office, and in all he has maintained his high reputation as a valued and prominent citizen. In 1883 he was elected justice of the peace and police justice, the first officer of the kind in Marshfield, and four years later was elected municipal judge, in which capacity he has since served with credit to himself and satisfaction of his constituents. He is a warm advocate of Democratic principles, and has frequently been sent as delegate to county and State conventions, where he has been a leading member. During the Civil war he manifested his loyalty to the government and the Union cause by several times attempting to enlist, but his father interfered with his entering the army on account of his extreme youth. He has ever been devoted to the best interests of the community in which he makes his home, as a public-spirited and progressive citizen, and he and his wife hold membership with the German Lutheran Church.

JAMES MILLER, one of the oldest residents and best known citizens of Grand Rapids, Wood county, claims Pennsylvania as the State of his nativity, his birth having occurred in Luzerne county, July 31, 1828. He is a son of George T. and Mary (Search) Miller, who were also natives of the Keystone State.

The early life of our subject was quietly passed, he being reared to manhood under the parental roof, obtaining his education in the common schools of the neighborhood. His first independent effort in life was at the age of eighteen when he began learning the tailor's trade. He made himself thoroughly familiar with the business in all its details, and has since kept abreast of the time in styles and improvements. With the exception of two years he has always followed his chosen vocation, and has secured a well-deserved success. In 1866 he came to Grand Rapids, and opening a tailoring establishment has supplied the wants of the public in his line, good workmanship guaranteeing him a liberal patronage.

Mr. Miller has twice been married; first time to Miss Caroline Teats, of New Jersey (who died in 1873), their wedding being celebrated in eastern Pennsylvania ere his arrival at Grand Rapids. Of their union four children were born, three of whom are yet living, namely: William H., a commercial traveler, residing in Duluth, Minn.; Mary Emma, now the wife of E. B. Brundage, the efficient postmaster of Grand Rapids; and Arthur G., who is now located in Dexterville, Wis. In 1874 Mr. Miller was again married, this time to Miss Alice Daugherty, daughter of John and Mary Daugherty, and they have five children, all living at this writing (July, 1895), namely: Milton J., Guy Halifax, Harry, Carrie and Lloyd. Mr. Miller also has living one sister, Harriet Ellen, and one brother, Jesse Clinton, both residing in New Columbia, Pennsylvania.

In his social relations Mr. Miller is a member of Grand Rapids Lodge No. 91, I. O. O. F. The family attend the services of the Methodist Church, and in this community are people of prominence, their friends being many. Mr. Miller represented his ward in the city council for two years, and proved a trustworthy and capable official, but has never sought or desired political preferment. His duties of citizenship are faithfully performed, and he is both public-spirited and progressive. During his long residence in Grand Rapids his life has been a most honorable and upright one, winning him the confidence and high regard of all with whom business or social relations have brought him in contact.

LEE M. WILLARD, M. D., a prominent young physician of Wausau, who makes a specialty of diseases of the eye, ear and throat, was born in Neenah, Wis., only child born to Van R. Willard (attorney at law, of Merrill) and Cynthia (Perkins) Willard, the former a native of Wisconsin and the latter of New York State.

In the spring of 1874 the parents of our subject removed to Merrill, Wis., and here the Doctor was reared to manhood, receiving his primary education in the public and high schools of that city. After completing his education he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Wylie, and in 1887 entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago, graduating from that institution with the class of 1891. He afterward took the competitive examination for resident surgeon, and was appointed house surgeon for the Illinois Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary, and filled that position for one year, after which he commenced the practice of his profession in Wausau, where his skillful treatment of diseases of the eye, ear and throat has earned for him an enviable reputation.

In January, 1894, he was married, in Chicago, to Miss Eva May Pennywell, a daughter of M. F. and Alice Pennywell, residents of Chicago, who had two daughters born to them, namely: Margaret, wife of Stephen Losh, of Saundersville, Ohio, and Eva May, wife of Dr. Willard. The Doctor is a member of the American Medical Association, and Myrtle Lodge No. 78, Knights of Pythias, of Merrill. He resides in Wausau, but practices his profession both in Wausau and Merrill, and enjoys the esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

FREDRICK SPOEHR. This highly-respected citizen and prosperous merchant of Elmhurst, Langlade county, has also the honor of being the first settler in that thriving little town. He is of German nationality, having been born in the Province of Brunswick May 13, 1833. His parents, Frederic and Rosina (Lane) Spoehr, were also of German birth, and his father was a carpenter by trade.

The parental family of our subject comprised eight children, of whom four died in infancy. The eldest child, Henry, died in Germany when twenty-eight years of age; Christiana died at Shiocton, Outagamie county, Wis., in 1891; Fredrick is our subject; Ernest is a farmer, living in Outagamie county, Wis. The family emigrated to this country in 1856, with the exception of Fredrick, who had preceded them two years, coming over in 1854. The father purchased land in the town of Bovina in the above-mentioned county. It was all wild land, far from civilization, the nearest neighbor north being eighteen miles away. He at once set to work to clear away the forests, build roads, cultivate the fields and prepare a home for his loved ones. This he did with the help of his sons and his good wife, and he had the satisfaction of passing his last days in a beautiful home, surrounded by all the comforts and conveniences of life. Here he died in September, 1869.

Fredrick Spoehr obtained a common-school education in the excellent schools of his native land, and there learned the trade of a miller. He came to America when he reached his twentieth year, and worked in a gristmill at Green Bay until his parents came over, when he went upon the farm with them. On November 28, 1858, he was married to Christina Herman, a daughter of Nicholas and Christina (Hegnauer) Herman, her birth taking place in Switzerland October 5, 1831. She came to America in 1854, her parents following her in 1856; the father was a contractor and builder. They settled in Outagamie county, where the mother died in 1863 and the father in 1878. Their family numbered ten children.

After his marriage Mr. Spoehr bought some wild land near his father's farm, and proceeded to clear it and make improvements thereon. Here he lived until 1879, in the spring of which year he sold his farm and purchased a gristmill at Shiocton, Wis., where he also opened a general store. He remained there some two years, when his mill was destroyed by fire; so selling his other property he moved his goods to Elmhurst and there opened a store. This venture proved successful, and he is still in business there. To Mr. and Mrs. Spoehr nine children were born, two of whom survive: Rosina, now Mrs. H. A. Carley, and Magdalene, Mrs. E. Nelson, whose husband owns a sawmill in Elmhurst; another daughter, Christina Fisher, died in 1891, leaving two children, who live with their grandparents; one son Frederic, died at the age of twenty-three years.

During the latter part of the Civil war Mr. Spoehr entered the army, enlisting September 29, 1864, in Company B, Ninth Wis. V. I., which was assigned to the Western Division. He received his discharge June 3, 1865. Mr. Spoehr has always taken a deep interest in the town of Elmhurst, and in the school and Evangelical Church, of which latter he is a member and the main support. He gave the church an organ and a bell, and his purse is always open to its needs. In politics he is a Republican, and being liked by all parties has held all the minor offices in town and school, and was made the first postmaster of the town, which office he held eleven years to the satisfaction of the public. He is a member of the Grand Army Post at Antigo. Mr. Spoehr is exceedingly popular in his community, being esteemed for his honorable methods of dealing, his unflinching charity and his public spirit and enterprise.

REV. NELS S. NIELSEN, pastor of the Lutheran Church at Waupaca, was born near the city of Veile, in Jutland, Denmark, July 25, 1859, the eldest son of S. C. and Catherina (Anderson) Nielsen. The father was born in 1833, and was a weaver by trade. S. C. Nielsen, who was one of six brothers, in 1858 was married to Catherina Anderson, daughter of Andrew Jorgenson, and one of a family of seven children. They had twelve children, to wit: Nels S., Andrew S., Christ S., Mary, Anna M., Andrew C., Martin and Laura, all living, and four who died young. In the spring of 1873 S. C. Nielsen emigrated to America, and settled on a farm in Luck township, Polk Co., Wis., where he still lives and where his wife died January 26, 1889.

Nels S. Nielsen, the subject of this sketch, when ten years old was hired out in Denmark to herd cattle in summer, and in winter he attended school. Three years later he came with his parents to America, and his youth was passed on the timber farm in Polk county, which he assisted in clearing and converting into a home. In the fall of 1874, when fifteen years old, he entered in a catechetical class at Luck before the Rev. J. Peterson, and in the spring of 1875 was confirmed in the faith of the Lutheran Church. In 1880 he entered the Augsburg Seminary at Minneapolis, Minn., studying there three winters, and in 1883 attended the high school at Litchfield, Minn.

He was obliged to teach school during the summers, and thus earn the money to finish his education. In the fall of 1884 he entered Trinity Seminary at Blair, Neb., remaining a student for three years. On May 8, 1887, he was ordained a minister, while at his first charge, Hampton, Hamilton Co., Neb. Rev. Nielsen has since filled a charge in Minnesota until the spring of 1892, when he was installed pastor at Waupaca.

Rev. Nielsen was married, at Blair, Neb., September 2, 1888, to Miss Maren Clauson, a native of Denmark and daughter of Claus and Catherina (Thorkelson) Peterson, who in 1868 emigrated to America and were among the first pioneers of Polk county, Wis., where the father still resides, a farmer and veterinary surgeon; the mother died January 13, 1877. Their eleven children were as follows: Johanna M., Therkel, Mattie, Anna, Peter, Christine, Catherine, Maria, Maren, Della and Soren. Maren was well educated, and had taught school for eight years in Polk county, her old home, also one year in the West. To Rev. and Mrs. Nielsen one child has been born, Aaron Christian.

OTTO G. AUGUSTINE, who is properly ranked among the self-made men of Waupaca county, began his career at the foot of the ladder in life, without other resources than his own indomitable will and steady industry. He is now engaged in the furniture and undertaking business in Clintonville, Waupaca county, where he has carried on this line of trade since 1883, and is meeting with excellent success. He has a one-story frame building, 24 x 60 feet, and keeps in stock a full line of goods, and is also owner of a hearse. He came to Clintonville from Appleton, Wis., where he had previously engaged in the furniture business for fifteen months.

Germany has furnished many of the worthy citizens of Wisconsin, and among these may be numbered Mr. Augustine, who was born in Saxony in 1844, and is a son of Gottlieb and Fredricka Augustine, natives of the same country, who left the Fatherland for the United States in 1847, the voyage occupying seven weeks. They came direct to Wisconsin, locating on a farm in Manitowoc county, where they made their home in the midst of the wilderness, afterward locating at Centerville, Wis., and later removing to Racine, Wis., where the father's death occurred in 1885, the mother's a few weeks later. In their family were five sons: Henry, who died in Plymouth, Wis., in 1849; Sam, a furniture dealer of Racine, Wis.; Dlugott, who went as a substitute during the Rebellion, serving nine months, then enlisting a second time, and died at Racine in 1890; Robert, who enlisted in Manitowoc county in the Ninth Wis. V. I., in 1861, served for three years and then re-enlisted, serving until the close of the war, and now makes his home near Glidden, Ashland Co., Wis., where he is engaged in farming; and Otto G., our subject.

The early boyhood days of Otto G. Augustine were spent under the parental roof, he remaining upon the home farm in Manitowoc county, Wis., and there he received his school training. He aided in clearing and developing the land, and also learned the trade of cabinet maker. In 1866 he went to Racine, Wis., and there worked in the railroad shops, being employed by what was then the Racine & Mississippi Railroad Company. For fourteen years he was employed by A. P. Tecke in the Fanning Mills, then removed to Appleton, Wis., and thence to Clintonville. In Racine, Wis., May 19, 1869, Mr. Augustine was married to Miss Theresa Helwig, a native of Saxony, Germany, and a daughter of Andrew Helwig, who died in Saxony about 1847. To this worthy couple has been born one child, Ella.

Socially, Mr. Augustine belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and in religion is a member of the German Evangelical Church, in which he is acting as one of its trustees. He affiliates with the Republican party, and takes an active interest in political issues. He served as alderman of the First ward of Clintonville, discharging the duties of the office to the satisfaction of all concerned. For forty-seven years he has made Wisconsin his home, and has witnessed almost its entire development; has seen the many changes that have taken place in Clintonville, and has aided materially in its advancement, being prominent in most matters relating to its best interests.

CONRAD WEINIG, son of Nicholas and Barbara (Seeph) Weinig, was born November 2, 1860, in Baden, Germany, where both his parents were born, and where his mother died in 1873, and his father, who is a farmer by occupation, still resides.

There were eight children in the family of Nicholas and Barbara Weinig, of whom John resides in Baden, Germany; Martin, in Manistee, Mich.; Conrad is the subject of this sketch; Anna resides in Baden; Katie is the wife of Mr. Schweinsaddle, of Manistee, Mich.; Jenofa resides in Manistee, Mich., and Justina in Baden, Germany. Conrad Weinig was reared in Baden, educated in the schools of the Fatherland, apprenticed for three years, and learned his trade at Taubesbischoffsheim. Coming to the United States, he landed in New York City, was four months on Staten Island, and five months in Connecticut; then returned to New York City, where he remained two years and a half, working at his trade. From there he came to Clintonville, Larabee township, Waupaca Co., Wis., in 1881, where he worked at his trade, on the railroad section, and in the woods, and thence came to Marion, Dupont township, Waupaca county. Here he commenced business in 1882, and in 1883 bought a building 30 x 16 feet, adding to it, until he had one building 50 x 16 feet, and two stories in height, besides two others.

In November, 1886, Conrad Weinig was united in marriage with Ottilia Joletz, who was born in Grant township, Shawano county, and they have three children: Laura, Edward and Olga. Mrs. Weinig's father, Frank Joletz, was an early pioneer of Grant township, came to the county in 1866, and lives on the farm. In 1890 Mr. Weinig erected a good two-story house, having main room 16 x 16 feet, with "L" 16 x 28, wings 14 x 16, vestibule 6 x 6, kitchen 16 x 16, and pantry 8 x 8—as fine a residence as can be found in Marion, and in 1894 another store building, 20 x 46, feet, and two stories in height. He has made a practice of traveling on the road since he began the merchant-tailoring business here, and solicits trade in Shawano and Oconto counties, in this State, also in upper Michigan. He does fine work, gives a good fit, and guarantees satisfaction. For three years he gave employment to from twelve to fifteen men, and now employs four. In politics Mr. Weinig votes with the Democratic party, and in religious faith he is a Catholic. He is a member of Marion Lodge No. 256, I. O. O. F., was one of the charter members, and has been secretary of the lodge. He has seen many changes in this part of the State, has done his share in building up the village of Marion, and has always taken an interest in the prosperity of the town.—[Since the above was written, Mr. Weinig says he has sold out in Marion, and is now located at Shawano.

HORACE QUIMBY, who is extensively and successfully engaged in the dairy business in Dupont township, Waupaca county, was born in Knox county, Ohio, January 11, 1847, and is a son of Omer Alonzo and Amanda C. (Crippen) Quimby. He was reared upon the old home farm until sixteen years of age when he began learning the milling trade in Matteson, Wis., carrying on that pursuit for two years. He then returned to Dupont township, and purchased 1200 acres of land, while during the succeeding twelve years he devoted his time and energies to the real-estate business, in which he met with a high degree of success.

On July 4, 1871, Mr. Quimby was united in marriage with Miss Martha A. Robbins, daughter of Hiram and Jane (Brewer) Robbins, the former a native of New York, and the latter of Pennsylvania. At a very early day her parents came to Wisconsin and opened up a farm in Dupont township, Waupaca county, where they still reside. There were born to them eight children, as follows: Mary E., wife of Jarvis McDonald, a millwright; George, at home; Mrs. Quimby; Henry, deceased; Julia, wife of August Bussilan, a farmer of Dupont township; John, who is living in the latter township; Albert, deceased; and Jennie, wife of Adelbert Taylor.

At the time of his marriage, Mr. Quimby settled on a farm of 120 acres which he still owns. Seven children have been born of that union: Adelbert D., who is engaged in milling in Elmhurst, Wis.; Arthur C., Joseph A. and Shirley, all at home; Teaman, deceased; Emory and Seaphy, who are still under the parental roof.

For some time after his marriage, Mr. Quimby was still engaged in the real-estate business, while his farm was cultivated by hired men. Subsequently he disposed of all his land save 120 acres, and then turned his attention to the dairy business, which he yet successfully follows, keeping on hand for that purpose some fourteen cows, and turning out 250 pounds of butter per month. As the product of his dairy is of a very excellent quality, it finds a ready sale in the market and commands the highest price. In connection with his other interests, Mr. Quimby is engaged in loaning money. He is a wide-awake and enterprising business man, active and energetic, and the success that he has achieved is the just reward of his own labors.

EC. MEAD. Families often move upward or downward by swift strides. A son is born who possesses qualities of unusual enterprise or ability, and he proceeds forthwith to astonish the friends and acquaintances of the family by an unexpected ascendancy in fortune. Such has been the career of most great men; but, putting aside these notable examples of success, there are also in every community men who in a more moderate degree excel, who rise to prominence and influence by the force of the hidden talent within them. No flattery is intended, and perhaps none is conveyed, when it is pointed out that E. C. Mead, of Lind township, Waupaca county, illustrates in his lifework this disposition of certain members of society —to rise as the result of unusual energy or ability.

Henry Mead, his father, was born in the town of Wantage, Sussex Co., N. J., December 29, 1805, son of Eli and Betsey (Doty) Mead, who reared a family of eleven children, five sons and six daughters, and died in northern Pennsylvania. Eli Mead was a native of Pennsylvania, a cooper by trade, and owned a small farm which he permitted his family to cultivate while he worked at his trade. He was comfortably situated in life, was a Whig in politics, and a Baptist in religious faith, and lived to the age of seventy-three years. There were only rude schools to attend in that day, and Henry Mead received little education. Before he arrived at majority he had acquired by a single year's apprenticeship a good knowledge of the mason's trade. March 8, 1828, he was married, in Sussex county, N. J., to Pamela Patterson, who was born April 16, 1812, and to this marriage were born seven children: Margaret A., born January 1, 1829, now Mrs. Oliver Whitehead, of Wetmore, Nemaha Co., Kans.; Martha J., born March 24, 1831, now Mrs. Daniel Coleman, of Orange county, N. Y.; Jeremiah, born October 26, 1832 (an invalid), a machinist by trade, of Port Jervis, N. Y.; Eli, born February 1, 1835, a railroad section boss at Port Jervis, N. Y., who served three years in the Civil war, being a member of Company G, Second Regiment Iowa Cavalry under Gen. Rosecrans, and had fourteen horses shot from under him; Darius, born November 18, 1837, a farmer who died in Dakota, and who had served two years in the late war as a member of Company H, in a New York Regiment under Gen. McClellan, having participated in the battles of Bull Run and Williamsburg, and in the latter engagement was shot in the face; Sarah E., born February 11, 1840, now Mrs. Peter Tervilliger, of Chicago; and John P., born February 4, 1844, who died in infancy. Mrs. Mead died in 1845, and Mr. Mead moved with his family to Orange county, N. Y., where he farmed, followed his trade, cut logs, and worked at whatever other employment he could find. Here, November 8, 1845, he married Sally

Clark, born January 3, 1818, daughter of Ebenezer Clark, a cloth fuller by trade. By this marriage the children were: Alonzo, born June 29, 1848, now of Lind township, Waupaca Co., Wis., who served for a period of two years and three months in the One Hundred and Fifty-eighth Regiment, New York troops, and participated in the battles of Signal Hill, Strawberry Plains, Southside Railroad, Rushville, and was at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox; Ebenezer C. (whose name introduces this sketch), born June 27, 1851; Mary E., born December 3, 1853, now Mrs. Ira Smith, of Minnesota; George H., born October 12, 1856, a resident of Chicago; and Emma P., born in January, 1860, and died in infancy. Mrs. Mead died in January, 1860, and was buried in Orange county, New York.

For his third wife Henry Mead married, January 12, 1864, Elizabeth Wilson. She was born in Orange county, N. Y., August 17, 1824, daughter of Jacob C. and Permelia (Patterson) Wilson. In the spring of 1865 he removed to Lind township, Waupaca Co., Wis., where he has since been engaged in farming, excepting from 1888 to 1892, when he resided in Waupaca. Mr. Mead was a Whig in early life, and is now a Republican. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and though now almost ninety years of age he still retains possession of his faculties, aside from hearing.

E. C. Mead was a boy of fourteen years when he came to Wisconsin. He had attended the schools in Orange county, N. Y., and completed his education in Lind township, Waupaca county. For six winters he worked in the lumber woods in Shawano and Oconto counties, making his home with his parents except when away in the woods. He was married, June 7, 1876, in Waupaca, to Miss Margaret McLean, who was born in Lind township December 5, 1857, daughter of Joseph and Eliza (Hall) McLean, early pioneers of the township from Warren county, N. Y. Mr. Mead purchased eighty acres of land in Section 28, only about twenty-five acres of which were broken. A small shanty adorned the premises, and this the young couple made their residence until the erection of their present comfortable home in 1890. Mr. Mead now owns 225 acres of land, of which about 195 acres are cleared and under cultivation. For ten years he was more or less engaged in threshing grain, and still follows that business to some extent among his neighbors. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mead are as follows: Clark H., born November 4, 1877; Sarah, born April 24, 1880; Minnie P., born September 6, 1882; Mae, born June 10, 1886; Belle, born May 9, 1888; Russell, born October 21, 1890; Glennie, born June 2, 1892, and Gladys, born January 27, 1895, all of whom are living and at home. Mrs. Mead is a member of the M. E. Church.

In politics Mr. E. C. Mead is an earnest Republican. He is not an office-seeker, preferring to devote his time and attention to his personal interests. He has always kept a number of Poland-China hogs, and is thoroughly acquainted with this branch of farming. He has few if any equals in the township for the signal success he has had, and his prosperity is due mainly to hard work and good management. He has paid upward of $6,125 for his land, besides interest money at the rate of ten per cent. He has always enjoyed robust health, and to this is attributable in part the untiring energy which in a few years has advanced him from a small landholder to one of the most prosperous of Lind township's many successful farmers.

EPHRAIM H. DOOLITTLE was born in Erie county, Penn., November 1, 1825, son of William and Rebecca (Hall) Doolittle, the former a native of Vermont, the latter of Litchfield county, Conn. They had two children, Ephraim H., and Lydia, who died at the age of twenty-nine years.

William Doolittle was a carpenter and joiner by trade, and owned a one-hundred-acre tract of timberland, inhabited only by a few deer, which he had cleared, hiring the labor. He died when our subject was only six years of age, and six years later Mrs. Doolittle married again, her second husband being Richard Marsh. Ephraim H. Doolittle losing his father when only a lad, he was "put into the harness" early in life, and received but a limited common-school education, having earned his own livelihood from early boyhood. On January 20, 1845, he was married to Miss Laura Ann Newton, daughter of Elias and Laura Newton; but this wife dying about a year after marriage he wedded, in January, 1847, Miss Mary A. Whitehill, daughter of James and Sophia (Platt) Whitehill. Mr. and Mrs. Doolittle remained on the homestead in Pennsylvania until 1858, when, in company with his son William, he came to Almond township, Portage Co., Wis., purchased 240 acres of land lying in Section 32 (timberland, on which not a stick had been cut). No road led to the place, and a small log house which Mr. Doolittle built was the only improvement on the land. Here his mother and sister came, and he was followed hither by the family (then consisting of his wife and six children), who came in about six months after he had located. He soon opened up the farm and commenced clearing, the second year of his residence there having raised 360 bushels of wheat. He continued to cultivate his land in Section 32 for seven years, when, on account of his wife's failing health, he bought 120 acres of Asa Cole, the place on which he now lives, which was partly improved; he has since sold the other property. In 1868 Mrs. Doolittle died, from injuries caused by a run-away team, leaving six children.

In 1870 Mr. Doolittle married his third wife, a Miss Rhoda C. Etheredge, daughter of John and Christina (Cortier) Etheredge, the former of whom, a farmer, now lives in Wild Rose, Waushara Co., Wis., aged seventy-five years; Mrs. Etheredge is now sixty-six years old. They had a family of four children: Rhoda (Mrs. Doolittle); Margery, deceased; Anna, Mrs. L. A. Jones, of Portage, Wis., and Andrew, living with his parents in Wild Rose, Waushara county. Of these, Rhoda was born in England in 1847, and in 1851 was brought by her parents to America, they locating first in Buffalo, N. Y., where they lived about three years, coming thence, in 1853, to Wisconsin and settling in Wild Rose, where they have since had their home.

Of Mr. Doolittle's sons and daughters, James, now deceased, was a physician; Fitzaland L. is a resident of Stevens Point; Frank E. lives in Almond, Portage county; Benjamin D. (by the third wife) is at home; John died when four years old; Laura lives at home; Sophia, wife of Charles Maynard, a farmer, lives in Buena Vista, Portage county. Politically Mr. Doolittle has always been a Republican, and in religious affiliations he and his wife are members of the Methodist Church.

William H. Doolittle, eldest son of Ephraim H. Doolittle, was born in 1849, came to Wisconsin with his father, and when eleven years of age commenced working here and in the woods; but he had no liking for agricultural work, and could not make a success in that line. From early boyhood he manifested great interest in the study of law, and he finally gave up farming altogether, going east to his grandfather, who was well-to-do, and after four years of study was admitted to the bar. He now makes his home in Tacoma, Wash., and has become well-known as an able attorney and also as the representative of his District in Congress, where he is now serving his second term; he was first elected in 1892, and re-elected in 1894, being nominated the last time by acclamation. He is an unusually large man, being six feet four inches in height.

DANIEL BLISS is one of the earliest pioneers of Royalton township, Waupaca county, and one of its most highly esteemed citizens. He is of New England parentage and more remote ancestry, and in his earlier manhood, finding opportunities in the East somewhat limited, he cut the Gordian knot of his career in life by coming to the wilds of Wisconsin, here hewing out for himself a home and a competence from the primitive forests. If he has succeeded in life—and that is the verdict of his wide circle of friends and acquaintances—his success is due in his own estimation simply to industry. He has met obstacles, and by the power of well-directed labor he has overcome them.

Mr. Bliss was born at West Fairlee, Orange Co., Vt., November 16, 1827, son of Simeon and Charlotte (Wild) Bliss, both natives of that town. Simeon was born in 1796. His father, who was also Simeon Bliss, with his wife—Lucy (Southworth) Bliss—was of English ancestry, and migrated at an early date from Connecticut to Vermont, becoming pioneers of the latter State. To Simeon and Charlotte Bliss were born the following children: Martha, wife of Alfred Sabine, of Detroit, Mich.; Levi, a physician of Castleton, Vt., who now lives near Antigo, Wis.; Lucy, his twin sister, wife of Joel Jaguith, of Waupaca, Wis.; Daniel; Sarah, who died in girlhood; Alden S., who died in childhood; and one who died in infancy. Simeon Bliss was a farmer, and in 1857, with his wife Charlotte, who was born in 1799, moved to Royalton, and lived with his son Daniel. The father died in 1871, the mother in 1883.

Daniel Bliss grew to manhood on the Vermont farm of his father, and received a good education, attending the academy at Thetford Hill in his native county. He taught two terms of school in Vermont, but usually followed farming until 1851, when he found employment as brakeman in the yards of the Rutland & Burlington railroad, at Burlington, Vt. Later he was employed at the Faneuil Hall Market in Boston, Mass., until 1855, when he came to Wisconsin. For a year he worked for others, and looked about for a favorable location. In 1856 he entered forty acres of land, situated in Royalton township, and a portion of his present farm. The land was heavily timbered, and he commenced the arduous task of clearing it. In 1856 he erected a good frame house, and as the years sped by the farm grew larger and larger, and the improvements more substantial and notable. He now owns a well-improved and finely stocked farm of 160 acres, forty acres of which are in Waupaca township. Here he is engaged in general farming, besides making a specialty of raising Shropshire sheep and Poland-China hogs. On September 1, 1864, he enlisted at Madison in Company F, First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, for one year or during the war. The battery was assigned to garrison duty at Alexandria, Va., at which city he was honorably discharged June 26, 1865.

December 23, 1858, Mr. Bliss was married, in Waupaca township, to Miss Leppa S. Southworth, a native of New York. Her parents, Ralph Southworth, born in Vermont, and Susannah (Ward) Southworth, a native of Buckland, Mass., migrated from New York to Walworth county, Wis., and later became residents of Waupaca township, Waupaca county. To Daniel Bliss and wife six children were born, namely: Alden S., Sarah E., Roscoe C., Emma L., Ward H. and Ralph Josiah. Alden S. was graduated from Carleton College at Northfield, Minn., and previously had been in attendance at the College located at Ripon for three years. He was married to Olive Irene Hills, of Faribault, Minn., and they have three children, Romney and Paul, twins, and Mirion. Alden S. is now in the employ of the P. Cornelius Lumber Co., at Stratford, Wis., was formerly fireman in the lumber yards of the Upham Mfg. Co., at Marshfield, Wis. Sarah E., the second child of Daniel Bliss, is the wife of E. T. Nather, a farmer of Royalton township. The third child, Roscoe C., married Alice Hayford, of Royalton, and is a resident of Royalton township. The fourth child is Emma L. The fifth child, Ward H. is now in school at Waupaca. The sixth child died in infancy.

In ante-bellum times Daniel Bliss was a Whig, and now holds allegiance, from principle, to the Prohibition cause. He has filled many of the local offices. Twice he was elected treasurer of the township, and for five or six years he held the office of assessor. He is an earnest, sincere and highly-respected resident of the now fruitful land, and in reclaiming which from its primitive wildness he has rendered material assistance.

WILLIAM DORAN, a wide-awake and enterprising agriculturist of Little Wolf township, Waupaca county, was born in Ontario, Canada, July 12, 1844. His parents, William and Jane (Maney) Doran, probably emigrated from Ireland to Canada at an early day, where the father was quite a successful farmer. To them were born eleven children, namely: Mary Ann, Lawrence, Catherine, Martin, Bridget, James, William, Peter and the next daughter (both of whom died in infancy), Elizabeth and Daniel. James is a resident of Hurley, Wis.; Daniel lives in Gladstone, Minn.; and the others, with the exception of our subject, reside in Canada.

William Doran was reared to manhood under the parental roof, receiving his first knowledge of farming under his father's direction. His educational privileges were very limited as he was more anxious to work, and at the age of fifteen years he began working in the lumber woods, though he still continued to work upon the home farm during the summer months until the spring of 1865, when he came to Waupaca county, Wis., locating in Little Wolf township, where he lived with James Carew. He sought employment at farm labor, but was chiefly engaged in the woods and on the river. He followed lumbering for almost twenty years, during which time by economical living he had saved enough to purchase land and now owns 123 acres, which on coming into his possession was still unimproved, not a stick of timber having been cut, or an acre placed under the plow. By his own labors he has cleared and developed fifty acres of that amount, and still engages in lumbering to some extent, having for three years been foreman of the Little Wolf Lumber Company. His possessions are the fruits of his own toil and industry, and he well deserves the success he has achieved.

On January 3, 1874, Mr. Doran was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Dinneen, a daughter of Dennis and Mary (Lyons) Dinneen, the former a native of Ireland, and the latter of Massachusetts. The father, who was a successful farmer, spent most of his life in Wisconsin, as did also his wife. They died at Northport, this State. To Mr. and Mrs. Doran have been born nine children: Theresa E., wife of Gustave Voiland, a farmer of Royalton, Waupaca county; Frank, Mary, Estella, Catherine, Layola and Veronaca, who are at home; Zita, who died in infancy; and Vincent, who is at home.

Mr. Doran exercises his right of franchise in support of the Democratic party, and has served his fellow citizens as side supervisor for two years. The family hold membership with the Catholic Church, in which he is serving as treasurer of the building committee, and is a member of the Order of Catholic Knights.

GEORGE H. GUERNSEY became a resident of Clintonville, Waupaca county, in 1894, but is one of the honored pioneers of this State, having made his home for many years in Portage county, and has been closely identified with the history of this section of the State.

He was born in New York, November 21, 1830, and is a son of Jonathan and Frances (Putnam) Guernsey, both natives of Berkshire county, Mass., but who removed at an early day to Guilford, N. Y. Although the father was a physician by profession, he also followed school teaching, being a graduate of Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. He obtained his education by his own labor, earning the money with which he paid his tuition. He died in the State of New York, leaving a family of eight children: Caroline, Phoebe, Euphemia J., Addison W., George H., Henry R., Augustus H. and Frank M. All the children remained on the old home until they reached their majority, the father's death occurring when the youngest was about seventeen years of age.

Mr. Guernsey, the subject of this sketch, received his education in the schools of New York, and there remained until 1855, when he came to Wisconsin. After a residence here of two years he was married, in 1857, to Miss Miranda Beare, a native of the Empire State, and a daughter of William and Laura (Page) Beare, the father a machinist by trade. To Mr. and Mrs. Guernsey have been born two daughters: Ada, now Mrs. Ulysses Puarica, of Buena Vista township, Portage Co., Wis.; and Grace, a teacher in the public schools of Clintonville. Our subject came West in 1855, first locating in Berlin, Wis., where he remained for eighteen months engaged in clerking. On the expiration of that time he went to Almond, Portage Co., Wis., where, in connection with his brother Addison, he purchased 240 acres of rich land, sixty of which had been improved, and there he engaged in agricultural pursuits for several years. His brother is a physician, and still resides in Portage county, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession. They owned the land in partnership about fifteen years, when it was divided. In connection with farming our subject also dealt in real estate, and met with excellent success in that line. In April, 1894, he sold his farm of 140 acres of well-improved land, and removed to Clintonville, where he has since been engaged in the insurance business.

Mr. Guernsey, politically, votes the straight Republican ticket, and has held various offices, the duties of which he has discharged intelligently and with fidelity. He served one term as a member of the Wisconsin Legislature, for twenty-two years as town clerk, and for twelve years he acted as town treasurer, which offices he filled with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He takes an active interest in Church work, holding membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church in Clintonville, of which he is now treasurer. He is honest, industrious and thoroughly honorable in all the walks of life, and enjoys the esteem and respect of the community to a large extent.

JOHAN RAZIN, a well-to-do and highly respected agriculturist of Oneida county, with residence in Rhineland, is a native of Canada, born in St. Remo, Province of Quebec, August 9, 1834, a son of Henry and Jane (Mooney) Razin. The parents were both natives of Ireland, the latter born in County Antrim in 1812, were married in Quebec and had a family of eight children—five sons and three daughters—namely: William, John, Mary, James, Sarah Jane, Rebecca, Edward and Thomas, all living except Edward. The father, who was a farmer, died in 1873; the mother is still residing on the old homestead in Lower Canada (Province of Quebec); her parents both died in Ireland; she had six brothers and two sisters who came to America, but she was the only one in the family to come to Quebec.

The subject proper of this sketch was reared on the home farm near Quebec, Canada, and was educated in the schools of the neighborhood. He remained with his parents until 1868, in which year he came to Wisconsin, settling on a piece of wild land in Wood county, near Grand Rapids, which he cleared and improved. Here he remained until the spring of 1886, when he came to Rhinelander in order to have better school advantages for his children. During the first three years he kept a boarding house, after which he was in the employ of Brown Bros., buying vacant lots in the city, building houses thereon and then selling at a profit. Near the city he bought himself a small farm, which he cultivates, and he also owns his fine residence in Rhinelander, in all respects developing evidence of a life of industry and economy.

In January, 1870, Mr. Razin was united in marriage at Grand Rapids, Wis., with Mrs. Ann (Canavan) McShane, who was born in Ireland in 1838, and came to America with her parents when ten years old, they settling in Elk county, Penn. In this family there were seven children, named respectively: Catherine, Ann, Ellen, Barnard, Daniel, Mary and Eliza. The father, who was a farmer in both Ireland and this country, died about the year 1864. The latter had two brothers—Daniel and Thomas Canavan—who never came to America, and two sisters—Catherine and Rose. The mother of Mrs. Razin died in 1876; her parents, Arthur and Nancy (Trudin) McQuone, came from Ireland to the United States before she did, and were early settlers of Elk county, Penn.; they had ten children: Ellen, Mathew, Kittie, Edward, Nancy, Arthur, Mary, Alice, Eliza and Tams. Mrs. Razin's first husband was John McShane, also a native of the Land of Erin, whom she married at Ridgeway, Penn., and, in 1855, they came to Wisconsin, settling at Port Edwards, Wood county, he becoming head sawyer at the mills there, and died in the spring of 1868, the father of seven children, as follows: Lizzie, Ellen, John, Henry, Catherine, Jane and Arthur, of whom Henry and Jane are deceased.

To our subject and wife have been born four children, namely: William H., Addie M., Jennie B. and Anna (the last named deceased); the two daughters are now teachers in the public schools of Rhinelander, while the son is employed in a drug store. In 1893 Mrs. Razin paid a visit to her old home in Pennsylvania, the first time in thirty-six years, and enjoyed the trip thoroughly. In politics Mr. Razin is a staunch Democrat, and in religious faith the entire family are members of the Roman Catholic Church, of which he, himself, is a strict communicant.

GUSTAV F. KOEHLER, who is a German by birth, having been born in Prussia, April 19, 1854, is a son of Gotthilf Koehler, who was also a native of the Fatherland, born in 1817. The father is one of five children, three of whom were August, Charles and Hulda. The parents died in Germany. In that country Gotthilf Koehler first served as a coachman, then acted as valet for a lord and afterward became a shepherd. At the age of twenty-six he was married to Johanna Sage, and to them were born Wilhelmina, Herman, August, Frank, Gustav F., and George, three of whom, Frank, August and Gustav F., are living. The family decided to make America their future home, so in 1857 crossed the Atlantic, came direct to Wisconsin, and located on a farm near Bloomfield, Waushara county. Two years later they removed to Marathon county, Wis., where the mother died in April, 1861. The father was again married, this time to Henrietta Tews, and they became the parents of three children. His wife died in 1865, and later he wedded Amelia Tews, and to them have been born seven children who are yet living—Johonas, Amelia, Hulda, Herman, Bertha, Frederick and Walter. They now make their home on a farm near Merrill, Wis. For three years the father served as a soldier in the German army, and since coming to this country has ever been a loyal and worthy citizen.

Gustav F. Koehler was but three years old on his arrival in the United States and here his early life was passed in a way similar to the average boy in those days, being reared to agricultural pursuits on the home farm. His educational advantages were limited, he being allowed to attend school only a few months during the year, until at the age of seventeen. He then went to Weyauvega, Waupaca Co., Wis., where he learned the trade of a blacksmith, where he remained for a year and a half, when he removed to Wausau, there working for about the same length of time. On his arrival in Merrill, which was then known by the name of Jennie, he formed a partnership with Henry Beahmann and opened a blacksmith shop in the fall of 1874. Lincoln county was then newly organized, the first county officers being elected that fall. After two years his former business connection was dissolved, and Mr. Koehler formed a partnership with John T. Adams, which continued for about three years, when Mr. Adams withdrew from the firm. Our subject has since been in business alone which he has successfully conducted, carrying it on longer than any other blacksmith of the place, and has now an excellent trade.

Mr. Koehler was united in marriage on June 9, 1878, with Wilhelmina Runge (the ceremony having taken place in Oshkosh, Wis.); she is a native of Germany, where she was born November 20th, 1856, a daughter of Joachin and Charlotte (Genrich) Runge, who were the parents of eleven children, namely: Matilda, Frederick, Carl, Amelia, Justina, Ferdinandina, Albert A., Wilhelmina, who are still living; and three who are dead. The parents came to America about 1864, locating near Oshkosh, where the father engaged in shoe-making and there died in February, 1879. The mother died in November, 1891. To the subject of this sketch and wife have been born nine children, namely: Herman, Walter, Agnes, Paul, George, Martha, Ernest, Gustav and Kurt.

In politics Mr. Koehler is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, taking an active interest in its success. He served as alderman of the Third ward of Merrill for two years. He is president of the council, and though not a politician takes an active part in all elections. In religious belief he is a Lutheran, holding membership with that denomination. He is a self-made man, universally respected and one whose word is as good as his bond.

CHRISTIAN J. HANSEN is numbered among the influential and prominent citizens of Lincoln county, who are indebted for their present prosperous condition to their own industry and energy. He is one of the leading business men of Tomahawk, where he is carrying on a wagon and blacksmith shop, and is meeting with success.

He was born in Forde, Norway, November 17, 1854, which was also the place of birth of his father. The latter was a wagonmaker and blacksmith by occupation. He married Christiana Christianson, and to them were born five children, as follows: Oleanna, Caroline, Rasmus, Anna and Christian. The mother died in Norway in 1857, after which the father wedded Pernelle Pederson. His death occurred in his native land in 1892. He was an industrious, hardworking man, and a consistent member of the Lutheran Church. The paternal grandfather was a restaurant keeper of Bergen, Norway. All of our subject's brothers and sisters, with the exception of one, had come to America before he arrived. He still has two sisters living in Wisconsin, and a brother in Minnesota.

Christian J. Hansen remained at home until reaching the age of seventeen years, during which time he was given a fair education. He had previously worked with his father in the wagon shop, but now began learning the trade of shoemaker, at which he served a two-and-a-half years' apprenticeship, receiving nothing in compensation for his services. After completing his trade, however, he was compelled to give it up on account of ill health, and for six months was employed in a ship yard, at the end of which time he finished learning wagon making in the city of Bergen. Feeling that the United States offered better opportunities to a young man, he in June, 1875, crossed the Atlantic, and on his arrival in this country first located at Wausau, Wis., where he worked at his trade until the spring of 1889, when he came to Tomahawk. During the last six months of his stay in Wausau, he had conducted an establishment of his own, having bought out a firm and erected a good shop. He now has a steam engine for turning his lathes, and other machinery used in the manufacture of heavy wagons and sleighs, and the work he turns out is all first class.

In 1880, at Wausau, Wis., Mr. Hansen was united in marriage with Olea Larson, who was born in Laurvig, Norway, July 11, 1859, and is a daughter of Ole and Kari M. (Anundson) Larson, who were the parents of four children: Anne, Olea, Louis and Severn. Her father, who was a ship carpenter, came to the United States in 1872, first locating in Chicago, where he remained one year, when he sent for his family who were still in the Old World, and, in the summer of 1873, removed to Manitowoc, Wis. Here the mother died in 1874, after which Mr. Larson was again married, and by this union had two children, Carl and Martin. He had served as a soldier in the Norwegian army. He now makes his home at Dancy, Wis. The four children born to our subject and wife are Oscar H., Martha C., Henrietta C. and Margaret L.

Mr. Hansen with his family hold membership with the Scandinavian Lutheran Church. In politics he is a Republican. His property has been acquired by the exercise of sound judgment, good business talents and industry.

E H. JONES, M. D., one of the most successful medical practitioners of Waupaca county, has had his home in Weyauwega since 1884. He was born May 4, 1859, in Columbia county, Wis., and comes from New England pioneer stock, Nathaniel Jones, his paternal ancestor some generations back, having emigrated from England to Massachusetts in 1669; while, on his mother's side, John Howard was one of the Massachusetts Puritans of 1620.

The parents of Dr. Jones were Alonzo and Martha (Howard) Jones, the former of whom was the son of Norman Jones, a Vermont cabinet maker, and was born in that State in 1819. His wife was the daughter of John and Martha (Bailey) Howard, natives of New York. Alonzo Jones was reared on a farm, and received his education in Castleton, Vt. He was married at Fort Ann, Washington Co., N. Y., and in 1847 migrated to Columbia county, Wis., where he purchased 400 acres of government land at $1.25 per acre, which he improved, afterward selling it for $50 per acre. Wisconsin was a Territory when Mr. Jones entered it, and he recorded a vote in favor of its admission as a State. In those early days he not infrequently carted wheat to Milwaukee with oxen. He was a Whig in politics, afterward a Republican. He and his wife now reside at Poynette, Wis. Their family of seven children were of follows: Josephine, wife of John Low, of Slayton, Minn.; Norman, a resident of Minnesota, who died in 1885; Evangeline, deceased in infancy; Dr. E. H.; Fannie, wife of Walter Hoyt, of Ridgeway, Iowa; John Howard, a lawyer of Denver, Colo.; Helen, who died in 1889, wife of Halbert Norton, Poynette, Wisconsin.

At the age of eighteen years E. H. Jones left his father's farm in Leeds, Wis., to enter a drug store in Poynette, remaining there one year; later he taught school in Winneshiek county, Iowa. In 1880, at the age of twenty-one, he entered Rush Medical College, Chicago, Ill., graduating with the class of 1883, and during the years 1882 and 1883 he took a course of lectures at the "Illinois Eye and Ear Infirmary," also of Chicago. Dr. Jones first located at Ridgeway, Iowa, but the following year he moved to Weyauwega, Wis., where he has since remained in the active practice of his profession. Beginning his professional life under great pecuniary disadvantages, he has, by close attention to business and an untiring zeal for his profession, surmounted these obstacles and built up an enviable and lucrative practice. He is a member of the Northwestern Medical Society, the Wisconsin State Medical Society, and of the American Medical Association.

In 1883 the Doctor was married, at Ridgeway, Iowa, to Miss Martha Blackburn, a native of Dane county, Wis., and daughter of Thomas and Jessie (Stuart) Blackburn, the father a native of England, the mother of Scotland; they were married in Dane county, where they were pioneers, and now reside in Lincoln township Winneshiek Co., Iowa. Dr. and Mrs. Jones have had three children: Alice Elta, born May 20, 1884, and Stuart Howard, born June 17, 1892, living; Leroy B., the second child, born August 8, 1888, died November 11, 1888.

Dr. Jones is a Democrat of the Jeffersonian school, and has served several years as Health Officer of Weyauwega, and as a member of the county board. He is now a member and the secretary of the Waupaca board of U. S. Examining Surgeons for Pensions. Socially he is a member of Weyauwega Lodge No. 82 F. & A. M., of which he is worshipful master, and he is also a member of the Modern Woodmen. In September, 1890, he became associated with A. L. Hutchinson, Esq., a prominent lawyer of Weyauwega, in the purchase of real estate in the city of Marshfield. Buying vacant and unimproved land, they built beautiful cottages and otherwise improved it, greatly enhancing the value of the property. In 1891 they began the publication of "The American Medical and Legal Exchange Bureau Bulletin," an enterprising bi-monthly publication. In 1895 they erected a large, handsome and commodious brick structure in the business center of Weyauwega, to be used for store and office purposes. He was founder and general manager of the Wolf River Telephone Co. His profession, however, has always been his greatest pride; being ever ready to answer with equal promptness, all calls from the rich and the poor, the high and the low, he has always considered his own welfare secondary to that of his patients, and taken all in all, Dr. Jones is one of Weyauwega's most progressive and public-spirited citizens.

JULIAN BIRON is one of the worthy citizens of Merrill, Lincoln county, who have come into the United States from Canada. He was born near Sherbrooke, Canada, in May, 1837, and is a son of Antoine Biron. The latter was born near Three Rivers, Canada, of French descent, his father being born in France. The latter was a young man on his arrival in Canada, and was there married, becoming the father of six children, namely: Gabriel, Augustine, Joseph, Agnes, Frances and Antoine. He was a native of Leo, France, and before crossing the Atlantic had served for a time in the French army. Both he and his wife died in Canada. Antoine Biron was a carpenter by trade, and died in 1848. He had married Isabel Buisier, who was also a native of Canada and of French descent, and their union was blessed with six children, only two of whom, Eleanor and Julian, are living; those deceased are Sophia, who died at the age of twenty; Matilda at the age of twenty-four; and the others who died in infancy. The mother died in 1861.

The gentleman, whose name introduces this review, grew up in Canada, and there received a very meagre education. At the age of eighteen he left home going to Boston, Mass., where he worked in a brickyard two summers, but the winters of those years he spent in Canada. In the spring of 1856 he came to Two Rivers, Manitowoc Co., Wis., and worked for three months in a saw-mill, at the end of which time he went on Lake Michigan as a fisherman. For three seasons he followed fishing when he hired out as a farm hand near Cooperstown, Wis., and there remained for a year and a half. In 1859, in company with nine others, he started for Pike's Peak, leaving Green Bay, Wis., with a horse-team and drove to Denver, Colo., where he was engaged in prospecting for some time, when, in the fall of 1861, he returned to Wisconsin and resumed fishing. This he continued to follow until 1864, when he went to Grand Rapids, Wis., there hiring out as a common laborer for one winter. He commenced work in a sawmill as head sawyer in the spring of 1865, at which occupation he continued until the fall of 1879, when he came to Jennie, now Merrill, Lincoln county. He had accompanied a Mr. Scott, and, at this place, rebuilt an old mill for that gentleman, and has since been in the employ of the Scott Lumber Company. He enlarged their mill from one with a rotary saw until it now has a capacity of 150,000 feet of lumber per day. He seems to be a natural millwright, ranking among the first in that line, though never having learned the trade.

In 1865 Mr. Biron at Grand Rapids, Wis., was united in marriage with Harriet Bubloz, who was born in Switzerland in 1848, and to the union were born the following named five children: Emma, Joseph, Elenore, Louis and Blanche. Mrs. Biron is a daughter of Louis and Louisa (Panchaud) Bubloz, and is one of three children, namely: Ellen, Charles and Harriet. Her father came to America in 1850, and three years later was joined by his family, they settling in Grand Rapids, Wis., where his death occurred in 1855. Subsequently the mother married George Zenier, who was born in Metz, Germany, and by this marriage there were three children, George, Emma and Alexander. Mr. Zenier died in 1890, and Mrs. Zenier in 1892. They were both members of the Congregational Church.

The subject of this sketch is a man who is thoroughly honest, upright and reliable, and is a good workman, having aided in the erection of many of the largest mills in this portion of the State, among which are those at Grand Rapids and Port Edwards. He has the respect and esteem of the citizens of Merrill, and is a valued member of the community.

JAMES DOONEN (deceased) was born in the County of Monaghan, Ireland. In 1852, while a young man, he crossed the Atlantic to the United States, came to Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., and after a residence of about two years returned to his native land. In 1856

he again came to this country, and engaged in lumbering, in which he continued for the remainder of his life. During the latter year he was united in marriage with Miss Mary McCabe, who was also born in County Monaghan, Ireland, by whom he had four children, three of whom are living, namely: John J., Terrence and Frank B., residing in Wausau. The parents of Mrs. Doonen were John and Helen McCabe. James Doonen was for several terms treasurer of the city of Wausau. His death occurred in 1863, at the age of forty-one years. In 1866 the widow of James Doonen was united in marriage with Peter Hunt, who was born in New York State, and three children have been born to their union, of whom two are now living—William and Charles. Mr. Hunt owns and operates a farm in the town of Maine, Marathon county. He has represented his ward as alderman for several terms.

Terrence, a son of James and Mary Doonen, was born in Wausau October 20, 1858, and was reared and educated in his native town. At Wausau, October 12, 1884, he was united in marriage with Miss Frances Gercher, a resident of Marathon, who died July 11, 1895, of heart trouble, leaving two children, one aged ten years and an infant.

Frank B., son of James and Mary Doonen, was born in Wausau September 10, 1861, where he was reared and educated. In June, 1889, he was united in marriage with Miss Anna Allslebline, of Athens, Marathon Co., Wis., by whom he has had one child—Inez, born January 20, 1891.

REV. HERMAN S. W. DAIB. When valuable public services, an unblemished integrity and a genuine private virtue, derivable only from the daily practice of religion and piety, contribute to adorn the character of an individual, then is it most proper to be set prominently forth as an example to those who would make themselves useful to their fellow men. And the writer cherishes the belief that he will perform this acceptable service to the public in giving a brief sketch of this reverend gentleman.

Mr. Daib is a native of Ohio, having first seen the light in Bern township, Fairfield county, August 26, 1862, and is a son of Rev. John L. Daib, who was born in Niederrimbach, in the Kingdom of Wuerttemberg, Germany, July 13, 1830, and who when thirteen years old lost his father by death, and his mother some few years before. There were two sons and one daughter in the family besides John L. At the age of nineteen years John L. Daib emigrated from the Fatherland to the United States, locating in St. Louis, Mo., where he was persuaded to study for the ministry by Dr. W. Sihler, whereupon he attended the seminary at Fort Wayne, Ind. After his ordination he had charges in Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin, his last incumbency being in the first-named State, where he died December 31, 1894. He was there married to Susanna E., daughter of Nicolas and Catherine (Heiser) Zelt, both of German birth, came to America in 1832, and here married, where they followed agricultural pursuits in the State of Indiana. Five children were born to them, viz.: Susanna E., John, Jacob, Margaret and Lucinda. To Rev. John L. Daib and wife were born twelve children, those yet living being Mary, Frederick, Sophia, Herman S. W., Emilie, Adelinde, Martin, Frieda and Lydia; the deceased were Theodore, Helen and Leonard.

The subject proper of these lines received his primary education at the parochial school of Oshkosh, Wis. Subsequently he attended college at Fort Wayne, Ind., from which institution he was graduated in 1881; then entered the Theological Seminary at St. Louis, from which he was graduated in 1884. The first charge to which he was appointed was at Wittenberg, Wis., whence at the end of three years he removed to Antigo, in the same State, and, in August, 1888, came to Merrill to accept the incumbency as pastor of St. John's Lutheran Church, where he has since remained. Under his careful and watchful pastorate the congregation and church have been blessed with increase and prosperity, for when he came to the charge seven years ago there was a membership of but 45; now there are 120 voting members, who worship in an elegant brick church, recently erected, to which is attached a growing parochial school of 120 scholars.

In 1888 Rev. Herman S. W. Daib and Miss Hermine Dicke were united in marriage, and two children have come to brighten their home—Herbert and Kurt. Mrs. Daib is a native of Wisconsin, born in Belle Plaine township, Shawano county, a daughter of Rev. Henry and Catherine Dicke, who were the parents of nine children, all yet living and named respectively: Henry, Mary, Pauline, Hermine, William, Carl, John, Julia and Clara. Mr. and Mrs. Daib enjoy, equally, the sincere respect and esteem of not only the members of his flock, but of the entire community, in which they are well known.

NILSE EVJUE, superintendent of the Rib River Lumber Co., at Flanner, Wis., and one of the most highly respected citizens of Merrill, Lincoln county, is a native of Norway, born in the city of Kongsberg, Buskerud, June 6, 1852. Peter Evjue, his father, was of the same nativity, born in 1809, a son of David Evjue, who was a common laborer in Norway, and owned a farm; David had two children—Peter, and a daughter whose name is not learned. Peter was a watchman at the celebrated silver mines at Kongsberg, was married to Martha Bryn, and died in 1867. They had twelve children, only four of whom are now living, viz.: Johan, Matilda, Karen and Nilse; Hans lived to be married and have two children, Hans and Matilda, and died in Norway; the rest of the children died young; the mother passed away in 1869.

The subject proper of these lines, Nilse Evjue, is the youngest in the family, and was about sixteen years old when he lost his father. He received a liberal education at the public schools of the district wherein he was born, after which he worked in the silver mines, already referred to, until in 1869, when he emigrated to America with barely sufficient means to carry him to Stevens Point, Wis., the place of his destination. Arriving there, however in good health and spirits, he at once hired out to work for a lumber firm on the Little Eau Plaine river, being employed in the sawmill during the summer, and in the woods in the winter season. Leaving this firm in the spring of 1870, he for a time hired out to run lumber down the river to St. Louis, after which he found employment in the John Wicks sawmill on the Big Eau Plaine river, working there and in another mill three years, each season making a trip down the river with lumber. In the spring of 1874 he moved to Wausau, where he worked as grader in a lumber yard for Peter Plummer, and at the end of a year hired out, in a similar capacity, to the Stewart Lumber Co., and with them remained four years, two years of the time as foreman of the green lumber department. In the spring of 1879 he came to Merrill, then called "Jennie," where for four years he worked as grader for the T. B. Scott Lumber Co., after which he was employed by the Champagne Lumber Co., at first by the job, grading and piling lumber, which occupied two more years of his life. During the next four years he was foreman of their mill and yard, and the following two years served as shipping clerk, remaining with this extensive firm eight years in all. In 1891, he began an engagement with the Rib River Lumber Co., at Flanner, Wis., as general superintendent of their mill and yard, his present position. His residence, an elegant and commodious home, is in the city of Merrill, where he is surrounded by all the comforts due to an industrious and well-regulated life.

In the fall of 1880 Mr. Evjue was married at Merrill to Miss Mary Erickson, who was born in Norway in 1858, one of the eleven children of Torger and Ronaug Erickson, named as follows: Anna, Mary, George, Matthew, Pauline, Peter, Tenna, Ella and William, living, and Erick who died in February, 1862, and one that passed away in infancy. The father, who was a farmer, came to America in 1868, and settled in Scandinavia, Waupaca county. Himself and wife now reside in Merrill. To our subject and wife have been born three children: William, Emma and Nellie. Mr. and Mrs. Evjue are prominent members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church, in the building up of which they took an active part. Politically, the former affiliates with the Republican party, and is recognized as one of the best representative, useful and loyal self-made men of northern Wisconsin, one who has by diligence, industry and economy deservedly prospered.

EVEN P. KALSTAD, a well-to-do farmer and merchant, and one of the intelligent citizens of Portage county, was born in Gausdal, Norway, April 5, 1846, and is a son of Peter and Aasta (Kalstad) Peterson, who were also born in the same place. The father was a farmer in comfortable circumstances, and, in the spring of 1848, disposed of his property in Norway, and with his wife and two daughters sailed from Christiania to New York, from which city they went direct to Milwaukee, and then to Ixonia, Jefferson Co., Wis., where the father purchased eighty acres of wild land, and built on it a home. There he resided until after the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted in Company D, Fifteenth Wis. V. I., under Captain Campbell, and was mustered into the service at Madison December 10, 1861. After reaching Tennessee he was taken ill, and left at Iuka, Mo. Later he was transferred to the hospital in Nashville, where he died December 20, 1862, and was there buried in a soldier's grave. His wife remained on the old homestead in Ixonia until 1870, when she sold that property and removed to Oconomowoc, where, purchasing a residence, she lived until her death. While attempting to cross a railroad track in front of an engine she was killed September 17, 1885. There were five children in the family, namely: Maria, who died at the age of fifteen; Even; Ingeborg, wife of Ross Sigerson, a farmer of Barron county, Wis.; Albert, who died at the age of sixteen, and Gabriel, who died in Oconomowoc, aged twenty years.

Our subject being ill at the time of his parents' emigration to America, remained with his grandmother. He obtained an excellent education in his native land, and in May, 1866, being then in his twentieth year, sailed from Christiania to Liverpool, where he engaged passage on the steamer Peruvian, of the Allen line, and, two weeks later, reached New York harbor, where the vessel lay in quarantine seven weeks on account of having cholera on board. He then, with some companions, went to Red Wing, Minn., where he was employed as a farm hand until fall, when he joined his mother at her home in Ixonia, Wis. Two years later he entered the Norwegian Lutheran College in Decorah, Iowa, and, after pursuing his studies for two years, returned to accept a position in the Norwegian Lutheran parochial school at Ixonia, in addition to which he also carried on farming. In 1873 he came to New Hope, Wis., and was employed as a teacher in the parochial school until June, 1878, when in compliance with a physician's orders he journeyed to his native land in search of health. This time he crossed the Atlantic on the steamer "Britannic" of the White Star line, and from Liverpool went to Hull, England, whence he sailed on a vessel of the Wilson line for Norway. There he remained until October, 1879, visiting with relatives and friends, after which he returned to New Hope.

Mr. Kalstad now resumed teaching in the parochial school, and filled that position until 1886, when he began farming, purchasing a farm of eighty acres, to which he afterward added forty acres. His land is in Sections 34 and 35, New Hope township; but at present he is renting his farm, while he devotes his energies to general merchandising. In 1889 he bought of John Loberg the latter's store and the home in which he now resides, and has since successfully carried on business as a merchant. In the same year he was appointed postmaster of New Hope, and has since creditably served in that position. He has prospered in his undertakings, and is now a substantial citizen, whose energy and enterprise have brought to him a merited success.

January 1, 1893, at New Hope, Wis.,

Mr. Kalstad was united in marriage with Miss Karan Forseth, by Rev. O. K. Ramberg, of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. The wife, a native of Norway, is a daughter of Simen and Agnethe (Fougner) Forseth, both born in Norway. The father was at one time a merchant in Christiania, and at the time of his death, which occurred in 1893, was living on his farm in Gausdal, Norway. The mother still resides there with her son, Simen. To this union were born: Christina, deceased wife of Rev. Christensen; Agnes, wife of Rev. Leisegang, a Norwegian Lutheran missionary, residing at Umpumulo, South Africa; Sophia, wife of Carl Larson, who is living in a suburb of Christiania; Simen, who resides on the old homestead, and Thorstein, who is also living on a farm in Gausdal. Mrs. Kalstad came to the United States in the fall of 1892, prior to which time she had made her home for about three years with her sister in South Africa.

LUCIUS E. PALMER was born in Allegany county, N. Y., November 22, 1829, and is a son of Edmon and Anna (Rice) Palmer, who were originally from Vermont. Isaac Rice, father of Mrs. Palmer, served in the Revolutionary war. Edmon Palmer was a wagon maker, which occupation he followed through life excepting for a period of eight years, during which time he operated a carding machine in Waupaca county, Wis. To Mr. and Mrs. Palmer were born seven children, as follows: Caroline L., now the wife of Eldad Post, a farmer of Wautoma, Waushara Co., Wis.; Roderick B., who died in August, 1894, in Buena Vista, Portage Co., Wis., leaving a widow and six children; Lucius E.; Jane, deceased wife of Allen Smith, who left three children; Ellen, now Mrs. George Reynolds, of Oregon; Simeon, an Episcopal minister, who preached two years in Appleton, Wis., and died leaving a widow and one child, now residents of Denver, Colo.; and Heman B., who belonged to the Third Wisconsin Battery during the Civil war, participated at Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Stone River, and in other important battles, and died while at home on a furlough. The children all remained at home until of adult age, and four of them taught school.

In 1852 Edmon Palmer and wife went to Brandon, Fond du Lac county, where the former bought eighty acres of partly improved land and began further improvements. After remaining in Fond du Lac county about eight years, he sold out, went to New Hope, Portage county, and bought land in Amherst, that county. He built a house there, which he occupied till about 1865, when he went to Parfreyville, Dayton township, Waupaca county, and engaged in running a carding machine. Here he spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1868. His widow then lived with her children until her death, which occurred in 1878.

Lucius E. Palmer received a common-school education in New York State. After his parents moved west he, in 1853, came to Brandon, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., and remained there with them one year, then went east, married Miss S. A. Gearhart, and January 1, 1856, they came by wagon and sleigh to Almound township, Portage county, where he bought 160 acres of land which he now owns. This was timber land. He first built a 12 x 16 shanty, with roof slanting one way, in which he lived one year, when he built a larger house, 16 x 22 feet, which now forms a part of his dwelling. At that time he had a yoke of oxen (there being only one pair of horses in the township). The nearest flouring-mill was sixteen miles away, and their market was Berlin, Green Lake county, forty miles distant. An axe and a wagon were his principal tools, and he began to clear the land. One of his neighbors who had been here some two or three years, on buying a new plow, gave him his old one. The people held their first religious services in Dr. Guernsey's house, afterward got a schoolhouse, and finally a church building. Mr. Palmer was ordained in 1860, and has since presided over the meetings, and for thirty-five years has proclaimed the truths of the Bible, and preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ as a Regular Baptist minister.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucius E. Palmer became the parents of six children, namely: Charles A., a school teacher, now in Nebraska; Fred, in Almound township, Portage county; Nettie, now Mrs. T. W. Stephens of Plainfield; Anna, now Mrs. D. Forest McLaughlin; Clella, who was Mrs. C. H. Weed, and died leaving one child; and Sidney, who lives at home and manages the farm. Mr. Palmer now has 125 acres of land in all, ninety-six of which are tillable. He has been continuously associated with the Republican party, is a Good Templar, and in religion a Baptist by preference.

CHRISTIAN RIEBEN, a substantial farmer of Amherst township, Portage county, was born in Lenk, in the Canton of Berne, Switzerland, June 2, 1853, and is a son of Kaspar and Madeline Rieben. Kaspar Rieben, born February 27, 1827, came with his wife to America in the fall of 1883, and settled in West Bend, Iowa. Finding the climate there too severe, he returned to his native land, where he died March 17, 1894. Mrs. Rieben, born August 15, 1826, remained in this country until October, 1894, then returned to her native town, where she remained until May, 1895, and returned to Muscatine, Iowa, where she now resides. They were the parents of the following named children: Madeline, born July 20, 1847; Christian; Katrina, born October 15, 1856; Gottlieb, born March 16, 1865; Elizabeth, born August 8, 1862; and Louise, born September 1, 1867—all living; Kaspar, Christian (1), Samuel, Louise (1), and Elizabeth (1), all deceased, as well as two who died in infancy.

Christian Rieben, the subject of this sketch, acquired an excellent education in his native town. For many years he conveyed tourists by carriage over the mountains between points of interest in Switzerland and Italy. He was in Paris, France, just before the siege of that city, intending to remain, but was entreated by his parents to return home, which he did. On May 10, 1877, at Aigle, Switzerland, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Susanna Gander Byrde, a widow, and there have been born to them the following named children (the first four born in the old country, the others in America): Charles C., September 19, 1878; Robert, September 20, 1879; Lena Louisa Bertha, August 15, 1880, Marius, November 23, 1881 (who died on the ocean while coming to America, January 26, 1882); Louisa, January 12, 1883; Samuel, April 10, 1885; and Oscar, October 5, 1887. Mrs. Rieben is a daughter of John and Mary (Steffen) Gander, and widow of Henry Byrde, by whom she had three children: Marie, Alois and Henry.

In the spring of 1882 Mr. Rieben sailed for America from Havre, France, on the steamer "Amerique," and after a voyage of eighteen days landed in New York, and came direct to Milwaukee, Wis., where he arrived with but seventy-five cents. He engaged board, telling the landlord he would leave his trunk as security, and soon procured employment on a farm a short distance from Milwaukee, worked there three months, and three months in Sheridan, Waupaca county, as a farm hand. With his wife and family, who came over from Switzerland and joined him about this time, he removed to Black Creek Falls, Marathon Co., Wis., where he bought eighty acres of timberland, paying five hundred dollars for it. He cleared ten acres, built thereon a log cabin, which he occupied with his wife and family for one year, then sold the property for fifty dollars, losing about five hundred dollars on the deal. Returning to Sheridan, he rented a tract of land from Edward Salverson, in whose employ he had been prior to going to Black Creek Falls. He worked this farm for three years, then located on his present farm of 160 acres, 120 of which are cleared. This he bought after renting it one year.

Mr. Rieben is an honest, upright citizen, and well-known and popular throughout this section of the county. He speaks English, French and German, fluently, and is teaching his children all these languages. He has a comfortable home, good horses, is well provided with modern farm machinery, and does threshing and wood sawing for many farms in his neighborhood. He is a Republican in politics, and in religious belief his family are Protestants.

JOHAN V. VOSBURG, who, as a liveryman at Waupaca, now keeps the finest turnouts in the city, the envy of all who are admirers of fine horses, belongs to a pioneer Wisconsin family.

He was born in Waupaca August 19, 1863, son of Frank B. Vosburg, who built and conducted the "Vosburg House" in that city. Frank B. Vosburg was born in Gowanda, N. Y., and married Mariette Copen, of Rushford, N. Y. From 1856 to 1861 he had charge of the Fond du Lac and Stevens Point express route, and in 1861 he came to Waupaca. In 1869 he purchased from E. J. Putnam the old "Smith House," which had been erected by A. E. Smith in 1856. The house burned May 16, 1872, but within ten weeks the present "Vosburg House" was open for the entertainment of guests. John V. Vosburg was educated in the Waupaca schools, and remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age. In 1891 he purchased from his father the "Vosburg House," and remained its proprietor until the spring of 1892. He then sold out and went to Phillips, Price county, where for a short time he conducted a hotel. Mr. Vosburg next went to Oshkosh, and was in business for himself there until the spring of 1894, when he sold out and returned to Waupaca. Here he started the extensive livery business which he now conducts. It is natural that he should gravitate to a business which would be connected with fine horses, for from his father he has inherited an affection for the noble steed. The tastes of Frank Vosburg were pretty evenly divided between the admirable hostelry, where he administered to the comforts of his guests, and his stables. Indeed it is questionable if the latter were not the dearer to him. He was the owner of a number of celebrated trotters, and it was difficult to find a better judge of horses than he.

In 1890 John V. Vosburg was married, at Waupaca, to Miss Libbie O'Grady, a native of Kentucky. One child has been born to them, Mary Ethel. In politics Mr. Vosburg is a stanch Republican, though he is not an office-seeker. He is very well and widely known, and is one of the most popular citizens of Waupaca.

GEORGE G. HAWES is a worthy representative of an honored New England family which was founded in the colony of Massachusetts ere this country had attained its independence. His grandfather, Luther Hawes, was born November 14, 1784, and on the 28th of October, 1806, married Sallie Gale, who was born March 14, 1784. They became the parents of twelve children, five sons and seven daughters, of whom Lester L., the father of our subject, was the youngest. Lester L. was born in Vermont, January 10, 1828, and, as his parents were in limited circumstances, he received only the educational privileges afforded by the common schools. He was reared upon the home farm, and, when about eighteen years of age, accompanied his parents to Wisconsin. The family lived in Trenton township, Dodge county, until the death of the mother, when the children were scattered and the father went to Marquette county, Wis., to make his home with his son George, where he died at the age of eighty years. After the death of his mother Lester L. Hawes removed to Marquette county, and also lived with his brother George, working as a farm hand.

On November 24, 1856, Lester L. Hawes wedded Mary Robertson, who was born in Dumbarton, Scotland, November 13, 1839, daughter of John and Jeannette (Barr) Robertson, who came to the United States in 1849, and located in Moundville township, Marquette Co., Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson still reside on the farm where they began their domestic life, and are among the most highly respected people of the neighborhood. At the time of his marriage Mr. Hawes was in quite limited circumstances. He began housekeeping in Oxford township, Marquette county, where in partnership with his brother he carried on a brick yard. A year later he removed to Dodge county, Wis., where for some years he rented a farm near Fox Lake, and in May, 1860, he came to Belmont township, Portage county. The family made the journey with a team of horses and Mr. Hawes with an ox-team. He had visited the county in February, 1860, and purchased 120 acres of land in Sections 18 and 19 Belmont township. While that place was being improved the family resided temporarily upon the present site of the Belmont Cemetery. The first home was a frame structure and the first improvements upon the farm were placed there by Lester Hawes. The nearest trading point was Berlin, Wis., fifty miles distant. Wild game of all kinds could be had in abundance, and the region was one that was just being opened up to civilization, and many were the difficulties and trials, incident to frontier life, to be endured.

To Lester L. and Mary (Robertson) Hawes were born George; Ann Eliza, wife of Warren Taylor; and Alma A., wife of John Casey, all residents of Belmont township. Mr. Hawes had been previously married, having wedded Miss Emily Lindsay at Fox Lake, November 23, 1851, and to this union was born a son, Charles A., September 15, 1852; the latter, a farmer, is married and resides in Adams county. Emily (Lindsay) died November 24, 1853, and the son was reared by Mrs. Mary Hawes.

In February, 1865, Lester Hawes responded to his country's call for troops, enlisting at Waupaca, in Company D, Fiftieth Wis. V. I., with which he went to Madison, thence to St. Louis. In the latter city he was taken with smallpox, of which he died, May 19, 1865, and he was there buried. He took quite an active interest in political affairs, supporting the Republican party, and was a highly respected and valued citizen. At his death he left a widow and three children, and they had little to live on, but the mother worked hard and managed well, and not only cleared the farm of all indebtedness but increased its acreage from 120 to 160. She still resides on the old home place and is recognized as one of the most estimable ladies of the community. She is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has read quite extensively, and is well informed on all general questions.

On November 4, 1857, George G. Hawes, the subject of this sketch, was born. He attended the district schools to some extent, but as he was an only son, and, as his services were needed at home (especially after his father's death), his privileges in that direction were somewhat limited. He is now, however, well versed on topics of the times, and is a progressive and public-spirited citizen, who manifests a warm and commendable interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community and its upbuilding. He votes with the Republican party, and since 1890 has efficiently served as a member of the town board of supervisors. In 1892, under his supervision a pleasant residence was erected on the farm which is now the home of himself and widowed mother. His entire life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits, and in his chosen work he has met with success.

HENRY HOLLER. Although many have longer resided in Waupaca county than this gentleman there are few more prominent citizens in Marion than he. A native of Germany, he was born in the Kingdom of Prussia, May 28th, 1857, and is a son of John and Mary (Baine) Holler, who were also natives of the same neighborhood. The father was a miller by trade and followed that pursuit in his native land, but after coming to America engaged in farming. To them were born four children, namely: Louise, now the wife of Fred Lade, of Clintonville, Wis.; William, who is serving as postmaster of Marion; Catherine, wife of John Fuchs, and Henry, of this sketch. In 1859 the parents bade adieu to home and friends and emigrated to America, locating in Auburn, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., where the father purchased forty acres of land, which he at once began to clear and improve, and on which he made his home until his death which occurred in 1867, dying of cancer of the stomach. About 1875 the mother became the wife of Christ Lade, a carpenter with whom she lived four years. She now resides in Forest, Wisconsin, and is the wife of John Row, a farmer.

The children all left home early in life to earn their own livelihoods. Their educational privileges were very meager, and other advantages were likewise limited. Henry Holler started out for himself at the age of fifteen, and for seven years remained in Fond du Lac county, where he was variously employed. He then went to Red River Valley, Minnesota, where he was engaged in farming for about a year, when he returned to Fond du Lac county, but soon after came to Marion where he followed carpentering. He had previously worked at that trade for two years, and then followed it for a similar period, after which he spent two years in a confectioner's store. In 1882 he opened a saloon which he still conducts. He is an industrious man, and whatever success he has achieved is due entirely to his own efforts.

On September 19, 1882, Mr. Holler was united in marriage with Miss Amelia Dieck, daughter of Ferdinand and Louise Dieck, the former a farmer by occupation. Four children have been born to them, as follows: John, deceased; Emma, Ella and Cora, all at home. In his political views Mr. Holler is a Democrat and has supported that party for the past twelve years. For three years he served as constable, proving a capable officer. In his religious views he is a Lutheran, and socially he is connected with Marion Lodge, No. 256, I. O. O. F.

GEORGE H. HILL was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., June 7, 1845, and is a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Richardson) Hill. Robert Hill was a successful farmer, and by his marriage with Elizabeth Richardson had six children, namely: Hannah, now Mrs. M. Libbey, of Manchester, N. H.; Mary, now Mrs. Daniel Grant, of Manchester, N. H.; Sarah, a widow; Emma, now Mrs. A. Furbess, of Manchester, N. H.; Robert, a farmer near Smith's Falls, Canada, and George H. Robert Hill and wife were of Irish descent, and located at an early day in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., where he bought eighty-five acres of land in its primitive state, and, with the assistance of his boys, opened up and cleared off a farm. The children received a common-school education, such as the times afforded, and most of them left home when young, went to Manchester, N. H., and engaged in work in the factories. The parents lived on the farm until about 1870, when they sold the homestead, moved to Ogdensburg, where they lived six years. Going then to the town of Lisbon, Robert Hill rented a farm, where he died in 1888. His widow then returned to Ogdensburg, where she is still living at the age of seventy-five.

George H. Hill remained at home and helped his parents until he was about twenty-two years of age; then went to Canada, where his brother was, and worked at farming in his employ. Following this occupation some two years, he returned to Ogdensburg, and learned the blacksmith's trade. On January 1, 1873, George H. Hill was united in marriage with Sarah J. Bowden, and two children have been born to them—Minot, living at Plainfield, Wau-shara Co. Wis., and Maude, who is at home. The parents of Mrs. Hill, William and Mary A. (Smith) Bowden, reside in Lisbon, N. Y., where Mr. Bowden had been engaged in farming. Our subject was farming near Ogdensburg for some years; then bought a farm of eighty-five acres in Canton, N. Y., which he cultivated successfully. This land was sold in 1885, and they then came to Almond township, Portage Co. Wis., where he commenced work in a blacksmith shop in the employ of John A. Bowden, with whom he still remains, now conducting the shop on shares. He bought the lot and built the house he now occupies. Politically Mr. Hill is a Republican. He is a member of the Methodist Church, as is his wife, who takes an active part in Church matters.

DON W. SAWYER, who has been the leader in political matters and a prominent and influential citizen, who gives his hearty support, to all worthy interests and enterprises, was born in Belmont township where he still resides, November 13, 1860. He is the third child of Stillman and Mary (Fogg) Sawyer, natives of the Pine Tree State, and honored early settlers of this community. He acquired his education in the public schools, but his privileges were somewhat limited, for at the age of fourteen he left home and began to do for himself. When a youth of fifteen he bought his time from his father and worked out for farmers by the month, and was also employed in a brick yard near Appleton, Outagamie county, for two seasons. During the winter season until eighteen years of age he was in attendance at the public schools. At the age of twenty years he took charge of the farm, his father having been elected county treasurer. He was thus employed four years, two of which he worked the farm on shares. In the fall of 1882, he was converted under the preaching of W. D. Cornell, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he has ever since been an active member.

On February 22, 1883, in Appleton, Wis., was consummated the marriage of Mr. Sawyer and Miss Alice Hough, who was born in Winchester township, Winnebago county, and is a daughter of Nathan Hough. This marriage has been blessed with five children—Orville D., Morris R., Daisy O., Bessie A. and Mary E., all living. Upon his marriage, Mr. Sawyer rented a farm, but continued to cultivate the old homestead. He had rented and operated his present farm for six years before purchasing it, which purchase was made in 1891. He first bought forty acres of land in Section 3, Belmont township, but now 162½ acres of rich and arable land yield to him a good income. He successfully carries on agricultural pursuits, and the neat, thrifty and attractive appearance of his farm indicates to the passerby his careful supervision.

By his ballot, Mr. Sawyer now upholds the men and measures of the Prohibition party, but formerly he was a supporter of the Republican party. He has been called to several official positions of honor and trust, was once pathmaster and is now clerk of School District No. 7. He filled the office of assessor one year, and in the spring of 1894 was elected chairman of the town board of supervisors. He served for three years as town treasurer, filling out an unexpired term, and was twice elected to that office. He is now chairman of the township committee of the Prohibition party, and was elected a delegate to the State convention at Milwaukee in 1894, but sickness prevented his attendance. On June 15, 1892, he was appointed postmaster of Sherman, and has since acceptably filled that position. In the various relations of life Mr. Sawyer is ever found true and faithful, and in all political positions he is a most capable official. He takes a warm interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community; is a wide-awake and public-spirited citizen, and no one doubts his loyalty to the right. In business and public affairs, his work is characterized by his systematic management, and to this may largely be attributed his well-deserved success in life.

ANDREW J. ROGERS is one of New York's sons, born in Steuben county, October 22, 1832. His parents, Asa and Mary (Dickson) Rogers, had a family of eight children: Asa, of Berlin, Wis.; Clarinda; Andrew J.; David R.; Martha, of Iowa; George E.; Mary, who was burned to death in Winnebago county, Wis.; and one who died in infancy. The father was a carpenter by trade and a lawyer by profession. In 1845, the family started westward, locating first at Racine, thence going to Summit, Milwaukee Co., Wis. In 1848, they removed to Omro, Winnebago county, where the father purchased forty acres of government land, and at that time there were only four settlers in the township. Mr. Rogers speculated in land to a considerable extent, and in connection with that business engaged in the practice of law in Omro. He held the office of justice of the peace in that place for twenty-four successive years, and his skill and ability as a lawyer won him a wide reputation and a liberal clientele. One of his knees became injured, which necessitated the amputation of his leg and this resulted in his death in March, 1865. His wife survived him only until July 3, 1866.

Andrew J. Rogers began his education in his native county; and in Milwaukee county, this State, his father and some of the neighbors hired a school teacher in order that their children might receive instruction. Two years passed after their arrival in Winnebago county before a school district was organized, but as soon as school privileges were again afforded him, Mr. Rogers resumed his studies, which he continued through the winter season until nineteen years of age, and under the parental roof he remained during his minority.

On September 20, 1864, Mr. Rogers married Julia Drace, a native of New York State, and a daughter of Elijah and Betsy (Stearn) Drace. He had learned the carpenter's trade with his father, and for some years had worked with his brother Asa in that line. Asa is now engaged in contracting and building, and his expert workmanship secures for him a liberal patronage.

November 20, 1863, our subject enlisted in the army, as a member of Company D, Thirty-second Wis. V. I., which went first to Vicksburg. The first battle in which he participated was at Jackson, Miss., and he was afterward in the Meridian campaign and the Sherman raid, then returned with his command to Vicksburg, having marched 450 miles in one month. There with five or six others, he was put in an ambulance and taken to the bank of the Mississippi river, supposedly to die; but determined to save his life if possible, Mr. Rogers gained the assistance of a negro, and was taken to the Soldiers Home which was then under the management of Mrs. Harvey, widow of ex-Governor Harvey. He was there partially restored to health, and was transported with his regiment to Cairo, Ill., and then went to Paducah, Ky., to fight General Forrest. The regiment afterward was transported to Waterloo, then marched to Decatur, Ala., where it continued until starting on the Atlanta campaign. At Decatur Mr. Rogers received an injury which almost cost him his life, and when his regiment started for Atlanta, he was left in the hospital and later sent to Hospital No. 1, in Nashville, Tenn., where he remained three months. He was engaged in battle at the time of the battle between the troops of General Hood and General Thomas, and at Nashville was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps and sent to guard prisoners in Indianapolis, where he remained until honorably discharged July 24, 1865. Whether on field of battle, on guard duty, or on the picket line, his loyalty was unquestioned, and his bravery and fidelity recognized.

Mr. Rogers has never fully recovered his health, and is yet unable to engage in manual labor. In 1882, he came to Union township, Waupaca county, and purchased forty acres of land in Section 28, where he lived three years, but, as he could not stand the hard work of the farm, he sold that property and came to his present home. He has twice served as chairman of the town board of supervisors; was justice of the peace one term, and is a valued citizen, progressive and public-spirited, in whom the best interests of the community find a friend. He is connected with the Grand Army Post, and the Odd Fellows Society.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rogers—Frances, now the wife of Augustus Behrend, of Union township; Herschel, of the same township; Ida, wife of Herman Hilderman, of Union township; Andrew and Hattie who are still under the parental roof.

SOREN JENSEN UHRENHOLDT.
Among the many farmers of Waupaca county who deserve credit and congratulation for the competence which they have won as the fruits of industry and wise management none, perhaps, is more deserving than Mr. Uhrenholdt. Though a comparatively late comer into the county, at a time when opportunities seemed few, he arrived with empty hands and pockets, and prosperity has since smiled kindly upon him. He has proved himself resourceful, fertile in expedients, quick to grasp a situation, plucky enough to dare where his keen judgment told him success was sure to follow, and his rise in life is the natural result. Through his years of early struggle, too, ran a thread of golden romance, which was without its influence in shaping his destiny.

In Denmark he had wooed Christine Toren, but her parents spurned his suit, because of social lines. Soren was only a poor country lad, without sufficient means or prospects. Christine belonged by education and by social position to a higher plane of life. Stung by this parental rejection, young Uhrenholdt came to America, to win if possible a modest competence, and then again claim the hand of her he loved. He was born in Denmark August 15, 1857, son of Jens Uhrenholdt, a farmer and stock raiser of fairly comfortable means, made by his own efforts, and one of a family of seven children. Educated in the common schools, he was given two years also in the high school, and his receptive memory readily assimilated the branches which he was there taught. But from the early age of twelve he was obliged to work out, and for twelve more years he was a farm laborer. At the age of twenty-four he served six months in the navy, as was customary in his native land, only imperfect physique debarring the young men from this service. Then came the unfortunate love affair. With the aid of a friend (for Soren was without means), he in the fall of 1882 purchased a ticket for America, and sailed from Copenhagen, landing at New York nineteen days later. He had previously made some slight study of the English language, and was not handicapped as so many of his countrymen have been. Reaching Waupaca with scarcely more than a dollar in his pockets, he expended the whole amount for leggins and rubbers, and spent the winter in the woods. And the following summer he farmed. Resuming the life of a lumberman the second winter, he became seriously ill, and returned to his native land, either to recover or die. He had by strict economy saved some money, though he had sent some home, and had made a small purchase payment on eighty acres of land in St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county.

He remained in Denmark three months and recuperated. Returning to Waupaca he again took up the ceaseless toil of life. He purchased 160 acres of land in Section 30, Farmington township, involving himself for almost the entire amount. Renting the St. Lawrence place, he moved to his new purchase in Farmington with a single purpose, to prepare a home for himself there, and to that end he labored unceasingly and saved. The third trip from America to Denmark was made in February, 1887. This time he went to claim his bride, his former sweetheart. He was no longer without means or prospects. He was a prosperous well-to-do farmer, able to furnish a house comfortably, in luxury if need be. The parental ban was withdrawn, and the marriage banns were published. S. J. Uhrenholdt and Christine Toren were married, and together they came to the Wisconsin home which he had prepared. Mr. Uhrenholdt has lived here ever since. He now owns 320 acres of land, of which 175 acres are tillable. The home farm is under a high state of cultivation. He has become one of the most prominent farmers of Waupaca county. Not content with the scope of knowledge ordinarily acquired by a farmer, he is constantly observing and reading. With naturally quick mental powers, this ambition to become a farmer in the highest sense of the word is having its just reward. New and improved methods of farming he has introduced with great profit to himself. And it is not by the close accumulation of his gains that Mr. Uhrenholdt is rising to affluence. He does not stint himself or his family, but brings into the home many comforts and luxuries, far beyond the custom of many others in equally good circumstances. His forte lies in opening up new avenues of agricultural wealth, and in the application of judicious management. He is now one of the chief potato raisers of his township.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Uhrenholdt are Jens, Christine, Johanna and Andrew, all living. Himself and wife are members of the Lutheran Church. Politically he is a Democrat, though not bound by party lines, for he votes for the men and the measures he deems the best. He is a warm friend of free trade, for practical and original reasons. Mr. Uhrenholdt constantly broadens his field of knowledge from whatever sources are available, and he is remarkably well informed on the issues of the day, political, educational and otherwise. He has not only crossed the ocean five times, but has visited the great Northwest, and spent considerable time at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893. It would be difficult to find in Waupaca county a success in life more brilliant than his.

ALFERD D. LYTLE is at the present time engineer of the city waterworks of Merrill, Lincoln county, in which city he has made his home since the fall of 1881. Wisconsin claims him as one of her native sons, his birth having occurred October 19, 1853, in Stockton, Portage county.

His father, James E. Lytle, was born in Richmond, Va., in 1816, and little is known of the ancestors of our subject, save that the paternal grandfather was drowned when James E. was a mere boy. The latter went to New York, where he married Fannie Dymond, who was born there in 1818 to John and Mary Dymond. Her parents had both been previously married, having children by those unions, but Mrs. Lytle had but one own brother and two sisters: Royal, Miranda and Clara. James E. Lytle became an early settler of Plover, Portage Co., Wis., arriving there in 1848. Near that place he cleared and developed a farm, but now makes his home with his son William, at Stevens Point, Wis. He is a Republican in political sentiment, though he has taken no active part in politics. His wife crossed the dark river December 7, 1893. In their family were nine children, only four of whom survive: George H., Alferd D., William T., and John D. Frank died at the age of thirteen years; Maria at the age of nine; Sanford when six, Herman when two, and Horace in infancy.

Alferd D. Lytle, whose name introduces this record, was reared to agricultural pursuits, remaining on the home farm until he had attained his majority, although he had previously worked for others, being at the age of sixteen employed as a farm hand. His educational advantages were such as the district schools of the neighborhood afforded. At the age of twenty-one he became fireman in a sawmill, where he learned the trade of an engineer, which has been his chief occupation ever since. In the spring of 1876 he was given charge of an engine on the Wisconsin Central railroad; in the fall of 1881, he came to Merrill, being in the employ of the Merrill Boom Company, running the engine with which they drove piles. For two winters our subject worked in the lumber woods of Wisconsin, but most of his business life has been devoted to engineering.

At Spencer, Wis., in the spring of 1877, Mr. Lytle was united in marriage with Sarah Ruth Nutting, a daughter of Edmond and Caroline Hopkins (Parmelee) Nutting. She was born in Pittsford, Rutland Co., Vt., in 1855, and is one of a family of eleven children, the others living being Lottie, Ella, Albertina and Frances, the rest having died in infancy. The father's death occurred in 1871, and the mother later became the wife of C. C. Lyon, who died in 1886, by which union there is one child, Samuel S. To Mr. and Mrs. Lytle were born four children: Lottie Luella, Arthur Erwin, Berte Alford and Fred Delbert.; Lottie and Fred died in infancy. Mr. Lytle is prominently identified with the Republican party, and for one year served as city marshal of Merrill. Since April, 1893, he has been engineer of the city waterworks, and is well qualified to fill that responsible position. Both in business circles and in private life he is honored and esteemed for his upright character. He is a man whose word can be relied upon, and whose promise is considered as good as his bond. Socially he is a member of Jennie Lodge, No. 32, I. O. O. F., and he belonged to the Brotherhood of Stationary Engineers of Wausau, No. 10.

JACOB J. GRAEBEL, a prominent merchant of Wausau, Marathon county, was born in Bavaria, Germany, June 25, 1854, and is a son of Nicholas and Louisa Graebel, who were both born in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Graebel were the parents of five children, namely: Frederick, residing in the town of Hamburg, Marathon county; Jacob J., the subject of this sketch; Nicholas (Jr.), residing in Wausau; Louisa, wife of Ludwick Schaumburger, in Wausau, and Marguerita, wife of Julius Wittke, of the town of Weston, Marathon county. The father, Nicholas Graebel, Sr., died in his native land. His widow, who, in 1881, came from Germany to America, married again, her second husband being Simon Schaumburger, by whom also she had five children, all now living. They are: Katherine, wife of Patrick Burns, who resides in Wausau, Simon and Charles, who are in Wausau; Caroline, wife of Richard Hanish, in Wausau; and Mary, wife of Earnest Hanish, in Wausau. The mother, Mrs. Simon Schaumburger, also resides in Wausau.

Jacob J. Graebel was reared and educated in the Fatherland. After leaving school he learned the trade of a silk plush weaver, and followed it until 1883. Then, with his wife and family he removed to the United States and located in Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., and in 1884 engaged in his present business. In 1879, in Germany, Jacob J. Graebel was united in marriage with Miss Katherine Emich, and to their union have been born nine children, of whom six are living: Katherine, Augusta, William F., Annie, Benjamin H. and Joseph. The parents of Mrs. Graebel, Philip and Francisca Emich, were born in Germany, and are now deceased. In his political views, Mr. Graebel is liberal. In religious association the family are attendants of St. Paul's Evangelical Church.

WILLIAM G. COLLAR was born at Kansasville, Racine Co., Wis., May 3, 1858, and is a son of Daniel N. Collar, whose father, Jared Collar, was born in Massachusetts in 1791. Their ancestors were prominent men in Colonial days. Jared Collar married a lady by the name of Rhoda Northway, and they became the parents of the following named children: Ornan, Aurin, Daniel N., Erastus, Moses, Jared, Harriet, Rhoda, Merton P., and one daughter who died young. He came with his family to Wisconsin in 1837, and settled in Racine county on wild land. Jared Collar lived with his son Daniel up to the time of his death, and died on the old homestead in Racine county, Wis., in 1878 in his eighty-seventh year. He was well-to-do, a man of sterling worth, and a prominent Republican. His wife died twenty-one years previously.

Daniel N. Collar, son of Jared Collar, and father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Massachusetts in 1824. He received only a common-school education, but always took an active part in educational matters, and was elected school superintendent. In June, 1857, he married Letitia Ginty, who was born in Toronto, Canada, in 1836, and they had four children: William G., Ella M., Rhoda Bell (who died while young) and Flora G. Daniel N. Collar was a soldier in the Forty-seventh Wis. V. I., and served as commissary-sergeant. After the war he took the old homestead in Racine county, where he now lives. His wife's mother lives with him at the advanced age of ninety-three years.

The parents of Mrs. Daniel N. Collar, James and Mary Ann (Clay) Ginty, were born in Ireland, and came to Toronto, Canada, while young. They were married in that city in 1831. Seven of the ten children born to this union were: George C., John, William, Thomas, Henry, Eliza and Letitia, all of whom grew to maturity. James Ginty was a tailor by occupation, and came with his family to Racine, Wis., about 1845. He served throughout the late Civil war, enlisting in the Twenty-second Wis. V. I., in 1865 was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Forty-seventh Wis. V. I., and served in that capacity until the close of the war. He was for a time a prisoner of war and was confined with the Twenty-second in Libby prison. In 1866, he was appointed deputy light-house keeper at Racine, Wis., which position he held for about fifteen years. His death occurred in 1888. His sons Henry and Thomas were killed during the war—Thomas at Lookout Mountain; and Henry, who was in the navy, was on one of the vessels sunk by the "Merrimac" in Hampton Roads in 1862. He was wounded and taken prisoner, but escaped from prison, was reported dead, and his funeral sermon was preached at Racine, Wis. He returned to Racine, and, as soon as well, enlisted again, was given a commission as lieutenant for bravery on the battlefield, and subsequently was killed on the skirmish line. George C. was a colonel in the same regiment with his father, the Forty-seventh Wis. V. I., and both served with marked distinction.

William G. Collar was reared on the farm, educated in the district schools, left home when sixteen, and went to Minnesota, working on a farm, driving a breaking team and threshing. In the winter he taught the district school in the township of Norway, Racine Co., Wis., and in the fall of 1873 went to work in the lumberyard at Union Grove, Racine county. The following spring he went to Racine and engaged with the lumber firm of Trumbull & Doud, remaining with them some ten years, first working as a common laborer one year, then as foreman of the yard for four years, and finally went out on the road as salesman, continuing until the firm went out of business. He came to Merrill, Lincoln Co., Wis., in the spring of 1887, was in the employ of the Merrill Lumber Co. for three years, then, in July, 1890, became superintendent of the Champagne Lumber Co. After one year, on the death of Mr. Champagne, he was made manager. In 1892 he bought some stock in the concern, and in December of that year was made treasurer and manager.

In August, 1894, Mr. Collar married Agnes McGuire, born in Wisconsin, and daughter of John McGuire. In politics Mr. Collar is a Republican. He is a 32nd-degree Mason of the Wisconsin Consistory, a Knight of Pythias, past chancellor of the lodge, senior and district deputy grand chancellor; and is also a member of the Order of Elks. He has traveled considerably over the United States, and is largely what is termed a self-made man.

MISS HATTIE B. MOBERG, editor and publisher of the Amherst Advocate, was born in Amherst, Portage county, November 8, 1874, and is a daughter of Andrew and Prudence E. (Buck) Moberg.

Miss Moberg is a graduate of the Amherst High School; commenced work as a job printer at the age of fifteen, taking charge of her brother's office at his death; and February 1, 1893, commenced the publication of the Amherst Advocate in connection with Prof. Haven. In July, 1894, Prof. Haven disposed of his interest in the paper, and since that date Miss Moberg has been sole proprietor of the Advocate, which has a large circulation throughout the county.

Andrew Moberg, father of the subject of this sketch, is a harness-maker by occupation, and a highly respected resident of Amherst, Portage county. He was born in Sweden February 20, 1843, and is a son of Andrew and Beata Moberg, both natives of Sweden. In 1846 Mr. Moberg came to America with his mother, who soon after died in New York, leaving three children. Mr. Moberg was placed under guardianship of Peter Hilstrum, of Bishop Hill, Ill., with whom he lived until he was twelve years of age, when he resisted his authority and started out to work for himself. He received a limited education in the district schools of Bishop Hill. In 1860 he went to Galesburg, Ill., commenced work at the harness-making business, and remained there until July 1, 1862, when he enlisted in Company E, Seventy-first Ill. V. I. He served until October 21, 1862, receiving his discharge on that date, and went to Chicago. He resumed his trade of harness-making, at which he continued to work in different parts of Illinois until December, 1864; then removed to Wisconsin. In January, 1865, he located in Stevens Point, Portage county, where he continued to follow his trade, and in the fall of that year removed to the village of Amherst, where he has since resided.

On December 24, 1872, in Amherst, Portage county, Andrew Moberg was united in marriage with Miss Prudence E. Buck, and they have become the parents of the following named children: Chester E., who died at Moline, Ill., July 6, 1890; Hattie B. (whose name introduces these lines), Lorenzo P., Lucy A., Charles, F. H., James L., Adelbert, Theresa G. and George S. Mrs. Moberg is a daughter of Charles E. and Harriet Buck. Mr. Moberg is a staunch Republican, and has served as postmaster of Amherst for two and a half years, and is a member, socially, of the Modern Woodmen of America. The family attend the Methodist Church.

GEORGE W. LATTA, attorney at law in Antigo, Langlade county, has the distinction of having been the first lawyer in that county, and holds a prominent place in the public and social life of the thriving little town.

The father of our subject, Benjamin Latta, was born in Erie county, N. Y., in 1816, and but little is known of his ancestors, except that they came from Ireland. His father visited Wisconsin at one time and died of cholera on the boat on his way home. The mother had died sometime previous to this, leaving ten children, of whom five sons and two daughters were Benjamin's own brothers and sisters, and two were step-brothers. Benjamin Latta was married in New York, in 1841, to Deborah C. Stevens, who was born in 1817 in Clarence Hollow, that State. Her father, whose ancestors came from Germany, was a farmer and hotel-keeper, and had a family of ten children. Mr. Latta came west in 1845, and located on government land in Rock county, the same property on which he now resides. Two years later his wife and family, consisting at that time of three children, joined him, coming by boat from Buffalo to Chicago and thence to their future home. It was then a wilderness, but time and hard labor have wrought great changes, and Mr. Latta has not only made of it a valuable property, but has increased the acreage until the farm now comprises about 300 acres, all highly cultivated. As an incident of those early days it may be mentioned that the material used in the house then built, and in which the family still reside, was brought by team all the way from Milwaukee. To this pioneer couple ten children were born, as follows: Susan, who became the wife of William Stewart, a farmer in Rock county; William, also farming in that county; Benjamin Frank, an attorney in St. Paul; Almettie E., deceased; Albert W.; George W., our subject;

Geo. W. Latta

Darius K., who lives on the old homestead; Josephine, who is now Mrs. Coles; Ida, who is Mrs. Liddle; and Ulysses G., who is a physician in Chicago. Sickness came and the wife and mother was taken from them in 1887. Mr. Latta is a quiet, unassuming man in the locality in which he has lived, and commands the respect and esteem of all who know him.

George W. Latta, the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Bradford, Rock Co., Wis., July 29, 1851. He was graduated from Albion Academy, in Dane county, Wis., at the age of twenty-one years, after completing a four-years' course. He then went to the State University, at Madison, entering the Law Department, from which he was graduated in 1874. In October of the same year he took up his residence in Shawano, Wis., and began the practice of law. He remained there until the spring of 1881, when he removed to Antigo, Langlade county, where he has since made his home. He has an extensive practice, and commands the respect and confidence of the entire community. In politics Mr. Latta is a Republican, and has always been prominent in his party, having held many minor offices and been a frequent delegate to State conventions. He was the first district attorney of Langlade county, and after holding the office four years declined to accept it again. Although his district was considered as strongly Democratic, he was elected to the Assembly in 1894 by a majority of 300 votes. He is a member of the Masonic Order, belonging to the Blue Lodge at Antigo, and Concatenated Order of Hoo-hoo.

Mr. Latta was married, October 1, 1878, to Rachel Lawton, who was born in Dane county, Wis., daughter of Alancen B. and Abigail (Potter) Lawton. The father was a farmer, mill owner and merchant, and now resides with his daughter Rachel, the mother having died in 1886. There was but one other child in this family, Sarah, who is also deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Latta three children have been born: Maud A., Grace D. and Georgiana W. Mr. Latta occupies one of the finest homes in Antigo, a beautiful house surrounded by large and well-improved grounds, and he and his estimable wife dispense a generous hospitality which makes them very popular hosts.

PHIL PLUNKETT, now roadmaster for the Chicago & North Western railroad on the branches leading from Clintonville to Oconto and Marshfield, Wis., is one of the prominent and leading citizens of Waupaca county, where he has made his home since the establishment of the road here in 1879. He was formerly connected with the Lake Shore railroad before it became the North Western system, and aided in its construction from Clintonville to Rock Cut, being roadmaster at that time. Ireland has furnished many of the leading men of Waupaca county, and among these is numbered Mr. Plunkett, who was born in Crferm, on that Isle, in 1837, being a son of James and Mary (Clark) Plunkett, who were also natives of the Emerald Isle, and there lived and died. Their family consisted of the following children: Phil, of this sketch; Thomas (deceased), who was a resident of Stamford, Conn.; Richard (deceased), who lived in Jersey City, N. J.; and Patrick (deceased), who made his home in Syracuse, N. Y., and was an employe of the New York Central Railroad Company.

Mr. Plunkett, whose name opens this record, left his native land at the age of fourteen for America, landing in New York, where he made his home five years, when he came to Wisconsin. His whole life has been devoted to railroad work, and his long continuance in the employ of one road shows the fidelity with which he discharges his duties, having the unprecedented record of not losing a single day's time in thirty-six years. Mr. Plunkett arrived in Ripon, Wis., on the completion of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad to that city, at eight o'clock in the evening, November 15, 1856, and there continued to reside nineteen years, being connected with the St. Paul system during that entire time. From 1875 until 1879 he served as roadmaster for the Sheboygan & Fond du Lac railroad. While in Ripon, he had charge of the yard for twelve years, but before coming to this State he was also engaged in railroad work, helping to lay the track from Utica to Boonville, N. Y., in the employ of Phelps & Kenney, and then engaged in railroad construction in South Carolina; he also laid track from London to Port Stanley, Canada West.

In February, 1860, in Ripon, Wis., Mr. Plunkett was joined in wedlock with Miss Alice Moran, daughter of David Moran, an early settler of Springvale, Wis. To our subject and wife have been born three children: Mary, who was a teacher in Clintonville, Wis., and died in 1886; Alice; and James, a railroad employe at Des Moines, Iowa. In politics, Mr. Plunkett is a Republican, and takes an active interest in the welfare of his party, to which he gives his earnest support. During his residence in Waupaca county he has won the respect and confidence of all with whom he has come in contact, and is justly numbered among her worthy and representative citizens.

ALBERT C. LOUCKS. Among the highly esteemed and prominent young citizens of Marshfield, Wood county, is this gentleman, who is a western man by birth and training, for he was born in Clinton county, Iowa, March 6, 1865.

His father, Dewitt C. Loucks, was born in Niagara county, N. Y., March 29, 1838, and the grandfather, Christopher Loucks, was born in Pennsylvania in 1803, while the great-grandfather, Adam Loucks, was a native of Germany, and when a young man emigrated to America. He was a soldier and officer in the Revolutionary war, and married Elizabeth Foss, whose father was a colonel in the struggle for independence. For a livelihood he followed farming in Pennsylvania for a time, and later removed with his family to the Mohawk Valley in New York State, and subsequently to Niagara county, N. Y., where he passed away in 1861. He was a well-informed man, and a substantial farmer who acquired a competence through his own efforts. His wife survived him but a short time. They had a family of seven children: Peter, Christopher, Charles, Margaret, Dorothea, Elizabeth and Mary. Christopher Loucks also followed farming, and married Elizabeth Sill in Niagara county about 1835. The lady was born in the Empire State in 1815, and was the youngest of the three children of Albert and Mary (Jones) Sill, the other two, a son and daughter, being named for their parents. The father, who made farming his life work, died in 1817, when Elizabeth was only two years of age, and the mother afterward became the wife of Henry Hill, by whom she had one son, Henry. Her death occurred in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Loucks became the parents of eight children, namely: Peter, Dewitt C., Orlando, Charles, Martha, Lucretia, Elizabeth Helen, and one, the eldest, who died in infancy. The father of this family followed farming in New York, and in 1856 he emigrated with his family from Canada to Muscatine, Iowa, where he engaged in the hotel business. In 1866 he removed to Clinton, Iowa, where he died the following year, and there his wife passed away in 1893.

Dewitt Loucks acquired his education in the common schools of Canada, and there remained when his parents removed to the Hawkeye State, being then nineteen years of age; but in 1859 he joined his father in Iowa and purchased a farm. In September, 1861, he married Charlotte D. Clendening, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1837. Her parents, John and Margaret (Hamilton) Clendening, were natives of Scotland, and in 1851 removed from the East to Muscatine, Iowa, where the father died in 1858, while the mother survived until 1878. Their family of ten children comprised the following: Ann M., Stewart, Margaret, Thomas, Isabel, Charlotte, Heely, Amanda, and two who died in infancy; they were both named John, and were the first two children born to the parents.

For two years after his marriage Dewitt Loucks followed farming and then became an artist, devoting his time to that work for a considerable period in Illinois. In 1864 he removed to Clinton, Iowa, where for sixteen years he was employed as a filer, then leasing a farm in the Hawkeye State, operated it for five years, after which, in July, 1888, he came to Marshfield, Wis. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Loucks: Albert, Walter, Helena and Minnie, all yet living, and Helen and Amanda who died in childhood. The father of this family is a stalwart Republican, and labors earnestly for the support of his friends, but has never sought office for himself. He and his wife are consistent members of the Methodist Church, and he is a member of the Odd Fellows Society and a prominent worker in the Modern Woodmen of America, in the interest of which he has traveled for the past four years, organizing new lodges throughout Wisconsin. He is also connected with the Woodmen of the World.

We now again take up the personal history of Albert C. Loucks, who attended the common schools until seventeen years of age and then left home, going to Omaha, Neb., where he worked as a common laborer. He had previously learned the trade of saw-filing. At the age of eighteen he joined a surveying party in Omaha on the Union Pacific railroad, and worked with them for more than three years, when he came to Marshfield and worked for the Upham Manufacturing Co., when he met with an accident, breaking his leg, and for some time was disabled, but as soon as possible began work in a machine shop, where he remained for a year. He then went to Appleton, Wis., and on to Milwaukee, where he met with another accident, and again returned to Marshfield. Here he was employed as baggagemaster at the Omaha depot until March, 1891, when he established a livery barn, and is now at the head of a successful business.

On November 26, 1891, in Marshfield, Wis., was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Albert Loucks and Miss Caroline Horn, a native of Brillion, and a daughter of Christian and Amelia (Werner) Horn. Her father was born in Lobstein, Germany, May 13, 1827, emigrated to America, landing in New York in 1852, was married February 28, 1857, and later removed to Brillion, Wis., where he engaged in farming. His death occurred April 14, 1884. His wife was born in Saxony, Germany, June 24, 1826, and passed away December 5, 1882. They had three children—Caroline; Henry, a druggist of Marshfield; and Herman, a farmer of Brillion, Wisconsin.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Loucks has been blessed with one interesting child, Irma Gwendoline, who was born July 30, 1893. In politics our subject was formerly a Republican, but is now a Democrat, and in his social relations he is a member of the Modern Woodmen. His life has been well spent, and he is a worthy representative of an honored family, and enjoys the respect and confidence of a large circle of friends.

CYRENIUS ROGERS was born in Clayton township, Winnebago Co., Wis., April 5, 1849, and is a son of Elias and Thankful (Patch) Rogers, the former a native of the State of New York, born September 5, 1810, and the latter of Vermont, born June 3, 1812. The grandfather was Samuel Rogers, who passed his last days in the home of his son Elias. The latter was married in New York, and had a family of four children: Henry, of Oregon; Harriet, widow of Tyler Cole, and a resident of Neenah, Wis.; Elias, who died in Dayton township, Waupaca county; and Mary A., who became the wife of Courtney Scott, and died near Winneconne, Wis. In September, 1839, Samuel Rogers came to Walworth county, Wis., secured a claim on which he remained one year, when he returned to New York, and one year later, accompanied by his son Elias and family, returned to the claim, arriving in the county in September, 1841. Here they remained until in January, 1849, when they removed to Clayton township, Winnebago county, Elias having selected land there the previous fall. A daughter Lncy, who was born in Walworth county, died at the age of six years. In Clayton township, Elias Rogers purchased a partially improved farm, and added to it until at one time he had 200 acres of rich land. The children born on that farm were Cyrenius, and Almeda, who died at the age of six-and-a-half years.

The first of the Rogers family to come to Dayton township, Waupaca county, were two brothers of our subject, Henry and Elias, who in the spring of 1854 selected claims in Sections 18 and 19—about 320 acres in its primitive condition. In the fall of the same year the father took up his residence upon the farm which is now owned and operated by our subject, and there, devoting his energies to agricultural pursuits, passed his remaining days, his death having occurred in July, 1867. He was a Republican and a staunch supporter of the principles of the party. Personally he was a robust man of considerable strength, and his sterling worth won him many friends. His widow is now living with her son Cyrenius Rogers.

The district schools afforded Cyrenius Rogers his educational privileges, and since attaining to mature years he has been a strong friend of public schools, doing all in his power to promote their interest. He was reared upon the home farm which is now his property, and soon became familiar with farm work in its various details. He spent nine winters in the lumber woods, and also "ran the river" for a short time. When a young man he worked as a farm laborer for others and upon his father's death he took charge of the homestead, purchasing it from his mother.

Mr. Rogers was married August 21, 1884, in Waupaca to Miss Clara Boughton, a native of Waupaca township, born March 24, 1855, and a daughter of Myron and Maria (Patridge) Boughton, the former born in Wyoming county, N. Y., the latter in Trumbull county, Ohio. Mrs. Rogers is a lady of culture and refinement, and in her maidenhood attended the high school of Waupaca, after which she successfully taught school in Waupaca county twelve terms, and two terms in Steuben county, Indiana. The marriage has resulted in the following children: Frederick A., born October 13, 1885; and Elsie M., born April 3, 1892. With their parents they constitute an interesting little family who have a pleasant home on a 160-acre farm which yields to the owner a good income. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers are members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Rogers is identified with the Republican party, and is well known and highly respected in the community where he has resided for forty years.

JAMES MEIKLEJOHN, a highly-respected citizen of Rhinelander, Oneida county, where he conducts a prosperous mill-wright business, is a native of the Province of Ontario, Canada, born April 3, 1851, in the County of Hastings.

His father, also named James, was born in Scotland in 1818, a son of William Meiklejohn, a weaver, who had a family of five sons and two daughters, the names of the sons being James, John, Peter, William and David. Of these James emigrated to Canada in 1842, settling on a farm in Hastings county, Ontario. In Scotland he had married Margaret Lindsay, who was born there in 1816, daughter of Andrew Lindsay, a farmer, who came to the United States and about the year 1844 settled on wild land in Lafayette county, Wis., where he died. To Mr. and Mrs. James Meiklejohn, Sr., were born in Canada the following named nine children: William, Eliza, Andrew, James, Isabella, John, Margaret, Lindsay and Sarah. The father was accidentally killed in 1865 by falling off a building, and he was in such affluent circumstances that he left to his family a fine farm of 300 acres clear of debt, and here the widowed mother now lives with her son John. William Meiklejohn, grandfather of our subject, followed his son James to Canada, settling near him, and there followed his trade up to his death, which occurred in 1870.

The subject proper of this sketch, whose name appears at the opening, was reared on his father's farm, and there remained until he was seventeen years old, when he commenced to learn the trade of carpenter, which he followed three years in Canada. In 1871 he moved to Michigan, for a time working at his trade in Colon, St. Joseph county, whence after the Chicago fire he went to that city, but after a short time he came to Wisconsin, the first winter making his home with his uncle in Lafayette county. In the following spring he proceeded to Independence, Iowa, where he made his home until Christmas, when he returned to Wisconsin. In the summer of the next year he went to St. Louis, Mo., remaining there till Christmas, then, again coming to Wisconsin, resided here four more years, or until his marriage, all the time—in Independence, St. Louis and Wisconsin—following his trade. In 1876, having married, he and his young wife moved to Hastings county, Canada, residing there four years, Mr. Meiklejohn having rented a sawmill where-in he manufactured lumber. In 1880 he once more came to Wisconsin, in the southern portion, where he worked in the lead mines, in the following spring moving to Wausau, where he followed the trade of mill-wright some five years. This brings us now to 1887, the year of our subject's coming to Rhinelander, where for two years he worked for Brown Bros. Lumber Co., the next year building several mills, and in 1890 he formed a partnership with John M. Olsen in the manufacture of lumber, under the firm name of Olsen & Meiklejohn; in 1893 Mr. Olsen died, and Mr. Meiklejohn has since conducted the business alone.

In 1876 our subject was married to Miss Sarah J. Horsley, who was born in Lafayette county, Wis., in 1858, daughter of William and Mary (Bramwell) Horsley, who had a family of six children: John, Henry, Hudson, Sarah J., William and Bramwell; the father of these, who is a lead miner by occupation, is still living, but the mother died in 1889. To Mr. and Mrs. Meiklejohn has come one child, Earnest H., born in 1877, and now (1895) studying law in Miller & McCormick's office, Rhinelander. Politically our subject is a Democrat; socially he is a member of the F. & A. M. Lodge at Rhinelander.

CHARLES TEIPNER, who ranks among the foremost of the successful, energetic citizens of Antigo, Langlade county, was born October 12, 1850, at Oshkosh, Wis., a son of Charles and Annie Teipner.

The father of our subject was born in Saxony, Germany, in February, 1818, and was twice married in that country, having by his first wife one son, August, who came to this country, served in the war of the Rebellion, in Company B, Third Wisconsin Cavalry, at the end of three years returning home, and then re-enlisting in the same regiment and company. He died in the spring of 1864 at Little Rock, Ark., of wounds received in battle. By Mr. Teipner's second marriage there were seven children: Charles, Julius, Frederick, Edwin, Dorothea, Laura, and Anna. The father, who was an upholsterer and harness maker by trade, came to America, in 1848, and making his first New-World home in Milwaukee, worked there at the butcher's trade some eighteen months. He then went to Oshkosh, and later came to Antigo, where he now resides. His wife is also living.

The subject of these lines, whose name introduces this sketch, received his education at the common schools of Oshkosh, which was supplemented by a course of study at the Business College of that city. At the age of twenty-one years he commenced to learn the butchering business, and remained in Oshkosh until 1874, following his trade and dealing in horses. He then went on the road as salesman for a Chicago firm, manufacturers of and dealers in buggies, his route being throughout Wisconsin and Iowa, and after a couple of years returned to Oshkosh. He then took a trip to southern Kansas, and there established a hog ranch, raising and marketing hogs; but after a year he sold out and opened a butcher shop at Girard, Kansas, which, in 1879, he also disposed of. In December of that year he set out for Antigo, Wisconsin, (where his brother Julius had settled some eight months before), traveling by rail to Clintonville, thence by stage to Shawano, thence to Langlade with a team conveying necessary provisions, from that point walking to Antigo, a distance of twenty-five miles. That now flourishing city then consisted of seven log shanties, with a mill in course of construction, and here the two brothers set to work to build a log house, a species of inn, which was the first place in that section where there was to be found "entertainment for man and beast," the necessary supplies being brought all the way from Wausau, thirty-five miles distant, which at that time was also the nearest post-office. Charles and Julius have ever since been in business together, the old log house being replaced by their present frame hotel building, which they erected in 1884-5. They have been also engaged, more or less, in logging, handling real estate and dealing extensively in horses, not only buying and selling, but breeding high-grade horses, having brought into the county the first standard-bred horse (a Hambletonian) ever seen in this section of the country. In the lumber branch of their extensive business they have always bought their pine standing, cut it, logged it, and sold their own logs.

Politically, our subject is a Democrat, casting his first vote for Horace Greeley, and has always taken an active interest in the growth and prosperity of the county and city in which he has lived for the past fifteen years. He served as clerk of the court one term, as under sheriff, and as member of the city council and school board. He is a stockholder in the Langlade County Bank, and in the Antigo Driving Park Association, of which latter he is president. Neither of the brothers is married, but they are wedded to their business in which they have justly earned so high a reputation for honesty and integrity.

LOUIS BERGNER. One of the most prominent and substantial business men of Pulcifer, Green Valley township, Shawano county, is Mr. Bergner. He was born in Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, Germany, July 2, 1843, and is a son of George and Elizabeth (Machleith) Bergner, who was born in the afore-mentioned place.

George Bergner was well educated, and when a young man learned the trade of a mason, which he followed all his life. He came to the United States in 1868 with his wife and two of their children, the majority of their family having preceded them. They landed in New York and there located. About five years later, when sixty-seven years of age, Mr. Bergner died at the home of his son Louis, who is the subject proper of this sketch. His wife, who survives him, still resides in New York, at the age of eighty-four. Their children were as follows: Julia Anna, deceased wife of Fred Koch, of Fort Howard, Wis.; Emma, now

Mrs. Richard Walter, of New York; Richard, deceased; Charles, a contractor, residing in Germany; Henry, a dentist, in New York; Augusta, now Mrs. De Buse, of New York; Louis, and Christian, a resident of Pulcifer, Wisconsin.

Louis Bergner received a good common-school education, and at the age of fourteen commenced to learn the trade of a millwright. He served an apprenticeship of three years, worked one year at the trade, and then started to learn the trade of a miller, at which he worked for four years. In July, 1866, he sailed from Hamburg for the United States on the steamer "Germania," and landed in New York after a voyage of fifteen days. He worked there one year as cabinet maker and carpenter, having acquired considerable knowledge of both these trades in Germany. In the fall of 1867 he went to Fort Howard, Brown Co., Wis., and procured work in a sash and door factory, at which business he continued for nine years.

In the year 1868, Louis Bergner was united in marriage, at Fort Howard, with Miss Augusta Steuk, who was born in Prussia, August 9, 1847, and they have had the following named children: Albert, born February 2, 1869, married Annie Krueger, and resides in Pulcifer; Henry, born March 20, 1871, married Mary Hanson, and they reside in Pulcifer; Louisa, born May 20, 1873, and Hermina, born February 20, 1877, both at home. Miss Augusta Steuk, now Mrs. Louis Berger, came to the United States about 1867. Her parents, Ardmian and Wilhelmina (Geske) Steuk followed her a few years later, and first settled on Long Island, afterward removing to Fort Howard, Wisconsin.

In 1876 Mr. Bergner removed with his wife and family to Duck Creek, Brown county, where he worked a gristmill for one year. He then removed to Bonduel, Shawano county, rented a store there, and put in a stock of general merchandise. The first year in Bonduel he ran a gristmill, and his wife attended to the store. The second year he left the mill and gave his entire attention to the store. At the end of two years he disposed of his stock, came to Pulcifer, bought his present site on the Oconto river, and put up a gristmill the same fall, which was in 1880. His family joined him the following spring. In 1882 he built a sawmill at the side of the gristmill, and in 1883 built a planing-mill. Mr. Bergner owns and carries on a farm of sixty-eight acres, fifty of which are cleared. He is a Republican in politics, but has never sought office. Both he and Mrs. Bergner are members of the German Lutheran Church. Mr. Bergner began life a poor boy, and was penniless when he landed in New York. He now has a large and extensive business, is very popular, and has many friends. He has an able assistant in his daughter Louisa, who attends to the books and looks after his business in general.

WILLIAM ZORN, the highly-respected and popular chief of police of Stevens Point, Portage county, was born in Fessenden, Germany, October 1, 1864, and is a son of Frederick and Annie Zorn, who were born in Germany. They were the parents of four children, three of whom are living, namely: William, the subject of our sketch; Amelia, wife of Peter Ulrich, and Mary, both residing in Germany.

William Zorn was reared and educated in his native town. His boyhood days were spent upon the homestead farm in the Fatherland, and on attaining manhood he engaged in agricultural pursuits until his departure for the New World. In Germany, in 1857, William Zorn was united in marriage with Miss Kathrina Wagner, and to this union have been born ten children, most of whom are living, as follows: Caroline, wife of James Johnson, of Stevens Point; Louis, residing in Sacramento, Cal.; Arthur, who is a fireman on the Wisconsin Central railroad, married to Miss Minnie Maves, of Auburndale, Wis., October 31, 1894, and resides in Stevens Point; Carl; David and Richard.

In May, 1857, Mr. Zorn left his native land, and came to the United States, landing at New York. He at once made his way West, and located at Stevens Point, when it was yet but a country village. Here he engaged in lumbering, working in the woods during the winter, and during the summer months rafting timber on the Wisconsin river. In 1878, he was appointed to the police force, and in 1893 elevated to the position of chief. He is an efficient and deservedly popular civic official, and fulfills the duties of his office with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the community. Mr. Zorn is a member of Stumpf Lodge, No. 125, I. O. O. F., and the family attend the Lutheran and Episcopal Churches.

EDWIN L. CARPENTER, an industrious and successful farmer of Buena Vista township, Portage county, was born in Redfield, Oswego Co., N. Y., April 17, 1836, a son of Nathan and Olive (Loomis) Carpenter, both natives of New York. Nathan was the son of Solomon Carpenter, a farmer of English ancestry, who died in Oswego county, N. Y., at the age of sixty years. His five children were Isaac, a farmer in Michigan; Harriet, who married Elisha Bennett; Nathan; Sally, who married Amos Hurlbut; and John, who now lives near Wautoma, Wisconsin.

Nathan was born in Oswego county, June 23, 1809. He was reared a farmer and in 1835 married Olive Loomis, by whom he had two children: Edwin L., subject of this sketch, and Olive, who was born May 26, 1838, married David Sidmore, a soldier in the Civil war, and has four children, three of whom, Russell B., Gertrude, and Edwin are living. After the death of his wife, Nathan Carpenter married Clarissa Bennett, who was born March 1, 1800, and with her and his two children he came to Wisconsin, purchasing and settling on forty acres of wild land, in Black Wolf township, Winnebago county; making a clearing and building a cabin, he lived here until about 1859, when he removed to Portage county, exchanging his cleared land in Winnebago county for 260 acres of wild land in Buena Vista township. Here he began pioneer life anew, and here his second wife died March 17, 1866. For his third wife Nathan Carpenter married Lucy Adams, who was born in 1808, and died December 29, 1880. A year after her death Mr. Carpenter made his home with his son Edwin L., until his death, April 13, 1890. In politics Nathan Carpenter was a Democrat until the Harrison campaign, when he voted the Republican ticket.

Edwin L. received a common-school education in his native town and in Winnebago county, and he has been a farmer nearly all his life. When twenty-two years old he left home for the pineries on Trapp river, and was engaged in lumbering altogether about eight or ten years. Mr. Carpenter enlisted at Plover August 16, 1862, in Company E, Thirty-second Wis. V. I., and during service at Memphis he was sent to the hospital at Oxford, Miss., where he lay for a short time. He was then sent back by the provision team to Memphis, and was consigned to Overton Hospital, whence he was discharged for disability, February 6, 1863. Returning home, it was a long time before he recovered from his illness. He was married November 10, 1867, to Mary L. Adams, born in Alden, Ill., December 28, 1849, daughter of John and Lucy (Newbury) Adams, natives of New York, who later moved to Buena Vista township. The seven children of John and Lucy Adams were: Julia, Eveline, Jonathan, Lydia Ann, George, Mary and Jerome.

After his marriage Mr. Carpenter settled on the farm which he now occupies, and which he had previously purchased. He built a small frame house in which they lived until he erected, in 1894, his present commodious and pleasant home. His farm comprises eighty acres in Section 34, twenty acres in Section 32, thirty-five acres in Section 3, Almond township, and twenty acres in Section 13, Buena Vista. The seven children of Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter were as follows: Fidelia, now of Eau Claire; Almira, also of Eau Claire; Elmer, born September 15, 1871, died March 18, 1872; Laura Viola, born April 5, 1874, a graduate of Almond high school, and now a teacher in the Bancroft schools; Oscar Eugene and Orin (twins), born June 2, 1876, the latter of whom died September 20, 1876; Estella

Eleysia, born January 31, 1885. Mr. Carpenter twice voted the Democratic ticket, but has since been a strong Republican. He has served his school district as director and clerk, but has never sought office; though not members of any church, the family are Protestant in religious belief. Mr. Carpenter is a hard-working, industrious farmer, intelligent and well-informed. He is fond of his home, and is blessed with a wife who is a kind-hearted, motherly lady. The family is highly respected.

AR. POTTS, one of the representative and enterprising farmers of Dayton township, Waupaca county, was the first white child born in the village of Rural. The date of his birth was September 19, 1853, and he is the son of Andrew and Catherine (Bell) Potts, early pioneers of the township.

Andrew Potts was born January 31, 1822, in Roxburghshire, Scotland, a son of William H. Potts, a man of position, education and influence. Andrew was reared on a farm, and at sixteen was apprenticed to a carpenter. Serving a four-years' apprenticeship, he diligently applied himself to learn every detail of the trade, and after following it for several years he looked for a better field of work. At the age of twenty-three he went to Woolwich, England, and found employment in the shipyards there. His excellence as a workman was soon perceived, and he was assigned the finishing of the cabins. So satisfactory was the quality of his work, so thorough his mastery of the wood-working trade, that he was soon made foreman. He was married in Roxburghshire, Scotland, September 1, 1846, to Catherine Bell, a native of that village, born May 20, 1820, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (McLean) Bell. They began housekeeping at Woolwich, England, and here two children were born, Elizabeth, now Mrs. John Burgoyne, of Waupaca, and William, who died in childhood.

Mr. Potts resolved to emigrate to America, and he was told by his employers that should he dislike the new country his old place as foreman in the shipyards would be open to him. In April, 1853, the family left Woolwich, and at London took passage in the sailing vessel "Robert Peel," and arrived at New York five weeks later. James White, an uncle of Mrs. Potts, lived at Fond du Lac, Wis., and that point was made the destination of the emigrants. They came via the lakes to Sheboygan, thence by stage to Fond du Lac. Here the family remained while the father went on through the woods and pre-empted the McCrossen farm, Section 3, in Dayton township. Not liking it, he abandoned this farm and bought the land in Section 10, where he afterward lived, paying a bonus of $50. Before he made payment he learned it was not a legal obligation, but he had pledged his word and accordingly paid the amount. Here in July, 1853, he brought his little family to a small frame house, the first on the farm; the land was totally without improvements. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Potts here were A. R., subject of this sketch, and George R. and Catherine C., both of whom died in infancy. Mr. Potts was able to acquire this tract of eighty acres free of debt. He built the small home with his own hands, hewing the joists and other heavy timber by hand, and carrying them on his shoulder to the house. Besides farming he carried on his trade, building many of the best residences of that time in Dayton. He remained one of the most active and enterprising citizens of the township until his death, which occurred suddenly, April 12, 1891, from a complication which the physicians were unable to diagnose. His property then amounted to 370 acres of excellent land, all won by his labor, perseverance and energy. He was an honest and shrewd business man, a systematic farmer, and thorough in all his undertakings. He was a staunch Republican in politics, and a great reader, especially of current events, in which he took deep interest. Public office was tendered him, but declined. A Presbyterian from his youth, he remained an officer of that Church till his death. In his own house he conducted the first Sabbath-school held in the village of Rural, and here too the first sermon in the village was preached. Since his death his widow has remained on the home farm, highly-respected and a devout Christian, having been a member of the Presbyterian Church for over sixty years. She is a very intelligent woman and a great reader, though in early life her educational advantages were limited. Perhaps no man in Dayton township has every enjoyed a better reputation for honesty and fairness than did Andrew Potts. A Christian spirit pervaded all his transactions. He remained till death one of the pillars in the Rural Presbyterian Church.

A. R. Potts, son of the above, received a good education, considering his advantages, and was especially adept in mathematics. He was reared on the farm, and in August, 1871, at the age of seventeen years, entered the store of W. P. Quint, at Rural, remaining four years. During the winters of 1876-77 and of 1878-79 he was employed in the store of Hon. A. M. Kimball at Pine River, Wis., but the care of the home farm was too much for his father, and he returned home. On January 12, 1882, he was married, at Dayton, to Miss Lucy Shoemaker, who was born in the township January 8, 1860, a daughter of Frederick and Jane (Lewis) Shoemaker, early settlers of the township. Miss Shoemaker had been a school teacher. Their children are Frederick A., born May 1, 1883; Catherine B., born January 4, 1885, and Jennie E., born April 21, 1890. Since his marriage Mr. Potts has lived on the home farm, where he is also an extensive stock-raiser and a dairy producer. He is a staunch Republican, and has been township treasurer for five years, chairman two years, and district clerk for years. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is now a trustee. Mr. Potts has inherited from his father the principles of good citizenship, and is one of the most liberal and public-spirited residents of Dayton township.

WILLIAM SALZMANN, by virtue of the distinction he enjoys of being the most extensive lumberman and farmer in the country surrounding Tigerton, Shawano county, and his long residence in that locality, is entitled to prominent mention in the pages of this work.

A native of Germany, Mr. Salzmann was born April 25, 1859, in the Province of Pommern, a son of Charles and Wilhelmina (Huebner) Salzmann, who had a family of five children, as follows: Louise, wife of Julius Ceuske, a farmer of Fairbanks township, Shawano Co., Wis.; William, subject of these lines; Augusta, who is married to A. G. Runge, a shoemaker and merchant of Merrill, Wis.; Charles, a farmer of Morris township, Shawano county; and Amelia, wife of Earnest Dick, a farmer of Swartz Creek, Michigan. In the Fatherland Charles Salzmann was a day laborer on small wages, and, desiring to improve his condition and that of his belongings, he in 1877 emigrated to the United States, all the family accompanying him except the eldest daughter. Coming direct to Wisconsin and settling in Shawano county, the father located one year in Pella, and in the spring of 1878 settled on a homestead in Morris township, Shawano county, which, with the assistance of his sons William and Charles, he succeeded in clearing and converting into fertile fields and luxuriant meadows. The parents, as are also their son Charles and his family, are still living on the old homestead, which by industry and toil they have increased to 160 acres, sixty of which are cleared.

The subject of this memoir, William Salzmann, received a fairly liberal education at the public schools of his native land, and was eighteen years old when he accompanied the rest of the family to the United States, remaining with his parents and caring for them in their declining years until 1891, when he sold out his interests to his brother, who, as above intimated, is still on the home farm in Morris township. Our subject then moved to Tigerton (where he had previously worked considerably in saw-mills), and bought seventy-two acres of land in Section 9, where he now lives. To-day he is the owner of 712 acres of land situated in various parts of this portion of the State, on some of which there is good timber growing, and during the past twelve years he has been engaged extensively in lumbering, buying land from which he would cut the timber for sale, and then sell the land. In 1890-91 he bought and sold one million feet of hardwood logs, and each winter he gives employment to a large force of men and teams. He is essentially a lumberman, using his farm as his headquarters.

In 1886 Mr. Salzmann was united in marriage with Miss Bertha Gutshow, who was born in Mayville, Dodge Co., Wis., a daughter of Fred and Minnie Gutshow, who emigrated from Germany to this country, first locating on a farm in Dodge county, Wis., and later moving to Pella township, Shawano county, where they own a large farm. They are the parents of seven children, named respectively: Rudolph, Charles, Bertha, John, Minnie, Almira and Louise, all yet living except Louise. To Mr. and Mrs. William Salzmann have been born four children, to wit: Louis, Rudolph, Ida and Arthur. Politically our subject is a Republican, a leader in the party in his part of the county; and in 1894 was a delegate to county conventions; in the same year he served as chairman of Fairbanks township and on the county board. In religious faith he and his estimable life partner are Lutherans, and they enjoy the well-merited respect of all who know them. They have an elegant and comfortable home on the banks of a fine stream, with a railroad passing in front of the house, and Tigerton post-office being but half a mile distant.

HON. CHRIS BONNIN, the representative of Shawano county in the State Legislature, and the leading merchant of Bonduel, Wis., is a native of central Germany, born February 18, 1853. His father, William Bonnin, was the owner of a small tract of land in Germany and supported his family by day's labor. In 1857, after a voyage of seventeen weeks, he arrived in the United States, locating in Washington county, Wis., where he lived until 1860, removing then to New London, this State. At that time there were no railroads to New London, and they made the journey by boat from Oshkosh. The father has since resided in that locality, and the mother there died in 1894. Of their family five children are yet living. In politics the father is a Democrat, and in religious belief a Lutheran.

Mr. Bonnin, the subject of this sketch, acquired his education in the district schools, and during his early boyhood began to work for neighboring farmers. He was also employed in the lumber woods and on the river, following any honest pursuit that would gain him a living. Thus his time was passed until after he had arrived at man's estate. He then chose as a companion and helpmeet on life's journey Miss Doratha Busian, a native of Outagamie county, Wis., where their marriage was celebrated in 1877. They located upon a farm and lived in the vicinity of New London for two years, after which they located near Clintonville, Wis.; but after a short time they made a home near Centralia. Returning to New London, Mr. Bonnin lived with his parents for a time, and subsequently went to Shioc-ton, Outagamie county, where he was engaged in the restaurant business. In 1882 he embarked in merchandising in Slabtown, Shawano county, but the same year came to Bonduel, and resumed the same line of business. He bought out a store which his predecessors had failed to make a paying one, and from the beginning met with success, securing an extensive trade, and now having one of the largest and most prosperous mercantile establishments in Shawano county outside of the county seat. The business was at first located in a small frame building, but in 1884 the town was visited by a disastrous fire and his store and much of his stock was destroyed. With characteristic energy he began to rebuild, and erected the present substantial and commodious business room, which is now taxed to the utmost in order to accommodate his large trade. To Mr. and Mrs. Bonnin have been born six children who are yet living, namely: Ernest, Henrietta, Emma, Lottie, Celia and Rosetta. They have also lost two children.

While prominently identified with the Republican party in his town and county, it might be said that Mr. Bonnin's sympathies were at one time with the Democracy, yet when he arrived at the age when the right of franchise was granted him he allied himself with the Republican party, and has since been one of its stalwart advocates and leaders in this locality. He has frequently been called to serve in public office, having been assessor of Liberty township, Outagamie county, while for four years he was treasurer of Hartland township, Shawano county, and for several years past has been justice of the peace. He was chairman of Hartland township for one year, and in 1894 was re-elected, but resigned in order to enter upon his duties as State Representative, and to-day he is a leading member of the House. His own educational privileges were limited, and he was thus made to realize the advantage of good schools, which he has always endeavored to secure in the community in which he lives. He did effective service in the interest of education while acting as clerk of School District No. 1, for four years. His untiring energy and practical business ability are exerted in public office to the benefit of the positions with which he is connected. He has also served as postmaster of Bonduel for three years. He has represented the leading insurance companies of the United States, and also served as emigrant agent for this locality.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Bonnin are members of the Lutheran Church. His natural intellectual ability has been developed by years of experience, and on matters of business he is frequently consulted by men who are many years his senior and who rely implicitly upon his sound judgment. His own business career has been one of success, in which he has never adopted questionable methods or unfair means to further his interests. He is ever ready to encourage or assist any movement that is calculated to prove of public benefit and he has a wide acquaintance, and enjoys the confidence of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

MRS. SARAH A. GALLUP, who is living in Dayton township, Wau-paca county, was born in Milwaukee, Wis., and is a daughter of Gilman Hall, who took his family to Erie county, N. Y., during the early childhood of this daughter. She there had good educational advantages, and completed her studies in Lockport, N. Y. She was first married in Erie county, that State, to George H. Drew, a native of Erie county, and four children were born to them: John F., now living in Missouri; Elwin E., a resident of New Mexico; Bert H., who operates the home farm for his mother; and Alice M., at home.

In New York the estimable lady of whom we write became the wife of Edwin E. Gallup, and with him came to Wisconsin in the fall of 1886. They located in Section 13, Dayton township, Waupaca county, securing 193 acres of land. They were accompanied by Alice, and in the spring of 1887 Bert joined his mother. That summer Mr. Gallup died, and for a time Mrs. Gallup rented her land; but when her son was a youth of fifteen she resumed charge of the farm, conducting it with his aid, and it is now one of the desirable properties of the township. Many improvements have been added, the house has been enlarged and repaired, and in 1894 excellent barns were built. The son now devotes his time and energies to general farming and stock raising, and is a successful young business man, who by his well-directed efforts has secured for himself and mother a good income. He holds membership with the Baptist Church, and both he and his mother are highly respected people of the community.

DENNIS LEAHY, a prosperous and progressive farmer of Lanark township, Portage county, was born in County Cork, Ireland, August 7, 1835.

The parents of Dennis Leahy, John and Ellen Leahy, were also born in County Cork, Ireland, and about 1830 came to America, landing at St. John, New Brunswick. From St. John they went to Chicopee Falls, Mass., in 1836, residing there for fourteen years, and in 1850 removed to Wisconsin, locating in what is now the town of Berlin, Green Lake county, at that time called Strong's Landing. They resided there five years, and in 1855 removed to what is now the town of Hull, Portage county, where they resided till the death of Mr. Leahy, which occurred December 15, 1873, when he was eighty-three years of age. His widow afterward removed to Stevens Point, Portage county, and made her home with her son John. While on a visit to her son Dennis, at Lanark, Portage county, she passed from earth, December 24, 1891. Both she and her husband were buried in the Stevens Point cemetery. A family of ten children were born to them, only two of whom are now living, namely: Dennis, the subject of this sketch; and John, at present Sheriff of Portage county, with residence at Stevens Point.

Dennis Leahy was brought to America by his parents when but an infant, and his boyhood days were spent upon the homestead farm in Chicopee Falls, Mass., but finding a farmer's life unsuited to his taste, and being anxious to see more of the world, he left his home, and for a number of years engaged as a sailor. In 1856 he returned to the home of his parents, who had, in the meantime, removed to Stevens Point, Portage county, Wis., and for two or three years engaged in the lumbering industry, working in the woods during the summer months, and rafting on the Wisconsin river in winter. Having removed to St. Louis, Mo., Mr. Leahy enlisted, at the breaking out of the Rebellion, in Company A, First Mo. V. I., as a hundred-days' man, serving in that company a short time and afterward in Company E, Fifth Mo. V. I. After serving out this term in the army he enlisted in the United States Navy, was assigned to the gunboat "Essex," and served in the navy till the close of the war. He took part in numerous engagements, both on land and sea, and had many marvelous escapes from death, at one time during his naval career being on board the "Essex" when it blew up by the bursting of a boiler. He assisted in the capture of a Rebel privateer, for which he received his share of prize money, and also fired the first shot into the Rebel ram "Arkansas," in which engagement that vessel was destroyed and sunk in the Mississippi river. After the close of the war he returned to Wisconsin, engaged in agricultural pursuits, and a few years later removed to Lanark, Portage county, in which county he still resides.

On October 23, 1865, at Stevens Point, Portage county, Dennis Leahy married Miss Ellen Leary, and nine children have been born to them, of whom the eight now living are: John E., born September 24, 1867; Daniel J., December 10, 1870; William H., August 28, 1872; Agnes A., April 23, 1874; Mary E., March 2, 1876; Julia A., January 24, 1878; Clara A., January 30, 1881, and Katherine E., July 3, 1883. Three of these, William H., Agnes A. and Mary E. are now engaged in teaching school.

Daniel J. Leahy, son of Dennis and Ellen Leahy, was born in Stevens Point December 10, 1870, was reared to manhood on the homestead farm at Lanark, and educated in the district schools of that township. After completing his education he taught school for two terms in the town of Sharon, Portage county, and later on, in company with his brother John E., was engaged in the photographing business in Clark county, Wis. The brothers sold out their photographing business and returned to Portage county, where John again went to farming. Dan served the county two years as deputy clerk of the circuit court, and January 7, 1895, was appointed a deputy sheriff, which position he now holds, residing in the court house. As deputy sheriff he is jailor, having charge of the county jail. He is unmarried, and at present makes the sheriff's residence his home.

HANS JOHNSON, one of the self-made men and highly respected citizens of Waupaca county, was born in Norway, December 23, 1838, and is a son of John Hanson, who died in that country, leaving his family in straightened circumstances. He was the only child of his father's first marriage, and Ole Oleson was the only child of the second marriage. In 1854, with their stepfather, they crossed the Atlantic on the "Johanna Morie," a sailing vessel commanded by Captain Peterson, and after a tempestuous voyage landed at Quebec, and from Buffalo went by water to Milwaukee. After a month spent in a Norwegian settlement at Oconomowoc, Wis., they started by team for Waupaca county, accompanied by Ole Benson, and at length reached the home of Peter Gregorson of Iola. The stepfather located in Section 7, that township, securing 120 acres of wild land, on which was erected a log cabin 12 x 14 feet. This was the first home they had ever owned, and they were very proud of it.

Mr. Johnson remained upon that farm for two years, then began working in the lumber woods, his wages going to pay for the farm. Thus he was employed for many seasons, and for twenty years ran on the Wisconsin river, going to St. Louis and other lumber markets, and returning by steamer to La Crosse, and across the country by stage. His stepfather died in Iola, and his mother died at the home of her son Hans in the fall of 1894, when about eighty-one years of age, and was buried in the Scandinavia Cemetery.

In 1861, in New Hope township, Portage county, Mr. Johnson married Matilda Steonson, who was born in Norway, December 16, 1844, and when a child of seven summers came to the United States with her parents, who first located in Scandinavia, Wis., and then moved to New Hope township, where the father engaged in farming until his death. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were born the following children: Hannah, who died in infancy; Julius, a farmer of New Hope township, Portage county, who is married and has two children; Nels, a merchant of Iola; Theodore, a merchant of Nelsonville, Wis.; Ludwig, also a farmer of New Hope township; Hannah, at home; Hans, who follows merchandising in Iola; Senius M., who died at the age of fifteen; Emma, deceased at the age of sixteen; and Tomena.

The first land which Mr. Johnson owned was in Section 28, New Hope township, Portage county, a forty-acre tract, on which not a furrow had been turned or an improvement made. He paid for it $500, and in partial payment gave a horse and wagon, valued at $130. Two years later he purchased an adjoining forty acres for $350, and again when two years had passed bought eighty acres of timber land in Section 9, for $375. Five years afterward he bought 140 acres in Section 28, adjoining his first purchase, for $1,800, and to this added, after three years eighty acres in Section 33, New Hope township valued at $1,850. His next purchase made him the owner of 120 acres, also in Section 23, and from time to time he has bought other land until he now has more than thirty-five hundred acres in Waupaca, Portage, Shawano and Marathon counties, this being timber land. In addition he purchased what is known as the home farm in Section 7, Iola township, Waupaca county, obtaining the same by buying a quit claim of his half-brother, who was half-owner of the farm when the parents died. He has over three hundred acres of improved land, which at one time was divided into five farms, but is now comprised within three. The home farm where he lives has been entirely improved through his efforts and the assistance of his children, and the buildings thereon stand as monuments to his thrift and enterprise. His success has been remarkable. He has dealt extensively in timber, and when upon the river, as he was a very skillful pilot, he received $60 per week. For seventeen years he has been cutting and selling timber, which he delivered to the purchasers on the river bank.

Mr. Johnson deserves all the honor that is implied by the term, a self-made man. He never attended an English school a day in his life, and his educational privileges and other opportunities were indeed meagre. He suffered many hardships when a boy, has undergone all the experiences of pioneer life, and in the days of frontier life he went to Waupaca and returned on snowshoes, carrying fifty pounds of flour on his back. During his first winter in Wisconsin wild game was their only meat, and their larder was often without many desirable articles; but they rejoiced that their home was their own, and were willing to make every sacrifice to secure it, and happy were they when, after a year, they visited the land office at Stevens Point and secured the deed to their property. Steadily has Mr. Johnson worked his way upward, and his fine business and executive ability and keen discrimination and sound judgment have brought to him success. Energy, enterprise, integrity and enterprise, these are the traits of character which have made him one of the most prosperous citizens of Waupaca county. His extensive business interests call him away from home much of the time, yet he superintends his farming operations, and is a member of the firm of Hans Johnson & Sons, of Iola, owners of the best business block and largest stock of goods in Iola. He also has a hotel property and other real estate in Iola, owns three lots in Amherst Junction, and his land holdings, including timber and improved land, comprise over 4,000 acres.

Mr. Johnson is a Republican in politics, and though never seeking office served as supervisor, and for nine years was treasurer of School District No. 3, New Hope township. He and his family belong to the Lutheran Church of New Hope, in which he has served as trustee, and for the erection of the house of worship he made liberal contributions.

Nels Johnson, a member of the firm of Hans Johnson & Sons, was born February 3, 1864, in Wausau, Wis. During his early childhood his parents left that place, and he was reared to manhood in New Hope township, Portage county, where he obtained his education in the district schools. He early became inured to the labors of the farm, working in the fields through the summer months, and when the cold weather came on going to the lumber woods, where he spent eight winters, driving a team of oxen most of the time. During this period he always considered the old farm as his home. In 1889, however, he located at Amherst Junction, where he engaged in general merchandising, the firm of Hans Johnson & Sons there establishing a new business. In the fall of 1893 he came to Iola to take charge of the store at this place. The firm owns the substantial brick block which they occupy and which is divided into two large rooms joined by an archway. They carry the largest stock of general merchandise in the city and have a very extensive trade, which is constantly increasing.

In May, 1890, in New Hope, Wis., Nels Johnson wedded Sina Wrolstad, who was born in Harrison, Waupaca county, September 5, 1868, a daughter of John Wroldstad, a farmer and owner of a sawmill. They have one child, Hanford J., born August 13, 1890. In politics Mr. Johnson is a staunch Republican, and has served as village trustee. He is a member of the Odd Fellows Society of Iola, in which he is now acting as warden, and also belongs to the Lutheran Church. He has already demonstrated his right to a place in the ranks of the successful business men, and is a worthy representative of an honored pioneer family.

ALBERT W. GUYANT, the efficient and popular postmaster of Amherst, Portage county, was born in Oswego county, N. Y., May 1, 1855, and is a son of Elbert and Loraine (Borden) Guyant, who were both born in New York State.

The family came west in the spring of 1857, and located in Fond du Lac county, Wis., where Elbert Guyant, the father, worked at his trade of millwright. Both he and his wife died in Fond du Lac county. They were the parents of eight children, of whom seven are living, namely: Octave, wife of Mr. Bixtley, residing in Buffalo, N. Y.; Hobart, in St. Louis; Jane, wife of John Cheney, in Berlin, Wis.; Henry and Frank, in Belmont township, Portage county; Albert, subject of this sketch; and Edward, residing in Farmington, Waupaca county.

Albert Guyant received his education in the public schools of Fond du Lac county, and, when sixteen years of age, came to Portage county and located at Plover, where he worked at lumbering in the woods and on the Wisconsin river. In 1853, he removed to Amherst, where he engaged in a general mercantile business, and, in April, 1893, was appointed to his present position of postmaster. In Fond du Lac county Albert W. Guyant married Miss Ida Morrison, and they have become the parents of three children, namely: Bertie, Lee S., and Maude Loraine. In political views Mr. Guyant is a Democrat, has served as deputy sheriff of the county two years, and as game warden four years. He is a member of Metomen Lodge, No. 107, I. O. O. F., of Brandon, Fond du Lac county, and also of the Knights of Pythias of Waupaca. The family attend the Universalist Church.

ALEXANDER C. RAIT was born August 4, 1825, at Aberdeen, Scotland, son of James and Elizabeth (Reed) Rait. James Rait, a stone cutter by trade, was born in the Parish of Benham, Scotland, lived there until after his marriage, moved to Aberdeen, and there died May 24, 1826. His wife was born in the Parish of St. Cyrus. Their children were: John, born March 6, 1822, died the following month; James, born February 7, 1824, came to the United States in March, 1849, settled in Brooklyn, N. Y., and died there March 19, 1863; and Alexander C., whose name introduces these lines.

Alexander C. Rait attended the parish school in his native city till thirteen years old, learned the stone cutter's trade, and followed it while in Scotland. In Banvi, at Fort William, in the Highlands, he married Miss Elizabeth McKennon, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Cameron) McKennon, and then resided in St. Cyrus for a short time. By this union Mr. and Mrs. Rait had two sons while in Scotland: James, born March 29, 1846; and John, born July 16, 1848, and died January 24, 1849. James Rait married Miss Eva Crocker, of Sheboygan, Wis., and they have two children—Evela and Donald. James Rait was principal of the high school at Sheboygan, also for two years at Stevens Point, taught at Manitowoc and Two Rivers, Wis., and now lives in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Alexander C. Rait, with his wife and family, sailed from Scotland May 1, 1849, on a vessel of the Bremen line, and landed at New York May 29. He there met his brother James (who had preceded him one month), lived in Brooklyn for six years, and worked there and in New York City at his trade until 1856. He then came to Wisconsin and located in Lanark township, Portage county, on a farm of sixty acres. To Mr. and Mrs. Rait children were born in Brooklyn as follows: Mary, March 7, 1851, now Mrs. S. B. Crocker, of Sheboygan, Wis., has two children—Elizabeth and Myron; Elizabeth, born May 8, 1853, is a graduate of the Oshkosh Normal School, and is at present in a private school in San Antonio, Texas; William, born October 27, 1854, died April 26, 1855; and Annie, born May 26, 1856, was a school teacher, married John Tardiff, of Stevens Point, where they reside, and they have two children—Marion and Agnes. Other children were born to Mr. Rait, by his first wife, in Lanark, Wis., as follows: Alexander, born July 7, 1858, married Charlotte Cutter, is a farmer in Kansas, and they have five children—three sons and two daughters; and Agnes J., born January 7, 1865, is now teaching school at Stevens Point. Mrs. Rait died in Lanark, Wis., January 28, 1868.

On July 5, 1869, Alexander C. Rait again married, taking for his second wife Mrs. Frelove Underhill, and by this marriage there are two children—William, born April 3, 1870, and Ralph, born August 14, 1876, both at home. Mr. Rait's second wife was the daughter of Alfred and Mary E. (Kimball) Dunham, natives of Bennington, Vt., where they died. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Dunham were: Isaac, Obadiah, Dewey, Alfred, Frelove (Mrs. Rait), Jessie, Martin and Martha (twins), Louis and Mary E. Mrs. Frelove Rait was born January 1, 1833, at Bennington, Vt., was educated and lived there until the age of twenty, went to Fairfax, Va., where she did housework, and where she was married to her first husband, to whom she bore the following children: William, born August 10, 1854, died February 22, 1859; Oren, born March 23, 1856, lives at Stevens Point, Wis.; May, born January 31, 1859, is the wife of Clinton Lincoln, of Farmington, Waupaca Co., Wis.; Ellen, born October 30, 1860, is now Mrs. Zeph Malvin, and lives in Cumberland county, Ohio; and Effie, born March 9, 1864, is now Mrs. James Tupper, and lives in the State of Washington.

When Mr. Rait came to his present farm he had nothing but an old pair of planes and a chisel with which to build a home, but not in the least discouraged went to work with a will, and soon had a comfortable house for himself and family. Neighbors helped to build the framework, he doing all the inside work alone. He still lives in this house, but intends to build a more modern structure in the near future. In 1858 he worked for the Illinois Central Railroad Company, building bridges along the line. In 1864 he enlisted from Waupaca in Company C, Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., and drilled three weeks at Madison. He was before Nashville, Tenn., all the winter of 1864-65, and in the following spring he was stationed at Paducah, where at the close of the war he was mustered out, after which he returned home and attended to his farm.

In 1885 Mr. Rait visited his native land, the scenes of his childhood, and the home of his mother, who had survived his father, and was now about ninety years old. She was almost blind and barely recognized the son who had left her so many years before; she lived till she was ninety-one years six months old. He remained in Scotland two months, returned on the "Britannia," and encountered severe storms on the way. Mr. Rait is a Republican, his first vote for President having been cast in Brooklyn, N. Y., and he has served on the town school board six years. The Democrats on one occasion thought he would vote their ticket, and carried him to the polls on their shoulders, but he disappointed them and voted according to his own views. Both he and his wife are Presbyterians. Mr. Rait is a great reader, and standard literature is furnished him by his daughter Agnes. He is unable to do any heavy work, and this is done for him by his sons.

NIELS ANDERSON, a leading citizen of Langlade county, and well-known prosperous general merchant of Antigo, is a native of Denmark, born April 17, 1831. He is a son of Anders Christenson, a wagon-maker by trade, born in 1790, who married Bertha Christina Rasmussen and had ten children, four of whom died young, the other six being Rasmus, Christen, Hans, Niels, Mary Anne and Frederick, of whom, Rasmus died in America, Mary Anne lives in Brown county, Wis.; the others are living in Denmark. The parents, who are well-to-do, highly respected people, died in Denmark, the mother in 1842; the father (who was a son of Christen Christenson, a farmer) served as a soldier in his native land.

Niels' Anderson

The subject proper of these lines, whose name appears at the opening of this sketch, received a fair education at the public schools of his native land, learning the trade of wagon maker with his father, and after the death of the latter took charge of the shop and business in 1872. He then sold out and came to America, landing at New York, whence he came direct to Green Bay, where he remained one year working at his trade. Proceeding from there to De Pere, thence at the end of another year moving to Mills Center, he there, in partnership with John Hanson (his future son-in-law), opened out a wagon maker's shop. After a couple of years, however, he sold out his shop and farm, and embarked in mercantile business in the same village, continuing same till 1878. In that year he sold his store and removed to Antigo, then a hamlet of some three or four families, and known as "Spring Brook," Wausau being the nearest railway point, a distance of thirty-two miles, all his merchandise having to be hauled from there by team. But by 1881 the railroad had reached Antigo, settlement increased, and our subject built his present store, in which he has since conducted a flourishing general mercantile business. His sales, the first year in the then village, amounted to one hundred dollars, whilst he now turns over thirty-thousand dollars worth of stock. Mr. Anderson has also dealt largely in real estate, and now owns one thousand acres of land, besides a fine residence and other city property. For several years he owned and operated the Excelsior Factory at Antigo; was the first postmaster of the village, holding the office six years; was also city treasurer, two terms, and the first notary public in Antigo. When he built his present store the county had no county buildings, so he put up the store with rooms, etc., above for the county offices, also a public hall, the first in the county, and which in early days was used for Church purposes as well as a music hall.

Mr. Anderson has been twice married, both times in Denmark, on the first occasion, in 1851, to Miss Johanne Marie Anderson, by whom he had three children: Andrew, Caroline and Christ. The mother of these died Sept. 16, 1868, and October 25, 1870, our subject married Miss Anna Catherine Anderson, who was born June 1, 1845, daughter of Andrew Hanson (a mason by trade) and Inger Sofie Larson, who were parents of two children: Hans L. and Anna C. By this marriage there is one child, Alfred Anderson, now a cigar maker at La-Crosse, Wis., and married. Since 1887, Andrew, the eldest son of our subject, has been in partnership with his father in the store, and also in his real-estate business, the son having full charge since the father's partial retirement, though the latter still maintains a partial supervision, giving counsel and advice. He is liberal to all his children, and ever ready to lend them a helping hand.

Niels Anderson presents a worthy example of a self-made man, one who by industry honesty and judicious economy has risen from comparative obscurity as a poor boy to his present affluent condition and enviable position as one of the leading and most prosperous citizens of northern Wisconsin. In Denmark he served as a soldier three years in the artillery, and during the war of 1864 between Denmark and Prussia he participated in several battles, for which service he has a medal, presented by the King of Denmark. In the war between the same countries of 1848-49-50 his three brothers were soldiers in the Danish army, Hans being wounded in one of the engagements. Once has our subject visited his old Denmark home, his wife having made three visits, and he traveled through France and Germany, being absent some six months on the trip, during which time he visited, among other cities, Berlin, Paris and Copenhagen. Politically he is a Republican, and has often been urged to accept office, but has invariably declined; in religious faith he is a member of the Danish Lutheran Church, his wife of the Baptist, and his house was always the home of the early ministers of the M. E. Church and others. He has ever given liberally of his means to every denomination and to all enterprises tending to the public good. Of a verity he is a representative pioneer of this part of Wisconsin, for when he came to Antigo nearly twenty years ago he made the journey by way of Langlade, from which point he had to hire a surveyor and a couple of men to cut a road through the primeval forest to his destination.

FRANK CRAMER, who is now successfully conducting a general store in Hewitt, Wood county, was born in the city of Coesfeld, Province of Westphalia, Germany, February 23, 1853, and is a son of Joseph Cramer, who was also a native of the Fatherland, and was there married to Elizabeth Hobbel. By this union he became the father of three children—Henry, Frank and Catherine. The mother's death occurred in Germany in 1859, and two years later the father came to America with his children, landing in New York in 1861, but believing the chances were better in the West, he proceeded to Milwaukee, Wis., where he had friends residing. By trade Joseph Cramer was a blacksmith, engaging in that occupation in Milwaukee; but later made a number of changes, at last stopping at Silver Creek, Wis., and there carried on business some eighteen years. He then purchased a farm in Clark county, Wis., where he now resides. He was again married, his second wife being Margaretta Jonan, and by this union four children were born—William, Bertha, Mary and Mathias.

The Cramers are an old family of Germany, being traced back for more than three hundred years, and its members are noted for longevity, the great-grandfather of our subject living to be one hundred and five years of age, the grandfather to be ninety-five, while the father has not reached the age of seventy and is still hale and hearty. The family belong to the middle class in Germany, and are well-educated people. One brother of Joseph Cramer was a Catholic priest; but little is known concerning the mother's people.

In the common and parochial schools of Wisconsin, Frank Cramer received his education. He was but six years of age when he came with his father to the United States, and at the age of thirteen began clerking, which he followed for one year, when he again entered school, there remaining until sixteen. He then engaged as a farm hand for one year, after which he began learning the trade of blacksmithing with his father. At the age of eighteen he went to Milwaukee, where he worked for one year; thence moved to Chicago, and from there to Iowa, but afterward returned home and assisted his father. After remaining at home for about twelve months, he went to Minnesota, traveling all over that State, at last going to Iowa, where for one year he worked as a farm hand and blacksmith. At the end of that period he went to San Francisco, Cal., remaining on the coast nearly two years, visiting Sacramento, Victoria and other cities. He traveled through Washington and Oregon, and at Roseburg, in the latter State, worked at his trade some eighteen months. In December, 1877, after visiting his parents, he came to Hewitt, Wis., locating on a farm which he had purchased of his brother Henry. It was heavily timbered land, but he began its improvement, erecting a blacksmith shop one year later, which was the first building in Hewitt, and conducted the same until 1884. On selling out he opened a hardware store, carrying on the same until 1892 when he added a stock of general merchandise, and has now a liberal patronage which is well-deserved.

On June 5, 1883, Mr. Cramer married Caroline Maurer, a native of Bavaria, Germany, who had come to America with her parents in 1880. To this worthy couple have come seven children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Frank, in April, 1884; Carrie, in September, 1886; Alexa, in April, 1888; Paul, in June, 1891; Elizabeth, in February, 1894; and Peter and Paul, twins, in February, 1890, who, however, only lived six months. Politically Mr. Cramer is a Democrat, and for several years served as chairman of the town of Marshfield. For a number of terms he was town clerk, and for the past fifteen years has served as justice of the peace. He was one of the prime movers in organizing the Catholic Church at Hewitt, assisting in the erection of the brick church and parsonage. In school work he takes an active interest, being a school officer until four years ago, when he resigned, and in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community he is deeply interested.

Mr. Cramer is an excellent business man, and has been very successful in his undertakings, being owner of farm lands, besides his property in the village of Hewitt. In 1881 he was manager of a sawmill at that place, which was owned by B. Esserger, of Chicago, and held the position for two years, when the property was sold. It was a responsible position, he having full control and management of the business, handling during the time many thousands of dollars. He is a stockholder in the German-American Bank at Marshfield, and for the past seven years has been postmaster at Hewitt. He is straightforward in all his dealings, and has secured for himself an enviable position, both socially and financially.

EDWIN B. KNAPP, one of the most prosperous merchants of northern Wisconsin, now proprietor of a department store at Waupaca, which enjoys an immense trade, was born in Jasper, Steuben Co., N. Y., July 11, 1848, son of Franklin L. and Alma (Dake) Knapp.

Franklin L. Knapp, the father, was born in West Union, Steuben Co., N. Y., in 1826, and was the son of Ira and Lucinda Knapp, the former a native of Massachusetts, the latter of Rhode Island. Ira Knapp was a poor man, and had seven children: Elijah, James, Charles, Franklin L., Harvey, George and Edward. Of these Franklin, when seven years old, became a member of the family of his uncle, Richard Togood, who lived at Jasper, and who was a man of more than ordinary force of character. He was engaged in farming, staging and transporting goods. Franklin had few opportunities for attending school, and led a busy life on the farm until he attained his majority. In 1847 he was married to Alma Dake, a native of Massachusetts, and daughter of Joshua and Prudence (Abbott) Dake, both natives of Connecticut. Prudence Abbott was a member of a Puritan family of considerable prominence. She was one of ten children, and had several brothers in the Revolutionary war. Two were ministers. Joshua Dake was a millwright, and in 1806 emigrated by team from New England to New York. Franklin and Alma Knapp had four children: Edwin B., our subject; Richard Togood, who while visiting his father in New York was killed by an accident December 10, 1892; Helen A., who was born in 1857, and died in 1858; and Curtis L., born in 1861, and drowned in May, 1863.

In 1854, when Edwin B. was six years old, his father moved to Elyria, Ohio, where several brothers had previously settled. Three brothers of Franklin—Charles, Harvey and George—had enlisted in an Ohio regiment, and George was killed in the battle of Chickamauga. Harvey was also a captain on the lakes. Franklin Knapp remained in Elyria three years, and in 1857 removed with his family to Fond du Lac, Wis. In 1858, he came to Fremont, Waupaca Co., Wis., where he built a sawmill, the first on the Wolf river, north of Oshkosh. Three years later he moved to Waupaca where he operated a mill for Dr. Brainard. After that mill was destroyed by fire, Mr. Knapp, from 1868 to 1888, was employed as foreman in the large mills at Oshkosh, his family remaining at Waupaca. In 1888 Franklin Knapp returned to New York, and now lives on the farm where he grew to manhood.

Edwin B. Knapp was educated in the common schools, and attended Lawrence University, Appleton, for one year. When fifteen years old he began a four-years' clerkship in the store of Mr. Roberts at Waupaca, then in 1866 he entered the City Mill at Waupaca, and during the summer learned to operate the circular saw. In the spring of 1868 he became head sawyer in a mill at Omro, Wis., remaining five years. While here he was married, December 11, 1871, to Persis A. White, a native of Pennsylvania, and daughter of Odell and Julia (MacFall) White, who, in 1858, migrated from Pennsylvania, their native State, to Wisconsin, and opened up a farm in Winnebago county; Odell White is still living in Omro. They have two daughters—Dell and Persis. To Mr. and Mrs. Knapp has been born one child, Myrtle, now the wife of F. R. Constance, a leading farmer of Waupaca county, and owner of 300 acres of land near Waupaca. In 1873 Mr. Knapp went to Oshkosh, where he remained thirteen years engaged as circular sawyer in a mill. In 1888 he came to Waupaca and opened a grocery store. This he has enlarged from time to time as his business increased, and it has now grown to a department store, filled with house-furnishing goods complete, one of the largest stores of the kind in northern Wisconsin. He sells strictly for cash, and his sales in 1893 amounted to $30,000.

Mr. Knapp is a Republican, but has never taken any great interest in politics; he served his ward as alderman in the common council in 1893. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. O. F., Knights of Pythias, Uniformed Rank, and of the United Workmen; he is actively interested in these Orders, and has filled most of the chairs. Mr. Knapp's success in business is due to the energy which he has infused into it, and the same enthusiasm which he devotes to his private affairs he bestows upon the public matters that tend to develop the interests of Waupaca. In a word, he is a thorough business man, keenly alive to the importance of building up the city of his residence. It is men of his stamp who make a city prosperous.

THOR A. SILJORD, who is prominent among the farming interests of Iola township, Waupaca county, operates his farm of 180 acres, and has been prosperous in his labors. He is a man of excellent business capacity, and his habits of thought and observation have tended to provide him with a good fund of general information, which has proved valuable in every respect.

Mr. Siljord was born in Norway, February 8, 1857. His father was a farmer in comfortable circumstances, owning a good farm and plenty of timber. He was twice married and had thirteen children, our subject being of the second union, and when but three years of age was brought to the United States. The father had previously crossed the ocean and purchased 160 acres of wild land in Section 24, Iola township, Waupaca Co., Wis. He sent for his family, which then comprised five children, and they were five weeks in making the voyage on account of an injury to one of the officers. On landing in New York they came at once to Wisconsin, but were three weeks in reaching Iola township. From Gill's Landing, on Wolf river, they came by team to their new home, where only a small clearing had been made so that potatoes could be planted. While the father had been a farmer in Norway, he had always hired his work done, and was not accustomed to the hard labor the early pioneers had to perform, therefore he was not very successful in this country. The first home of the family here was a log house which the father erected. He died on that farm at the age of seventy-six years, and his remains were interred in the Scandinavia Church Cemetery. The mother who has also reached the age seventy-six, lives with a son in Iola township.

Thor A. Siljord received his education in District School No. 3, Iola township, which in those days was not as good as at the present time, and his first teacher was Martha Chandler. Though opportunities were limited, he believes in better education, and intends that his children shall have as good advantages in that direction as his means will permit. When about eleven years of age he was put to work at driving oxen, as there were few horses in the county at the time. Besides his farm duties, he spent four winters in the lumber woods, and during three of these worked for himself.

In Waupaca, Wis., September 11, 1886, Mr. Siljord wedded Miss Louisa O. Draland, a native of Iola township, and the ceremony was performed by Winfield Scott, a justice of the peace. Their union has been blessed by the birth of four children—Adolph, born June 6, 1887; Mollie, born December 25, 1888; Cora, born in September, 1891; and Salven, born in December, 1893. After his marriage Mr. Siljord located on the home farm where he now lives, though some time previous he had been the main support of the home, as the older brothers had left as soon as they were old enough to work for themselves, and the care of the parents was left to our subject. He has added to the place until he now has 180 acres, seventy-five of which are broken, and he has seen the farm transformed from an undeveloped wilderness until it now ranks among the best in the township. It has taken much hard work to accomplish this, but he has steadily persevered until he is now meeting with a just reward. In 1894 he built a most comfortable home, which he has surrounded with the many out-buildings which go to make up a model farm, all indicating to the passerby the care and supervision of a progressive, intelligent, thrifty farmer.

His fair and honest manner of dealing has won for Mr. Siljord the respect and confidence of all, and he is considered one of the leading citizens of Iola township. He takes quite an active interest in Church matters, being one of the leading members of Hitterdall Lutheran Church, to which his family also belong, and at the time of the erection of the house of worship he aided with both labor and money. He has always voted the Republican ticket, and is one of the earnest members of that party.

CHRISTIAN LARSON, an expert tailor, now cutter for a thriving clothing house at Waupaca, and formerly a successful business man, has sounded almost the entire gamut of financial circumstances, from extreme want in a pioneer land to the comforts and luxuries of his present home. He has in his nature that stern resistance to an untoward fate which is destined to overcome it and cause him to rise superior to the indigence which once threatened to wholly engulf him.

It was in the summer of 1869 that Mr. Larson reached Waupaca, a Danish emigrant, with two cents in his pockets, and indebtedness to the extent of one hundred dollars for the passage of himself and family to America. His trade, that of tailor, was not one that would be in active demand in a new country, and its sedentary nature in a measure unfitted him for the muscular, out-of-door work in all kinds of weather. He was further handicapped by ill health. This was a combination of circumstances that seemed well nigh hopeless, yet it was not so for Christian Larson, as his comfortable situation in life to-day attests, and the story of his succeeding prosperity is not without its moral.

Christian Larson was born in the Island of Laaland, Denmark, November 4, 1840, son of Lars and Carrie Larson, both natives of that island. They had a family of seven children: Christine, Hans, Lena, Lois, Christian, Margaret and Mary. Lars Larson was a cooper by trade, born in 1807, and for a time was a soldier in the Danish army. He died in 1847 at the age of forty years, when Christian was seven years old, and left no means for the support of his family; his wife, dying in 1851, survived her husband only four years. From these facts it may readily be surmised that the boyhood and youth of Christian was not a life of ease or pleasure. The only schooling he ever received was a three-days' attendance a week for three years, for his health was poor. When fourteen years old he was bound out to a tailor for five years, receiving only his clothes for his services, and it is a credit to the application, fidelity and skill of the apprentice that his master remitted to him six months of his time. He followed his trade in Denmark, and was married, October 13, 1865, to Carrie Catharine, daughter of Soren and Margaret (Rasmussen) Sorensen. She was born in June, 1841, and when an infant lost her mother; the father, a farmer, died in 1855. To Mr. and Mrs. Larson seven children were born: Peter F. and Carrie Christine in Denmark, and William C., Ella O., Charles G., Emma M. and Louie in Wisconsin.

It was in the spring of 1869 that Mr. Larson resolved to emigrate. Landing at New York, he came west from there and, after tarrying twelve days at Oshkosh, reached Waupaca June 12, financially stranded as noted above. Unable to obtain work at his trade, he resorted to any honest employment to earn a livelihood, among other things sawing wood and working on a farm. His first table was a barrel head. Looking about, he found work at his trade at fifty cents a day. As soon as he could he rented a window, and in the spring of 1870 started in business for himself. His trade increased, and he employed help until 1892, when he sold out his business and became cutter for the new firm. He has prospered greatly in business, purchasing a fine store and dealing extensively and profitably in city property. In 1894 he built his present home, which is one of the most delightful in the city. The eldest son is head clerk in a jewelry store in Zumbrota, Minn., and the second daughter is now Mrs. J. E. Pett, of Waupaca. Mr. Larson in politics is a Prohibitionist, and has served his city as alderman. He is comfortably situated, and enjoys the highest confidence and esteem of his fellowmen.

C W. BOWKER, who since 1880 has resided on his farm in Section 13, Larrabee township, Waupaca county, is a native of Franklin county, Vt., born in 1844, son of Charles and Hannah (Shufelt) Bowker, also natives of Vermont, where they were married.

In 1854, when our subject was ten years old, the family came west, journeying to Chicago, thence to Sheboygan, thence to Fond du Lac, and from there to Winnebago county, where, in Poygan township, Mr. Bowker took up a claim in the woods, and opening up a farm made a permanent settlement there. He was among the first settlers of the place, and continued to make his home on the farm until May, 1880, when he came to Larrabee township, Waupaca county, and here died November 22, 1880, being followed to the grave by his wife in April, 1881. C. W. Bowker, who was their only child, was educated in the schools of Poygan township, Winnebago county, and was early inducted into the hardships of pioneer farming, the country during his youth being sparsely settled, the nearest market being Omro. He assisted his father in clearing and improving his farm, and there resided until 1880, when, coming to Waupaca county, he purchased his present farm of ninety acres, situated in Section 13, Larrabee township, eighteen acres of which were then cleared. He has carried on the work of improving steadily, and now has about fifty acres in a good state of cultivation. He has taken an active interest in the advancement and development of his section, and has served as town clerk for two years with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public.

In 1866 Mr. Bowker was married, in Poygan, to Miss Estella Tisdale, who was born in Massachusetts, daughter of Albert Tisdale, a native of the same State, who served during the Civil war in a Massachusetts regiment, and was wounded at New Orleans, where he died in 1864; Mrs. Tisdale died in Massachusetts. Mrs. Bowker's grandfather, Alden J. Luce, was an early pioneer of Poygan township, Winnebago county. Mrs. Bowker died September 2, 1880, leaving four children, Eva L. (wife of Clark Thorn, of Clintonville), Charles Albert, Nellie M. and Arthur E. After the mother's death these children were cared for by Miss Rebecca Shufelt, who resided with the Bowker family until her death, May 23, 1891. In 1888 Mr. Bowker married, for his second wife, in Larrabee township, Miss Clara A. Plopper, who was born in Sheboygan county, Wis., daughter of Benjamin and Hannah (Smith) Plopper, the former a native of Lewis county, N. Y., the latter of Germany; Mr. Plopper came to Sheboygan county, Wis., before his marriage, when Wisconsin was still a Territory, and here married. In 1869 he took up his residence in Larrabee township, Waupaca county, locating on a farm in Section 14, which he worked until his death, which occurred in December, 1892. Mrs. Plopper passed away in February, 1890. Their family consisted of six children: Artman, who lives in Milwaukee; Aaron, who died in 1892 in Larrabee township; Laura, living in Larrabee township; Willett, married and living on the home farm; Clara, Mrs. Bowker; and Elmore, who is married and lives in the city of Clintonville, Wisconsin.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bowker has come one child, Harold Guy. In politics our subject gives his support and sympathy to the Prohibition party; socially he is a member of the Temple of Honor and I. O. G. T., and in religious faith he is an adherent of the Methodist Church.

AMBROSE M. WILSON, who occupies the responsible position of head miller with the Upham Manufacturing Company of Marshfield, Wood county, is a native of Wisconsin, born in Weyauwega, Waupaca county, September 19, 1857. The family is of English origin, and was founded in America by Henry Wilson, grandfather of our subject, who was born in England. He had children as follows: James, Solomon, Charles, David, Lydia, Jane, Adeline and Mary. The third son, father of the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch, was born in Plattsburg, N. Y., in 1824, and was there married in 1851 to Sarah Clairmore. The father is a sawyer and filer, and throughout his entire life has followed lumbering. In 1852 he brought his family to the West, settling in Weyauwega, Wis., where he still makes his home. During the Civil war he donned "the blue," aiding in the defense of the Union, and has always been recognized as a faithful, loyal citizen. His wife was called to her final rest in 1885. They had a family of nine children, as follows: Charles, Ambrose, Helen, Lucia, Mary and Louisa, all yet living; and Alice, George and an infant, deceased.

As soon as he had attained a sufficient age, Ambrose M. Wilson entered the village school of Weyauwega, but like many boys did not care much for study at that time, and at the age of eleven left the school-room. During the following year he began packing shingles, and from that time was employed in a sawmill until nineteen years of age, when with an unconquerable desire to see the far-famed West, he went on a trip to Minnesota and Dakota. For a year and a half he carried on farming beyond the Mississippi, and then returned to his native State, where he was again employed in mills. In 1881 he entered the gristmill at Weyauwega, where he continued during the four succeeding years, and in the spring of 1885 he came to Marshfield. The following fall he secured the position of second miller in the Upham mill, serving in that way until 1891, when he was promoted to his present position, having charge of a large, fine mill which has a capacity of 200 barrels of flour daily. He thoroughly understands his business, and devotes himself untiringly to his work, thereby winning the confidence of his employers and the respect of all concerned.

Mr. Wilson was married in Royalton, Wis., in 1880, to Mrs. Phoebe A. Russell, who was born in the town of Paris, near Racine, Wis., a daughter of Russell M. and Eliza (Stephenson) Franklin, who were farming people. She had four sisters—Ella A., Dora, Mary and Martha; her father's people came from Pennsylvania, her mother's from New York. He was a soldier of the Civil war, as was also the first husband of Mrs. Wilson, who for a year was a member of Company B, Thirtieth Wisconsin Veteran Infantry. He participated in the battle of Atlanta, was with Sherman on the March to the Sea, and was honorably discharged June 9, 1865. He died in 1878, leaving two children—Maud and Claude.

Our subject is a Republican of pronounced views, taking an active interest in the growth and success of his party, although he has never sought or desired political preferment for himself. In manner he is plain and unassuming, and his affability, prompted by a true interest in his fellow men, wins him many friends. He is now living in his fine home in Marshfield, surrounded by many who esteem him highly for his sterling worth.

SIGUR OLSEN KROSTU. In performing the arduous labor incident to pioneer life, there is perhaps in Farmington township, Waupaca county, no resident who has equalled him whose name here stands. Mr. Krostu has not shirked his duty, when he found his lot in life cast amidst surroundings where brawn and muscle were the chief highways to subsequent comfort and affluence; with a strong determination to win he has faced and conquered the enemy, and the victory in his instance has been one of marked renown. Few of the newcomers to this land of after richness were poorer in worldly possessions than he, and few indeed are now more comfortably situated. Yet in the struggle Mr. Krostu has not, as many men might be in like conditions, been deadened by the severity of the fray to the common humanities of life. He is ever ready to aid the needy. He is a staunch supporter of progress and education. In the Lutheran Church, of which he is an honored member, there are no contributors more generous or liberal than he.

Mr. Krostu was born in Norway in April, 1832, the eldest son of Ole Krostu, a farmer. In this native land he was married to Thora Torgerson, and to them one child was born in Norway, but perished on the ocean, while its parents, with other countrymen and countrywomen, were emigrating to America to found and settle many new communities in the great Northwest. They reached Farmington township, Waupaca county, July 21, 1861. Here in Section 4 Sigur secured by tax title a tract of eighty acres. It was still wholly in a state of wilderness, and the young man built the log cabin which gave shelter to his wife and to other members of his father's family, who had accompanied him to the new home. He at once began to clear the farm and to make for himself and family a living. Upon this tract of land, won from its primitive wilderness by his own unaided efforts, Mr. Krostu has ever since remained. His family consists of the following: Ole, second, now of North Dakota; Julia, now the wife of Ed. Solverson, of Farmington township, Waupaca county, one of the richest farmers in the State (besides his large estates here, he owns and conducts several extensive farms in western Minnesota); Jennie, now the wife of Jesse D. Thomas, a prominent business man of Chippewa Falls, and proprietor of the well-known hotel, the "Taylor House"; Mary, now the wife of Charles Buswell, agent for the Wisconsin Central and the Green Bay, Winona & St. Paul railways at Amherst Junction, Wis.; Teman, at home; Belle, a bookkeeper and stenographer at Waupaca; Anna and Tillie, school teachers in Waupaca and Portage counties; Anton, Charlotte, and Winfield, at home attending school.

Though himself without an English education, save what he picked up, Mr. Krostu appreciates the value of learning, and has made it a religious duty to give to all his children the benefit of a good education, and the broader fields of labor, which they are entering and honoring, are demonstrating the wisdom of his judgment and their own inherited force of character. Mr. Krostu is a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party, but he has never aspired to official life. He is the owner of 220 acres of land in Farmington township, and of sixty acres in Scandinavia township, besides possessing other valuable investments. In the earlier years of his life his good wife ably seconded his efforts to win a home, for she always assisted him in the harvest field, and could readily perform a man's work there besides attending to the many duties and cares of the household. Mr. Krostu's capacity for work was prodigious. It was not uncommon for him to cradle six acres of wheat in one day. He has witnessed a wonderful transformation in the topography of the country about him, and has himself participated generously in the blessings that have been showered upon the land. He is today one of the most substantial and best respected residents of Farmington township; and can rightfully accredit his enviable and influential position to his own unaided efforts.

ARTHUR C. MINTO, a pioneer of Portage county, and one who joined in naming Lanark township, can trace his ancestry in part to sunny France, but for the most part to "Caledonia, stern and wild." His parents were Andrew and Margaret (McMillan) Minto.

Andrew Minto was born in France. His father was a noted revolutionist, and, like many other men of his time and country who were plotting to dethrone King Louis XVIII, was imprisoned for his offence. He was sentenced to die by the guillotine, but managed to escape from prison, and, with his son Andrew, eluded his pursuers, reached a French port in safety, and secured passage for himself and son on a vessel bound for Scotland. Immediately after his arrival on those hospitable shores he placed his son in a college in Edinburgh, leaving money enough with the trustees to pay for his tuition. He was a man of magnificent physique and wonderful strength and endurance, and therefore the sort of a man the government desired for service in the navy. One night, while walking the streets of Edinburgh, he was set upon by a press-gang, and, after a desperate struggle, was bound hand and foot, conveyed on board a man-of-war, and forced into the service. He determined to escape at the first opportunity, which presented itself while they were lying at a foreign port. He deserted the vessel, and, eluding the officers in pursuit, and assuming the name of Marshall, made his way to Cuba, where he amassed a large fortune before his death.

By the time of his death, the son, Andrew, had grown to manhood; but he did not learn of his father's death till years after it occurred, the news being conveyed to him by a sailor who had obtained the information while in Cuba. From the same source he also learned that before his death the father had endeavored to communicate with his son, Andrew, but was prevented by some person or persons unknown in order that they might gain possession of his fortune. Whether or not they succeeded is not known; but his grandson, Arthur C. Minto, whose name introduces this sketch, thinks that, if he were a young man, he would visit Cuba, and endeavor to ascertain the facts. He believes there is a fortune there awaiting the heirs of his grandfather.

After finishing his education, Andrew Minto obtained a professorship in a college in Edinburgh, which position he resigned some time afterward, and commenced teaching school, continuing in that vocation up to the time of his death, which occurred in Lanark, Scotland, when his son Arthur was but a boy. A short time after taking up school teaching he was married to Margaret McMillan, and to their union were born the following named children: James, Mary, Thomas, George, Agnes, Jennie and Arthur C. The mother died in Lanark, Scotland.

Arthur C. Minto was born, in 1818, near Lanark, Scotland, and attended school until he was ten years of age, when he was bound out to learn the weaver's trade. After spending five years at this trade our subject bound himself for seven years to work at calico printing. It was then the law that if a boy bound out in this manner should refuse to work the stated time he would have to serve a day in the penitentiary for every day he remained away from work. Mr. Minto ran away from this service, changed his name to Marshall, and, after working at various occupations until 1842, he, with his nephew, took passage at Glasgow on the vessel "Jennie Dean," bound for Montreal, Canada, where he arrived after a voyage of six weeks. Thence he journeyed to Lanark, Upper Canada, where he had an uncle, with whom he lived one year. After leaving his uncle's home, Mr. Minton worked at farming in Upper Canada, for two years. There he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Moore, a lady of English descent, after that event moving to Illinois, where he worked as a farm hand one year, and thence coming to Winnebago county, Wis., here living on a farm three years. While Mr. Minto was here the Indians sold to the government all the land they possessed west to the Mississippi, and he was a witness to the sale. Mr. Minto next moved to Outagamie county, where he remained one year, from there removing to Waupaca, Waupaca county, where he also lived one year, and then to Farmington, Waupaca county, in all three localities owning farms, which he disposed of. In 1853 he moved to what is now Lanark township, and was one of the men who named the town. Here, in Sections 25 and 26, he bought a farm of 160 acres of wild land, of which he has since sold forty acres; eighty acres of his present farm are cleared.

In March, 1861, Mrs. Mary Minto passed away. She was the mother of the following named children: Andrew (who died in boyhood), Matilda, Margaret, Jennie, Arthur and Andrew. On November 26, 1861, Arthur C. Minto married, at Winneconne, Wis., Mrs. Flynn, widow of Richard Flynn, and by this union one child was born, Carrie. Mrs. Minto's parents, Andrew and Anna Maria (Gargan) Blake, came to the United States, settling in Lowell, Mass., whence after a few years she (Mrs. Minto) came west and took up her residence in Winnebago county, Wis. By her first husband she had children as follows: Anna M., Margaret J. and Richard F. Mr. Minto is a Republican in politics, and has served for three years as supervisor. In Church connection both he and his wife are Presbyterians.

CHARLES MAYNARD, a prominent and prosperous farmer of Buena Vista township, Portage county, was born in the town of Whitehall, Washington Co., N. Y., September 3, 1854, and is a son of Ashley and Mary (Wales) Maynard, the former a native of Crown Point, N. Y., born April 22, 1818, the latter born February 25, 1828. The paternal grandfather, Heman Maynard, was a native of Vermont, and when a young man located at Crown Point, N. Y.; he became a soldier in the war of 1812. In 1864 he came to Wisconsin, spending his last days in the home of our subject's father, where he died; his wife had died in Crown Point many years before. Her maiden name was Mary Sisson, and by her marriage she became the mother of six children, all now deceased: Heman, Ashley, Hiram, Manly, Mary and Anna.

The father of our subject, a farmer by occupation, received a fair common-school education. In Whitehall, N. Y., in 1849, he wedded Mary Wales, a daughter of Frederick and Lucy (Atwood) Wales, and one of a family of ten children, as follows: Frederick, a farmer of Iola, Wis., was a soldier during the Civil war (he wedded a Southern lady); George, married to Laura Powell, is now deceased; Hiram (deceased), who was a farmer of Dakota, married Mary Powell; James, a farmer of Vermont, married Lu-sina Lewis; Elisha, who is now deceased, was a farmer of Vermont, and had married Laura Lamb; Russell, deceased, was also a farmer of the same State; Wesley, who wedded Lucy Lamb, was a farmer of Vermont, but has now passed away; Mary is the mother of our subject; Augustus is an agriculturist of Vermont; and Vine, who married Amanda Bailey, is a farmer of Wisconsin. The father died in 1855, at the age of sixty-five; the mother, who was born in New York, in 1792, passed away at the home of Ashley Maynard at the age of fifty-nine years. Our subject has one sister, Lillie, who became the wife of Fitz A. Doolittle, a carpenter of Stevens Point, and they have one child, Daisy.

Charles Maynard, the subject of this sketch, obtained a very good common-school education, his winters being passed in study, while through the summer months he worked on the farm, until reaching his majority, with the exception of two winters, when he was employed in the lumber woods, and also attended school one term after reaching the age of twenty-one. On December 20, 1876, Mr. Maynard married Miss Sophia Doolittle, who was born in northern Pennsylvania, December 3, 1855, daughter of Ephraim and Mary (Whitehill) Doolittle, natives of the Keystone State, the father born November 1, 1824, the mother January 26, 1822. William Doolittle, the grandfather, was a native of the same State, and was a soldier in the war of 1812, during which he was taken prisoner by the British and sent to Halifax, Nova Scotia, where he was held for some time; after being released he returned to Pennsylvania, where he died in 1830. His wife bore the maiden name of Rebecca Hall, and her death occurred at Almond, Wis., at the age of seventy-five. They had two children: Ephraim and Lydia, the latter of whom was the wife of George Frost, and died at the age of thirty-five years.

Ephraim Doolittle, the father of Mrs. Maynard, came to Wisconsin in 1859, locating on a farm in Almond, Portage county, which comprised 200 acres, and there he still makes his home. By his union with Mary Whitehill he had the following children: William is a Congressman from the State of Washington, also a lawyer of Tacoma, and by his marriage with Hattie Alvord, a native of New York, has two children—Clare and James. James was a doctor of Plainfield, Wis., where he died at the age of thirty years; he had married Anna Sharkey, a native of Delaware, and they had two children—Amos and Edna, who reside in Chicago, Ill. Laura is at home. Fitz and Sophia are next in order of birth. Frank, who completes the family, is a farmer of Almond, Portage county, and by his marriage with Mary Welcome, of Minnesota, has one child—Bessie. After the death of his first wife, Ephraim Doolittle was married in 1869, at Wild Rose, Wis., to Rhoda Etheridge, a native of England, and by this union there were two children—John (deceased), and Benjamin, at home.

For four years Mrs. Maynard taught school prior to her marriage in both Portage and Waushara counties. She is an interesting conversationalist and believes that young girls should receive an education and training that would insure them an independent living should they ever be thrown upon their own resources. After their marriage our subject and his wife began house-keeping on the old homestead left him by his father on the latter's death, comprising 160 acres, on which was a house that had been erected in 1858. He has since added sixty acres, and most of his land is under cultivation. They have three children: Edith, born August 8, 1878, a pupil in the high school at Stevens Point; Bessie, born February 27, 1882, and Ward, born May 22, 1887, both at home.

In politics, Mr. Maynard is a Republican and an active political worker. He and his estimable wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Liberty Corners, our subject being a member of the choir. He possesses a powerful bass, sweet and pleasing to the ear. He is a strong advocate of the cause of temperance, and holds membership with the Good Templars Lodge of Buena Vista. In appearance he is nearly six feet high, with a splendid physique. He is one of the most honored and highly esteemed citizens of Buena Vista, a good conversationalist, and a well-informed man, being a great reader.

WILLIAM I. NIVEN, a young man highly esteemed in the community in which he lives, is laying a good foundation for a successful life in the honorable and independent occupation of a tiller of the soil, so much more sure and satisfactory in its rewards to an honest man than many another line of activity. He was born December 3, 1872, in the township of Lanark, Portage Co., Wis., and is a son of Andrew B. and Rebecca (Shearer) Niven.

The parents of Andrew B. Niven were John and Mary (Kirkwood) Niven, and the father of John Niven was Walter Niven, a well-to-do farmer in Scotland. John Niven, a native of Scotland, was a finely educated man, and was a weaver by trade. He was accidentally killed in Scotland in 1864. To him and his wife Mary were born the following children: Janet, widow of Duncan Cameron; John; Mary, widow of Thomas Messer, living with her brother in Lanark township; James, living in Scotland; William, a farmer in Lanark, Wis.; Walter, who was accidentally killed in Scotland at the age of twenty-two; Andrew B., father of William I.; and Jane, now Mrs. J. Shearer, living in Scotland.

Andrew B. Niven was born in Scotland, in 1842, commenced to learn the trade of pattern designer at the age of fourteen, and followed it till he left Scotland. On June 2, 1868, he was married, in Glasgow, to Rebecca Shearer, and in 1869 they sailed from that port in the vessel "St. David," after a voyage of thirteen days landing at Quebec, and thence coming direct to Lanark, Portage Co., Wis. His mother came to this country with him, and died at Lanark, Wis., April 4, 1893. To Mr. and Mrs. Andrew B. Niven were born children as follows: John, born March 30, 1869, in Glasgow, Scotland; and Andrew, born April 26, 1871; William I. (our subject); Walter, born September 20, 1874; James, born April 1, 1876; Jessie, born March 16, 1878; Robert, born February 18, 1884; Mary, born December 30, 1887, and George, born March 4, 1890, all born in Lanark, Wis. In Lanark, Portage Co., Wis., Mr. Niven bought a farm of sixty-seven acres in Section 2, and commenced farming thereon. He has since added eighty acres in Section 11 to the original purchase, and most of his farm is cleared.

William I. Niven attended school in Lanark, Portage county, until he was sixteen years of age, then worked around home helping his father. In 1893 he bought a farm of eighty acres adjoining his father's, in Section 11, in the cultivation of which he is now engaged, making his home with his father; he is now putting up buildings on his land. In religious affiliation he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in the workings of which he takes an active interest, and he is superintendent of the Sunday-school. In politics he is a Prohibitionist, and he is a strong advocate of temperance.

JOHAN WILDE. Probably no more industrious citizen can be found in Waupaca county than this well-known farmer of Dayton township, and feeling assured that the record of his life will prove of interest to many of our readers, we gladly give it a place in this volume. A native of New York State, he was born in Poughkeepsie, February 10, 1844, a son of Simeon and Ann (Radley) Wilde. His father was born in England, and at the age of twelve came to the United States. For some years he followed teaming in New York, and at an early day became one of the pioneer settlers of Springvale township, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., whence he came to Lind township, Waupaca county, being also one of its early settlers. Both he and his wife here passed their remaining days. Their children are John; William, who died in the same township; Grace, wife of Horace Eastman, of Dayton township; Alfred, of Minnesota; Mary, who died in childhood; and Charles, an agriculturist of Lind township, Waupaca county. The father delighted in argument, and was a stalwart supporter of the Democracy. After coming to the West he followed farming up to within a week of his death and acquired a comfortable home. He died at the age of sixty-six, and his remains were interred in the cemetery of Lind Center, Wis. His wife survived him eight years, dying on the same day and at the same hour, October 4, 1892, at the age of sixty-nine years.

In the district schools John Wilde was educated, and until twenty-five years of age gave his father the benefit of his services. After starting out for himself he followed the river for some time, and although he was then new to the business he soon became an expert, one who could successfully avoid the dangers of that hazardous undertaking. When, through labor and economy, he had acquired some capital, he invested in pine lands, but had to hire teams to haul the lumber, thus incurring an indebtedness of $500; but Jerome Crocker, of Weyauwega, trusted him for the amount, and in course of time he was able to liquidate the debt. In the fall of 1870 he purchased 160 acres of wild land in Section 29, Dayton township, and at once began to improve it.

On January 1, 1871, in Berlin, Wis., Mr. Wilde wedded Miss Mary E. Riley, a native of Canada, and they began house-keeping in a little lumber shanty in Weyauwega township. Her death occurred in 1878, and Mr. Wilde married October 8, 1891, Adelia F. Timm, by whom he has two children: Charles A., born August 11, 1892; and Pearl G., born June 15, 1894. Mr. Wilde has met reverses and difficulties, but has overcome all obstacles by determined effort, and has steadily worked his way upward to a position of affluence. His indomitable spirit stood him instead of capital, and his enterprise brought to him prosperity. He is now the owner of 389 acres, of which more than 200 are broken. His first home was destroyed by fire, but he replaced it by a comfortable residence, which is situated on a natural building site, a beautiful location, and the home is now one of the finest in this section of the county. In his political views he is a stalwart Republican.

BYRON ROGERS is the owner of one of the fine farms of Portage county, a tract embracing 240 acres of valuable land, of which 120 acres are under a high state of cultivation. He makes a specialty of raising potatoes, for which the soil is excellently adapted, and his industry is rewarded by a good income. The farm is improved with good buildings, all of which have been erected by the owner, and his home is one of the best frame residences in the locality. His possessions have all been acquired through his own efforts, and indicate a useful and well-spent life.

Mr. Rogers is one of the native sons of Portage county, born in Plover, September 10, 1854. His parents, Achlas and Sarah (Downing) Rogers, were both natives of Ohio, and when only five years of age the father left that State. He acquired a good education, and became a respected man. For a time he carried on the hotel business, coming to Wisconsin in 1853, and following that pursuit at Stevens Point. To Mr. and Mrs. Rogers were born two children, Byron and Rose, the latter now the wife of Robert Smith, a lumberman of Merrill, Wis. The mother of our subject was a second time married, becoming the wife of Hugh Jones, a farmer, by whom she had three children: Ella, wife of Charles Grover, of Plover; Nettie, who died in infancy; and Frank, who is now living in Plover with his mother.

The children all remained at home until after they had reached mature years. From the age of sixteen Byron Rogers has earned his own living, working as a farm hand and in the lumber woods. After he had attained to man's estate he chose, as a companion and helpmeet on life's journey, Miss Florence Youmans, their marriage being celebrated September 29, 1878. She is a daughter of Joatham and Helen (Hill) Youmans, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the latter of Napoli, N. Y., born January 29, 1833. The father was a miller and carpenter by trade, and afterward carried on agricultural pursuits. In 1855 he came with his family to Plover, Wis., where he is still living, his time and attention being devoted to farming. In his family are four children: Mrs. Rogers; Ida, wife of Nelson Weeks, of Stevens Point, Wis.; Elmer, who is living in Plover; and Miss Alta, who is superintendent of the Oshkosh Hospital, Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have an interesting family of three children: Elmer, born July 22, 1879; Myrle, born November 26, 1882; and Ernest, born July 9, 1886. For two years after his marriage Mr. Rogers continued to work for others, and then, with the capital he had acquired through his own labors, purchased eighty acres of land, of which only thirty acres had been cleared. To this he has added as his means have increased until he is now the owner of the fine property before described. He takes quite an active interest in political affairs, and stanchly supports the Republican party. The best interests of the community receive his support, and he is recognized as a progressive and valuable citizen.

JOHAN ERICKSON is a young man of good business ability, one of the most prosperous farmers of Farmington township, Waupaca county. He was born July 23, 1868, on the Erickson homestead in that township, which was located by his father, Andrew Erickson, one of the pioneer settlers of the county. The days of his youth were passed upon the farm midst play and work, and he was educated in the common schools of the neighborhood.

In April, 1892, in the township of his nativity, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Erickson and Miss Ella Wilson, a native of Farmington, and a daughter of George Wilson, of Waupaca. Their union has been blessed with two sons—Archie and Phillip.

The first land which our subject owned was a tract of 120 acres in Sections 16 and 17, which he inherited from his father. In the fall of 1891 he purchased the southwest quarter of Section 22, Farmington township, and has made his home thereon since his marriage. He now owns 220 acres of land, the greater part arable, and devotes his time and attention to its cultivation, also to dairy farming. On December 28, 1893, he established the Sunny Crest Dairy, which he is now successfully conducting, his products being of such an excellent quality that they always find a ready sale upon the market.

Mr. and Mrs. Erickson hold membership with the Lutheran Church, and are actively interested in all that pertains to the welfare of the community and its upbuilding. He exercises his right of franchise in support of the men and measures of the Republican party, whose principles he believes will best advance the interests of the masses. He has never aspired to public office, however, but gives his attention to his business interests. He is attentive and watchful, carefully looking after all the details of his business, and neglects no duty for pleasure. His industry and perseverance have therefore brought him success, and, although he inherited some property, his prosperity is largely due to his own well-directed efforts.

MARTIN SIMONSON RUSTADE was born October 26, 1839, in Faaberg, Gulbrandsdalen, Norway, and is a son of Simon O. Rustade and Sessel Land, the former born in 1809, the latter in 1813. When a young man the father learned the trade of blacksmith, which he followed in Norway, where his ancestors had lived for many generations. The grandfather, Ole Severtson, owned a farm there, which he operated through the summer, working in the woods in the winter. There he died at the age of forty-eight, his wife following him to the grave three years later. Their children were Simon O., Christopher, Lars, Chresten, Arne and Mattia.

In the spring of 1854 the parents of our subject left Christiania with their family on the sailing vessel "Ceifyer," and after ten weeks and three days landed at Quebec, whence they came direct to Wisconsin. At Ixonia the father worked as a farm hand. While going there, Eliza, a daughter of the family, died of cholera, and Anna and Christian died soon after reaching their home, all within two weeks. About two years later the family journeyed by ox-team to New Hope, Portage county, driving their cattle, and here the father located 120 acres of land, which he cultivated and improved for two years. He then purchased 120 acres near Sharon, same State, on which he built a log house and resided until 1871, when he and his wife went to live with their son, Ole, a farmer of Portage county, with whom they remained for some time. They afterward resided in Nelsonville, Wis., until the father's death, which occurred September 5, 1891. The mother is now living with Lewis Loberg, in Nelsonville, Wis. Their children are Maria, who remained in Norway until after marriage (her husband died there, and she is now living near Marshfield, Wis.); Ole is a farmer of North Dakota; Martin is the next living; Oline is the wife of L. L. Loberg, of Nelsonville; and Christina is the wife of Johannes Guldmunson, of Stockton, Wisconsin.

The educational privileges of our subject were limited, and at the age of fifteen he came with his parents to this country. Later he went to Scandinavia, Wis., where he worked in a gristmill through the winter, and the following summer was employed on a farm. He then labored in the lumber woods and upon the river until October 8, 1861, when at Stevens Point he enlisted as a private of Company G, Twelfth Wis. V. I. He was discharged at Natchez, January 4, 1864, and on the next day enlisted in the same regiment, serving until the close of the war. After three weeks spent at Madison and three weeks in western Missouri, the regiment went to Leavenworth, Kans., and there loading the wagons with ammunition and provisions started for Fort Scott, and continued on to Lawrence. They were there ordered to New Mexico, but received counter-orders and returned to Leavenworth, where they embarked in boats for Columbus, Ky., and afterward went to Humboldt, Tenn. Building a bridge on the Obion river, they then went into camp some distance from Memphis, where they remained until the winter of 1863, at which time they proceeded with Grant to Vicksburg. Mr. Rustade participated in the battles of Bakers Creek, Jackson, the siege of Vicksburg, and Natchez. In April, 1864, with his regiment, he received a thirty-days' furlough, and later joined the command at Madison, the regiment proceeding to Cairo, Ill., and joining Sherman's army at Rome, Ga. He then participated in the battles of Resaca and New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek, and on July 21 proceeded to Atlanta, being engaged in many skirmishes on the way. From that city they proceeded to Savannah, where they arrived on Christmas Day, 1864. Mr. Rustade was also in the battles of Bentonville and Raleigh, the last battle of the war at Goldsboro, and after participating in the grand review at Washington, went to Louisville, Ky., where he was honorably discharged July 16, 1865.

In the summer of 1866 Mr. Rustade operated a farm on shares, and in the winter worked in the lumber woods. In the summer of 1867 he ran on the Mississippi river, and later, with a companion, went to McGregor, Iowa, from which place they journeyed over the surrounding country in search of a farm, but finding nothing to suit him, our subject returned home, and for about sixteen years was employed in the pineries.

Mr. Rustade was married in New Hope, Wis., August 18, 1867, to Paulina Kankrud, who was born in Norway, September 16, 1846, and came with her parents to America during her infancy. They settled in Ixonia, Wis., where the father and mother died soon afterward, and the children, a son and three daughters, went to live with an uncle, Hans P. Kankrud. Mrs. Rustade has never been on a railroad train in her life. She is a pleasant lady and has many friends. Their family was as follows: Emmil, deceased; Andres, who was born December 7, 1874, died February 2, 1884; and Severin, who was born May 2, 1877, died February 24, 1884. Living—Hannah Syberine, who was born November 11, 1867, and is the wife of A. J. Cochran, an architect of St. Louis, Mo.; Hella Isabella, who was born January 14, 1871, and is the wife of Julius M. Smeberge, of New Hope, Wis.; Karl I., born May 29, 1879; James Melvin, born November 6, 1883; Clarence Severin, born February 27, 1886; and Alma Minerva, born November 20, 1892.

Prior to his marriage, Mr. Rustade purchased his farm, and with his wife moved into a log house that stood upon the place. He first bought eighty acres of partially improved land in Section 2, New Hope township, and has since added to it forty acres. In the spring of 1879, in company with his brother and his family, he started with a team for the West with the view of making a new location, and went as far as Bismarck, N. Dak. He sold his team in Mandan, and accompanied his brother as far as Valley City, where the brother located, while our subject returned home. He then purchased a threshing machine, and engaged in threshing in the Red River Valley, Dakota, for three seasons, spending each winter in Wisconsin. He is a scientific farmer, thoroughly understanding his business, and therefore is meeting with success in his undertakings. He has always been a stanch Republican, and for three years has served as supervisor. He and his wife are faithful members of the United Norwegian Church of New Hope, and are highly esteemed people. He takes great pleasure in hunting, and is an excellent shot, many a deer and bear having fallen beneath his trusty rifle.

CHRISTIAN HANSON, a skillful farmer, lives in New Hope township, Portage county, where he carries on the various departments of his occupation with success. He is a native of Denmark, born in the Sogn of Hillested, April 17, 1839, and is a son of Hans and Christina (Jorgenson) Jorgenson, natives of the same place, the father born 1786, and the mother in 1803. The father worked as a farm hand in Denmark, where his death occurred in 1852, and there his wife also died in 1843. In the family were five children: Jorgen, who died in Denmark at the age of fourteen years; Anna and Else are also deceased; Christian is next in order of birth; and Anna, the second of that name, was the wife of Ole N. Rasmuson, came to America in 1868

Christian Hanson received a good common-school education in his native place, continuing his studies until the age of fourteen years, when he hired out as a farm hand, receiving two dollars per month for his services. He continued to follow that employment until he had reached the age of twenty-three, at which time he was only getting about five dollars per month. In 1863 he determined to come to the United States, thinking he might better his financial condition in this new and rapidly growing country. From Hamburg, Germany, he sailed on a merchant vessel to Hull, England, thence by rail to Liverpool, where he engaged passage on the steamer "Bohemian," of the Montreal Steamship Company, which landed him at Quebec. Four weeks after leaving home he reached Waupaca county, Wis., having only twelve dollars left in his pockets. It was October 6 when he arrived in that county, where he was engaged to work as a farm hand at fifty cents per day, being thus employed for two weeks. At the end of that time he went to Lind township, that county, where he worked for his board, cutting wood and doing chores, also attending school for about two weeks. Later he received thirteen dollars per month and board at farm labor, being thus employed until going to Stevens Point, Wis., where he was engaged to take lumber down the river from Wausau, Wis., to St. Louis, Mo., but on reaching Grand Rapids, Wis., the lumber became wedged and he was compelled to leave it. Then going to Port Edwards, Wis., he was engaged in a sawmill the following two summers, while the winters were spent in the woods. The spring of 1867 he went to New Hope township, where he purchased his present farm, which contained 120 acres of land, only twenty-seven being improved, to which he has added from time to time until now seventy acres are comprised within its boundaries, and the poor buildings then standing have been replaced by substantial and commodious ones. His farm is pleasantly situated on the border of a beautiful lake, and is one of the most attractive places of the neighborhood.

At Waupaca, Wis., April 13, 1866, Mr. Hanson was united in marriage with Miss Frederica Behm, who was born in Hillested, Denmark, September 29, 1840, daughter of Ludwig and Margaret (Paulson) Behm, also natives of that country, who, with their family, came to America on the same vessel as our subject. They located in Lind township, Waupaca county. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Hanson are Paul, Frederick, Christian, Marcus, Christina, Hannah and Maria. Six children have come to bless the union of our subject and his estimable wife: Hans Christian Ludwig, born February 25, 1868, residing in Alaska, where he went in the spring of 1895; Maria Sophia, born April 20, 1870, now the wife of John Hanson, a farmer of Waupaca, Wis.; Marcus Knute, born December 6, 1872, a pupil in the Scandinavia Academy in Waupaca county; Anna Margaret, born May 27, 1878; Oline Christine, born February 6, 1880, and Nels Peter, born August 11, 1883, all three at home.

In his political affiliations Mr. Hanson is a Republican, and has always taken a warm interest in the success of his party. He has served his fellow citizens in several official positions; has been township treasurer six years, township clerk ten years, chairman of the township board two years, assessor one year, and justice of the peace twenty-four years, all of which offices he has creditably filled. He takes quite an active part in Church matters, belonging to the Norwegian Lutheran Church of New Hope, to which his wife also belongs. He is a man of excellent judgment, and since becoming a resident of the county has won the respect and confidence of the community in which he lives, and occupies a leading position among its influential citizens.

GEORGE H. WUNDERLICH, who occupies more than a prominent place in the history of Elmhurst, Langlade county, as the leading mill owner and general merchant, is a native of Wisconsin, born August 1, 1858, at Stephenville, Ellington township, Outagamie county.

He is the eldest son of John S. Wunderlich, who was born in Bavaria, in 1827, a son of Michael and Katherine Wunderlich, the former of whom was a farmer in that country. They were the parents of ten children, of whom the following are living: Elizabeth, Rosa, John S., John, George and Wolf. The father came to America in 1844, the family in 1846, settling on a farm in Granville, Wis., where both the parents died. John S., the eldest son, was seventeen years old when he left the old country. He had a fair education at the common schools of his native land, and when but fifteen years old learned the trade of a weaver, but on his arrival in America he worked out as a common laborer. In 1854 he was married to Mary Berg, who was born in Germany, in 1837, and to this union came children as follows: George H., the subject of this sketch; Henry; Christ, of Mayking, Langlade county; Rhinehart; Dora, wife of Anton Ritger, of Appleton; Anna, living at home; Amelia, wife of William Bloedel, of Ahnapee; Elsie and Theodore, both yet at home, and one son and two daughters deceased. By hard work and close economy the father of this interesting family had saved up money with which to purchase land in Outagamie county, which he cleared and improved, and he lived thereon about ten years. In 1865 he sold the farm, and, building a sawmill at Stephenville, began the manufacture of lumber, broom-handles, and chair legs, continuing in this business some twelve years, when he was burned out. He then rebuilt in company with his son, in the fall of 1877, continuing in this business until the spring of 1882, when they removed their mill to Elmhurst, and there began the manufacture of hard and soft lumber. In 1892, Mr. Wunderlich retired from active life, turning over his large interests to his sons, and returning to Appleton, where he now lives enjoying the fruits of a long life of useful labor. During the war of the Rebellion he spent three months in Nashville in the employ of the government. He is a Republican in his political views, but beyond casting his vote for the best man, has taken no active part in political affairs. He is highly respected by all who know him, and is a good type of the honest, hard-working Germans, so many of whom have come to this country with no means, but by their own industry have become well-to-do, influential citizens.

George H. Wunderlich when but seventeen years of age graduated from the Spencerian Business College, Milwaukee, from which time he was bookkeeper for his father at Stephenville up to 1877, when the mill burned. George then received an interest in the business, soon afterward becoming a partner. In 1882 the firm removed to Elmhurst, Langlade county, and here built a sawmill which they operated under the firm name of J. S. Wunderlich & Son; but on the retirement of the father the firm was changed to that of Wunderlich Brothers, and at first consisted of four members—George H., Henry, Christ and Rhinehart. In 1893, George H. purchased the interests of the brothers, and has since conducted the business alone. In 1888 the mill was entirely destroyed by fire, but they at once rebuilt; in 1894 a similar calamity overtook them with a loss of $55,000, covered by an insurance of only $20,000. It is our subject's intention to build again during the current year (1895) and it is to be hoped that his energy and perseverance, in spite of adverse circumstances, will result in a prosperous future. He is now an extensive owner of timberland, besides having a fine farm of 200 acres well improved, on which stands an elegant residence.

On October 6, 1891, Mr. Wunderlich was married to Miss Minnie E. Moss, who was born in Canada February 4, 1866, a daughter of C. W. and Maria (Langrell) Moss, the former a native of London, England, the latter of Canada. The family came to Wisconsin in 1868, and the father was in business first at Fond du Lac, going from there to Green Bay and later to Neenah. In 1881 he came to Langlade county, settling in Norwood township, where he is engaged in farming and store keeping. Mr. and Mrs. Moss had nine children, seven of whom are living, viz.: Minnie, Harry, Arthur, Frank, Bertha, Ernest, and Helen. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. George Wunderlich, Erma and Vera. Mr. Wunderlich is a Democrat, prominent in local politics, a thoroughly representative man and a leader of his party. In 1889-90 he served as sheriff of Langlade county, has been chairman of the township, in all eight years, and is the present postmaster at Elmhurst. In 1892 he was a candidate for the Legislature on the Democratic ticket. Socially, he is a member of the Sons of Hermann, is popular in both public and private life, and is regarded as a leading man in the community.

AMUND MORTENSON (deceased) was for many years prominently connected with the agricultural interests of New Hope township, Portage county, having located there in 1855. In Gaustal, Norway, his birth occurred July 30, 1825, and he was a son of Morten and Carrie (Jacobson) Severson, who were both natives of the same place, dying there some time in the "fifties."

In his boyhood days Mr. Mortenson attended the schools of the neighborhood in the winter season, during the summer months assisting his father. At the age of twenty years, in April, 1845, he sailed from Kragroa on the "Presiosa," and eight weeks later first set foot on American soil in New York, whence he came direct to Ixonia, Jefferson Co., Wis., where he purchased a small tract of land, though for some years he hired out as a farm hand, and also owned and operated a threshing machine.

In Ixonia, February 1, 1850, Mr. Mortenson was married to Miss Sophia Mortenson, who was also born in Gaustal, Norway, March 8, 1828, daughter of Morten and Ann (Esterly) Anderson, natives of Gaustal, the father born January 16, 1791, the mother in 1801. Her grandfather, Andrus Bauker, followed farming throughout life in Norway, where his death occurred. Besides his agricultural duties, the father of Mrs. Mortenson also gave violin lessons, being one of the best musicians in that part of Norway, and was also the leader of several noted orchestras. He also served in the war between Norway and Sweden in the years of 1813-14. He died in Gaustal, in 1876, at the age of eighty-five years, and in that place his wife also departed this life in 1857. They had four children: Ann, who died in Christiania, at the age of twenty-one; Bertha, who died in Gaustal, at the age of sixty-two; Mrs. Mortenson; and Olia, also deceased.

In her native land Mrs. Mortenson received a good common-school education, which she has greatly supplemented by reading and observation in later years, so that she is a well-informed and intelligent lady. She also learned dressmaking, which she followed for six years before coming to America. On the "Presiosa" she left Drammond in May, 1849, and at the end of eight weeks reached New York harbor. From there she took a steamer up the Hudson to Albany, thence by canal proceeded to Buffalo, by the lakes to Milwaukee, and on to Ixonia, Jefferson Co., Wis., by team, where the following February she was married. By that union she became the mother of three children: Matthias Amundson, born May 5, 1851, follows farming, and by his marriage with Ida Eliza Haarstad has three children—Clara Sophia, Albert Oscar and Isabella Matilda; Carrie, born October 31, 1855, died December 24, 1861; and Carrie, born July 9, 1863, now the wife of John A. Hole, a merchant, by whom she has three children—Albert, born February 16, 1887; Sevrin Alfred, born March 18, 1890, and Bella Minerva, born June 2, 1892.

Mr. Mortenson made arrangements to purchase forty acres of land in Jefferson county at $2 per acre, but being unable to make the payments on the same, the owners foreclosed, and he was left homeless. In July, 1855, he removed with his wife and child to New Hope township, where he bought eighty acres of government land, and while erecting his house lived with neighbors. It was located in Section 17, and there he made his home until March, 1892, when he disposed of that property and bought the present home of the family. A good dwelling house, store and barn stood on the place, and there he lived retired until his death, which occurred December 29, 1893. His remains now lie interred in the New Hope Cemetery.

Mr. Mortenson always took an active interest in everything pertaining to the welfare and development of his town and county, and by his fellow citizens was called upon to serve in several official positions, including those of town treasurer and assessor. He also took a commendable interest in religious matters, he and his wife both being earnest and consistent members of the United Norwegian Lutheran Church of New Hope. Politically his support was always given to the Republican party, and he was one of the honored and respected citizens of the township.

Mrs. Mortenson still continues to live on the homestead which is now conducted by her son-in-law, John Hole. She has passed through many trials since coming to the New World, but being of an undaunted spirit she never gave up, and was of great assistance to her husband in his hours of trial and adversity. She has gathered around her a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, and enjoys the love and confidence of all who know her.

GEORGE R. BUGBEE, M. D., one of the oldest practitioners of medicine in the city of Wausau, Marathon county, was born in Waterford, Vt., February 7, 1849, and is a son of Ralph, Jr., and Mary (Barker) Bugbee, who were born in St. Johnsbury, Vermont.

The parents of Dr. George R. Bugbee removed to Franconia, N. H., when he was but three years of age, taking him with them; and, when eight years of age, his father having in the meantime again married, he accompanied his father and step-mother on their removal to Littleton, N. H., where he received his rudimentary education, and later was a student at the academies in Lancaster, N. H., Newbury, Vt., and Tilton, N. H., graduating from the latter institution, after which he attended the Medical College of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and the Dartmouth Medical College, at Hanover, N. H., graduating there with the class of 1872. Dr. Bugbee commenced the practice of his chosen profession at Littleton, N. H., in connection with his father, who was a well-known physician of that town. He remained there two years, then removed to Whitefield, N. H., where he was engaged in practice for about fifteen years. On December 31, 1881, at Whitefield, N. H., Dr. George R. Bugbee married Miss Emma E. Lindsey, and five children have been born to them, named in baptism as follows: Gwendoline Barker, Abel Ralph, Leigh Frank, Mural Evalyn and George Ralph, Jr. Mrs. Bugbee's parents were Hardy and Betsy Lindsey.

From Whitefield Dr. Bugbee removed to Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., where he has been engaged in his profession ever since, and, by his skillful treatment of all cases under his care, has built up a large and remunerative practice. Dr. Bugbee is a member of the White Mountain Medical Society of New Hampshire, and in his political views is a Republican. The family attend the Congregational Church.

Dr. Ralph Bugbee, Jr. (deceased), was a graduate of the Burlington (Vt.) Medical College, and had a large practice in Waterford, Vt., and in Littleton, N. H. He married three times; had no children by his first wife; by his second wife, whose maiden name was Mary Barker, he had only one, George Ralph, the subject of this sketch; and by his third marriage had one daughter, Mary, now wife of Israel Blake, a wholesale ice dealer in New York City. Dr. Bugbee passed away at Littleton, N. H., at the age of seventy-four years, after an active and useful life, the greater portion of which was spent in the practice of his profession. His parents, the grandparents of Dr. George R. Bugbee, had born to them a family of five sons and one daughter, and all five of these sons followed the profession of their father, who was a noted physician, and were graduates from colleges that rank among the best, and their sister was united in marriage with Dr. Enoch Blanchard, who practiced at Minonk, Ill., and who passed away about three years ago. So, it may be well and truthfully said of the Bugbee family, that they are "a family of noted physicians."

FRANK DAY, whose success in life is the reward of his own labors, is a native of New York State, born in Erie county, December 22, 1862. His parents, Ithamer and Alvira (Davis) Day, had a family of fourteen children—seven sons and seven daughters—of whom he was the fifth son and eighth child in the order of birth. The father followed agricultural pursuits, and became comfortably situated financially. In the spring of 1866 he emigrated to Portage county, Wis., locating in Section 21, Belmont township, where he secured a partially-improved tract of land. There was a frame dwelling upon the place and some other buildings, but much of the work of cultivation and improvement was performed by the father and his sons. His death occurred at Plover, Portage Co., Wis., January, 1884, he having lost his life in the burning of the hotel where he was staying over night; two years later his wife was laid by his side in Belmont Cemetery. In his political views the father was a staunch Democrat.

In the common schools Frank Day became familiar with the rudimentary branches of learning, but in the school of experience he has obtained the greater part of his knowledge. At the age of fourteen he began working as a farm hand for others, and attending school as he found opportunity. For three winters he was employed in the lumber woods, and in the summer months labored in the fields, so that we see that his life was anything but an easy one. When a boy of fifteen summers (in 1877), he accompanied an emigrant wagon to Nebraska, where he remained about six months, working on a farm near the city of Grand Island. In 1882 he visited California, in company with his mother who went for her health, staying nearly a year near San Francisco, where his older brother lived.

Mr. Day was married November 5, 1885, in Portage City, Wis., to Miss Lizzie Casey, and they began their domestic life upon the farm which is still his home, and which he rented for four years. One child was born to them, Jennie Bell, but the mother and daughter have both departed this life. Mr. Day was again married June 23, 1894, in Almond, Wis., the lady of his choice being Miss Martha M. McLellan, who was born November 11, 1874, in Plover, Wis., a daughter of George and Susan (Sanders) McLellan. She was formerly a teacher of recognized ability, and is a most estimable lady, having a large circle of friends.

In June, 1890, Mr. Day bought the interests of the other heirs in the old homestead, and is now the owner of 120 acres of rich and arable land, upon which, in 1891, he erected a pleasant and substantial home, which stands as a monument to his enterprise and perseverance. He is now a prosperous young farmer who has won success through diligence and good management, and in future years will probably become a wealthy man if the past is a true criterion by which to judge. He does not seek official preferment, but is a stalwart supporter of the Republican party and its principles, and is a faithful citizen, devoted to the best interests of the community in which he has so long made his home.

LEONARD MASON was a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and is a highly-esteemed citizen of Amherst township, Portage county. He was born in Pinckney, N. Y., November 20, 1830, and is a son of Jared and Margaret (Green) Mason.

The father of Jared Mason, Elias Mason, was born in New York State, was a gardener by occupation, and lived near Troy. The following named children were born to him: David, John, Jared (father of the subject of this sketch), Mary, Elmira, Aaron and Moses (who reside in Rensselaer county, N. Y.), Betsey (married to David Soper, now deceased; she resides in Manitowoc county, Wis.), and Marvin (a farmer in Manitowoc county). Jared Mason, a farmer by occupation, was born in Rensselaer county, N. Y., in February, 1804. He was educated in his native county, married in Lewis county, N. Y., and soon after his marriage moved to Lyme, Jefferson Co., N. Y., where he bought a farm on which he lived for twenty-five years. He then moved with his family to Cato, Manitowoc Co., Wis., where he bought from a man named Cary, a 160-acre tract of wild land on a soldier's claim, on which he made his home until his death, which occurred in September, 1880. He is buried in Cato. Jared Mason was twice married. The children by his first wife, Margaret (Green), who died when her son Leonard was only fourteen years of age, were as follows: Eli, who was a private in the Sixteenth Wis. V. I., and died in hospital at New Albany, Ind. (he was unmarried); Martha, who resides in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., and was married three times—first to James Odell, the third time to a Mr. Boomer; Leonard, subject of this sketch; Wesley, a retired farmer, residing in Amherst, who married Ann Thumb, and had seven children—Ozias, Albert, Wesley (deceased), Clarence, Ida, Sherman, and Lillie (deceased); Rufus, who married Rhoda Barnard, was a private in Company C, Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., and died of smallpox in hospital at Nashville, Tenn., leaving a wife and three children (Resie, John and Fanny); Albert, who is proprietor of a canning factory in Sycamore, Ill., married to Fanny Van Epps, by whom he had four children—Sherman, Arthur, Hattie and one whose name is not given; and Jeannette, who married R. E. Rickaby, and resides on a farm in Marinette county, Wis. (their children are Eva, Margaret, Earl, Edwin and Leonard). For his second wife Jared Mason married Mrs. Ruth Barnard, a widow, and to their union were born two children—Isaiah, who was elected clerk of court in the fall of 1894, married Evelyn Flagg (at present they reside near New Lisbon, Juneau Co., Wis.); Ryley, a farmer and carpenter, who resides near Antigo, Langlade Co., Wisconsin.

Leonard Mason acquired a meager education in Lyme, Jefferson Co., N. Y., attending school during the winter until he was fifteen. At the age of twelve he hired out as a farmer boy for six dollars per month and board, and never lived at his father's home but one year after that time, with that exception working out until his marriage. On July 2, 1849, in Jefferson county, N. Y., Leonard Mason was united in marriage with Miss Christiana Thumb, who was born in St. Johnsville, Montgomery Co., N. Y., October 1, 1830, and they have become the parents of the following-named children: Martha, Emma, Alpheus, William E. and Clara B. Martha married C. H. Van Cott (a soldier who was wounded at Gettysburg), and the children born to them were: Dora, who was a school teacher before marriage, married Bert Moss, and has one child; Clifford; Bertha, at home, a school teacher in Amherst, and Leonard, at home. Emma married Stephen Hammond, a farmer in Lanark township, Portage county, and they have two children—Lotta and Charles. Alpheus married Mary Mason, and they reside in Greenwood, Clark Co., Wis.; he is a traveling salesman; they have one child, Winifred. William E. was killed at Amherst, Portage county, by a runaway team; he came to town with his father's team of young horses, to take Mr. and Mrs. Thumb, his uncle and aunt, home with him; stopping at the house, he inquired if they were ready, and was answered: "In a few minutes;" he jumped out of the wagon and took the horses by the bits to turn them around to hitch them to the fence, when they became frightened and ran, he hanging to them; they crossed the street in front of J. J. Nelson's residence, and in some way William was dashed violently against the hitching post and almost instantly killed; he was a remarkably strong and active young man, of modest manners, and his death was a sad blow to his parents. Clara B., the youngest child, married Charles Moss, a farmer in Amherst, and they have one child, a daughter, named Frankie.

Mrs. Leonard Mason is a daughter of Peter and Catharine (Castleman) Thumb, the former of whom was born in Montgomery county, N. Y., in 1802. He was a farmer in New York, was married in Montgomery county, and a few years afterward removed with his family to Jefferson county, where he bought a farm. His wife, Catharine, died there in childbirth in 1844, leaving the following-named children: Lucinda; Elizabeth, deceased; Catharine, who died in girlhood; Christiana, Mrs. Mason; Nancy A., deceased; Ann, Amanda, Rachel, Adam, Mary and Byron. Lucinda married Albert

Smith, now deceased, and for her second husband Charles Chandler, a wealthy farmer in Kansas; her children are: Joseph H., Aaron, Lorinda, Fred and Malinda. Elizabeth, now deceased, married John Pierson, also deceased, and they resided in Brighton, Canada West; she was the mother of seven children, all daughters. Nancy A., who married James Houghton, a farmer in Lyme, Jefferson Co., N. Y., died in February, 1894, at her home; she had three children, one of whom is named George. Amanda married Aldrich Luther, a farmer in Lyme, N. Y. Rachel married Minard Rogers, captain and owner of a lake vessel, and they had two children, both daughters; their home is in Detroit, Mich. Adam, a merchant in Tomahawk, Wis., married Levina Greenman. Mary married Alexander Weaver, a farmer of Lewis county, N. Y. Byron married Mrs. Mary Hope, a widow, and they now reside at Green Bay, Wis. Peter Thumb came to Manitowoc county, Wis., about 1869, bought a farm of eighty acres in Cato, and about 1875 married there, for his second wife, Mrs. Mary Whitcomb, a widow. Mr. Thumb died in 1880, and was buried in Cato. Mrs. Leonard Mason's grandfather, Peter Nicholas, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in Montgomery county, N. Y., many years ago. His children were named Polly, Edna, Peter and Julia.

After his marriage Leonard Mason went to housekeeping in Lyme, Jefferson Co., N. Y., and worked farms on shares until he came west. In September, 1856, with his wife and family, he migrated to Cato, Manitowoc Co., Wis., where, the following spring, he bought forty-five acres of wild land, which he subsequently disposed of, then purchasing sixty acres on which they lived until their removal to Amherst. In January, 1862, Mr. Mason enlisted, at Manitowoc, Wis., as a recruit in the Sixteenth Wis. V. I. After reaching Madison he was transferred to the Forty-fourth Regiment, stayed in Madison, at Camp Randall, for six weeks, and then went to Nashville, Tenn., where they were stationed until March, 1865, then were ordered to Paducah, Ky., where the regiment was discharged; during the battle of Nashville, it was held in reserve. Mr. Mason was discharged at Prairie du Chien, Wis., July 28, 1865, came directly home, and was sick for nearly a year afterward and unable to work. He weighed 175 pounds when he enlisted, but on account of sickness was reduced in flesh to ninety pounds by the time he reached home.

In December, 1881, Mr. Mason disposed of his farm in Cato for $2,400, and January 1, 1882, came to Amherst, Portage county, where he bought a farm of 120 acres, sixty of which were improved; of this he sold eighty acres in September, 1894. He lived on the farm until April, 1893, when he bought a house and lot in the town of Amherst, into which the family moved, and where they still reside. He is living a retired life, and rented the farm until he sold the eighty acres. In politics Mr. Mason is a strong Republican, and for two terms served as supervisor of Cato township, but he does not take an active part in politics. In religious views he is a Protestant, and his wife is a member of the United Brethren Church of Amherst. He is a kind and benevolent gentleman, much respected.

HERBERT STEDMAN, a substantial farmer and respected citizen of Lanark township, Portage county, was born in Niagara county, N. Y., and is a son of Harvey and Mary L. Stedman.

Harvey Stedman was born in Oswego county, N. Y., and carried on the business of wagon and cabinet maker. Mrs. Mary L. Stedman was born in Lockport, N. Y. They came to Wisconsin in an early day, first locating in Berlin, Green Lake county, where Mr. Stedman built the first warehouse and steamboat landing. In pioneer times he came to Lanark township, Portage county, where he had a large tract of land acquired through a money loan, and later moved his family there. The country in Lanark was then new, and he endured many privations at first; but he was possessed of a vigorous constitution, and, like the rugged old pioneers of those days, worked hard and spent the best years of his life in bringing his township forward. He lived to be sixty-one years old; his wife died at the age of seventy-four in 1891. Their children were as follows: Hiram, who has a lumber yard and warehouse at Berlin, Wis.; Horace, drowned in the Fox river in 1850; Hollis, born March 30, 1845, who also runs a warehouse, and is a speculator at Berlin; Emily E., born February 7, 1859; Hattie M. (an adopted daughter of James Ford), now Mrs. Joseph Knight, of Farmington, Waupaca Co., Wis.; and Herbert, the subject of this sketch.

Herbert Stedman had only a common-school education, and was reared as a farmer boy. On February 22, 1880, he was united in marriage, in Farmington, Waupaca Co., Wis., with Mary A. Knight, and the children born to their union are as follows: Harry W., born April 11, 1881; Robert L., born March 2, 1883; and Lee-man G. H., born April 17, 1887. Mrs. Stedman is the daughter of Robert Knight, who was a farmer in comfortable circumstances in Farmington township, of a well-known and well-to-do family, and who died years ago. His widow yet lives in Farmington.

Mr. Stedman owns one of the most extensive farming interests in the town, comprising a thousand acres, two hundred of which are cleared. Politically he is a Republican. In 1880 he was elected to serve on the board of supervisors of the township of Lanark, serving three years, and faithfully fulfilling the duties of that office.

ALLEXANDER MCGREGOR, one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Lanark township, Portage county, was born in Perthshire, Scotland, April 10, 1842, son of Malcolm and Catherine (Kennedy) McGregor. The father in his younger days was a shepherd, and became a farmer in comfortable circumstances. His children by his first wife were Daniel, now of Adams county, Wis.; Duncan, of Platteville, who was captain of Company A, Forty-second Wis. V. I., and who for twenty years was a prominent instructor, principal of the First Normal School of Platteville, having been educated in Aberdeen, Scotland; John, superintendent of the public schools at Eau Claire, Wis.; Margaret, who died young, in Scotland; Alexander, subject of this sketch; Charles, of California; Catherine, who married A. J. Hutton, a State institute instructor and an eminent teacher; and Malcolm, a farmer, of Minnesota. The wife died in Scotland about 1852, and was buried at Kirk Michael, Perthshire, Scotland.

Malcolm McGregor married, for his second wife, Catherine Scott, and in 1856 came to America. He bought land near Waupaca, Wis., and the next year his family followed him. They left Liverpool in August, 1857, in the vessel "Gen. Williams," and eighteen days later landed at Portland, Maine. They came west by rail, and from Oshkosh went up the Wolf river to Gill's Landing, thence reaching Waupaca by stage. Through misrepresentation and the financial panic of that year, which made it impossible to obtain money, Mr. McGregor lost the farm which he had bought east of Waupaca. He rented land in Farmington township, and for some time lived there; then bought and moved to eighty acres on "Sessions Prairie," Section 12, Lanark township, Portage county, increasing the farm later to 200 acres. By his second marriage the children of Malcolm McGregor were as follows, the eldest two being born in Scotland, the others in America: Margaret, now Mrs. William Foster, of Adams county, Wis.; James, a prominent farmer of Adams county; Anna, now Mrs. Frank Lee, of Plainfield; Peter, of Hancock, Wis.; Jennie, now Mrs. Albert Lee, of Lanark township. Two children died young. Malcolm McGregor now lives a retired life in Waushara county. He has recovered from the financial reverses of 1857, and is comfortably situated. A devout Christian, he is one of the leading members and an elder of the Presbyterian Church, and was instrumental in having the church built where he lives. He is superintendent of the Sunday-school, and both himself and wife are among the most active workers of the Church. In politics he is a Republican, and for five or six years has served as township chairman, besides filling other local offices.

Alexander McGregor was sixteen years old when he came to America. Up to that time he had been well-educated in Scotland, but when he embarked for the United States his school days were over. In the pioneer home of Wisconsin he assisted in clearing the farm, and when he attained his majority he began working in the lumber woods; also "ran the river," the popular employment in his younger days. In 1868 he purchased one hundred acres of land in Section 24, Lanark township, thirty acres of which were cleared, and a single log house stood on the premises. He worked steadily in clearing up this farm, and there began housekeeping, after his marriage, March 31, 1870, in Lanark township, to Miss Jeannette Hutton, Rev. Dr. Marsh, Presbyterian minister at Waupaca, officiating. She was born in Dunfermline, Fifeshire, Scotland, February 3, 1844, daughter of James and Margaret (Meiklejohn) Hutton, early settlers in Lanark township. James Hutton was a pioneer Baptist minister, who was widely known and dearly beloved by all who knew him. He came to Lanark township in 1855, and the family came two years later in the "Pomonia," which landed them at New York three weeks and three days after departure from Liverpool. They came by water to Sheboygan, thence to Fond du Lac by team, to Gill's Landing on the Wolf river by vessel, and by team again to Lanark township. Mrs. McGregor had obtained a good common-school education in Scotland, and in Portage county she taught seventeen terms of school, beginning at the age of seventeen years. Her first term was in a small shanty in what is now District 4, Lanark township. Her salary was eighteen dollars for four months, or $4.50 per month. She was a good seamstress, and while teaching earned her board by sewing. This pioneer schoolteacher quickly demonstrated her ability, and her salary rose in consequence. For fifteen years Mr. McGregor kept house in the log cabin that stood on the farm, and then built his present home. He has always been a farmer, and now owns 180 acres, the buildings upon which have all been erected by him. Mr. and Mrs. McGregor have had three children: Margaret M., the eldest, born February 18, 1871, died October 2, 1891 (she was a highly-educated young lady, and at the time of her death was a teacher in the Eau Claire schools; in respect to her memory all the schools were closed on the day of the funeral, and many beautiful floral tributes attested the affection in which she was held; she was exceedingly popular, and a member of the Presbyterian Church; she was buried in Badger cemetery); Malcolm R., born January 29, 1876, and James H., born April 23, 1881, both living at home. In politics Mr. McGregor is a staunch Republican, and he has often been called to serve his township in positions of honor and trust. For twelve years he has been school clerk; was assessor three years, and has been township clerk since 1886. He has served his party as a delegate to the county convention, and is one of the leading Republicans in the township. While not a Church member, he is an active Sunday-school worker, and for twenty years has taught the Bible class. The comfortable home of Mr. McGregor abounds in the genial hospitality characteristic of the Scottish people.

CHARLES A. JENKINS is a wide-awake, enterprising farmer, residing in Union township, Waupaca county, where he owns 160 acres of land, sixty of which are cleared and under a high state of cultivation. It is also improved with good buildings, and in appearance is neat and thrifty.

Mr. Jenkins was born in Tioga county, N. Y., August 26, 1851, and is a son of John and Ann (Fronk) Jenkins, natives of the Empire State. The father was a carpenter by trade, but afterward followed farming. In 1854 he emigrated westward to Rock county, Wis., where he purchased forty acres of land, and in connection with its cultivation engaged in carpenter work. He also bought additional forty acres, and cultivated his farm until 1873, when he sold out and removed to Oshkosh, Wis., where for five years he engaged in the grocery business. In 1878 he came to Union township, Waupaca county, and purchased 160 acres of land in Section 21, the present farm of our subject. Only twenty acres had been broken, but with characteristic energy he began its further development, most of the work, however, being performed by his sons, for the father's health failed him. He erected the log house which still stands on the old homestead. His three sons, Charles, Henry and John, operated his land for him for some time, and the first two remained with him until he was called to his final rest in December, 1892. His wife still survives him at the age of seventy-three, and makes her home with her son Charles. He received as his share of the property the old farm, while Henry was given 120 acres of land in Section 29, Union township.

Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins had six children: Josephine, wife of George Bradet, an express agent on the Chicago & North Western railroad; Samuel, an overseer on a large ranch in Oregon; Charles A.; Jay, who is now manager of a wholesale house in Chicago; John R., a miner of Idaho; and Henry H., who makes his home in Clintonville, Wisconsin.

Charles A. Jenkins was only three years old when he was brought by his parents to Wisconsin. As before stated, he lived with his father throughout the latter's life, and gave him the benefit of his services, working the home farm. He was married January 6, 1886, to Mary C. Churchill, daughter of Daniel and Caroline (Baker) Churchill, who came to the West from Solon, Somerset Co., Maine. Her father was a lumberman, doing an extensive and successful business along that line. In 1856 he brought his family to Wisconsin, and for four years rented a farm near Ripon. In December, 1860, he came to Union township, Waupaca county, and pre-empted forty acres of land, which he began to improve and cultivate; but soon he left that work to others, while he engaged in land speculation. He finally located upon a 200-acre farm, where both he and his wife resided until within a few months of their deaths, their last days being spent at the home of Mrs. Jenkins. The father died in 1887, at the age of eighty-seven; the mother died at the age of seventy-five. They had nine children: Albert, of Maine; Abel, deceased; Julia, wife of A. A. Stevens; Dorcas F., wife of O. C. Cook, of Oconto, Wis.; Daniel F., of Clay county, S. Dak.; Warren, who is living in the State of Washington; Melvin, of Minnesota; Hannah E., wife of H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, and Mrs. Jenkins.

The last named was married September 18, 1866, to Amos Churchill, Jr., son of Amos and Eleanor (Chase) Churchill. He too was a native of Maine, and, on seeking a home in the West, took up his residence in Union township, Waupaca county. There he purchased an eighty-acre farm, and operated the same until his death, which resulted from consumption in 1883. He left five children: William O., of Symco, Wis.; Gladys M., deceased; Leslie L.; Floyd W.; and Amos R. deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins now have one child, Ray, who was born December 17, 1890.

In politics Mr. Jenkins has always been a Republican, but has never sought political preferment, desiring rather to give his entire time and attention to his business interests, in which he is meeting with good success, being now numbered among the leading agriculturists of Waupaca county.

JAMES DEWITT HEATH, M. D. (deceased), was born in Elyria, Ohio, May 7, 1855. His father, Amasa Heath, was born in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., March 13, 1820, and was a Baptist minister, having been ordained in 1851. He was twice married, and by the first union had a daughter, Alice. For his second wife he chose Emily C. Campbell, a native of the Empire State, and they became the parents of the following children: James Dewitt, Eva, Gertrude, Letta Nellie and Leila. The father was a highly-educated man, and an eloquent and gifted minister. He died June 20, 1884, in Ohio.

The Doctor probably inherited his father's keen mind, for in school he was an exceedingly apt scholar. At the early age of thirteen he began to earn his own living, and secured the capital which enabled him to obtain a college education. In addition he also assisted his father in the support of the family. When the Rev. Mr. Heath's health failed, the Doctor who was then but a mere boy learned the mason's trade and followed that so assiduously that he was at length enabled to pursue a course of study in Oberlin College, and subsequently entered Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1879 at the age of twenty-three years. He had left his native State when a young man of nineteen, removing to Oskaloosa, Iowa, where he worked at his trade through the day and studied medicine at night in order to prepare for his contemplated course. He first opened an office in Shawano, Wis., and continued practice until May, 1883, when on his removal to Merrill he abandoned his profession.

Here the Doctor engaged in the lumber business, aiding in the organization of the Wolf River Lumber Company, of which he became business manager. He was a most indefatigable worker, and the hours not given to his business were mostly devoted to study. This course, however, broke down his health, and in 1890 he was forced to practically lay aside business cares. He believed in all men owning their own houses, and assisted many a laboring man to secure a home by supplying him the material with which to build and giving him his own time in which to pay for it.

Dr. Heath was married in Amherst, Ohio, October 18, 1879, to Alice Annetta Jackson, who was born in that city, a daughter of Michael and Annetta (Gleason) Jackson. They became the parents of four children: Carrol D., Clifford J. and Robert W., who are living, and Mark, the third son, who died at the age of a year and ten months.

The Doctor was a member of Shawano Lodge, No. 7, F. & A. M., and in politics was a stalwart supporter of the Republican party, yet never sought or desired office. His honesty of purpose and his sterling worth were widely recognized, commanding the respect and confidence of all. He was deeply interested in everything calculated to promote the general welfare, and was a most highly respected man, leaving behind a host of friends. His death occurred April 13, 1894.

ALBERT THEODORE KOCH, M. D., a successful physician of Wausau, Marathon county, was born in the city of Stettin, Prussia, November 9, 1839, and is a son of Gottlieb A. and Regina (Darwitz) Koch.

Gottlieb A. Koch, who was a mill owner, baker and farmer, and a man of large property, came to this country in 1856, and settled at Watertown, Jefferson Co., Wis. He followed agriculture in this State, and owned several large farms between Madison and Portage City. He died in October, 1887, at Columbus, Columbia Co., Wis. His widow is still living at Columbus, Wis., with a son who is a clergyman of the Lutheran Church.

Dr. Koch received a liberal education in the old country, his parents having destined him for the ministry; but his inclinations did not lead him toward that calling, and after coming to Wisconsin he attended the schools at Watertown, and also began the study of medicine. In 1862, at Owatonna, Minn., Dr. Koch married Martha Eastman, who was born in Savanna, Ill., and they are the parents of three children, all now deceased. Quitting his studies, the Doctor volunteered in the Union army, in 1862, enlisting in Company C, Second Minn. V. C. He served to the close of the war, a period of a little over three years, principally in the West, including Arkansas, Missouri, Montana and Minnesota, and on the frontier fighting the Indians. After leaving the army he resumed the study of medicine, and in 1869-70 became a student at Bennett Medical College, Chicago, Ill., graduating in the spring of 1872. He first began practice at St. Ansgar, Mitchell Co., Iowa, remaining there four years; then came to Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., and has been here longer than any other physician now practicing in the place.

Dr. Koch has been interested in mines for fourteen years, and has large interests in the Rush Mining, Milling and Smelting Company, Mount Chopaca, Okanogan Co., Wash., gold and silver mining. This company controls nine different gold and silver claims, assaying from fifty dollars to two thousand dollars per ton of quartz. The Doctor has also been largely interested in pine timber and agricultural lands, and now owns about one thousand acres of land, mostly in Marathon county. He has been uniformly successful in business in Wausau and vicinity.

The societies of which Dr. Koch is a member include the Kranken Verein, a benevolent organization, the Sons of Hermann, etc. He was also a member of the G. A. R., but resigned his membership. He is a Republican in politics, and has often been solicited to run for office, but has never allowed his name to be used. In religious affiliation he is a member of the Lutheran Church.

REBUBEN C. LYON. It is said that great men have short biographies, and though in the present instance, if never before, that saying is peculiarly applicable, we regret the necessity which compels us to give only an abbreviated record of this gentleman, one of the earliest settlers of Wood county, whose life was an honor to the community in which he lived.

Mr. Lyon was born in Franklinville, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., January 15, 1822, and was a son of Jonathan H. and Harriet (Perkins) Lyon, the former of English, the latter of American parentage. In their family were seven children, three of whom yet survive, as follows: Russell, a resident of Salem, Ill.; Deloss, who is living in Dubuque, Iowa; and Mrs. Clara McMillen, a resident of Franklinville, N. Y. The gentleman of whom we write began his education in his native town, and afterward attended the schools of Buffalo, N. Y. During his early life he learned the trade of carpenter and builder, and for many years followed that pursuit, continuing it in the East until 1846. On May 16, that year, he located at Grand Rapids, a settlement of about three houses in the midst of an unbroken wilderness. Wisconsin was yet a Territory, and all was wild and undeveloped, waiting for the civilizing influences of such men as Mr. Lyon, who deserve great credit for what they have done in behalf of their adopted counties. For some years he gave his attention to business as a carpenter and millwright, and in 1848, in company with A. B. Sampson, he built a sawmill at South Centralia (then called Hurleytown), operating the mill for several years, when it was sold to Timothy Hurley. In 1861 Mr. Lyon purchased a water-power and erected the first shingle and planing mill in Centralia, and probably the first one ever erected on the Wisconsin river. This he sold in 1880, and from that time until his death lived retired from active business pursuits.

Mr. Lyon was married in Grand Rapids, January 14, 1849, to Esther J. Hill, daughter of Jonah and Lydia (Manson) Hill, who were natives of Vermont. The union of this worthy couple was blessed with seven children, a brief record of whom we here give: Lydia H., born February 27, 1850, is the widow of James Houston, of Stevens Point, Wis.; Theron, born August 22, 1851, is now living in Centralia; Clark, born December 11, 1853, is a popular hotel man of Centralia; Esther, born November 27, 1856, is the wife of William Hooper, a resident of Nakoosa, Wis.; Reuben, born October 16, 1862, is living with his mother in Centralia; Henrietta, born February 21, 1864, is the wife of James Natwick, also a resident of Centralia; Russell, born January 9, 1868, is engaged in the practice of dentistry, and makes his home at Wausau, Wisconsin.

Mr. Lyon was one of the incorporators of the Wisconsin Valley railroad, and also a member of the construction company which built the road. He took a deep and commendable interest in everything that pertained to the welfare of the community, and was broad minded and progressive. He was a man of noble impulses, strict integrity and high moral character, qualifications that exerted a strong influence for the public good wherever and whenever they were called into requisition by the people who honored him with many positions of trust. Among his many friends he was very popular and is held in loving remembrance by them. Firm in his convictions of right and wrong, he never swerved from the path of rectitude, and all who came in contact with him honored him for his sterling integrity. He passed peacefully away October 18, 1887.

ELIAS H. TICKNOR. The life of this gentleman bears testimony of what can be accomplished by willing hands and a resolute purpose, and among the citizens of Wood county none are more deserving of credit for advancement in life than the subject of this sketch.

Mr. Ticknor is a native of New York, born in Broome county, November 25, 1837, and is a son of Barton and Hannah (Smith) Ticknor. The family to which he belonged numbered seven children, four of whom are now living: Kate, in Garrettsville, Texas; Susan, in Windom, Kansas; Elias H. and Louis, who reside in Springfield, Ill. Another brother, John, served as a captain in the Civil war, and was killed at the battle of Gettysburg. One brother was a soldier in the Confederate army, and died from wounds received in battle. When Elias was quite young, his parents emigrated to Wisconsin, settling sixteen miles east of Madison, but after a few months they went to Missouri, where they lived for several years. Their next place of residence was in McHenry county, Ill., but about two years later they removed to Columbia county, Wis., and in 1850 Elias H. located in Marathon county, this State.

The subject of this sketch remained under the parental roof, and accompanied his parents on their various removals until after the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion. Imbued with a patriotic spirit, he responded to the country's call for troops in the fall of 1861, enlisting as a member of Company G, Twelfth Wis. V. I., and serving until the close of the struggle. He never shirked a duty, was with his regiment in a number of hotly contested engagements, and when peace was restored was honorably discharged at Madison, Wis., July 16, 1865, and returned to his home.

On April 7, the following year, Mr. Ticknor wedded Ruth Amelia, daughter of Andrew J. and Nancy Ann (Wood) Turner, natives of New York. She was born at Spring Arbor, Mich., September 5, 1848; and the date of her father's birth is February 19, 1816, that of her mother being April 3, 1822. They are both living, still hale and hearty, and on November 10, 1889, in Osage, Iowa, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, which had taken place November 10, 1839, in Harrisville, Ohio. The first thirty years of their married life were spent in the Buckeye State, in Michigan and Missouri, and from 1869, until 1893, they made their home in Osage, Iowa, removing in the latter year from that place to Riceville, Iowa, where they are now located. They had a family of eight children, five of whom are living: Ellen Rude, wife of Charles Kline, who formerly resided at Grand Rapids, but is now living in Daly, Wood county; William H., a resident of Riceville, Iowa; Ruth Amelia, wife of our subject; Mary Ann, wife of H. C. Cook, a resident of Minneapolis; and Zelia Kate, wife of Albert Nye, of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Ticknor has been blessed with five children, as follows: Lee Norton, born October 4, 1867; Frank B., born November 16, 1870; Rena Belle, born January 23, 1876, died September 5, following; Glen H., born October 1, 1877; and Henry Howard, born April 16, 1881. Our subject and wife attend the Congregational Church, and have many warm friends throughout the community.

DAVID WILLIAM BURNS is the owner of a boiler factory at Marshfield, Wood county, establishing the first industry of the kind in the city. From a small beginning his business has steadily increased until it has now assumed extensive proportions. The excellent class of work which he turns out insures a liberal patronage, and he now ranks as one of the leading and influential business men of Marshfield.

Mr. Burns is still a young man, his birth having occurred in Green Bay, Wis., November 5, 1864. The family is of Scotch lineage, and the father, David M. Burns, was born near Dundee, Scotland, in 1834. The grandfather, William Burns, was a musician, and engaged in the manufacture of musical instruments. In his native land he was married and reared a family, numbering the following named children: William, James, Charles, Alex and David. Charles is a band master in the British army. David Burns, the father of our subject, left the land of his birth when about twenty years of age and crossed the Atlantic to America, where he has since made his home. In Jersey City, N. J., shortly after his arrival, he was united in marriage with Esther Connor, a native of Stirling, Scotland. They became the parents of five children, two of whom are living: George and David; William, Esther and Agnes have all passed away, and the mother was called to her final rest in 1869. In his native land the father learned the trade of boiler manufacturer, and upon his marriage he settled in St. Louis, where he followed that pursuit. Subsequently he removed to Indiana, and in 1862 came to Wisconsin, taking up his residence in Green Bay, where he carried on extensive boiler works. In 1865 he transferred his business to Fort Howard, Wis., and today is proprietor of the largest boiler works in the State outside of Milwaukee. His brother, Alex, who died in the spring of 1894, was also engaged in the same line of business in Oshkosh, Wis. In his political views, David M. Burns is a Republican, and has served in the State Legislature and in other public offices of trust, discharging his duties in a most acceptable manner. For his second wife he chose Mrs. Margaret Thompson Menies, who was born in New Brunswick, of Scotch parentage. They have two sons: Alex and Charles. The father is still an active business man and is accounted one of the representative business men of Fort Howard, Wisconsin.

David William Burns, the subject of this record, was reared in his parents' home and was educated in the high school at Fort Howard. At the age of fifteen he entered his father's shop to learn the trade of boiler making, which he has followed continuously since as a means of livelihood. After learning his trade our subject was employed in the capacity of a boiler maker in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan, working as foreman in several shops. Thoroughly understanding his business, his efficient services enabled him to command good positions.

On June 26, 1890, Mr. Burns was married to Mrs. Hattie M. Stevens, who was born in Brown county, Wis., a daughter of D. F. and Julia A. (Woodruff) Smith, the father a native of New York, the mother of Ohio; they were married in Green Bay, Wis., August 25, 1863, and had a family of six children: Hattie, Lucia E., Frank A., Dow D., Lloyd and Cora. Mr. and Mrs. Burns now have two children: Esther C. and Ruth E. Upon his marriage, Mr. Burns removed to Brainerd, Minn., where he remained for one summer, then returned to Fort Howard, after which he went to Oshkosh, Wis. On October 6, 1892, he came to Marshfield and built his present boiler works. He possesses good business ability, is enterprising and progressive, and is now meeting with success such as comes not through a combination of lucky circumstances, but as the reward of earnest effort. In politics he is a Democrat.

JOHAN G. WOLDEN, one of the honored and respected citizens of New Hope township, Portage county, is now living retired, resting in the enjoyment of the fruits of his former toil.

He was born in Gausdal, Norway, April 20, 1842, and is a son of Gulbrand and Anne (Johnson) Johnson Wolden, the former born February 23, 1811, the latter October 14, 1811. Johannes Syvrud, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was also a native of Gausdal, and when a young man learned the trade of a carpenter and joiner, which he followed up to the time of his marriage, but afterward engaged in farming. To him and his wife, Ronnag were born the following children: Ole, a carpenter, and Amund, a farmer, both died in Norway; Elling, an agriculturist, came to the United States in 1857, locating in New Hope township, Portage Co., Wis., and by his marriage with Karen Mortenson became the father of eight children: Helena, wedded to Johan Gjeson in Norway; Ingebor, married to Johan Syvrud; Gulbrand, father of our subject, and Karen, also a resident of that country.

The educational privileges of Gulbrand Johnson were meagre, but his training at farm labor was not so limited. In Gausdal he was married, and in April, 1838, he brought his family to the New World on the "Drobak," which sailed from Christiania on the 24th of that month, arriving at Quebec six weeks later. He located in New Hope township, Portage Co., Wis., where he purchased 120 acres of wild land from the Fox River Company, which he cleared, building there a log house, where he resided until his death in 1873. His wife, who long survived him, passed away in 1893. They were the parents of three children, of whom our subject is second in order of birth; Marit, deceased, was the wife of Henrek Larson; Johanne is now Mrs. C. O. Loberg, of Stevens Point, Wisconsin.

In Norway John G. Wolden received an excellent education in his native tongue, and after coming to Wisconsin he attended school for a short time. He was married in Scandinavia, July 4, 1865, to Miss Hilde Johnson, the ceremony being performed by Rev. A. Mickleson. Mrs. Wolden is a native of Norway, born in 1834, and in 1849 came to America with her parents who located at Rock River, Jefferson Co., Wis. In 1883 our subject removed to Stevens Point, where he conducted a boarding house, and in that city his wife died January 16, 1884; she now lies buried in the cemetery of New Hope. Five children were born of this union: Gilbert and Holbert, who make their home in the State of Washington; Mattie, a resident of Spokane Falls, Wash.; Oscar, at home; and Hannah, the eldest in the family, who died in infancy. In 1887 Mr. Wolden went to Washington, where he purchased 160 acres of railroad land, which he began clearing and on which he erected a house, and a year later his family joined him. For three years he remained in that State, when he disposed of his place, as the water there did not agree with him, and returned to New Hope township. For some time after his return he continued in poor health. Prior to going to Washington he had sold all his land in Portage county with the exception of half an acre, on which he built a home for his mother, who remained there until her death, and there he is now living retired.

Mr. Wolden has witnessed almost the entire development of New Hope township, and the first school taught in District No. 1 was in his old homestead. At that time Alban was a part of New Hope township, and his nearest postoffice was at Scandinavia, Waupaca county, while his provisions were obtained from Stevens Point. Mr. Wolden is a very able man, possessing much intelligence and natural ability, is an excellent penman, a good conversationalist, and well informed on all the leading topics of the day. Politically, he is a stalwart Republican, and before going to Washington held several offices in the township, being clerk for ten years, justice of the peace, was twice elected chairman but refused to qualify, and was side supervisor for one year. He is one of the active members of the United Norwegian Lutheran Church of New Hope.

JAMES B. TAYLOR, of Marshfield, Wood county, was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, June 4, 1836. The ancestry of the family can not be traced back farther than the grandfather, and little is known of him, save that he was born in Pennsylvania, and had a family of thirteen children.

John, the father of our subject, was born in Ohio, in 1804, and in his younger years learned the shoemaker's trade, though he followed farming during the greater part of his life. He married Elizabeth B. Spingler, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of John and Mary (Bauckman) Spingler. The Bauckman family was of Holland origin, and the great-great-grandfather emigrated from Holland to America in 1716. The grandfather of Mr. Taylor on the maternal side was a very wealthy man; when the Revolutionary war broke out he joined the Colonial army, and was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill. Mr. and Mrs. Spingler for some years were farming people of the Buckeye State; the mother died in northern Ohio, while the father passed away in Pennsylvania at the advanced age of ninety-six years. They had a family of seven children, namely: John, Jonathan, Catherine, Kate, Elizabeth, Mary and Susan. During the Mexican war, John Taylor, father of our subject, joined the army, but never left the United States. In 1850 he removed with his family to Indiana and settled in Bluffton. His death occurred in 1856, and his wife, who survived him thirty years, passed away in Fond du Lac, Wis., in 1886. They were the parents of four children: James B., Mary, Elizabeth and Catherine.

We now take up the personal history of the gentleman whose name begins this record, and follow his career up to the present time. In his younger years he attended the district schools, but the greater part of his education has been acquired through observation and practical experience. Since the early age of fourteen years he has been dependent upon his own resources, earning his living by farm work and by driving a team on the canal. He also engaged in railroad work until nineteen years of age. Soon after attaining his majority Mr. Taylor was married in Fort Wayne, Ind., to Miss Elizabeth Haslum, who was born in Ireland in 1838, and is one of the six daughters of Joseph and Mary (Hennesy) Haslum, the others being Anna, Maria, Alice, Julia and Jane. In 1852 her father came to this country and in 1854 was joined by his family; he was of English descent, and his parents were both born in England; his mother bore the maiden name of Ann Conner. Joseph Haslum was a well-educated man, and to a limited extent followed school teaching, but most of the time in the Emerald Isle was employed as a stone cutter. After his arrival in America he carried on farming, making his home first in New York State, later in Indiana and subsequently in Wisconsin, whither he came in 1857. His death occurred in 1875, and his wife passed away in September, 1888.

After his marriage James B. Taylor resided in Indiana some six years. He began railroading first as a brakeman, and later was promoted to the position of conductor. In 1864 he removed to Wisconsin, settling in Glenbeulah, Sheboygan county, where he was employed to operate a stationary engine. He was thus employed for a year, when he took a large contract for cutting staves, and to this industry devoted his energy three years. On the expiration of that period he became superintendent of the construction of a railroad between Glenbeulah and Princeton, and was engaged with the railroad company as a contractor until 1876, superintending the construction of the work in this State and Iowa. He continued his connection with railroad work for some years, and also took contracts for furnishing large quantities of ties to railroad companies. In 1881 he began burning charcoal, a business he still follows, having now thirty kilns leased on the different lines of railroads, and in addition he superintended the burning of one hundred kilns, and now has charge of same. For some twelve years he made his home in St. Cloud, Wis., and erected a nice residence there. In 1882 he removed to Hewitt, Wis., and in August, 1891, he came to Marshfield.

In that city Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have a commodious and pleasant residence, noted for its hospitality, and in their family are eight children: Mary E., William F., Joseph H., George E., Jessie E., Alton C., Zita E., and Alice, the last named dying in infancy. Mrs. Taylor's father was one of a family of seventeen children, all of whom reached years of maturity, while Philip, James, Edward, John, Sophia and Ann are all yet living. Her mother had three brothers and one sister, namely: Mary Eliza, Michael and Mathias. For some generations past the members of the Taylor family were Whigs in politics, and on the dissolution of that party became Republicans. James B. Taylor is a stalwart advocate of Republicanism, and has served as chairman of the board, as justice of the peace and was postmaster at Hewitt, Wis., under President Harrison. He belongs to the F. & A. M. and Knights of Pythias, and both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. He lives a quiet, unassuming life, is energetic and enterprising, honorable in all business dealings, and is a highly respected gentleman, whose many excellencies of character have gained him warm regard.

JOHAN W. EVANS, a prosperous woolen manufacturer at Waupaca, is one of the most popular men in that thriving little city, with whose business interests he has been connected since his removal here, in 1867. Mr. Evans inherited his trade, but his rise to the rank of manufacturer is due to his own unaided efforts.

He was born July 10, 1843, at Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Wales, a region noted for its fine flannels, and his father, Evan Evans, and his grandfather, Nathaniel Evans, were weavers before him. Nathaniel Evans had three children: Hannah, Evan and John. Evan, who was born in 1809, married Mary Hughes, of the same town, by whom he had six children: Mary, Elizabeth, Evan, John W., Thomas E., and one that died in infancy. In 1846 the family immigrated to America, the trip from Liverpool to New York consuming three months, and located at New Hartford, N. Y., where for five years Mr. Evans worked at his trade. Then they moved to Madison county, N. Y., and six years later to Marcellus, Onondaga county, same State, where the father died in 1865, the mother in 1866. Evan Evans was a man of quiet, unassuming manners, possessing the sterling Welsh traits, good habits and temperance principles. He was a great admirer of Horace Greeley, and a constant reader of the New York Tribune.

John W. Evans had few privileges in early life. His educational advantages were meager, for when eight years of age he began to work in the woolen mill. Early in the Civil war he enlisted for the support of the Union cause, but being unable to obtain his parents' consent he was not allowed to muster in. This was in February, 1862, and in February, 1864, he enlisted in the Third New York Light Artillery, becoming a member of Battery E, commanded by Captain Ashby. The battery was stationed at Newbern, N. C., where he joined them, and soon afterward was attached to the Army of the James, under Gen. B. F. Butler. Mr. Evans took part in the battles of Fort Darling, and from that time on the battery was almost continuously in action until the end of the war, the last service being before Petersburg. Entering as private, Mr. Evans became corporal, and was honorably discharged in July, 1865, at the close of the war, when he returned to Marcellus, N. Y. For a year afterward he filled his old position in the woolen mill, and then attended school for a year at Cazenovia, N. Y. In 1867, accompanied by his brother Thomas E. and his sister Mary, he moved to Waupaca, Wis., following his sister Elizabeth (Mrs. William Smith). Here he formed a partnership with Dayton, Dewey & Baldwin, and they remodeled the old gristmill at Waupaca and opened a woolen mill, which Mr. Evans still operates. Mr. Evans took charge of the mill, and later purchased the interests of his partners, having been sole owner since 1884. The mill gives employment to eighteen hands, and manufactures cassimeres, men's suitings, flannels, etc., selling for the most part to Wisconsin merchants. In addition to his woolen mill interests Mr. Evans has found time to devote to various other business enterprises. He was one of the organizers of the Waupaca Starch Factory, in which he is now a stockholder and director; he is also a stockholder and director in the National Bank of Waupaca, and was one of the original stockholders in the Electric Light Plant.

In December, 1868, Mr. Evans was married, at Marcellus, N. Y., to Anna Edwards, like himself a native of Newtown, Wales, and daughter of John and Jane Edwards. John Edwards, who was a weaver, came about the year 1852 with his wife and seven children—William, Jane, Anna, Susan, Samuel, John and Mary—to Marcellus, N. Y., where he and his wife both died. By his marriage to Anna Edwards Mr. Evans had four children: William L., Grace M., May E. and Llewellyn. Mrs. Evans died in March, 1890, and in April, 1891, Mr. Evans was united in marriage, at Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., Wis., with Cora McAllister, daughter of Dr. William P. and Frances (Tuttle) McAllister, who were natives of New Hampshire and New York State, respectively. They had a family of six children. By his second marriage Mr. Evans had two children: John Kenneth, who died in 1894 at the age of two years, and Bryant McAllister, born June 17, 1895.

Howesbury
J. W. Evans

Socially Mr. Evans is a member of the G. A. R., Garfield Post No. 21, Waupaca, and since 1865 has been a Mason, being now a member of Waupaca Lodge No. 123 and Chapter No. 39. In politics he was originally a Republican, casting his first vote for Abraham Lincoln—at least, he intended to cast it for Lincoln, but it was lost, for, being a soldier in the army at the time, he sent it home by letter to his voting place, Marcellus, in opening the letter the inner envelope, containing the ballot, was accidentally torn and was consequently rejected. He affiliated with the Republicans until the organization of the "Greenback" party, on which ticket he was nominated for the State Assembly; during the campaign he was approached by Republican managers who promised him their support on condition that he promise them his vote for their candidate for U. S. senator; this would have secured his election, but Mr. Evans, true to his own convictions of right, as well as the principles of his party, refused their aid and as a result was defeated. For the past twelve years he has affiliated with the Prohibition party, after saying which it is hardly necessary to add that he is an earnest advocate of the temperance cause. His party has frequently honored him with nominations to various positions of responsibility and trust, and in 1894-5, while wintering in California with his wife, they telegraphed him to know if he would accept their nomination for mayor of Waupaca. He replied that he would, received the nomination, and came within forty votes of being elected, the election taking place some time before his return home. The result was certainly gratifying to his party, and a flattering endorsement of his high social and business standing and his popularity among his fellow citizens, the actual Prohibition vote of Waupaca being only about fifty, while the total vote cast in the election was about 700. In 1894 he was also a candidate on the ticket of his party for railroad commissioner. He has served as supervisor many years, and has been a member of the Waupaca city school board nine years. Like her husband, Mrs. Evans is actively interested in temperance work, and was a delegate to the Supreme Lodge of Good Templars which met at Edinburgh, Scotland, in May, 1891. Mr. Evans made the trip abroad with her, and together they visited his old home in Wales, and also London, Paris, Glasgow and other interesting and historic points of Europe, the trip lasting about three months. They are regular attendants of the M. E. Church.

A LLOUIS GRAETTINGER. Among the many residents of Wood county who have emigrated to this country from Bavaria, and have become valued citizens, is this gentleman. A Bavarian by birth he is a son of Joseph and Mary (Schatzhuber) Graettinger, who were natives of the same locality, and were parents of five children as follows: Joseph, Allouis, Catherine, Christian and Michael. The father was a farmer by occupation, and on emigrating to America, in 1854, settled in Milwaukee, where he died of cholera the same year. There were eight relatives who died of that disease within one week, so terrible were its ravages. The mother survived fourteen years, passing away in 1868, and Allouis and his sister Catherine are now the only living members of the family.

Our subject was born May 17, 1847, and was six years of age at the time of the emigration of the family to the United States. Left fatherless when young, at the age of nine years he and his sister went to live with an aunt in Milwaukee, with whom he resided three years. He then returned to his mother's home, and with her remained until he attained his sixteenth year when he began earning his own living by working for others. In the meantime the family removed to Appleton, Wis., and in that city and vicinity he remained some twenty-five years, working for others most of the time. Since 1885 Mr. Graettinger has been a resident of Marshfield, where for five and a half years he gave his time exclusively to selling beer for the Appleton Company. He still engages in that business to some extent, and in this way has become well acquainted throughout this section of the State. In 1888 he also embarked in farming, which he still continues, and in May, 1894, he accepted the position of manager and collector for the Marshfield Brewing Company, of which he is one of the stockholders.

In 1870, in Calumet county, Wis., was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Graettinger and Miss Catherine Christal, a native of Bohemia, in which country both her parents died. She has no relatives at all in America. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Graettinger: Mary, Joseph and Anna. Mr. Graettinger devotes the greater part of his time to his business and home interests, taking little part in public affairs, yet for two years he capably served as town treasurer. In politics he is independent.

ANTON HENSELER is deserving of prominent mention among the foremost business men of Wood county, and is not only prominent in commercial affairs, but has also been a leader in politics. His example is encouraging, for it shows what can be accomplished by men of perseverance and determination when they have no capital or influential friends to aid them in the journey of life.

Born in the village of Kempenich, Germany, November 2, 1863, he is the son of Jacob and Anna K. (Bell) Henseler, who were married in the Fatherland in 1859, and had a family of eleven children, six of whom now survive, namely: Lizzie, Anton, John, Catherine, Mary and Nicholas; Gertrude died in 1888, the others in infancy. The father is a carpenter by trade, and followed that pursuit in the land of his birth until 1868, when with his family he emigrated to America, taking up his residence in Fond du Lac county, Wis., where he engaged in carpentering for nine years. He then came to Wood county, locating upon a farm in Lincoln township. He now owns forty acres of land in Section 23, that township, whereon he makes his home—one of the substantial and respected agriculturists of the community.

Anton Henseler was a child of four summers when the parents crossed the briny deep. He was educated in German and English in the common and parochial schools, and remained at home until twenty-four years of age, giving his father the benefit of his services. On attaining his majority he learned the trade of cheesemaking in Fond du Lac county, and in the spring of 1885 he built his present factory, the second one in this section of the country. Since that time he has successfully engaged in the manufacture of cheese, his factory having the capacity of about seven thousand pounds of milk daily. During the season of 1894 he purchased and handled four hundred thousand pounds of milk, shipping the most of his products to Oshkosh, Wis., where, being of an excellent quality, they found a ready sale on the market. His factory is conducted after the most approved style, is a model of neatness, and the excellence of his cheese is shown by the fact that at the World's Columbian Exposition, held in Chicago in 1893, he received a medal and diploma on his exhibit of cheese. During the past season he paid to the farmers of the community three thousand dollars, and he only operates his factory for about six months in the year.

In May, 1887, Mr. Henseler was united in marriage with Theresa Ott, who was born in Germany, in 1867, and they now have four children: Joseph, John, Anna and Jacob. With the Catholic Church they hold membership, and contribute liberally for its support. Mr. Henseler belongs to the Order of Catholic Knights of Wisconsin. In his political views he is a stalwart Democrat, and has frequently served as delegate to different conventions, but has never been an office-seeker, although he is now serving his second term as town treasurer. Other positions of trust have been conferred upon him, and he is ever true to his duty whether public or private. He is a straightforward, honorable business man, and, though he was once in very limited circumstances, is now the possessor of a handsome competence which has come to him through his own labors.

PETER ST. AUSTIN, one of the earliest pioneers of Marathon county, was born in the town of Gossfield, Canada West (now Ontario), July 2, 1820, and is a son of Joseph and Rachel (La Mache) St. Austin, born respectively in France and Canada. They were the parents of six children, of whom, perhaps, only three are living: Susan, widow of Mr. Malott, residing near Kingsville, Canada; Joseph, also residing in Canada; and Peter, the subject of this sketch.

When Peter St. Austin was but four years of age his father died, so that he had little advantages of education, and his boyhood days were spent in farming. In 1838 he came west and located in Illinois, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for about eight years. In 1846 he removed to Wisconsin, and located in Wausau when the whole surrounding country was included in Portage county, and only a few log houses were erected. Here he engaged principally in lumbering, logging and mill building, and for fifteen years in association with Rupert P. Mauson, operated a sawmill on the Wisconsin river, but of later years he has not been extensively engaged in business.

On May 8, 1851, at Alexandria, Mo., Peter St. Austin was united in marriage with Margaret Nicolls, who was born in Bathurst township, District of Drummond, Canada West, March 13, 1829. Eight children have been born to them, namely: Lucy Arabel, August 17, 1854, wife of John M. Leehy, residing in Iowa (married March 12, 1874); Sarah C., March 28, 1857, married M. L. Kriskey, and died May 21, 1884; William W., July 10, 1858, residing in Wausau; Margaret E., May 31, 1860, wife of Alexander McMillan, and residing in Antigo, Langlade county; Byron P., November 29, 1861, and died January 5, 1888; Edward R., March 5, 1866, residing on the homestead; Alexander J., July 1, 1868, residing at home; and Frank M., April 20, 1875, died March 15, 1893. The parents of Mrs. Peter St. Austin, Peter and Margaret (McPhail) Nicolls, were born in Scotland, of Scotch ancestry. In political views Mr. St. Austin is a Democrat, and for several terms he was chairman of the town of Wausau. He is a highly-esteemed citizen, and has done much toward the development of Marathon county, of which he is one of the few surviving pioneers.

BENJAMIN E. BURGER, D. D. S., holds a foremost place in the ranks of the dental profession in Lincoln county. He makes his home in Merrill, where he is also connected with leading business interests. A native of the neighboring State of Michigan, he was born in Brandon, Oakland county, on the 4th of May, 1857, and is a son of Cyrus Burger, who was born in Canandaigua, N. Y., in 1822. The grandfather died when Cyrus was quite young. The latter had three brothers—Anson, Benencil and Sidney—and four sisters—Hannah, Mary, Jane and Katharine. Cyrus Burger married Phoebe Elmer, also a native of New York, and in 1855 brought his family to the West, locating on a farm in Oakland county, Mich. The mother's death occurred in that State in 1893, since which time the father has lived with Dr. Burger in Merrill. Their family numbered ten children—Sylvia, Eliza, Edwina L., Francina, Benjamin E., Newton H. and Bertram L., who are now living. Ruba, the eldest, died at the age of twenty-eight years, and two children died in infancy.

Dr. Burger was reared on the old home farm in Michigan, where he remained until seventeen years of age. During that time, however, he was employed by neighboring farmers, and thus earned the money to pay his way through school. He attended the high school of Midland, from which he was graduated in 1878. He then worked at the trade of a carpenter with his father, and followed it for two years; but not content to make it a life work he resolved to enter the dental profession, and to this end began study in Midland, Mich., in the fall of 1880. After a year thus passed he entered upon a course of study in Ann Arbor, Mich., and completed his preparation for his profession in the Ohio Dental College of Cincinnati, from which he was graduated in 1884. The succeeding year was spent in travel, working at the dental profession, and during the next year he was engaged in practice in Frankfort, Mich. He also spent a year in Shawano, Wis., and in 1886 came to Merrill, where he opened an office and soon built up a fine practice, his business steadily increasing until it has assumed extensive proportions for a town of its size. He has also become largely interested in lumbering, and in addition owns a fine home and business block in this city.

The Doctor was married in July, 1888, in Shawano, Wis., the lady of his choice being Luella Murdock, who was born on the Menomonee Reservation in Wisconsin, her father being in the government employ. Her parents, Edwin and Ella (Crane) Murdock, were both natives of Vermont, and the father was a farmer by occupation. In their family were three children, Earl, Luella and one who died in infancy. The mother was called to her final rest in the fall of 1893. The Doctor and his wife have two children, Leila and Leon.

In his political affiliations Dr. Burger was formerly a Democrat, but now supports the men and measures of the Republican party. He has never been a politician in the sense of office seeking, yet has served as alderman from the Third ward and was president of the council for one term. He is an honored and a charter member of Merrill Lodge, K. P., and is a gentleman highly esteemed by all who know him. He is entirely a self-made man, working his way through college and acquiring all that he has through his own efforts.

C A. RUSCH, one of the active and enterprising citizens of Lincoln county, is now engaged in the hotel business in Merrill. He is a native of Wisconsin, born in Herman, Dodge county, April 24, 1851. His father, Daniel Rusch, was born in the northern part of Germany, June 16, 1800, and was a son of Martin Rusch, a blacksmith by trade. The father was one of a family of four, the others being William, Caroline and Mary, though he also had two half-brothers and two half-sisters. In his native land, in 1836, he wedded Minnie Dense, and they became the parents of children, as follows: Frederica, Amelia, Johanna, Minnie, Caroline, William, Bertha, Carl A., Herman, Tena and Alvina, and the twin of our subject, deceased in infancy. Six of the children were born in Germany, the remainder in Wisconsin.

The family crossed the Atlantic in June, 1846, and after their arrival in Milwaukee, Wis., the father there worked as a blacksmith for a year and a half, when he bought a farm near the city. After cultivating it for about eighteen months, he purchased a tract of wild land in Herman township, Dodge Co., Wis., which he improved and continued to make his home twelve years. On selling out in the fall of 1861 he removed to Marathon county, and bought the old homestead of 240 acres, which is now owned and operated by his son William. It is located in Maine township, and the father continued its cultivation and development until his death, which occurred in 1878. He was a well-educated man, and one of the leading pioneers of both Dodge and Marathon counties, Wis. His wife passed to her final rest July 10, 1867.

Carl A. Rusch, the subject of this sketch, obtained a limited education, only being able to attend the common schools before he reached the age of fourteen years. In the summers he aided in clearing and developing the farm, while in the winters he worked in the lumber camps, which occupation he followed until he was twenty-six years of age. He was then united in marriage, and located on a part of his father's farm, where he carried on agricultural pursuits four years, but two years after the death of his father he sold out and came to Merrill. In this place he was variously employed until 1882, when he opened a saloon, and five years later he erected his present residence, which is a fine brick building.

He now conducts a hotel, known as the "Farmers' Home," and is winning popularity as a host who understands well how to cater to the wants of the public. He has a good knowledge of the business, and is conducting his present enterprise with marked success.

In 1876, in Marathon, Wis., Mr. Rusch was married to Miss Louisa Ahrens, a native of Chicago, Ill., and a daughter of Detlof and Mary (John) Ahrens, who were the parents of four children: Louisa, Henry, Augusta, and one now deceased. Her father was a Dane, a native of Holstein, and served as a soldier in the Danish army. He came to America when a young man, and in Chicago was married, where also, in 1882, his death occurred; by occupation he was a gardener. Mrs. Ahrens, who is still living, is a native of Germany, and came to the New World with her brother, William. To our subject and his most estimable wife have been born eleven children: Amelia, Mary and Martha (twins), Henry, Paul, Otto, Laura, Freddie, Elma, and two who died in infancy. A great-grandfather of Mr. Rusch crossed the water and located in Virginia some time in the seventeenth century, and one of his sons was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

In religious faith, Mr. Rusch is a Lutheran, holding membership with St. John's Church, of Merrill, and is now acting as one of its trustees. Politically he votes the straight Republican ticket, and is an active worker in his party. For four years he was chairman of the town board of Maine township, Marathon Co., Wis., and since his residence in Lincoln county has most of the time been a member of the city council of Merrill and the county board, being at present chairman of the latter. He has never been an office seeker, but has been honored with many public positions which were entirely unsolicited by him. He takes an active interest in everything pertaining to the upbuilding and advancement of Merrill, and was appointed by the county board to sign and look after the bonds voted to aid in the construction of the new railroad through that section, the bonds given by Lincoln county amounting to $176,000. He is faithful to every trust reposed in him, whether public or private, and has the confidence and esteem of all.

CAPTAIN EDMUND J. HILDRETH, president of the North Side Lumber Co., Stevens Point, Portage Co., Wis., is a native of Vermont, born in Starksboro, Addison county, May 3, 1830, a son of Walter and Clarissa (Whitten) Hildreth. The father, who was a millwright by trade, moved from Vermont to Malone, N. Y., in 1833, and there followed his trade, and also owned and operated a farm. He is still living at the advanced age of eighty-eight years, surviving his wife already a quarter of a century, she having died in 1863.

The subject proper of these lines learned the trade of a millwright of his father, and remained with him until he was twenty-one years of age, receiving in the meantime a common-school education at Malone and vicinity, vice-president Wheeler being one of his teachers. At the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion Mr. Hildreth was working at his trade, but in response to the call for troops he promptly laid aside his tools and enlisted, in October of 1861, in Company A, Ninety-eighth N. Y. V. I., in which he saw much active service. He participated in nearly all the engagements of the Peninsular campaign during the year 1862 and part of 1863, as well as in the desperate battle of Fair Oaks, Va., which was fought May 31-June 1, 1862. On May 20, that year, he was promoted to be second lieutenant, and on February 27, 1863, to be first lieutenant, his commission dating October 1, 1862; on January 8, 1864, he was further promoted to be captain, his commission dating June 2, 1863. During his entire service of three years he was on constant duty in the field, and at the close was honorably discharged October 29, 1864, although he continued in active service until November 26, 1864, his last day's duty being in the capacity of picket between the lines of the opposing armies at a point known as Battery Harrison, above Dutch Gap, on the Potomac river. After his discharge

Capt. Hildreth returned to Malone, N. Y., where he resumed his trade and continued at the same until 1869, at which time he came west, locating in Menominee, Mich., where he followed millwrighting until 1880, in the meantime, in 1872, bringing his family out. In 1880 he removed to Stevens Point, Wis., where for two or three years he had held an interest in a planing-mill, and in this business, after coming to the place, he continued, until it was organized into the "North Side Lumber Co.," in 1885.

In 1853 Capt. Hildreth was married at Chateaugay, N. Y., to Miss Elizabeth Copps, daughter of Darius and Pamela (Hollister) Copps, of that city, and three children have been born to this union, namely: Lizzie B., wife of Henry E. Martin; Leslie E., special agent for the Hartford Insurance Co., with residence at Evanston, Ill.; and Annie., now the wife of G. A. Hunter, a merchant tailor, of St. Paul, Minn. In his political preferences Capt. Hildreth is a Republican, and he is a member of the G. A. R. He enjoys the reputation of being one of the most solid and substantial men connected with the lumber business at Stevens Point, and is much respected.

CALEB S. OGDEN. In the important work of wresting the wilds of the Northwest from their primitive solitude, implanting prosperous industries, and introducing into the new country the principles of good government, few if any names stand so conspicuous and fair as that of Caleb S. Ogden. He comes of Colonial stock, inured in the older States to the same unending hardships of an honored pioneer life.

Abraham Ogden, the grandfather, was a native of New Jersey, where his Scotch ancestors had settled early in its history. He had three sons: Abraham, born in 1796; William B. and Mahlon D. He migrated to the town of Walton, Delaware Co., N. Y., and became a pioneer in that locality. His brother William was a physician, Isaac a lawyer, Daniel a farmer.

Abraham Ogden, the father of the subject of this sketch, was a lumberman. He married Mary, daughter of Caleb and Hannah (Cottrill) Smith, natives of Connecticut and pioneers of Delaware county, N. Y. Caleb Smith was a blacksmith and to him is due the honor of erecting the first sawmill and gristmill in the town of Tompkins, Delaware Co., N. Y. He raised a large family, and died beloved by all his friends and acquaintances, in the country which his labor had greatly aided in civilizing.

The pioneer fever burned in the veins of Abraham Ogden, and in 1832 he removed with his wife and six children, Hulda, William, Caleb, Sarah, John and Hannah, to Painted Post, Steuben Co., N. Y., where he purchased a partially cleared tract of 4,312 acres, bought mills, and made many improvements. Here two more children—Frances A. and Jessie—were born. But fortune still beckoned him westward. About 1836 he sold his large land interests in Steuben county, N. Y., and decided to join his brother William, who had moved to Chicago, Ill., and there become one of its pioneer settlers. Reaching Detroit by boat, Abraham Ogden purchased teams and started for Chicago, but when he reached Berrien county, almost within sight of Lake Michigan, the fertile lands attracted him. He bought property and remained in Berrien county, where he engaged in farming until 1845, when he crossed the lake and fashioned his last earthly home at Madison, Wis. Here he dealt extensively in real estate, purchasing land in large quantities, served many years as justice of the peace, and died from injuries received while attempting to board a railroad train at Madison. Mr. Ogden was an educated and public-spirited man, a Democrat in politics, and his name is lovingly remembered by the old citizens of Madison, where his widow died December 31, 1894, at the age of ninety-six years.

Caleb S. Ogden, their son, subject of this sketch, was born near Cannonsville, Delaware Co., N. Y., August 2, 1819. Attending school until fifteen years of age, he clerked in a store until he attained his majority. For several years he managed his father's farm and one of his own. Events crowded fast into his life, and for two years he was secretary to the first bank commissioner of Michigan, Gen. Bridges. On February 23, 1845, he was married to Catherine E. Hoag, a native of Montgomery county, N. Y. In 1848 he removed from Michigan to Plover, Portage Co., Wis., and actively engaged in mercantile and lumbering pursuits. Three years later he added extensive farming to his occupations. In 1854 Judge Ogden removed to Waupaca county, settling on the site of Ogdensburg. Here he built a sawmill, constructed roads, purchased a large stock of merchandise, and as the years rolled on added many industries to the county. He built mills on the Little Wolf river, and a large machine shop at Waupaca; it was afterward destroyed by fire at a loss to himself of $30,000. His fellow citizens in Waupaca county soon called Judge Ogden to office. In 1857 he was elected district attorney, and in 1861 county judge, serving in the latter capacity continuously until 1894, except one term when, owing to the pressure of private business, he refused to allow his name to be used.

In 1865 he moved to Waupaca, and here in 1868 launched into existence the Waupaca Republican, and this paper then published the printing for the entire county. He also started the New London Times, and later, with the aid of his sons, four of whom were printers, he founded the Waupaca Post. As a man of affairs Judge Ogden has a ripe experience and judgment upon which his fellow townsmen make frequent and copious drafts. Since retiring from office he has been personally supervising his farm interests and looking after other people's property. It is one of his firm opinions that Nature intended him for a physician, a profession which he studied in his youth but never practiced. He is a keen reader of human nature, and is rarely if ever deceived in a face.

Judge Ogden's first wife died March 7, 1877, and in 1882 he was married to Josephine Merry, a native of Pittsfield, Mass., and a daughter of Henry G. and Sarah (Kelsey) Merry. She has but one brother, Franklin E. The Merry family removed from Massachusetts to Milwaukee in 1849, and to Waupaca county, near Waupaca, in 1851. Mr. Merry was a local minister, though by trade a carpenter and millwright. He died in April, 1882. The family of Judge Ogden consists of ten children, as follows: John A., publisher of the Antigo Republican; Francis E., a printer, who died in Kansas in 1894; William C., who publishes a paper at Rhinelander; Charles W., one of the owners of the Waupaca Post; Gilbert W., merchant at Oshkosh; Julia, Alice, Mary, Sarah, and Kate.

The venerable judge has filled many minor offices in his neighborhood. In Church, in education, in politics and in all public enterprises, he has been a prominent figure. He was a major of the Wisconsin State militia and during the Civil war took an active part in sending men to the front. Among the secret societies, he belongs to both the Masons and Odd Fellows. Liberal, kind-hearted, generous, his influence upon the community in which his life has been cast has been one of inspiration and wise emulation.

JOSEPH H. JONES was born in Jamestown, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., January 7, 1843, and is of Welsh lineage.

The family was founded in America by the great-grandfather of our subject, who was born in Wales, and settled in this country in early Colonial days. The grandfather, William Jones, was born near Cambridge, Mass., and made farming his life work. He married Parthena Jones, and to them were born children as follows: William, Frank, Caroline, Loraine, Frances, Ann, and Laura. The family became separated, and it is not known certainly whether any are living save Ann, who resides in Dakota. The mother died, and the father afterward married again. They reared a large family, and the second wife died in December, 1894. Grandfather Jones was a well-to-do and highly respected man, and spent his last days in the State of his nativity.

William Jones, father of our subject, was born on a farm near Lincoln, Mass., and was the eldest son of the family. He remained at home until twenty years of age.

and learned the trade of a blacksmith, after which he removed to New York. In that State he married Olive L. (Pierce), a niece of President Franklin Pierce, and the widow of William Samons, by whom she had one child, Martha J. Mrs. Jones was born in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., and her people were early settlers of Pennsylvania and the Empire State. In the family were ten children, of whom our subject is the eldest. He was followed by Parthena A., Ella F., George A., Dora, Olive L., Hartwell F., Polly A., Prudence B. and William; the last four and Ella F. being deceased. The parents were married about the year 1842, and at that time the father embarked in the butchering business, which he carried on until 1870, when he disposed of his property, and with his family came to the West, settling in Racine, Wis. There he embarked in merchandising which he carried on some six years, when selling out he purchased a farm, the same whereon our subject now resides. The family removed to the new home in the spring of 1856. The land was covered with a dense forest growth, and the only paths through the timber were Indian trails. When the father and his son Joseph came to the farm to build a house the wolves drove them into Waupaca at night (that place, however, being then a hamlet of only about twelve homes). They erected both a log and a frame house, the latter being the first of the kind in this section of the country. In March, 1865, the father sold out to his son Joseph and returned to Massachusetts; but afterward he located in Oshkosh, Wis., where he passed his remaining days, dying about 1884; his wife was called to the home beyond in September, 1887.

Joseph H. Jones had but limited privileges for obtaining an education, for, from the age of twelve years, he had to work in the fields and aid in the arduous task of opening up a new farm. His labors in that direction were interrupted January 7, 1862, by his enlistment in Company G, Fourteenth Wis. V. I., at that time a lad of but eighteen years of age. He served three years, one month and six days, and was honorably discharged February 13, 1865, his term having expired. His regiment was with the Army of the West, and he participated in the battle of Shiloh, where he had his left arm broken and his hat shot through, the ball burning his hair and cutting it close to the scalp. Though the bone in his arm was fractured, he never left the field but staid at the front all day, and helped to capture a cannon, which is now preserved in the State House at Madison, Wis., as one of the mementos of that struggle. Mr. Jones has a photograph of his comrades and that old cannon, which was taken at Milwaukee. His regiment was noted for its bravery. While on detached duty with the major of the Ninth Kentucky Cavalry, he took part in the capture of John Morgan in 1864. Though disabled, he remained in the service for one month and six days after the expiration of his term, engaged in guarding Rebel prisoners and hunting guerrillas. Most of the time he did the duty of a sergeant, although he was mustered out as a private. After his return to Wisconsin, Mr. Jones purchased the old farm, and in connection with its cultivation he has been engaged as foreman on the construction of railroads, working for five years for one company, the Milwaukee & Lake Shore. In his political views he is a Republican, but has never been an aspirant for office, in fact has steadily refused to accept political preferment, although frequently urged by his friends to do so. He holds membership with Garfield Post, No. 21, G. A. R., of Waupaca; and with his family attends the services of the Baptist Church.

Mr. Jones was married June 9, 1867, to Mary Sanders, daughter of William E. and Miranda (Hill) Sanders. Her father was a soldier in the Third Wisconsin Cavalry, and died near Vicksburg, while her eldest brother, who was also in the Union army, was wounded at the battle of Shiloh, and died some time later from the effects of his injury. Mrs. Jones was a native of Groton, N. Y., and died in 1887. They were the parents of six children: Etta May, Lillie M., Ruth M. (deceased), Ralph H., Mildred (deceased), and Aggie B. Mr. Jones was again married, his second union being, May 13, 1888, with Ellen I. Haire, who was born in Wisconsin, a daughter of John and Eliza (Burk) Haire, the former a native of Germany, the latter of New York. She is one of a family of eight children: James A., John F., Walter J., Ellen I., Alice A., Jessie C., Erna E. and Nettie, all living except Walter J. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have an interesting little daughter, Pearl Irene.

The life of our subject has been characterized by industry and good management. He is systematic in his work, pays close attention to the details of his business, and his capable management has brought him a well-merited prosperity. He faithfully served his country when the Union was imperiled, and has been true to every trust reposed in him, whether public or private, so that he has won the high regard which is freely accorded him.

REV. FATHER JOHN KASTER, pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart, Shawano, Shawano county, is a native of Wisconsin, born January 6, 1864, at Green Bay, Brown county.

Pastor Kaster, father of our subject, was born February 6, 1831, at Meersdorf, Prussia, Germany, whence, in 1854, when a boy, he emigrated to the United States, stopping in Detroit eight months, later settling in Green Bay, Wis., where he worked at the tailoring trade, which he had learned in Europe, having made it his life work, and is still carrying it on in Green Bay. In that city he was married to Miss Anna Verschragen, a lady of Holland birth, born September 30, 1829, and six children were born to them, namely: Frank (following the trade of tailor in Green Bay), Joseph (a book-keeper in Green Bay), John (subject of sketch), Anna (who died at the age of twenty-five years) and Peter (1) and Peter (2) (both deceased in infancy). The father is one of the highly respected citizens of Green Bay, where he was a pioneer in his line of work, in which by industry and square dealing he has made a success, securing a well-earned competency.

The subject proper of this sketch, whose name introduces it, received his elementary education at the common schools of the city of his birth, and at the age of fifteen entered

St. Francis Seminary, near Milwaukee, remaining there until he was twenty-four years old. On April 3, 1888, he was ordained to the priesthood, the ceremony taking place in the Cathedral at Green Bay, and the first charge given him, which was on June 6 following, was the congregation at Neshkoro, Marquette county, in addition to and in connection with which he had several missions. Here he labored until September 18, 1890, on which date he was transferred to Shawano, where the new church building, commenced in 1889, was as yet in a very unfinished condition, especially the interior, but which under his charge has since been completed in a thorough and satisfactory manner. Father Kaster has also the care of missions at Waukechon, Gresham and Leopold, all also within the limits of Shawano county. He is very popular among members of all denominations, and his connection with his own church, wherever his pastorate has been, has been marked by evidences of progressiveness and improvement.

PAUL HAHNHEISER has created at Wausau an interesting and important industry and business as furrier and taxidermist. He has thoroughly learned his art, inheriting his skill and following the trade at the chief cities of Europe. The Upper Wisconsin Valley offered a good field for the exercise of the art, and the products from Mr. Hahnheiser's factory have attained a reputation almost world-wide.

Mr. Hahnheiser was born in the Province of Ober-Schlesien, Germany, January 23, 1857, son of Leopold and Albertina (Mocha) Hahnheiser, both natives of that province. The father died March 5, 1866, and the mother in June, 1892. A family of seven children was born to them, four of whom survive, as follows: Mary, wife of Joseph Drabik, of Koenigshutte, Schlesien, Germany; Paul, subject of this sketch; Leopold, residing in Germany, and Ottilis, of Chicago. Paul was educated in the public schools of Germany, and learned the trade of a furrier with his uncle. After thoroughly acquiring the trade he traveled among the leading cities of Europe, including Berlin, Hanover and London. etc., following that line of business in each city. In 1885 he left London, England, for America, locating first at Manistee, Mich., where he remained, however, only a few months, removing to Milwaukee, in which city he worked at his trade about a year and a half. In 1887 he removed to Wausau, and there engaged in business for himself. Mr. Hahnheiser is a thoroughly practical furrier and taxidermist, and he conducts the business on an extensive scale. He is also an extensive dealer in furs and skins of all kinds, which he ships to all parts of the United States and Europe. The work produced at his factory is of the finest quality and commands a ready sale.

In June, 1894, Mr. Hahnheiser was married, at Wausau, to Miss Hattie Hampel, who was born in Ober-Schlesien, Germany, September 30, 1872, and who emigrated to the United States in 1892. She is the daughter of Paul and Adelheid (Kramolowsky) Hampel, both also natives of Ober-Schlesien, Germany. The father died April 11, 1873; the mother still resides in her native land. The four children born to them are all living, viz.: Paul, residing in Berlin; Valentine, remaining with her mother; Leo, of Hamburg, and Hattie, Mrs. Hahnheiser.

FREDERICK E. PORTER. Among the representative citizens of Shawano county, none is more worthy of mention than the gentleman whose name here appears, and who holds a prominent place both in public and private life in the county, and in the village of Birnamwood where he makes his home.

Mr. Porter was born March 9, 1854, in Stockway Hollow, Allegany Co., N. Y., and is the son of William and Persis (Crittenden) Porter, natives of New York and of Scotch descent. They were the parents of eight children, namely: Pliny A., Elery E., William A., Milo M., Claria T., Henry F., Charles A., and Frederick E. The family removed to Michigan in the fall of 1854, and settled in Flowerfield township, St. Joseph county, where the father carried on farming and lumbering. In the fall of 1861 they came to Wisconsin and located in Waushara county where the father died in 1862. He was a man of excellent character, and was respected by all who knew him. The mother married again and died in 1890. The daughter Claria T. married Edward Benjamin, and resides in Waushara county.

The subject of this sketch secured his education in the public schools, his opportunities being limited, as his father died when he was eight years old, and when he was fourteen years of age his elder brother left home, the care of his mother thereby devolving upon him. He remained at home devoting himself to this work, which he did faithfully and well until he reached the age of twenty-five. At this time he was married, September 26, 1878, to Miss Susan Fuller, who was born in Waushara county, Wis., in 1858, the daughter of Amos and Rachel (Barlow) Fuller, and one of a family of eleven children. Her parents were natives of New York and came to Wisconsin in an early day. Both are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Porter have two children, Lenora and Emery E.

In the spring of 1881 Mr. Porter came to Birnamwood, which was then the home of only four families. Here he homesteaded a piece of land which he commenced clearing, while in the winter he carried on lumbering. On this place he remained thirteen years, working his farm and lumbering every winter except one. In the spring of 1894 he removed to the village and bought his present property, where he operates a hotel and has a delightful home. Mr. Porter is a Republican in politics, and has always been a leader in his party. He is a popular man as may be seen by the positions of trust he has held—such as chairman of the town board four years; treasurer one year; assessor two years; while at present he is supervisor and marshal of the village and deputy sheriff of the county. He is a member of the order of Modern Woodmen. He is a man of intelligence, enterprise and integrity, and is well-liked in his community as a genial whole-souled citizen. His devotion to his mother was a beautiful trait in his character, and she returned to his house in her old age, passing the last seven years of her life with him.

HENRY STRAUSS, county clerk of Langlade county, with residence in the city of Antigo, was born in Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany June 8, 1825, and is a son of Herz and Sarah (Gundersheim) Strauss.

Herz Strauss was born in Germany in 1795, was a wholesale merchant or importer in Frankfort-on-the-Main, and married Sarah Gundersheim, who was born in 1806. They had seven children, namely: Siegmund, Henry (the subject of this sketch), Charlotte, Simon, Rosa, Alexander, and Louisa. Herz Strauss was a merchant all his life, as were his people before him, and was a strong Monarchist. He died in 1870, and his wife, Sarah, in August, 1876. Henry Strauss received a mercantile education, and at the age of seventeen years, while in Germany, turned his attention to the study of the profession of an optician. He went to Salford, England, at the age of twenty years, learned the trade of machinist, remained two years, and then returned to Baden, Germany, and took a great interest in the rebellion commencing in the winter of 1848. He was against the government, and furnished supplies to the revolutionists, receiving funds through his friends in Frankfort. In May, 1849, the rebellion was suppressed, and he was compelled to flee to England, whence he came direct to America in company with his brother Simon, who was also a revolutionist. In New York City the brothers engaged in the importing business, and after one year, or in the fall of 1850, Henry Strauss went to San Francisco to start a branch house. There they were burned out twice, first in May, then again in June, 1851, which ruined them, but their father met their obligations. After the failure Henry Strauss went into the mines, and remained there until 1861; then went to Menominee, Mich., and in partnership with his brother started a store and sawmill, which they conducted until 1865, when, owing to poor collections, he again lost. Henry Strauss then went to the Upper Wolf river, in the beginning of 1867, hoping never again to see a white man. Here he took up land and traded with the Indians, his nearest white neighbor being forty miles away. In 1885 that town was added to Langlade county. In 1875 Mr. Strauss visited his old home in Germany, remaining some five months.

In 1886 Henry Strauss was united in marriage with Emilie Moede, who was born in Germany, in 1867, daughter of William and Ernestine (Borth) Moede, who were the parents of eight children, came to America in 1881, and now reside in Shawano county, Wis., where Mr. Moede is engaged in the occupation of farming. Mr. Strauss lived on his land in Langlade county until 1892, when he was elected county clerk of that county on the Democratic ticket, and moved into the city of Antigo. When the town of Langlade was organized Mr. Strauss was prominent in all its workings, and held many minor offices. He was elected chairman in 1888, and served up to the time he took the office of county clerk; also was town clerk and town treasurer, and was re-elected county clerk in 1894.

CHARLES SUMNIGHT, who owns a valuable and desirable farm of 160 acres in Hartland township, Shawano county, was born in Prussia, Germany, August 11, 1836, and is a son of Johan Sumnicht, a roofer, of that country, who supported his family by day's labor.

In the spring of 1853, with his wife and four children, the father sailed for America, hoping thereby to benefit his financial condition. They embarked at Hamburg for Hull, England, but at Liverpool were delayed for about two weeks owing to a government examination of the vessel, and so boarded the "Concordia," which after a voyage of eight weeks reached Quebec. Their destination was Watertown, Wis., and they made their way to Chicago, where they took a boat for Milwaukee; but in making the trip to that city the father died of cholera, which was then raging, the mother only a few days before having died of the same disease in Detroit. The four children were thus left utterly alone in a strange land, unable to speak a word of English, and their condition was certainly a pitiable one. They continued with a party to Watertown, and, though undergoing many hardships in those early days, they at length reached mature years, and are now highly respected and prominent people. Wilhelmina is the widow of Carl Wussow, of Hartland township; Louisa is the wife of William Koerner, who lives at Rolling Prairie station, near Beaver Dam, Wis.; and Frederika is the wife of John Cook, of Hartland township.

On reaching Watertown, Wis., our subject secured work with a Mr. Christian, who had formerly worked for his father in Germany, and thus spent his first winter in America. In the spring he secured work with Hiram Sawyer, a farmer of Rolling Prairie, with whom he remained three years, working for his board in the winter time in order that he might attend school. He made good progress at his studies, and to-day is a well-informed man. In 1856 he came to Shawano county, walking the entire distance from Appleton to Bonduel, where at that time lived only two families. The State road to Green Bay had just been laid out, but the work was not completed, and he secured employment with the surveying party engaged in its construction. After two months he removed to Mayville, Dodge Co., Wis., walking to New London, and then going on by boat, the "Wolf," commanded by Capt. Lynch, to Oshkosh. In December, 1856, he attended a land sale at Madison and purchased extensive tracts.

In 1857 Mr. Sumnicht started with a party of eight for Pike's Peak, attracted by the discovery of gold, and journeyed over the plains with an ox-team, which at Fort Kearney, Neb., was sold to the Mormons then en route for Utah. With the proceeds of the sale the party purchased flour, then walked to Omaha, and returned to St. Louis by government boats engaged in carrying provisions for troops on the western frontier. From St. Louis Mr. Sumnicht went to Chicago, and arrived in Wisconsin during the harvest season of 1858. He worked as a harvest hand near Mayville on the large farm of D. Puls, who that year threshed 1800 bushels of wheat, all cut with cradles. In the fall he came to Shawano, and secured work in getting out timber for a bridge. One of his fellow workmen was M. H. McCord, now a member of Congress. Returning to Dodge county, Wis., in the spring of 1859, Mr. Sumnicht worked as a farm hand near Oak Grove, but later in the year pre-empted land in Section 8, Hartland township, Shawano county, and in 1860, when the homestead law came into effect, went to the land office in Menasha, Wis., where he secured a title to his property. He had been closely watching for the passage of the homestead law, and was among the first to apply at the land office for a title. With the aid of others he opened a road to Shawano, and began improving his heavily-timbered land. In the fall of 1859 the township was organized, and in 1860 the first election was held in the home of Mr. Parks in Section 16. Mr. Sumnicht erected upon his farm a small log house with a board roof, and the next year shaved shingles to cover it. In the spring of 1861 he brought to the little home his bride, having on the 5th of May, 1861, in Herman township, Dodge county, married Augusta Zimmel, a native of Germany. The pioneer cabin was brightened by the presence of several children, and the family now numbers the following: William, at home; Bertha, wife of William Ebert, of Washington township, Shawano county; Charles, Emma, Frank, Albert and Henry, all under the parental roof.

Mr. Sumnicht continued the cultivation of his farm until 1870, when he removed to Shawano. He now has 160 acres of rich land, ninety of which are under a high state of cultivation, and the place is improved with many good buildings which stand as monuments to the thrift and enterprise of the owner. In 1868 he was elected register of deeds, and when re-elected moved into the city. He was again in public office from 1884 until 1890, being elected county clerk by the Republican party, of which he has long been a stalwart member. He has also acceptably filled many township offices, having been township clerk, treasurer and justice of the peace, while for nineteen consecutive years he was supervisor. Both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, and he has also been one of its officials.

Mr. Sumnicht began life in the United States with a capital of $10, and to-day is numbered among the substantial citizens of the community, a position to which he has attained entirely through his own efforts. He established the post office at Bonduel in 1863, and was its first postmaster, receiving a salary of $10 per year. Its object was to furnish a means of more quickly securing news from the soldiers who were at the front. He resigned at the close of the war. Mr. Sumnicht has a very wide acquaintance in Shawano county, and is one of its most highly respected and honored citizens, whose life has been an exemplary one and should serve as a source of encouragement and inspiration to others.

JAMES QUINN, a substantial farmer of Antigo, Langlade county, was born in County Donegal, Ireland, May 15, 1835, and is a son of John and Catherine McCullom Quinn.

The Quinns were farmers in Ireland, and for generations County Donegal was their home. John Quinn was born in 1787, and had six brothers and one sister, Catherine, who came to America, married William Burke, and settled in New York State. John Quinn died in Ireland in 1837, and his wife, who survived him, died in 1862. They had nine children, as follows: John, Jr., Thomas and William (twins), four who died young; Michael, who lives on the old farm in Ireland; and James, the subject of this sketch.

In 1842, when James Quinn was seven years old, he came with his brother John to America, whither their brother Thomas had emigrated some time before. James Quinn lived with an aunt in New York City about five years, then went to Orange county, N. Y., and lived for two years with G. Knight, an American, working on the farm in the summer and attending school three months in the winter, receiving thirty-five dollars a year. His advantages for an education were limited. At the age of fourteen he returned to the city, learned the trade of marble cutter, remained until he was twenty-one years of age, and came to Chicago, Ill., in 1857. After a short time he went to Hastings, Minn., and worked as a farm hand; then returned to Chicago, visited friends west of that city, and again worked on a farm. In company with several others he started for Pike's Peak in 1859, and remained three years in the mines, engaged in surface mining; then being seized with severe inflammation in his eyes, he returned to Illinois, where the physician advised him to go among the pines. So, in the fall of 1863 he came from John Stewart, in Illinois, with horses belonging to Alexander Stewart, of Wausau, Wis., and worked here in a sawmill on Pine river. Having lost his entire wages for the winter, he went back to Illinois, worked on a farm during the summer, returning to Wisconsin in the fall. During the following summer he scaled logs and rafted lumber on the river; was also employed in the mills and in the woods, and worked for the Scott Lumber Co. some ten years.

At Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., in the spring of 1870, James Quinn had married Nancy J. McCleary, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1850, and they had five children, namely: John, Thomas, Frank, Daniel and Owen. The parents of Mrs. Quinn, John (a lumberman) and Jane (Dougherty) McCleary, were born in Pennsylvania and came to Wausau, Wis., in 1855; still reside there. They had fourteen children: Nancy J., Fannie, James, Daniel, John, William, Warren, Martha, Mary and Anthony, and four that died in infancy. After his marriage Mr. Quinn went to Illinois and lived there two years, after which he returned to Wausau, Wis., and bought four acres of land there, on which he built a house. Here he made his home until the summer of 1877, when he took up the land whereon he is now living. In the spring of 1878 he moved his family there, and his house, which is still standing, was the first one built in Township 30 north, Range 11 east (now Rolling township). He was obliged to "pack" everything from Wausau, as there were no roads, and at that time but three other families were there. Langlade county was organized in the winter of 1880. During the spring of 1882, while helping a neighbor draw logs, one rolled on Mr. Quinn, and he has since been a cripple. Mrs. Quinn died January 26, 1883, and Mr. Quinn has never married again, but lives and keeps house with his five sons, on his farm, which contains 160 acres, eighty of which are under good cultivation.

Mr. Quinn is a Democrat, has always been prominent in his party, was elected chairman of the township of Rolling in the spring of 1881, and is now in his second term as chairman of Antigo township. The first election in Langlade county was on May 3, 1881, and Mr. Quinn was a member of the first county board. He has also been treasurer of his township and a member of the school board, and is very highly respected.

RUDOLPH V. KALTENBORN.
Among the citizens of Merrill, Lincoln county, are to be found several of German birth, who have brought to this fair and fruitful New World the principles of industry and thrift of the Old World, and prominent among them is found the gentleman whose name is here recorded.

Mr. Kaltenborn is a native of Hussia, Germany, born July 21, 1841, and is a son of George von Kaltenborn, who was born in the city of Magdeburg, Prussia, in 1806. The grandfather, Frederick von Kaltenborn, was an officer in the German army, and by his marriage with Miss A. von Butlar became the father of nine sons, all of whom were officers in the German army, five being killed on the battlefield. The grandfather rose to the rank of colonel, but at the time of his death, in 1812, was living retired; his wife died in 1843. The Kaltenborn family can trace its origin back to 1250, and among its members were many noted military men.

The father of our subject, who attained the rank of a general, married Augusta von Baumbauch, and to them were born five children: Mary, now the wife of Albert

Koeppen, one of the professors in the college at Strasburg, Germany; Rudolph V., our subject; Bertha, now Mrs. Ernest von Baumbauch, of Milwaukee, Wis.; Louis, who is a lieutenant-colonel in the German army; and Ernest, who was a circuit judge, and died in 1887. The father followed a military career until his death, which occurred in 1878; his wife passed away some twelve years later, dying in 1890.

In a military academy in the Fatherland the education of Rudolph V. Kaltenborn was received, and on leaving school at the age of seventeen, he was made an officer in the Hessian army, receiving the rank of lieutenant. He served through the war of 1866, and then being granted a five-years' leave of absence, he came to America, locating in Milwaukee, Wis., where he taught school for a time, and also engaged as clerk in a bank. In 1870, when the war broke out between Germany and France, he returned to his regiment with which he served until the close of that struggle, during which period he was made captain. On leaving the service he again came to the New World, and took up his residence in Milwaukee, Wis., in 1871. He there remained until 1891, first serving as bookkeeper and afterward as secretary of the Baumbach Co. In the latter year he located in Merrill, and started his present business, dealing in paints, oils, glass, lime, cement, etc., in which he has been very successful, and is now conducting a lucrative business.

In June, 1872, in Milwaukee, Wis., Mr. Kaltenborn was married to Betty Wessels, who was born in Germany in 1840; her parents never came to this country. She died in 1878, leaving two children, Bertha and Hans. Our subject was again married, in 1880, this time to Clotilda von Baumbauch, by whom he has three children, Walter, Ernest and Helen. Mrs. Kaltenborn was born in Black River, Ohio, in 1852, and is a daughter of Louis von Baumbauch and Mrs. Minnie von Baumbauch, née Schenk von Schweireberg. Her father, who was born in Germany in 1798, served as a soldier in that country, and in 1814 fought against Napoleon; he afterward retired from the army and lived on his estate. He was a man of wealth and became connected with the civil government of his native land, holding a position similar to that of Speaker of the House in this country. During the trouble of 1848 he became disgusted, and coming to America, in 1850, made his first location on a farm in Ohio, where he remained some three years, and then removed to Milwaukee, where his death occurred in 1885; his wife died in 1870. Their family consisted of six children—five sons and one daughter.

Socially Mr. Kaltenborn is identified with the Knights of Pythias, and in religious faith both he and his wife are members of the German Lutheran Church. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party, always casting his vote in support of its principles. Although he has not long made Merrill his home, he has already won many warm friends, and in both business and social circles holds an enviable position.

GEORGE W. HILL, proprietor of the "Hoo Hoo Hotel," Antigo, Langlade county, is a grandson of Caleb and Annis (Avery) Hill, the former of whom was born December 19, 1796, in Gardner, Worcester Co., Mass., the later on April 13, 1796, in Enfield, Hartford Co., Conn. They had eight children, named respectively: Warren, Thomas T., Adaline A., Avery, Charles, Maria, Homer and Dexter D. The father of this family, who was a blacksmith, mason and farmer, died in Massachusetts. The mother was a daughter of John Avery (a Revolutionary soldier), known in those days as "Hatter Avery," he being a hatter by trade; after the death of her husband, or in 1845, she came to Milwaukee with her family, and died, in 1890, at Wauwatosa, a suburb of that city.

Homer Hill, father of our subject, was born at West Springfield, Mass., February 16, 1833, was there educated, and was apprenticed to his brother, Avery Hill, a contractor, at Milwaukee, Wis., under whom he learned brick making. From him he ran away, however, and shipped as a boy on board a sailing vessel, becoming in course of time an "able seaman," and following the lakes in various capacities thirty-five years in all. He owned many good ships which he sailed himself, and was remarkably fortunate in his voyages, never having lost a vessel, or met with any serious loss. In Michigan he married Miss Elizabeth Kiernen, who was born in County Longford, Ireland, September 10, 1833, daughter of Francis Kiernen, who had a family of four children, named: Margaret, Elizabeth, Rosina and Thomas. The mother of these died in Ireland, and the father married again; he also died in the Land of Erin, in 1862. The daughter Elizabeth came to America in 1849 with Dr. Abbotts' family. To Mr. and Mrs. Homer Hill were born eight children: George, Charles H., Annis M., Thomas K., Warren C., Adaline E., John A. and Frank C. The parents shortly after their marriage went to Manitowoc, where they lived until 1883, when they removed to Antigo, Wis., and both died at the home of our subject, the mother August 14, 1884, the father September 23, 1893. The latter went to Pike's Peak in 1859, remaining but a short time, however. He was a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the I. O. O. F.; in politics he was a staunch Republican, and in social life was highly respected.

George W. Hill, the subject proper of this memoir, was born March 17, 1857, at Montague, Muskegon Co., Mich., and received his education at the schools of Manitowoc, Wis. At the age of thirteen he shipped on a steamboat as cabin boy, a line of life he followed until he was twenty-five years old, sailing the lakes during the summers, and attending school winters. For seven years he was mate of a vessel, afterward master, and he holds first-class papers as pilot on all the lakes except Superior. In the fall of 1882, after the lake season had closed, he and his family came to Antigo (which city he had previously visited, and decided then to make it his future home), and during his first winter here worked in a hardware store. In the spring of 1883 he opened a meat market, which he conducted till December, 1884, at which time, having been elected sheriff of Langlade county, he sold out, and assumed his official duties. After serving two years he retired from the office, and moving to the village of Hurley, Iron county, but leaving his family in Antigo, he established a general store there, which unfortunately, in the fire of June, 1887, was destroyed, Mr. Hill losing all, as he carried no insurance. Nothing daunted, however, he at once rented another store in Hurley, and conducted same till 1888 when he sold out and returned to Antigo, where he bought a planing mill, which, after operating it for a while, he was compelled to shut down on account of the firm he purchased it from failing to act up to their contract. Our subject then followed contracting, also wrote life insurance until January, 1891, when he bought out a meat market which he successfully carried on until April 20, 1895, when he took charge of the "Spencer House," changing its name to "Hoo Hoo Hotel," which is one of the most popular and best conducted hostleries in northern Wisconsin. He has all along dealt, more or less in real estate, and is now owner not only of the "Hoo Hoo Hotel," but of a considerable amount of other property.

On December 28, 1880, Mr. Hill was married at Manitowoc, Wis., to Miss Catherine Leykon, who was born January 5, 1856, at that city, and two children, both daughters, have been born to them, named respectively: Harriet A., and Euphemia E. Politically, our subject is a Democrat, and he served as a member of the Democratic County Committee. For two years he filled the office of sheriff; was constable also two years; member of the county board three years, and mayor of Antigo in 1894. Socially, he is a member of the F. & A. M. Lodge at Hurley, and he enjoys the respect and esteem of a wide circle of warm friends.

Charles H. Hill, brother of our subject, was a graduate of the U. S. Naval Academy, class of '79, and resigned from the navy in 1883. In that year he married Miss Minetta Packard, daughter of O. L. Packard, then traveled "on the road," and in 1890 went South. During the winter of 1892-3 he was employed by the Brazilian Government as chief executive officer on board the cruiser "Nichteroy," and earlier, in 1881 and 1882, he had a position on the U. S. ship "Alliance" which was sent out in search of the "Genetto."

SAMUEL M. HUTCHINSON, whose name in northern Wisconsin is the synonym of progressiveness, liberality and honesty of purpose, has been a resident, for the past thirty years, of this portion of Wisconsin, where he has built himself up an honored reputation and a good name.

He is a native of New York State, born in Steuben county, in June, 1842, a son of Alvah and Margaret (Mitchell) Hutchinson, who were the parents of eight children: Alpheus H., William (who died in 1887); Cyrus, Mary, Frank, Samuel, John, and one that died in infancy, John and William being the only ones of those named now deceased. In 1855 the family came west to Illinois, settling on a farm near Waukegan, Ill., where the father died in 1858. The mother, who is now living with her daughter in Iowa, was born August 28, 1807, at Ithaca, N. Y., where her parents, who had emigrated from Germany, settled in an early day, agricultural pursuits being their vocation; they both died in the old home there at the advanced age of over ninety. Alvah Hutchinson was a native of Connecticut, and by vocation a farmer and lumberman, who made a success of life. The son Samuel M. was educated at the common and high schools of Waukegan, and remained under the parental roof until 1862, in August of which year he enlisted in the Ninety-sixth Regiment Ill. V. I., which regiment was attached to the Western army. He participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Franklin, Nashville and Missionary Ridge, Mr. Hutchinson proving himself a brave soldier, and ever ready for duty. He had many narrow escapes from the bullets of the enemy, on more than one occasion men being shot down all around him, three of his tent mates being killed, and he frequently came near being made prisoner. In September, 1865, he received an honorable discharge, and returning to Wisconsin took up his residence at Stevens Point, whence, after a brief sojourn he removed to Wausau, where he worked in the woods winters, rafting lumber down the river during the summer months. For eight seasons he had charge of lumber rafts, running them down the Wisconsin river to St. Louis, on the Mississippi, usually returning by way of Illinois, and visiting his mother at Waukegan. During 1868-69 he operated a lumber yard at Keokuk, Iowa, and in 1870 commenced business for his own account at Hutchinson, Wis., he and his brothers Alpheus and Cyrus having bought the old Whitehouse mill some fifteen miles north of Stevens Point, on the Wisconsin Valley railroad, now known as Dancy. This mill the three brothers operated until 1876, when Alpheus and Cyrus sold out to J. T. Daniels, Samuel M. remaining in the business, which became known as the firm of Daniels & Hutchinson. In 1888 our subject closed out his business entirely at Dancy, and in the following year came to Rhinelander, Oneida county, where, in association with Dr. Daniels, son of J. T. Daniels, his old partner, he opened a private bank, which in May, 1891, was converted into the First National Bank of Rhinelander. For two years Mr. Hutchinson served as cashier of this institution, and he is still a director thereof. On resigning the position of cashier he embarked in the lumber business—buying and shipping logs and selling lumber, etc.—in which industry he has since been prosperously engaged.

On November 1, 1892, Mr. Hutchinson was married at Durand, Wis., to Miss Julia I. Snyder, who was born in Lima township, Pepin Co., Wis., daughter of Alonzo C. and Samantha O. (Comstock) Snyder, the former a native of New York State, the latter of Ohio, who were married at Sycamore, Ill., coming to Wisconsin about the year 1857; they are well-to-do farming people, at present residing at Rhinelander, and are the parents of six children, named respectively: Charles, Louise, Anna, Julia I., Eva and Delos, of whom Charles and Delos are deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson has been born one son, Samuel. In politics our subject is a Republican, and at one time he served as treasurer of Rhinelander, although he is no office seeker. Socially, he has been a member of the F. & A. M. since 1863, of the Modern Woodmen since 1890, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Hutchinson is in every respect a self-made man, and has good reason to be proud of his success—a success that is alone the result of his own indefatigable exertions and unquestioned integrity.

JAMES G. DUNN, proprietor of the dray and a general store in Rhinelander, Oneida county, was born in Massachusetts February 22, 1842, a son of John Dunn, who first saw the light in 1815, in County Kilkenny, Ireland.

When about twenty years of age the father came to this country, landing at Boston, and worked on the first railroad ever constructed in America. He married Mrs. Bridget (Morey) Kelley, a native of the same county in Ireland, and by her had two children, James G. and Mary A. For many years John Dunn worked in the stone quarries at Quincy, Mass., and in 1852 he came west with his family, settling on a piece of land near Fort Winnebago, Wis. Their trip to this State was made in part by boat from Buffalo to Milwaukee, thence by team to their destination. Here the father cleared a nice little farm whereon he passed the rest of his days, dying in 1883. Before coming west he had sent to Ireland for his father, James, brother James and sister Mary, but the father died and was buried at sea, the others joining our subject at Boston. The mother of our subject was twice married, first time to a Mr. Kelley, by whom there were three children, John, Patrick and Eliza, all of whom died in Marquette county, Wis. The mother passed away about the year 1875.

The subject proper of these lines was ten years old when he accompanied the rest of the family to Wisconsin, and here he worked on his father's farms summers, attending school during the winter season. He remained at the parental home until his marriage in 1867, at which time he bought a farm in Marquette county, whereon he lived eleven years, then moved to Portage City, where he dealt in real estate some six years.

In November, 1884, he sold out, and coming to Rhinelander, worked first on a railroad, later commencing the dray line, which he yet owns and conducts with much success, also, since 1893, carrying on a grocery store, Mrs. Dunn managing a millinery department; he is also agent for the Standard Oil Company. He now owns a fine property in Rhinelander, including his residence and store. In December, 1867, Mr. Dunn was married to Miss Maggie O'Hara, who was born in Hartford, Wis., in 1847, daughter of John and Mary (Weir) O'Hara, who were the parents of six children, named respectively: John, Thomas, Burgett, Mary, Maggie and Michael. The father came to America when a young man, was married in Vermont, and came to Wisconsin about the year 1845. He was a tailor by trade, but after coming west he followed farming; he died in 1859. The mother of Mrs. Dunn was born in Ireland in 1811, daughter of Frank Weir, who died in Ireland, leaving a widow and two children, Mary and Henry. The family came to the United States about the year 1829, and the widowed mother is now living with her daughter, Mrs. Dunn. To our subject and wife were born six children, namely: Anice, William, Ella, George and Grace, living, and Lulu, deceased wife of Harry Ashton. Of these Anice is married to George Whitney, the rest living at home.

Politically, Mr. Dunn is a Democrat, and while a resident of Marquette he served as supervisor and treasurer, also on the school board. At the present time he is alderman of the Sixth ward of Rhinelander; socially, he is affiliated with the Catholic Knights; in religious faith he is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

WILLIAM G. FOSS, one of the leading lumbermen of Tomahawk, Lincoln county, is an energetic man of sound principles and good judgment. His birth occurred August 11, 1864, in Genesee county, N. Y., near Rochester. His father, Kingsley Foss, a native of New York, wedded Matilda Harris, who was born in the Empire State, of New England ancestry, her parents being natives of Connecticut. By this union were born eleven children, of whom James, Florence, Lois, Ella and William G. are still living; Sylvester, Carrie and Frank lived to adult age, and are now deceased; the others died in childhood. In 1875 the family emigrated to Michigan, settling in Pontiac, where the father, who was a harness maker, opened a shop and began the manufacture of harness, employing several men. For three years they remained in that place when they removed to Fenton, Mich., and where the father died in 1881; his widow is now living with her daughter in Chicago. He had one brother, Joseph. In political sentiment he was a Republican, and while still a resident of New York, served as sheriff of his county.

Our subject pursued his studies in the common schools of Michigan, and at the age of fifteen years left home, going north to Cadillac, Mich., where he became foreman in a lumber yard, and there remained for four years. In Big Rapids, Mich., he was then employed by the same firm some six years, when he came to Tomahawk, Wis., arriving here in April, 1889, and became grader for the Tomahawk Lumber Company. All his life has been spent in lumbering, and he is thoroughly acquainted with every branch of the business. In the spring of 1894 he became interested with others in the Somo Box Factory, one of the leading industries of the city, yielding to the owners a good income.

At Big Rapids, Mich., in May, 1885, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Foss and Miss Tenna Moyer, who was born in Canaseraga, Allegany Co., N. Y., daughter of George and Elizabeth (Greenfield) Moyer, who were the parents of two children: William and Tenna. Her father, who was a native of Germany, came to the New World with his parents when quite small, locating on a farm which his father operated. The mother of Mrs. Foss was born in New York, and there her husband died in 1880. By occupation he was a locomotive engineer, and served as such both in New York and Mexico. A son has been born to our subject and his wife, named Glenn A. Mr. Foss is identified with the Republican party, and is at present serving as alderman from the Fourth ward. Socially he is a member of the K. O. T. M. He has achieved success by unremitting toil, directed by good business principles, and is numbered among the wide-awake and highly esteemed citizens of Tomahawk.

JOHAN A. OGDEN, editor and proprietor of the Antigo Republican, is one of the busiest men in Langlade county, and is capable of doing the business of two or three ordinary individuals. His service of over twenty-five years as a "newspaper man" has made him particularly wide-awake and progressive, elements of character which are appreciated by his fellow citizens, and which render him one of the valuable factors in the community.

Mr. Ogden was born June 6, 1851, in the town of Stockton, Portage Co., Wis., and is the son of Judge C. S. Ogden and Catherine Hoag Ogden, the father born August 2, 1819, the mother August 11, 1827, and died April 7, 1877. In 1854 they removed to Ogdensburg, Waupaca county, this State, where our subject attended the public schools until fifteen years of age. The family removed to Waupaca in 1865, and he began to learn the trade of a printer in October, 1868. He there studied law in his father's office, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1873, prior to which, in October, 1869, he had started the New London Times, and subsequently established and conducted the Taylor County News, at Medford, which he carried on for three years and at the same time practiced law. This paper he sold out in 1878, and then began the publication of the Waupaca Post. While managing this newspaper Mr. Ogden at the same time owned and operated a farm of 480 acres one mile out of the city.

After disposing of the farm and the Post Mr. Ogden removed to Antigo in 1868, and purchased the Republican, of which he has since been the owner and publisher. It is a live paper, as may be judged from its proprietor, and has a good circulation in the county. Mr. Ogden is also interested in the abstract office of C. Werden, Dean & Co., and has been conducting a stationery and news business for three years in connection with his newspaper office. He has been twice the Republican candidate for mayor of Antigo, and, although not elected, succeeded in cutting down the Democratic majority of nearly 200 to less than seventy-five both times. During President Harrison's administration he was deputy revenue collector for four counties. Mr. Ogden was married at Waupaca, July 22, 1879, to Miss Alida B. Randall, and they have two sons: Caleb E., born April 10, 1891, and Howard R., born August 30, 1894.

JACOB F. EMTER, a member of the firm of Williams & Emter, general merchants of Wausau, Marathon county, was born at Cambria, Columbia Co., Wis., September 16, 1861. His parents, Jacob and Regina (Blochurtz) Emter, were both born in Germany, and are now deceased.

Our subject was reared to manhood in the village of Cambria, and educated there in the public schools, after which he learned the harness-maker's trade, and later was employed as a salesman in a store for a number of years. In 1883 he removed to Wausau, and became a partner in the business of Charles A. Williams. In Wausau, October 22, 1885, Jacob F. Emter married Miss Lena Williams, and one child was born to their union, Regina, September 24, 1886. Mrs. Emter is the daughter of Balser and Amelia Williams. In addition to his general store business Mr. Emter is also senior partner in the firm of Emter & Allen, leading liverymen of Wausau. Mr. Emter attends the Roman Catholic Church, and in his political views he is a Democrat.

NELSON B. CARTER is one of the oldest pioneers of Clintonville, Waupaca county, only two present residents antedating his settlement here. He opened the first hotel in the primitive settlement, and during a residence of over thirty years has noted the gradual progress of the little village to its present flourishing state.

Mr. Carter comes from an old Maine family, his paternal grandfather, John Carter, having lived and died in the town of Porter, Oxford county, that State. The latter's son, Stephen W. Carter, father of Nelson B., farmed, and also operated a gristmill at Kezar Falls, Maine. He married Miss Azuba Willoughby, of New Hampshire, and later moved to Lowell, Mass., thence coming west to Michigan with his son, and in 1860 moving to Kansas, where he died in 1868, his wife surviving and living near Kansas City, Mo., until 1880. Stephen and Azuba Carter had a family of nine children, six of whom are now living; of these Coswell E., a resident of New Hampshire, served in the army during the Civil war; Sylvester went to California in 1849, and now lives in that State; Stephen W., a war veteran, now lives in New Hampshire; John W. served through the war in the Sixth Mass. V. I., and is now living at Lowell, Mass.; Lydia A. first married Sumner Hardis, and is now the widow of E. L. Sherman, her residence being in Kansas City, Mo.; Sylvanus died in Connecticut.

Our subject was born in Parsonsfield, Oxford Co., Maine, March 27, 1826, and to the age of sixteen resided in that State, then for three years worked on a farm near Holderness, N. H. After a short visit to Maine he returned to New Hampshire, and followed farming at Benton until 1856, in which year he came west, and for three years lived at Paw Paw, Mich. In 1859 he located at Blackberry, Kane Co., Ill., a little later removing to Geneva, same county. In 1861 Mr. Carter moved thence to Wau-paca county, Wis., locating first on a twenty-acre timber tract in Bear Creek township, where for four years he was engaged in clearing land. He settled on the site of Clintonville July 6, 1865, purchasing two acres of land where the "Ward House" now stands, and here built and kept the first hotel in the place. It was a one-and-a-half-story log house, 20 x 30 feet, low on two sides. A log barn, supplementing this primitive structure, was superseded in 1866 by the present barn of the "Ward House," built by Mr. Carter. He continued in the hotel business here until 1869, then traded for an eighty-acre unimproved farm. In 1878 he located on the farm, which he improved, building a good one-and-a-half-story frame house 22 x 32, with an L 22 x 32 in 1881, and erecting a substantial barn 40 x 50 feet. He had built also, in 1878, a barn 22 x 40, subsequently extending it 20 feet. Mr. Carter now owns 160 acres of well-improved land adjoining the village of Clintonville.

In February, 1864, our subject enlisted at New London, Wis., in Company D, Thirty-eighth Wis. V. I., for three years or during the war. The regiment was assigned to the Ninth Army Corps, and was sent to Virginia to help Gen. Grant crush the enemy in his final advance upon the entrenched forces. Mr. Carter participated in the battle of Cold Harbor, and was present at the charge on Petersburg. He remained in service until the close of the war, and was discharged at Long Island in May, 1865, returning to Clintonville. Mr. Carter was married at Benton, N. H., to Miss Serena Brown, a native of that town and daughter of Richard and Sarah (Kimball) Brown. The father died in 1878, the mother living to the age of eighty-six, surviving her husband ten years. To Mr. and Mrs. Carter twelve children have been born, of whom eleven survive, as follows: Tryphosa, wife of Henry Buckbee, of Ordway, Brown Co., S. Dak., and the mother of four living children—Bertha, William, Mary and John; Elberto, who lives on a farm in Wau-paca county, and has four children—Inez, Sylva, Harry and Edna; Alphonso, residing in Clintonville, and has three children—Cyril, Ethel and Eva; Tryphena, wife of Willis Seeley, of Tigerton, Wis., and the mother of five children—Stella, Luvie, Bertha, Orrin and Clara; Almond L., who now lives on the farm; Arthur N., a contractor and builder in Clintonville, is married and has one child—Erwin; Anna, secretary of the Bank of Wittenberg, Wis.; Willis, a carpenter, of Clintonville; Leonard, a carpenter and farmer; Harry, a carpenter; and Alvah, a high-school student.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter are members of the M. E. Church, and she is a charter member of the Eastern Star Lodge, at Clintonville.

Mr. Carter is a member of Clintonville Lodge No. 197, F. & A. M., and of John B. Wyman Post No. 32, G. A. R. In politics he is a Republican and was postmaster from 1865 to 1868. He has served as chairman, as town supervisor, as member of the board, and in various other capacities, and is one of the most popular and respected citizens of Clintonville.

NATHANIEL KELLY, who in his lifetime was one of the best known and most highly esteemed young business men of Marathon county, died in comparatively young life, having almost attained the half-century mile-post when death chose him a victim. During his life he was not only well-known on account of the large lumbering interests which he represented, but he was beloved as well, as he had a kindly spirit and a welcome for everybody. To know him was to love him, for the leaden mists of life would fade away before his genial, ever-present smile.

Mr. Kelly was born in Ithaca, Tompkins Co., N. Y., October 5, 1834, a son of Milo and Mary B. (Casteline) Kelly. When quite young he removed with his parents to Oak Prairie, Ill., where he attended the village schools. He was seventeen years of age when he removed with his parents' family to Marathon county, locating on the Eau Claire river, about nine miles southeast of Wausau. Here Milo Kelly and his two sons, William P. and Nathaniel, acquired large lumber interests, and the region was soon an active hive of industry. After the death of his father in 1870, Mr. Kelly and his brother continued the business until the death of the latter, when Nathaniel was left in full control of the extensive plant, which he carried on up to his death, which occurred suddenly January 22, 1883.

In August, 1860, Mr. Kelly was married to Miss Nellie M. Karmer, a daughter of Sanford and Lucy (Truman) Karmer, both of whom were born in the Old Bay State and emigrated from Massachusetts to Portage county among its earliest pioneers. Mrs. Karmer still survives, an honored resident of Stevens Point. To Mr. and Mrs. Kelly four children were born: Isabella, born May 4, 1861, died November 29, 1863; Lucy, born August 17, 1863, wife of Edward Gooding, of Lockport, Ill.; Frank, a manufacturer of furniture and novelties at Wausau, born July 3, 1865; and Mabel, born July 29, 1867, wife of William G. Norton, of Lockport, Ill. Mr. Kelly was a prominent member of Forest Lodge, No. 130, F. & A. M., of Wausau Lodge No. 215, I. O. O. F., and of the Sir Knights. He was highly esteemed for his genial nature, and by his death Marathon county lost a valuable and progressive citizen. His widow now resides at Wausau.

CHARLES ZUEHLKE, one of the most worthy representative citizens of Wisconsin, was born in Dodge county, Wis., March 25, 1853, and is a son of William and Frederika Zuehlke, natives of Germany. In 1847 the father came with his parents to America, and was married in southern Wisconsin, after which he carried on agricultural pursuits. In 1847 he purchased forty acres of land in Milwaukee, on which the Schlitz Brewery now stands, the purchase price being $100. Selling this, he removed to Dodge county, and located on wild land in Theresa township, where he developed one of the finest farms in that section of the State, continuing its improvement and cultivation until 1866, when he removed to Lomira township, same county, and purchased 200 acres of partially cleared land, for which he paid $8,000. Here he made his home until his death in August, 1894, since which time his widow has resided in Juneau, Dodge county. The family numbers the following children: August, a farmer of Dodge county; Charles, subject of this sketch; Mary, wife of Ferdinand Schwantes, of Horicon, Wis.; Gusta, wife of Frank Christian, of Dodge county; Fred, a cheese manufacturer, of Bonduel; Henry, a hotel keeper, of Bonduel; and Emma, wife of Charles Briemann, of Juneau.

The subject proper of this sketch attended the district schools, but was mostly educated in German. Being one of the older children of the family, his services were required in the work of developing the farm—an arduous task with which he early became familiar. His childhood and youth were passed on the home farm with the exception of one summer, when he worked for an uncle in Columbia county, Wis. He was married, in 1879, in Dodge county, to Miss Emma Wunne, a native of that county, and a daughter of Chris Wunne, a farmer. To them have been born four children: Albert, Amanda and William, who are with their parents; and Adolph who died in infancy. Soon after his marriage Mr. Zuehlke came to Hartland township, Shawano county, and with his limited means secured a tract of land in Section 16, but being unable to get a satisfactory title he relinquished this claim and bought eighty acres of partially-improved land in Section 29. He continued its cultivation for nine years, and in that time added forty acres to the place, making a valuable property of 120 acres, which he still owns. In 1888 he abandoned agricultural pursuits and came to Bonduel, where he embarked in the hardware business in connection with Chris Bonnin and Mathias Wagner, under the firm name of C. Zuehlke & Co. After two and a half years our subject bought out his partners, and has since been alone in business. In 1890 he built his store room, and in February, 1894, became associated with Robert Rose, under the firm style of Zuehlke & Rose. He is a wide-awake, enterprising business man, and has secured a liberal patronage from the best class of citizens. In politics he is independent, and has served as town supervisor, while since the spring of 1894 he has filled the office of town treasurer. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, and are most highly respected people.

LOUIS PORT, a prosperous, loyal citizen of Stevens Point, Portage county, is proprietor of an extensive and well-established cigar factory, the oldest in the city, which has made for itself a name second to none, in that line, in Wisconsin. He is a native of this State, born in Milwaukee November 19, 1848, a son of Nicholas and Lena Port, who came from Germany to the United States in 1843. The father was a laborer by vocation, in later life engaging in the manufacture of vinegar, and succeeded in accumulating a comfortable competence, at the time of his death being well off. He and his wife both died in Milwaukee, Wis., January 19, 1890, and February 17, 1881, respectively, the parents of fourteen children—six sons and eight daughters.

Our subject received a good common-school education up to the age of fourteen years, when he became apprenticed to the trade of cigar maker, his first work being that of "stripper," gradually rising in the scale till he found himself a full-fledged cigar maker. He continued at his trade, working in various shops until February, 1877, when he commenced business at Stevens Point, opening a cigar factory on Third street, between Main and Clark, having associated with him Louis Piffer. At the end of two years the firm of Port & Piffer was dissolved, our subject purchasing his partner's interest; but at the close of another year he moved to Milwaukee, where he carried on a similar business until May 1, 1885, at which time he returned to Stevens Point and resumed the manufacture of cigars on Third street. In 1890 he removed to the corner of Mill street and Strong's avenue, where he had erected a very substantial two-story brick building, his present place of business.

On February 12, 1871, Mr. Port was married, at Milwaukee, to Miss Louisa Klett, a daughter of Andrew and Johanna (Doradby) Klett, all natives of Germany, whence they emigrated to this country when Mrs. Port was a five-year-old girl. Mr. Klett was a baker by trade, but did not follow it to any extent in the United States. To Mr. and Mrs. Port were born five children, as follows: Amelia and Theodore, both living, and Henry, Louis, Jr., and Agnes, deceased. Mrs. Port is a member of the Episcopal Church. In politics our subject is a Republican, but in civic elections he invariably votes for the candidates he considers best adapted for the office, regardless of party ties. He does an excellent business, his trade reaching considerably beyond the city, and he is regarded as a good, useful citizen and as a reliable business man. Socially, he is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Stevens Point, and Mrs. Port is affiliated with the Daughters of Rebekah, of the same place.

LOUIS GLAUBITZ. From the lowest to the loftiest station, socially speaking—from penury, the hard grinding poverty which knows the bitter experience of hunger and wearisome toil from early dawn far into the night, to the comforts and enjoyments of refined society, and an exalted position in the commercial, professional, or political world—these are some of the vicissitudes through which not a few of the self-made men of this country, be they native-born or of foreign birth, have passed. Mr. Glaubitz is one of those whose lives have not been all sunshine, and who have attained position and competence only through labor and struggle, which less resolute, less earnest men would have deemed beyond human power and endurance.

Our subject is a native of Silesia, Prussia, born December 11, 1831, in the town of Laehn, a son of Gotlieb Glaubitz, a tanner by trade, who also owned some land, being in comparatively comfortable circumstances. By his wife Caroline he had four children—one son (Louis) and three daughters—all of whom married, our subject being the only survivor, his three sisters having died in Germany, as did also his parents, the father when fifty years old, the mother when aged seventy-four. Louis attended the common schools of his native land until he was between thirteen and fourteen years old, in the meantime continuing to live with his widowed mother (her husband having died when Louis was five years old), who carried on the tannery up to the time of her son leaving the parental home. At the time of his life just mentioned the boy commenced a five-years' apprenticeship in a business house, paying therefor a premium of one hundred dollars, but coming out a full-fledged clerk with the best training. He filled various positions in that capacity in Germany; but salaries were low and he managed to save but little money. At the age of twenty-three he married, the lady of his choice being Miss Rosalie A. Mager, who was born March 10, 1835, in Jauer, Province of Silesia, Germany, daughter of Benjamin Mager, a dry-goods merchant of that place; and now the youthful benedict found in earnest the responsibilities of life commencing with him. Seeing that the prospects of making a comfortable home in Germany were far from bright, he concluded to try his fortune in America; so, leaving his young wife behind, he in the fall of 1857 set sail from the port of Bremen on the good ship "Laura," and after a tedious passage of fifty-nine days landed at New York. Chicago being our traveler's destination, he at once proceeded thither from New York, and on his arrival at the "windy city" he found himself the possessor of a round sum of twenty-five cents, which was just the price of a night's lodging at the old "Jervis Hotel," corner of Van Buren and Sherman streets, where now stands the "Atlantic Hotel." In the morning he had to take to the streets minus breakfast, a stranger in a strange land, without the slightest knowledge of the English language, but possessed of a stout heart and a spirit of independence and determination that were bound to win. He was strong and healthy, and willing to work at anything that would bring him an honest dollar, especially with the ever-present thought of his dear young wife in the far-away "Fatherland." Chancing into a clothes-cleaning and repairing shop on State street, he found to his delight a countryman of his own, also, as it happened, in somewhat straitened circumstances, for he was at that moment preparing a very limited morning meal in the store; yet he generously shared with Mr. Glaubitz his frugal repast, consisting of bread and coffee. How true the saying: "To the poor the poor are always charitable!" After a little, with the assistance of his new friend, our subject secured a position as "man-of-all-work" in Otto C. Ludwig's restaurant on Randolph street, a first-class establishment in those days, and at the end of a month he received the sum of thirty dollars for wages, the first money he earned in the United States. But the hours being long and the work incessant, he concluded to make a change and try his hand on a farm during the forthcoming winter, 1857-58, which was fast approaching; accordingly he went by rail to Dunton Station, on what is now the Chicago & North Western railroad, where he found work with James Potter, a farmer, and hiring with him for a year, was employed doing chores of all sorts about the farm during the winter; but toward the spring of 1858, concluding he could do better in the city, he left the farm and returned to Chicago, where he secured work as city teamster for Goss & Hoag, at that time one of the largest retail merchants of Chicago. During the summer of the same year he managed to save enough money to bring his wife out from Germany, and sending for her she arrived in the fall, bringing with her her first-born, a son, Alfred Theo. L., who for the first time in his life now saw his father. This son has been in the employ of the United States Mail service, running between Chicago and Milwaukee, for the past sixteen years. For two years Mr. Glaubitz remained in the employ of Goss & Hoag, and then entered that of Durand Bros. & Powers, wholesale grocers, on South Water street, where it may be said was laid the foundation of his future successful business career. He began as porter in the store, and his true worth was soon recognized by promotion to receiving clerk, later to shipping clerk, and still later to general salesman, in each capacity thoroughly demonstrating his fitness for the position. In 1866 a branch was established in Milwaukee under the firm name of J. B. Durand & Co., with which he became associated, commencing as traveling salesman on a salary of $1,200 per annum, and his success in that capacity, together with his good judgment in the selection of the most responsible parties as patrons, was the means of the sales of the house, in the course of time, reaching the enormous figure of from $350,000 to $400,000 annually, attended by insignificant loss.

His traveling route lay through Wisconsin, Iowa, northern Illinois and western Michigan, and he was regarded, both on and off the road, first-class as a "hustler" and so valuable indeed were his services recognized by his employers that his humble salary of $1,200 per annum was before long voluntarily raised to $2,500 and expenses. In 1879 he secured a one-fourth interest in the firm of Durand, Robinson & Co., Milwaukee, and with them continued until 1881, when, after an experience of fifteen years as traveling salesman, he concluded to sever his connection with the firm, disposing of his interest therein.

During his travels he had traversed a considerable portion of the lumber country in northern Wisconsin, becoming well-acquainted with leading lumbermen, and now, on abandoning his commercial pursuits, he concluded to try his hand in this new enterprise. In 1881 he was foremost in the incorporation of the Shawano Lumber Co., of which he was elected president, a store and sawmill being established at Wittenberg, Shawano county, with general offices at Milwaukee. The company purchased several thousand acres, the timber of which they cut and manufactured, and had successfully and extensively carried on business until the fall of 1887, when our subject became sole proprietor of the entire concern, which included about three thousand acres of land. On July 17, 1887, however, the extensive lumber sheds were ignited by a spark from a passing locomotive, resulting in a disastrous conflagration entailing a loss of several thousand dollars to Mr. Glaubitz, although the railroad company paid him $2,750 compensation. On May 19, 1895, he moved his family from Milwaukee to Wittenberg, he himself for the previous fourteen years having divided his time between the two places. He is recognized far and near as one of the most substantial men in all northern Wisconsin, as well as of Wittenberg, toward the building up of which he has been the foremost. At the present time, in addition to his lumber business, he conducts a general merchandise store in the village. And it is only but justice to add that much of his prosperity is due to his excellent and amiable life partner, Mrs. Glaubitz, whose economy and admirable management in household affairs have been potent factors in his phenomenal success. They are both well preserved physically, Mr. Glaubitz, especially, considering his many years of active business life, and untiring energy, for he looks and feels at least fifteen years younger than he really is. The family of children born to this honored couple in the United States, are as follows: Anna L. H., born November 15, 1860, in Chicago, now Mrs. H. J. Rathke, of Milwaukee; Selma P., born in Chicago January 7, 1863, now Mrs. Frank Trenkamp, of Milwaukee, her husband being the oldest established soap maker in the city; Robert B., born in Chicago, May 8, 1867 (he learned the machinist trade, and in 1885 came to Wittenberg, where he is identified with his father's extensive interests; he paid Germany a visit in 1889, being absent from May until September. This son is a shrewd young business man); Louis O., born in Milwaukee, April 23, 1869, is an expert machinist in the employ, as bookkeeper, of Hoffman Billings Manufacturing Co., of Milwaukee; Clara M., born March 30, 1872, in Milwaukee; Paul B., born November 12, 1875, is an electrician of promise; Alvine W. C., born in Milwaukee, October 14, 1878.

Mr. Glaubitz is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, but his vast business interests preclude him from accepting political honors, which, it is no flattery to say, is a loss to the community. In religious faith the entire family are members of the Lutheran Church. Such is a brief sketch of the life of Louis Glaubitz, a typical self-made man, whose success has been due to his tireless industry, financial integrity, personal attention to the details of his business, and to a courage tempered with caution.

MIL0 KELLY (deceased) was for a score of years one of the most active and influential pioneers of Marathon county. He came to the county at a period when its lumbering interests were rising into commanding importance, and lived in the midst of its greatest development, one of the chief figures and factors in the great industry.

Mr. Kelly was born in Tompkins county, N. Y., January 22, 1804, a son of Godfrey and Harriet Kelly. He attended the public schools in central New York near his home, and in early life followed agricultural pursuits. On February 25, 1829, at Ithaca, N. Y., the county seat of Tompkins county, he was married to Miss Mary B. Casteline, who was born in that city February 2, 1807, daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Atkinson) Casteline. Five years later he removed with his little family to Oak Prairie, Ill., where he remained some seventeen years. In 1851 Mr. Kelly became interested in the lumbering interests of the Upper Wisconsin Valley, and in that year he removed from Illinois to Marathon county, Wis., where he at once engaged in the lumbering business on the Eau Claire river, about nine miles from Wausau. From that date until his death, which occurred nearly twenty years later, he was a continuous resident of the county, and during all that time was extensively engaged in lumbering. He contributed largely to the development of the vast resources of the county, and was held in high esteem by his fellow citizens, who evinced in a measure their regard for him by electing him at various times to many and responsible offices. In all his transactions he was upright and honorable, scorning the subtleties which belong to a smaller nature than his. His affections were warm and deep-seated, his manners open and frank, and he was generous to a fault, a splendid type, in fact, of the large-hearted and energetic lumberman of sterling principles and generous impulses. He was an honored member of the Masonic Fraternity, a kind neighbor, and indulgent husband and father. To Mr. and Mrs. Kelly three children were born: William P., born October 3, 1832, and died August 19, 1877, in Marathon county; Nathaniel, born October 5, 1834, died January 22, 1883; and Mary Eliza, born September 2, 1836, and died January 28, 1849. Mr. Kelly died March 28, 1870, mourned by a wide circle of friends. His good and faithful wife still survives at this writing, one of the oldest, if not the oldest residents of Wausau, having reached the advanced age of eighty-eight years. She is one of the most highly revered and respected women of Marathon county.

CHARLES A. WILLIAMS, senior member of the firm of Williams & Emter, general merchants of Wausau, Marathon county, was born here in Wausau August 8, 1858. His parents, Balser and Katherine (Kuhl) Williams, were born in Germany, came to the United States about the year 1850, located in Columbia county, Wis., and in 1854 removed to Wausau.

Balser Williams was engaged in lumbering for a number of years. He was twice married, and by his first wife, Katherine, had three children, Charles A., the subject of this sketch, being the only survivor; the mother of these died in 1862. By his second wife, whom he married in 1864, and whose maiden name was Amelia Bessert, Balser Williams had two children, both now living, namely: Lena, wife of Jacob F. Emter, a partner in the business of Charles A. Williams, and Albert, also in Wausau. Balser Williams still resides at Wausau, but for the past eight years has lived a comparatively retired life. After his mother's death Charles A. Williams was taken, when only about four years old, to live with his grandparents in Columbia county, Wis. He remained with them until seventeen years of age, and was educated in the district schools of that locality, after which he was engaged as a salesman in a general store for six years. In Cambria, Columbia Co., Wis., October 20, 1880, Charles A. Williams married Miss Emma Emter, and three children have been born to their union, namely: Ida, May 19, 1883; Elmer, July 31, 1884 (deceased May 25, 1885), and Myron, August 14, 1891. Mrs. Williams' parents, Jacob and Katherine Emter, were both natives of Germany and residents of Columbia county, Wisconsin.

In 1881 Mr. Williams returned to his native town, and the firm of Williams &

Emter, one of the substantial business houses of Wausau, was established. Both members in the partnership are gentlemen of keen intelligence, and, by their strict integrity and business-like methods, have succeeded in building up a large trade. Mr. Williams is a member of Wausau Lodge No. 215, I. O. O. F., and also of the Modern Woodmen of America. He is an ardent worker in the ranks of the Democratic party, has been supervisor of the Seventh ward one term, and is now serving on the school board. Mrs. Williams and family attend the Roman Catholic Church.

NA. GILBERT was born in Manitowoc, Wis., November 22, 1863, and is a son of Gilbert and Mary Kjek. The father, who was a silversmith, and also owned two large farms in Valdres, Norway, emigrated, in 1851, with his family to Manitowoc, Wis., which was then a small place, and, purchasing land in its primitive condition, began the development of a farm in the midst of the wilderness. He cleared and improved the land, and made his home thereon until 1864, when he sold that place and moved to the city of Manitowoc, where he engaged in ship carpentering. There he made his home until 1883, when, with his family, he came to Wittenberg, which at that time contained only one store. Here he again bought land, and once more went through the hardships incident to pioneer life. Again he cleared and developed a farm, and continued its cultivation until 1885, when he sold to his son-in-law, Ole Nelson, who now lives upon the place. Mr. and Mrs. Kjek have since lived with our subject, the father, now at the age of eighty years, the latter being sixty-nine years old. In their family were six children, of whom Anna and John, the two eldest, are now deceased; the others are Maria, wife of Ole Nelson, a carpenter and farmer of Wittenberg, by whom she has two sons and six daughters; Martin, who has taken up a homestead in Canada, where he now makes his home; Nels A., subject of this sketch; and George, who is located in Denver, Colorado.

Mr. Gilbert received a common-school education and remained at home until sixteen years of age, when he started out in life for himself, being first employed in the lumber woods and on the river. He afterward worked at railroading and anything that he could find to do in order to secure an honest livelihood. He also followed carpentering and painting. In 1892 Mr. Gilbert wedded Mary Ida Colby, who was born in Primrose, Dane Co., Wis., January 13, 1866, a daughter of Eli and Ellen (Charleson) Colby. They were both natives of Norway, and came with their respective families to America, their marriage being celebrated in Primrose. They began their domestic life upon a farm which Mr. Colby there purchased, and reared a family of twelve children, as follows: Charlie, a farmer of Primrose, Wis.; Mrs. Gilbert; Ella, widow of Henry Miles, and a resident of Dane county, Wis.; Lizzie, wife of W. E. Wilson, principal of the schools of Wittenberg; Joseph, who operates the homestead of 220 acres near Primrose; Julia, deceased; Nora, who lives with her mother at Mt. Horeb, Dane Co., Wis.; William, at home; Clara, who is attending college at Mt. Horeb; Norman, Frank and Jessie, at home.

Mrs. Gilbert received good educational privileges, including instruction in a business college, and she also attended a school where she fitted herself for her present position of landlady of a hotel. Until 1887 she remained at home and then went to Madison, where she was employed as book-keeper in a wholesale house, filling that responsible position some five years, and then came to Wittenberg. In the meantime her father had died on the old homestead, passing away in 1888, at the age of fifty-nine. Her mother afterward purchased a hotel and farm at Wittenberg, and made it her home for two years, when she sold out to Mr. Gilbert and returned to Primrose. She now resides in Mt. Horeb, while our subject and his wife are successfully engaged in carrying on the hotel at Wittenberg. They have secured an excellent patronage, and their well-conducted house well merits the support that is given it. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert are faithful members of the Lutheran Church.

In politics he has always been a stalwart Republican, and in his social relations is connected with Wittenberg Lodge, No. 214, I. O. O. F., and he and his wife have many warm friends.

EDGAR ALLEN, a progressive and substantial farmer of Amherst township, Portage county, and an honored veteran of the Civil war, claims Tioga county, Penn., as the place of his nativity. The date of his birth is March 13, 1838, and his parents are David and Elizabeth (Wilmot) Allen, the former born, in 1817, in Dryden, Tompkins Co., N. Y., whence in early manhood he removed to Pennsylvania, and there for a short time engaged in farming, subsequently returning to Tompkins county, and making his home in the town of Ithaca. Previous to this he had worked on the Erie canal, and returning to his old business in 1831 he bought a canalboat of which he himself acted as captain, engaging in this line during the summers until 1849; during the winter time for a number of years he made shingles. While in Pennsylvania he was married, March 13, 1837, and in 1850 he migrated westward with his family to Illinois, there working farms on shares until the fall of 1852, when he came alone to Portage county, Wis., and here purchased a quarter of Section 35, Amherst township. Having made a clearing and built a log house, he was joined by his family in the fall of 1853, and here they have ever since remained. Mr. Allen worked in the woods for several years after his arrival here, and for about ten years furnished provisions to different lumber camps on contract. In 1866 he paid a visit to relations in New York State. He has led a long and useful life, but age is beginning to tell on him, and he has been in poor health for some time.

When the family removed westward to Illinois Edgar Allen accompanied them, and came with his parents to Portage county in an early day in the history of this locality. He acquired his education in the common schools of the Keystone State and of New York, and was reared upon a farm, and as he was the eldest child much of the farm work devolved upon him. At the age of fourteen he began work in the lumber camps, where he has spent each winter since, with the exception of the time when he was with the Union army in the South. On December 13, 1860, in Waupaca, Wis., he was married to Miss Arabella Aldrich, a daughter of Jonathan and Sarah (Galpin) Aldrich, the former a native of Vermont, the latter of Connecticut. The paternal grandparents were Jonathan and Amelia (Gaines) Aldrich, both natives of the Green Mountain State, the former of whom was a Revolutionary hero. Mrs. Allen was born in Dana, N. Y., in 1846, and when a maiden of ten summers came to the west with her parents, who settled on a farm near Stockton, in Portage county. After two years her father sold that property and purchased 165 acres of land in Section 33, Amherst township. Mr. Aldrich and our subject afterward exchanged farms and the former subsequently sold his property and removed to a farm in Lanark township, Portage county, where he died in 1888 at the age of ninety-two. His wife passed away in Amherst township January 25, 1882, at the age of seventy-two.

The union of our subject and wife has been blessed with the following children: Ernest, who is employed in the lumber woods by his father, married Sarah Carey, by whom he has two children—Arlie and Hayes; Fred, who married Miss Tensy Knowles and resides in Amherst, is also employed by his father; Lillian is the wife of John Morgan, of Amherst; Blanche is the wife of Frederick Lombard, a resident of Wausau, Wis.; Claude, Maud and Archie are all at home. In the fall of 1883 Mr. Allen traded his farm for that of his father-in-law, and now owns 213 acres of valuable land, 140 of which are cleared and under a high state of cultivation. He has been for many years a lumber contractor, and is doing a successful business, employing twenty-five men. He is enterprising and progressive, sagacious and far-sighted, and his well-directed efforts have brought to him a high degree of success, of which he is well deserving.

During the Civil war Mr. Allen manifested his loyalty to the government by enlisting at Stevens Point, Wis., in what was then called Company H, afterward becoming Company A, Third Wisconsin Cavalry. The regiment was stationed in Kansas, engaged in fighting Quantrell's band. Mr. Allen was there taken ill with smallpox, and for five weeks was in the hospital in Leavenworth, at which place he was mustered out in 1865, and the company was disbanded at Madison, Wis. The same loyalty which caused his enlistment in the Union service has characterized his discharge of the duties of citizenship, and he is a valued factor in the community, devoted to whatever tends to benefit the public and promote the general welfare.

CHARLES C. BOERKE, cigar manufacturer, of Wausau, Marathon county, was born in the city of Hanover, Germany, January 22, 1859, and is a son of George H. and Louisa (Rappe) Boerke, who were both born in Hanover.

George H. Boerke came to the United States in 1866, and in the same year located at Milwaukee, Wis., where he worked at his trade of shoemaking. In November of the following year his wife and family came to this country and joined him at Milwaukee, where he had provided a home for them. His wife died at Milwaukee November 7, 1876. In 1881 he came to Wausau, Marathon county, and remained there until 1891, then removed to Livingston, Mont., where he now resides. To George H. and Louisa Boerke were born five children, one of whom died in infancy. The others are: Charles C., the subject of this sketch; Sophia, wife of Otto Lichter, residing at Saginaw, Mich.; George H. (Jr.), at Livingston, Mont., and Louisa, in Chicago, Illinois.

Our subject was only eight years of age when he came to the United States. After receiving his education in the public schools of Milwaukee he learned the trade of a cigar maker, and in 1879 removed to Wausau, Marathon county, where he again worked at his trade until 1882. At Wausau, in 1881, he married Miss Theresa Werheim, daughter of George and Theresa Werheim, and there have been born to them children as follows: George H., January 7, 1882; Carl, 1883, died in 1885; Hedwig, September 27, 1884; Frank, 1886, died in 1887; Aurelia, born in 1889, died in 1890; Hilmer, December 9, 1890; Edison Morse, December 4, 1892; and Elmer, November 23, 1893. Mr. Boerke engaged in business for himself in 1882, continuing until 1885, then worked at that and other occupations until June, 1894, when he was appointed to a position in the waterworks department. The family attend St. Paul's Evangelical Church.

WILLIAM C. HOLLY was born in the town of Wells, Bradford Co., Penn., August 2, 1822, and is the son of Joseph and Sarah (McWhorter) Holly, the former a native of Sussex county, N. J., the latter of Orange county, N. Y. The father's birth occurred February 22, 1785, the mother's on September 2, 1789. The father was the son of Silas and Esther Holly, who were the parents of eleven children—four boys and seven girls—of whom Joseph was the fourth child. Silas Holly was a farmer by occupation, served in the Revolutionary war and aided the Colonies in their struggles for independence; his wife died in Sussex county July 5, 1845, aged eighty-four years. Joseph Holly followed farming throughout his life, and in his early manhood learned the mason's trade, but seldom worked at it. He was in the war of 1812, stationed at Sax Harbor most of the time while in the service; his death occurred February 5, 1856, in Tioga county, Penn., and his wife at the same place December 23, 1856.

A brief record of their children is as follows: Silas Holly was born July 17, 1817, and was married to Sophia Smith, by whom he had six children, only two of whom are now living; his wife died in 1861, and he then married Lucy Camfield, but they had no children. Joseph W. Holly was born September 26, 1820, and was married to Mary Wood September 23, 1846; they have had seven children, four of whom survive: Ruth, Eda, Mira and Ella, all living in Pennsylvania, and married; J. W. Holly died August 21, 1894, in Mansfield, Tioga Co., Penn.; his wife died five months previous. William C. is the next in the family. George J. Holly was born August 2, 1822, and died August 1, 1866. Margaret J. Holly was born July 22, 1826, has been twice married, first time to Sheldon B. Hill, who died in the army, and had four children: Frank, Julius, Joseph and Florence, all married. Roswell Holly was born May 2, 1829, has been twice married, and has had six children. Sally M. Holly was born September 23, 1832, and died single September 21, 1857.

W. C. Holly lived in the town of Wells until he was past twelve years of age, and then his father moved into the town of Columbia, Bradford Co. Penn., and W. C. lived there three years; then moved into the town of Sullivan, Tioga Co., Penn., and when he was eighteen years old he went into the town of Troy, Bradford Co., Penn., and learned the trade of carpenter and joiner serving three years. When his time was out he went into the town of Southport, Chemung Co., N. Y. On September 22, 1846, he was married to Laura A. Houghton, by whom he had three children: Laura Helen, the eldest, was born at Southport, N. Y., November 12, 1878. William M., was born June 6, 1854, at Southport, N. Y., and Alma J. was born at Amherst, Wis., December 29, 1855, and died July 8, 1859, aged three years, six months and nine days. William M. Holly died May 10, 1880, at Amherst, Portage Co., Wis. Laura Helen Holly was married to Frank Tyler, and had one son named Roy, who was drowned in the State of Washington. Laura H. died in the State of Washington, February 9, 1889; she and her first husband parted, and she was married, the second time, to Ed Miles, and had one daughter, Bessie.

Mrs. Laura A. (Houghton) Holly was the eldest daughter of Ornan B. Houghton and Mary (Dutton) Houghton, born in the town of Rutland, Rutland Co., Vt., December 27, 1827, and moved into the town of Troy, Bradford Co., Penn., about 1841 and died of smallpox in the town of Amherst, April 5, 1872. W. C. Holly was married, the second time, in May 5, 1878, at Amherst, Wis., to Eliza L. Clark, daughter of Dr. Thomas M. Clark and Mary Polly Clark. William C. Holly worked at his trade of carpenter and joiner until the year of 1876, when he bought out a furniture dealer's and undertaker's shop, which he conducted until the spring of 1894, doing a good business. He built the first store in Amherst, and, in fact, most of the other stores in the place, as well as most of the other buildings. He was elected town treasurer three times; assessor, one year; supervisor, one year; town clerk, one year; justice of the peace, three terms—in all of which offices he has discharged his duties with a promptness and fidelity that have won him the highest commendation.

When he first came to Amherst he purchased forty acres of land in Section 28, town of Amherst, which he afterward traded for a house and lot in the village of Amherst. He owns some real estate here, including his present fine residence, which he erected in the fall of 1894; it is one of the largest and most modern residences in the town. His pleasant home is the abode of hospitality, and the members of the household rank high in social circles. Mr. and Mrs. Holly have one son, Willie, born September 12, 1882. His parents are prominent members in the Methodist Church. Mrs. Holly is and has been a teacher in the Sunday-school, while Mr. Holly had been superintendent years ago in the Sunday-school and class-leader of the M. E. Church. He is a strong advocate of temperance, and is a charter member of the Temple of Honor. Among the defenders of the Union during the late war is numbered Mr. Holly, who enlisted at Amherst in Company B, Forty-sixth Infantry, which company went to Madison, Wis., where he was detailed to work in the hospital as carpenter until he was mustered out at the close of the war in June, 1865. When the political parties were Whig and Democrat, he was a Democrat; but since the organization of the Republican party he has been a strong Republican.

Eliza L. Clark Holly was born February 18, 1849, in city of Milwaukee, Wis., daughter of Dr. Thomas M. and Mary Polly (Ruttenbur) Clark. The latter's father was Timothy Ruttenbur, her mother being Abbygille Jones Ruttenbur, and her father's father, Jinkins Jones, was Mrs. Holly's great-grandfather. He belonged to the Presbyterian Church, and lived until he was 109 years old. When he was 104 years old he cut his third set of teeth, which were double all the way round, and very even; he was a hale, hardy man, and really enjoyed his fine new teeth; he used to show to his grandchildren, including Mrs. Holly's mother, how he could bite a thick crust or a chicken bone. In those days they had fireplaces, and did their baking in a brick oven. Some times they used a bake kettle, which they would set before the fire-place on the stone hearth. Generally in winter weather they would get a big log for the fireplace to lay on the back of the fire, and they called it a back log; so, in order to get it where they wanted it, they would hitch on to one end a yoke of oxen and snake it up before the door, then unhitch it, go around on the opposite side of the house to a door, take a log chain of good length, run it through the house, hitch on the end of the log at one side of the house while the oxen was on the other side hitched to the chain, drag it into the room, then unfasten the log, take hand-spikes and hoist it oneside, first one end and then the other until they got it resting at the back of their fire-place; then they would put on a "fore log" as they called it, and then put on other small pieces and bits of wood to make a fire; then they had one that lasted for a long time, and a good one to the back log especially; and that was the beauty of having one so big. Mrs. Holly's great-grandfather Jinkins Jones, was a very active man, always at work at something. He said he did not believe in eating the bread of idleness, and he never did. He became very wealthy before he died at the ripe old age of 109; he was called by every one "Uncle Jinks," and was beloved by all who knew him, as was his family. Timothy Ruttenbur, his son-in-law, Mrs. Holly's own grandfather, and grandmother Ruttenbur, had a large family of children. They all belonged to the Close-union Baptist Church. They owned a very large farm and house, a big orchard and a big sugar bush, and a fine dairy of cows—some fifty or sixty head. They made lots of cheese for the factories, as well as butter. Their children were as follows: those living are Elson, William, Eliza Sally, Mary, Polly, the last named being Mrs. Holly's mother. She was born September 12, 1816, in Walworth, New York.

Mrs. Holly's father's father was named Joseph Clark, and her grandmother was Jimima Meed Clark (his wife); she was married at the age of fourteen years; both joined the Free-Will Baptist Church. They started a home in a new county with a log house and lots of trees all around, and plenty of wild animals and wolves and wild cats howling at night: but they had brave hearts and willing hands, and they piled brush and logs to burn at night to frighten them off; however, they got very bold at last and would often come prowling around; sometimes they would carry off the chickens and young pigs, but Grandfather Clark was a very hard-working man, as well as his wife, so in all of their early struggles and hardships and troubles of life things began to shape for the better. A few more of their young associates settled in and around them, and still more until they had as fine a neighborhood as any one for miles around. Time passed on and their first two little ones died in infancy; then others came to bless their once lonely home until there were ten children living, their names being as follows: Sons—Devenport, Eurastus, William, Hiram and Thomas M. (Mrs. Holly's father); daughters—Rachel, Elizabeth, Lyddie, Sarah and Sobrina. Mrs. Holly's grandfather and grandmother were steadfast Christians all through life. They were very wealthy in the latter part of their life. They rejoiced greatly when their first church was erected; there was a general turn-out on Sundays after that to go to church, which was a long way off for some; but they started earlier with a lumber wagon and ox-team, carrying their dinners. Mrs. Holly says: "Those were happy days. I have heard them say to me once again to hear the Gospel preached from the blessed book that they had used until it was threadbare. They lived as they had started to serve God from the first, and they died happy in Jesus' love."

Dr. Thomas M. Clark, their youngest son, was born October 29, 1811, in Hartwick, N. Y. At the age of fourteen he was taken sick, and all the doctors far and near pronounced his case incurable. He still lingered, until one day an old Indian practitioner of roots and herbs came along. He, hearing they had a sick child, wanted to see him, saying he could help him if he would take his medicine. The boy was very low and could not raise his hand to his head, and they thought he would die anyway, so they let this Indian doctor try, as they thought there could be no harm to try, for there is always hope where there is life. For a few days there was no change, but after a little time he commenced to eat, and said he was hungry. They did think it meant death sure, and told the Indian doctor that, but he said: "Oh! no; that is a good sign I have been wanting to see. Feed him chicken broth a little at a time. Don't, don't fear; I shall save him yet." So, day after day, the boy began to get stronger and stronger, so that after a time he could be bolstered up in bed. After more time had come and gone he could be dressed and placed in an easy chair, and could walk a little. So he kept on gaining until well and able to work; but nothing would suit the old doctor until he promised to study under him and learn all the Indian "inshoments," as he called it, and go on in his footsteps, doing good all over the world, traveling from post to pillar. "Live and let live" was his motto. "If they were not able to pay, don't take pay; and if they were, don't overdo it, but take a fair price." So the boy's parents were truly grateful to the old doctor for all he had done; they paid him more than he was willing to take, and gave their consent if it suited the boy, as it certainly did. Accordingly, he stayed a few years with the old Indian doctor, coming to see his parents on occasional visits, until at last he had learned his practice and was able to start out on his life work. He also learned to play the fife well, and afterward was fife-major. He became acquainted with and married Polly Mary Ruttenbur January 21, 1836, in Rome, Ashtabula Co., Ohio. So they started out in life to travel and doctor up the sick and the afflicted, journeying from place to place and from one State to another, doing good. They accomplished wonders with roots and herbs and extracts, Mrs. Holly being a helpmeet indeed in caring for the sick and helpless. They effected some wonderful cures in cases of cancers and fits and all other diseases. Many a home was made happy by their wonderful cures, and people who have been cured are alive and well to-day to testify for themselves of Dr. Thomas M. Clark's wonderful medicine of roots and herbs. Dr. and Mrs. Holly came West in the year of 1848, locating for a time in Milwaukee, but returning again to New York State, then into Ohio, onward again to Wisconsin, where they located in Plymouth, Sheboygan, Manitowoc; then to Lamartine and Byron and Oakfield; then to Waupun, from there going to Chillicothe, Mo., and so on to Trenton, same State, where they bought a beautiful home on Main street in 1864. The Doctor's practice increased far and near, and he traveled on horseback night and day for a great deal of the time. There was great sickness all around them, besides fever and ague, and he cured them far and near for miles around, winning the best respects and a good name from all who knew him as a doctor. But the climate did not agree with his poor wife, so he sold out, came back to Wisconsin and located for a time in Waupun, afterward removing to Stevens Point, thence to Plover, after a time to Grand Rapids, this State. On April 30, 1874, they located in Amherst and bought a place. On May 15, 1877, his wife died of consumption, a true Christian woman.

To that worthy couple seven children were born, two of whom died in infancy; those living being Orrilla T., born August 12, 1838, in Rome, Ohio (she is the wife of Henry Menkee, of Sanborn, Barnes Co., N. Dak., and they have six children, two boys and four girls—all farmers); Emily S., born June 7, 1843, in the town of Nelson, Portage Co., Ohio (she is the wife of Americus Jackson, formerly of Manitowoc, now of Plover, Wis.; they had eight children, three girls and five boys; he was a soldier in the Civil war, serving his time faithfully, and after receiving his discharge came home and died in the Insane Asylum); Polly F., born July 20, 1845, at Richmond, Ohio (she is the wife of George J. Smith, of Arnott, Wis., and they have one child, a boy; they are farmers and potato raisers); Eliza L., born February 18, 1849, at the city of Milwaukee, Wis. (she is the wife of William C. Holly, of Amherst, Wis., furniture dealer and undertaker; they have one child, Willie Clark Holly, born September 12, 1882, at Amherst, Portage Co., Wis.); Murrilla M., born June 5, 1858, in the town of Meeme, Manitowoc Co., Wis. (she is the wife of Robert S. Myhill, of Wilton, Ark., who operates a sawmill and carriage and wagon and blacksmith shop; also carries on a cotton farm or plantation. Dr. Thomas M. Clark married, for his second wife, Mrs. Nancy Durfee, of Stockton, Wis. They had no children. He died August 22, 1893, aged eighty-two, at Arnott, Portage Co., Wis. "Asleep in Jesus.")

THOMAS D. KELLOGG, a pioneer of the old school in Wisconsin, and a highly respected citizen of Antigo, Langlade county, is a native of Canada, born February 17, 1833, near St. Catharines, in what is now the Province of Ontario, a son of Hudson and Jane (Davis) Kellogg.

The father of our subject was born in Tolland county, Conn., in July, 1800, a son of Thomas Kellogg, who was of the same nativity, born of English ancestry, was a farmer and manufacturer of cloth, building the first woolen-mill in his part of the State of Connecticut; and from his comparatively small beginning in that line grew the now extensive manufacturing town of Rockville, Tolland county, in that State. The father of Thomas was a pioneer Congregational minister of some fifty years' standing, and died in 1816 at an advanced age, the father of a numerous family, most of whom were farmers. Thomas Kellogg married Mary Wright Hubbard, a native of Connecticut, by whom there was a family of five children: Aaron, Henry, Hudson and Hubbard (twins) and Hannah. The father of these died in 1840; the mother in 1875, at the advanced age of ninety-six years.

Hudson Kellogg, when a young man, moved to Canada, where he taught school, in 1835 returned to Connecticut, and for two years superintended his father's woolen-mills. In 1837 he came to Toledo, Ohio, with his family, where he embarked in the lumber business, buying chiefly in Canada, and, opening a lumber yard, remained there some seven years, then giving up some valuable property, and returning to Connecticut, on account of so much sickness in his family, no less than six of his children having died during their seven-years' residence in Toledo. In 1847 he took up his residence in Dunnville, Haldimand county, in what is now the Province of Ontario, Canada, and engaged in mercantile business until 1862, the year of his coming to Appleton, Wis. Near there, in company with his son, Thomas D., he bought a sawmill and engaged in lumbering, particulars of the joint interests being given farther on. In Canada he was married to Jane Davis, who was born in that country in 1805, and twelve children were the result of this union, those now living being: Mary H., now Mrs. A. C. Roberts, of Camden, N. J.; Sarah C., widow of J. R. Brown, and now residing in Buffalo, N. Y.; Thomas D.; Hudson H., a wool merchant in Chicago; Aaron H., a lawyer of Appleton, Wis.; some of the family died in infancy, Hudson when six years old, Helen when nine. The father of these passed from earth in Antigo, Wis., in 1885. In his political preferences he was originally a Whig, in later years a Republican; socially, he was a member of the I. O. O. F., and in religious faith he was a member of the Congregational Church. His wife, Jane (Davis), was a daughter of Thaddeus Davis, a Connecticut Yankee, who moved into Canada in an early day and there married a Scotch-Irish lady, by whom he had seven children, named respectively: Hezekiah, Clark, Thaddeus, James, Hiram, Phebe and Jane. The father was a patriot soldier in the war of 1812, serving at Lundy's Lane and Chippewa, was an active business man and was by vocation a contractor, owning sawmills.

Thomas D. Kellogg, whose name introduces this sketch, attended school up to the age of ten years, when he commenced working in his father's lumber yard at Toledo, and when seventeen years old he went to Connecticut, where he took a two-years' academic course, his father giving him his time, but had to abandon study on account of poor health. During the winter of 1855-56 he came west to Chicago, from there proceeding to Rockton, Ill., where he worked on a farm one year, then leased a farm which he conducted some five years, having in the meantime married. In the winter of 1859 he came alone to Appleton, Wis., making the journey with a team, and during the remainder of that winter he worked in the woods, his family joining him the following spring. Buying a one-half interest in the Outagamie mills, he lived there five years, at the end of which time he closed out his interest there, and, in 1865, in company with his father, purchased a sawmill at Stephenville, near Appleton, which they operated some twelve years; fire then destroyed their entire plant, whereby they lost everything. Thomas D. Kellogg then went to Wolf river, about sixty miles north of Shawano, and there rented a portable sawmill, which he operated two years, when he began logging, running the logs down the Wolf river to Oshkosh. In this enterprise he was very successful financially, and continued the business for some three years. After our subject had been on the Wolf river some eight years, his parents came to live with him, and with him moved to Antigo, his father dying there in May, 1889, his mother in July, 1888.

In the spring of 1883 Mr. Kellogg came to Antigo, and during his first winter here purchased a quantity of pine timber and went into the lumber business, having Freeport, Ill., for his market. In October, 1885, he purchased a small mill on which he put repairs to the value of $1000, but the fire fiend still pursued him, and in January of the same year it also burned down. He was, however, not a man to yield without a struggle, and in a short time had rebuilt the sawmill and also erected a planing-mill, and from these has grown his present extensive plant, which includes a hub and hoop factory, and in which he employs about eighty men. It is the largest manufactory in the city, and is doing an excellent business.

In December, 1857, Mr. Kellogg was united in marriage with Harriet Buffam, who was born near Buffalo, N. Y., in 1833, and five children came to them, as follows: Mary H., now Mrs. W. S. Morgan, of Antigo, Wis.; Miranda W., wife of A. C. Taylor, also of Antigo; Horace B., connected with his father in business; Joseph H. (deceased), and Hattie J. Mrs. Kellogg comes of French ancestry; her parents, who were farmers, and had a family of five sons and four daughters, died when she was young.

Mr. Kellogg has been a heavy dealer in pine lands, and is to-day owner of a large tract of hardwood land in Langlade and adjoining counties, besides a fine improved farm on the Wolf river, forty acres of which were cleared by his own hands inside of three years. This property is situated some sixty miles north of Shawano, that town or village being his trading point while he lived there, and thither he often walked—fifty times at least—to save time, traveling all night, on such journeys oftentimes encountering severe storms. In fact, it can be truly said of him that he is a pioneer of northern Wisconsin in the purest sense of the word, and while living on the Wolf river he often traveled, in the capacity of justice of the peace, twenty-five miles in order to settle or try cases between his neighbors, on one occasion tramping twenty miles to marry a couple; he attended the first burials and the first marriages, also organized the first Sabbath-school. Politically he is a Republican, and has held several offices of trust. He has been a member of the school board many years, six in the capacity of president, and served four years in the city council. In religious faith he is a member of and deacon in the Congregational Church at Antigo, which Church was in its infancy when he came here, and it may be said that he has been its main support ever since, having been largely instrumental in the erecting of the present fine building, giving liberally of both his time and money toward it. To the deserving poor and needy, also, he is charitable and considerate, ever ready to incline a sympathetic ear to the entreaties of those in distress. He is a strong temperance man, though not radical on the subject, any more than was the great advocate of temperance, St. Paul, who recommended abstemiousness in everything.

Mr. Kellogg is a self-made man in the literal acceptance of the term, having, as recorded above, commenced fighting the battle of life at a very early age, and is the architect of his own fortunes, rung by rung ascending the ladder of success. When he was eighteen years old his father gave him his time, as already stated, and, when the parents came into "the sere and yellow leaf," the son provided them with a home during the last twelve years of their lives.

It may be interesting to many of the readers of this volume to give, in connection with what has been here written concerning Mr. Kellogg, the main facts in a most interesting sketch of a branch of this pioneer family of Kelloggs, written by the Rev. Martin H. Kellogg, who is the second cousin of our subject, and whose father, also named Martin, was a prominent actor in the tragedy related. It was at the time of the historic massacre of the settlers at Deerfield, Mass., by the savages, the traditions of which will be handed down as long as the country shall exist. The original Kellogg family in America settled in Hadley, a town adjoining Deerfield, and where many of that name now reside. Martin Kellogg, with his wife and five children, lived happily in their rude log house, not dreaming of danger, on that eventful night. They were suddenly awakened from a slumber by a band of painted savages who, with uplifted tomahawks and frightful war-whoops, burst in the door and surrounded the terrified inmates. The father was seized and securely pinioned, the four older children bound in spite of their pitiful cries for "mama," and the babe of seven months, awakening and screaming with fright, was dashed upon the floor and its brains scattered over the helpless captives. The mother on the first alarm had instinctively sought refuge in the cellar, and hearing the cries of the children and then the Indians attempting to raise the trap-door, she crouched under a tub, the only hiding-place she could find. Here she awaited her fate, but fortunately, the Indians after searching the cellar used the upturned tub as a table on which to place the food they found, and over the trembling woman ate and cursed and howled until she almost died from fright. Finally they took their departure, and with them carried the father and the children. When the mother came to her senses she was lying among the ashes of her home, in the burning of which she had been miraculously preserved. It was many years, however, before she learned the fate of her captives.

The father and children were soon separated, as the Indians after their depredations divided into several bands. After years of suffering and hardships, during which he had mastered the Indian language and become valuable to his captors through his superior intelligence, he effected his escape, and reaching Deerfield was once more united to his loving wife. The oldest son, Martin, twice essayed an escape, only to be retaken and suffer for his attempts. The savages finally decided to burn him, and set him to work to chop the wood which should make the funeral pile; but a friendly squaw warned him in time, and he once more, in the dead of night, started for his distant home. After a weary night's tramp he crawled into a hollow log to rest during the day, as he knew the Indians would be on the scent. Here he fell asleep. When he awoke the sun was shining brightly, and to his horror he found that a rattlesnake had also taken up its abode in his narrow quarters, and was slumbering peacefully beside him. At the same time he heard near by the steps and voices of the savages who were in hot pursuit. He hardly knew which of the two evils to choose, the bite of the serpent or the tortures of the Indians, but finally decided in favor of the snake. The pursuers at last passed by and the snake slumbered peacefully on, and he was saved. For nine days he continued his perilous journey, and at last, half starved and more dead than alive, reached the home of his childhood, to be received as one returned from the grave. The son afterward married and lived to a good old age. He never wearied of repeating to his grandchildren and friends the story of his captivity and suffering, and his wonderful deliverance from the Indians and the rattlesnake.

Of the other brother nothing was ever heard, and his fate can only be conjectured. The eldest daughter, Jemima, was six years old when she was captured, and was ransomed by the whites many years afterward. She had grown to womanhood, and was entirely ignorant of her native language, dress or anything pertaining to civilization, and it was a long time before her habits and feelings could be changed. She tried to escape and return to her savage life, but by kindness and perseverance on the part of her friends became reconciled to her new mode of living, and eventually became a Christian and a valuable member of society. The other sister, Joanna, who was only four years old when taken from her home, was afterward found by her relatives, but was so identified with the Indian life that no inducements could prevail on her to give it up. She was a great favorite with the tribe, over which she had much influence, and married a sachem, becoming the mother of many children. She at one time, accompanied by two fine stalwart braves, her sons, visited her relatives, but in a short time returned to her free, wild life in the woods. This story is one which sounds almost like a fairy tale to us, but the facts are well known and authenticated by history.

Another member of this old family, well worthy of mention, is Mary Hubbard Kellogg, a daughter of Aaron and Dorothy (Hollister) Hubbard, of Glastonbury, Conn., and the grandmother of T. D. Kellogg, of whom this history is written. She married Thomas Wright Kellogg when she was twenty years old. He died in 1837, she surviving him more than thirty-four years, dying March 13, 1871, aged ninety-six years, five months and twelve days. She was a remarkably active woman up to the time of her death, and a consistent Christian for seventy-five years. Her long widowhood was spent in deeds of goodness, and she left the record of a life useful and happy.

MD. LANE, M.D., of Almond township, Portage county, was born in Hannibal, Oswego county, N. Y., June 6, 1828. To the parents of Dr. Lane, Roswell and Jerusha (Rhoades) Lane, was born a family of nine children, viz.: Alvina, now Mrs. David Shepherd, of Battle Creek, Mich.; Emeline, Mrs. Jonas Shutts, of New York, who died in 1893; Sarah Ann, who was the wife of Brooks Hazleton, of Michigan, and died in 1890, leaving children and grandchildren; M. D., the subject of this sketch; Maria, wife of James Stacy, of New York, who died in 1860; Orlo R., a machinist, living in New York State; Cordelia, deceased wife of James Guppy, of New York; Josephine, now Mrs. Nelson Olin, of Omro, Winnebago Co., Wis.; and Adelbert, a farmer, in New York. The children nearly all remained at home until of adult age. Roswell Lane participated in the war of 1812, and was a farmer of some repute. He died about the year 1868, and his widow, mother of Dr. Lane, in 1872, both in New York State. The parents of Roswell Lane were Ezra and Sarah (Chapman) Lane, the former of whom was in the Revolutionary war. To them were born five sons, Roswell, Dudley, Jackson, John S. and Nelson, and four daughters, Alzina, Laura, Lovina and Theresa.

Dr. M. D. Lane was reared to farm life on the old homestead purchased by his father in New York, and received his primary education in the log schoolhouse, with a slab bench for a seat, the temples of learning being very rude in those days. He attended regularly until ten years old, when he was made to help on the farm. The timber on the land was very hard and heavy, and chopping wood was a wearisome task; this occupation he was obliged to follow for many a day. Most of his education, in fact, he received elsewhere than in the schoolroom. He would go to bed and study by a candle, burning a whole candle each night. These were among the beginnings of a successful physician, and he was always given to books. He went to Michigan in 1849, and on March 20, 1852, in company with his uncle, John S. Lane, and two others, started overland for California with three yoke of cattle, and arrived in Volcano, on the seventeenth of September, 1852, the last 300 miles being made on foot. They were in search of gold, and viewing the country. He remained in California until the spring of 1854, when he returned by water and went to New York.

On August 13, 1854, Dr. M. D. Lane was united in marriage with Isabella Easton, and they became the parents of two children—Isabell and Ella. The parents of Mrs. Lane, Isaac and Abigail C. (Slack) Easton, had other children, as follows: Jane, Isaac, Enos, William and Isabella. In 1858 Dr. Lane came to Waupaca county with his wife and children, and remained one year employed in mason and carpenter work, he being a natural mechanic. In 1859 he came to Lanark township, Portage county, and bought 120 acres of land in Section 16, part timber and part openings. He did some clearing and built a one-story house, 14 x 22 feet, the logs for which were carried on his back. In this he lived until 1862, then returned to New York with his wife, remaining until 1865, when she died and was there buried. In 1865 he returned to Wisconsin, sold his farm, located in Waupaca, Waupaca county, and started out as a traveling physician, continuing in this occupation for about three years. In 1868 he again married, taking to wife Clarissa Stratton, a widow. In 1868 he discontinued traveling and engaged in the hotel business at Auroraville, Waushara county, until 1870, when he bought a piece of land in Warren township, that county, and lived on it until 1878. He next went to Poy Sippi, Waushara county, in December, 1877, at the same time practicing medicine, and remained there until 1886, when he removed to Plainfield, in Waushara county, following his profession until 1890; then came to Almond township, Portage county, where he has since been located and has a lucrative practice. He studied medicine first with Dr. Cyle in New York, then in Cincinnati, Ohio, and completed his medical education in Milwaukee, Wis. His mother was a botanic physician, and from her he inherited the love of his profession.

On January 10, 1895, Dr. Lane was again married, this time to Julia Tracy, daughter of Charles and Maria (Robins) Tracy, Eastern people who came to Oshkosh, Winnebago county, in an early day, where their daughter Julia was born July 10, 1857, and where the parents still live. They had three other children, Effie, Nettie and Charlie. The father, Charles Tracy, is a farmer. Dr. Lane has two children: Isabella, now Mrs. Robert Searles, and Ella, now Mrs. O. W. Thurston, residing in Deerfield, Waushara Co., Wis. Politically Dr. Lane is a Democrat, and has always been so, as were his forefathers for some time past. He is a charter member of the Modern Woodmen in Plainfield, also of the Temple of Honor, of Poy Sippi.

Dr. Lane's paternal great-grandfather's name was Gilbert Lane. Ezra Lane had one brother named Luman, who had two sons, Carlton and Gilbert. The latter died in Oshkosh, Wis., in 1870 or 1872. The Doctor's maternal grandfather, David Rhoads, married Sarah Hitchcox, and six children were born to them, three sons—Solomon, Hiram and Orin—and three daughters—Jerusha, Tamar, and Mrs. John L. Corey, who died of cancer in the face, when Dr. Lane was about six years old.

"Alert," which took ten weeks and three days in crossing the ocean, but at last landed them safely at Quebec. By the lakes and rail they proceeded to Chicago, thence by boat to Milwaukee, where the father landed with $600 in cash. From there the family journeyed by team to Watertown, Wis., where they remained a week; by team they also went to Fond du Lac, Wis., from which point they proceeded by Lake Winnebago to Oshkosh, and on to the town of Winchester, Winnebago county, where they remained at a Norwegian settlement two weeks, during which time the father came to Iola to look up a location. The family later went by ox-team to Winneconne, where they took a steamer up the Wolf river to Gill's Landing, at which place they were met by friends and brought by means of an ox-team to Scandinavia.

Their first home in the United States was in the western part of Iola township, and while there the father made many improvements on the tract of land he had pre-empted in Section 13, and also built a log house, 18 x 18 feet. Not a tree had been cut nor a furrow turned at the time of their arrival, and Indians still visited the neighborhood. The father, later, erected another house on the east part of the farm, where his death occurred when he was sixty-eight years old. His wife had passed away at the age of fifty-three, and they now sleep side by side in the Scandinavia Cemetery. Our subject is the oldest in the family of nine children (three dead and six living), the others being Lief, who was a member of the Thirty-fourth Ill. V. I., and died in Louisville, Ky.; Cornelia, who is married and lives in Mexico; Annie, now Mrs. K. K. Tubas; Tony, who died in Norway; Ole, who died when young, and is buried in the Scandinavia Cemetery; Ole a resident of Dakota; Ambrose, a farmer of Iola township; and Jonas who lives in the West.

All the literary education our subject received was obtained in the schools of his native land, as at the time of his coming to Waupaca county no schools had yet been established in the neighborhood of his new home. At the age of seventeen he left the parental roof and began work in a sawmill

GREGOR GREGORSON, one of the oldest settlers of Iola township, Waupaca county, was born in Norway, August 30, 1840, and is a son of G. Gregorson, a farmer and lumberman of that country, who had one time owned considerable land there, but became involved. With his wife and five children, the father left Skien, Norway, on the sailing vessel at Wausau, Wis., and gave all his wages to his parents until he had reached the age of twenty-four. For nine years he was employed in the lumber woods near that place, and made nine trips down the Wisconsin and Mississippi rivers to Dubuque, Iowa, St. Louis, Mo., and also intermediate points. In Iola, at the age of twenty-six, Mr. Gregorson was united in marriage with Tone Johnson, who left Norway for America in 1861; she was born near the birthplace of her husband, and they were acquaintances and schoolmates in their native land. The young couple located on forty acres of land in Iola township, which he had secured from his father in payment of a claim that stood on the latter's land. Eleven children were born of this union, as follows: Gusta Johanna (now Mrs. Ole Tubaas), living in the town of Harrison; Jonas Martin, Gustav Snavik, Matilde Emalia, Julius Theodor and George O. (twins, the latter of whom died when ten years old), Adolf Sjuman, Edda Lovise, Anna Otelia, Theodora Gunilda and George Olaves.

Of the farm of 300 acres owned by Mr. Gregorson, 125 are now cleared and highly cultivated, and besides his comfortable home he has erected neat and substantial outbuildings. The numerous winters in the lumber woods and their hardships seem to have made but little impression on his constitution, as he is still a very rugged man, able to do a hard-day's work. He is widely known throughout the community, and is numbered among the successful farmers and leading citizens of his township. His support is always given to the Republican party; he has served as juror, was supervisor five years, and has held various offices in School District No. 2. He and his family are members of Hitterdall Lutheran Church, in which he has held several offices, taking an active interest in its work.

REV. ODORIC IGNAZ DERENTHAL, O. S. F., priest among the Indians in Shawano county, was born in Roesbeck, Prussia, Germany, July 14, 1856, a son of Theodore and Mary (Wieners) Derenthal.

Theodore Derenthal was a farmer, and is a successful man. He now has 140 acres of land, and both he and his wife live on the home farm, which is worked by their son Bernard. They reared a family of children, most of whom died in infancy, and four are still living, as follows: Odoric, subject of this sketch; Bernhard, in Germany; Paulina, Mrs. Gustaf Scheidt; and Augusta, at home with her parents and brother. Odoric Derenthal was reared at home until twelve years of age, when he began his studies for the priesthood. He attended for three years the High School at Ruethen, taught by the able Rev. Rector L. Becker; for two years at Warburg, and then in 1873, joined the order of Franciscans at Warendorf, Westphalia, where he passed the novitiate; then studied in Europe until 1875, when he came to America, landing in New York June 30, 1875. Coming to Teutopolis, Ill., he studied there one year, and then went to Quincy, Ill., where he took philosophy, remaining two years. Completing his studies there, he took up theology in St. Louis, where he remained three years, and was ordained priest in that city May 16, 1880.

Rev. Odoric Derenthal's first congregation was in Superior, Wis., where he had 125 families. He was engaged chiefly in the Chippewa Indian mission, and was there four years, with another confrère. As a missionary priest he would start out with a guide to his different missions, in a territory some two hundred miles in circuit, lodging in a wigwam, in which the services were held, and remaining in one place about three days would go on to another, and so on, having a repetition of these services in about twenty different places, all from fifteen to twenty-five miles apart. The Indians were at that time in an uncivilized condition. He first gained their conversion, then baptized them, and so performed his missionary duties until he was sent, in 1885, to Keshena, where he has since been. He founded an Indian boarding school of about one hundred Indian pupils, which he has increased to 170 at the present time, while his congregation numbers one hundred families. He has one assistant priest, Rev. Blase Krake, who tends to two other Indian congregations—

Kenepowa and Little Oconto. Together with Rev. B. Krake, five Brothers of the Order of St. Francis, six Sisters of St. Joseph, one lay-teacher and several other employes, he is conducting an excellent Indian school, which has been built up through the efforts of Father Derenthal and his assistant, and received a medal and several diplomas at the Columbian Exposition in 1893. This institution, called St. Joseph's Indian Industrial School, teaches all the pupils, male and female, from six to twenty-three years of age, in the ordinary branches of an English education, and also in different industries and trades, such as farming, gardening, carpentering, shoemaking; cookery, laundering, needlework, dairywork, etc. The Church has been organized since 1892.

At the time of Father Derenthal's coming here there had been great destruction by fire, February 22, 1884, and he had the loss replaced at an expense of $30,000; they had another fire, in 1891, which caused a loss of about $20,000, which had again to be restored. They now have a school which cost $50,000, and is well-equipped. The government pays a part of the expense of $108 per capita; the contract for the present fiscal year is for 105 pupils, and the rest of the expenses has to be supplied by charity. The missionary priest receives no consideration for his services, even his garb being a present from his benefactors. The six Sisters employed as teachers receive $800 altogether. Rev. Father Derenthal has another mission, the Stockbridge mission, seven miles from here, and they have a church there which cost $2,200, built in 1894, and dedicated November 22, same year.

DOCTOR J. J. HANGARTNER, who is numbered among the early settlers of Waupaca county, is a native of the land of the Alps, having been born in the Canton of St. Gallen, Switzerland, May 10, 1850, a son of Conrad and Ursella (Engler) Hangartner.

The father of our subject, who was a farmer and confectioner in his native land, emigrated with his family to America in 1854, landing in New York. He went direct to Ashford, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., where he purchased eighty acres of land, and near by, his father, Ulrich Hangartner, who had accompanied him on the emigration, also bought eighty acres, which on his death came into possession of his son (Conrad Hangartner). Ulrich Hangartner spent his last days with his son Conrad, and died at the very advanced age of ninety-six years. The land on which they settled was in its primitive condition, but the work of improvement and cultivation was at once begun and carried on until the farm was one of the best in the neighborhood.

In 1858 the mother died, and in 1860 the father wedded Mary Prush, by whom he had nine children: Charles, Louisa, William, Lydia, Albert, Conrad, and Albert, Edward and Malinda, deceased. The children were reared upon the old homestead, and there Dr. Hangartner obtained his first knowledge of farming under the direction of his father. His educational privileges were quite meagre, for his services were needed at home, and from the age of twelve years he did almost a man's work upon the farm, giving his father the benefit of his services until twenty-six years of age, when he started out in life for himself, and has devoted his energies to various pursuits. On December 9, 1875, Dr. Hangartner was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth, daughter of John and Dorothy (Meilke) Piehl, people of German birth who came to America in 1857, locating in Fond du Lac county, Wis., where the father purchased land and opened up a farm, which he made his home until called to the home beyond, in 1875; his widow has since lived with her children. Their family numbered eighteen children: Frederick, Charlotte, William and Gottlieb, living; Augusta (deceased); Dorothy, Elizabeth and John, living; John, Minnie, Caroline and Emma, deceased; two who died in infancy; Julius, August and Anna, deceased; and the youngest, who died in infancy.

In 1876 the Doctor came to Waupaca county and purchased of the Fox River Company 119 94-100 acres of wild land, on which not a furrow had been turned or an improvement made, but with characteristic energy he began the arduous task of its development. During the second year of his residence in Dupont there was no dentist nearer than Clintonville, and on one occasion, suffering greatly from toothache, he left home at one o'clock in the morning, walked to Clintonville, had a tooth extracted and returned home in time to begin the daily work on the farm in the morning, having walked twenty-four miles in all. For two years he had no team of his own, so he was obliged to give four days' labor as hire for an ox-team, with two men to use it, for one day. Flour had to be bought at New London, the price being sometimes as high as fifteen dollars per barrel, with the additional cost of hauling it to the farm—the four-days' labor which was given for the use of a team to bring four barrels of flour home. His farm implements were crude, but he worked early and late, his noble wife working with him and assisting materially in the process of clearing the land, of which one hundred acres are now under a high state of cultivation and improved with all the accessories and conveniences of a model farm. He also has a fine apiary of eighty-seven hives, and this branch of his business has proved a profitable one. Our subject is also a magnetic doctor, and has acquired a reputation throughout the neighborhood for successful treatment, having treated many people from distant places: Oshkosh, Kaukauna and Milwaukee (Wis.); Chicago, (Ill.); Waterloo and Jefferson (Wis.); and many other places too numerous to here mention.

To Dr. and Mrs. Hangartner have come five children: Margaret, William, Emily and Augusta living, and Lizzie, who died in her fourth year. In his political views the Doctor is a stalwart Republican, doing all in his power to promote the growth and insure the success of his party. The confidence and trust reposed in him by his fellow citizens are manifested by the fact that for nine terms he has been chosen a member of the town board of supervisors, and one term was appointed to fill a vacancy as chairman; was elected to that office for one term, but refused to qualify as chairman, as he considered his healing of the sick, and good attention to farming of more value. The doctor was a lover of bear hunting, of which animals he killed several during the time he lived on the farm which he now occupies.

AMOS D. MUNGER (deceased) is one, the memory of whom is revered in Waupaca county. Pioneer, educator and martyr, he was a factor in the county scarcely more than a decade, yet in that brief period he made a lasting impression for good.

The Munger family gave many of its sons to the cause of religion. Dexter Munger, the father of Amos D., was a Baptist minister, whose pastorate for many years was at Attica, N. Y. He died at Linden, N. Y., his family consisting of six children—three sons and three daughters: Amos D., who yielded up his life in his country's cause upon a Southern battlefield; Enos, a Baptist minister, who preached and died at Lakeland, Minn; and Orrin, a Baptist minister, who died at Angelica, N. Y.; Esther, afterward Mrs. Secrest, who died in Minnesota; Julia, who died in her young womanhood at Munson, Mass., and Mary, now Mrs. Rundell, of Erie county, New York.

Amos D. Munger was born January 19, 1822, in Hartford county, Conn. As the son of a clergyman, he obtained an education somewhat better than falls to the ordinary lot of men, in the schools of Attica, N. Y., whither his parents removed when Amos was quite young, and in his youth he taught school. Friends of the family had migrated to Wisconsin, and in 1850 Amos D. also resolved to seek a home in the West. Coming to Racine, Wis., in the autumn of that year, he taught school in that thriving village during the winter of 1850-51. Becoming interested in Dayton township, Waupaca county, through a friend, Mr. Thompson, whose son had settled in that locality early in the spring of 1851, he came to that township, where he pre-empted 160 acres of wild land (at which time land had not come into the market) in Section 6, that township, and made improvements thereon, such as breaking several acres, building a small house and barn, &c. Late in the autumn of that year (1851) he returned to Racine and taught school that winter, and early in the spring of the following year he came home to Dayton, bringing with him a team and wagon, farm implements, flour, groceries, household goods, &c. After putting in the spring crops he made a trip to the East, and at Boston, Mass., was married June 13, 1852, to Miss Diantha Lilley, who was born in the township of Pulaski, Oswego Co., N. Y., September 17, 1822, daughter of Phineas and Amy (Samson) Lilley. Phineas, the son of Abner Lilley, who had emigrated to Connecticut from England, was born in Tolland, Hartford Co., Conn., in 1787; he was a farmer by occupation, and lived in Oswego county, N. Y., to the age of ninety years. His wife, Amy Samson, was born in Cheshire, Mass., in 1791, and died at Pulaski, N. Y., at the age of sixty years. Of their ten children, Diantha, now Mrs. Munger, is the sole survivor.

Diantha Lilley was well educated, and had taught school near the home of her parents in central New York, but for several years prior to her marriage she had been living with a sister at Cambridge, Mass. Soon after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Munger started for their western home, via the lakes to Sheboygan, and thence by team via Fond du Lac and Berlin, Mrs. Munger bringing with her many supplies, which, as her foresight afterward demonstrated, proved invaluable in the new land. Although the contrast from eastern plenty to western want was about as marked as it could well be during the early years of her married life, Mrs. Munger, as she expressed it "never felt lonesome until he was taken away." Mr. Munger followed farming until the summer of 1862, when, as the war clouds grew darker and darker, he could no longer resist the patriotic call of duty, and bidding wife and child adieu he shouldered musket and marched to the scene of strife, enlisting in Company G, Twenty-first Wis. V. I. Scarcely two months later, October 8, 1862, he fell at Perryville, Ky., and was buried on the field of battle. The bereaved widow for five years remained on the farm with her only child, Phineas L., a boy of three years at the time of his father's death. Then, in 1867, she sold the farm and removed to Waupaca to educate her son, where, except for a short time, she has since remained, building a comfortable home on Division street. For twenty-four years she has been a member of the First Baptist Church. Although now nearly seventy-three years of age, Mrs. Munger is a bright and intelligent lady of decided literary tastes and artistic talent. She still paints with all the enthusiasm and facility of an artist who is young in years, and her cozy home in Waupaca is adorned with many products of her brush. She is also earnestly devoted to the cause of education and her Church work. For the past eight years she has officiated as church clerk in the First Baptist Church of Waupaca, and during the past four years has been president of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Circle.

HANS P. KANKRUD. Prominent among the early settlers of New Hope township, Portage county, as well as ranking high with the prosperous and thoroughgoing agriculturists of later years, is the subject of this personal narrative. His birth occurred in Ringebu, Norway, May 26, 1806, and he is a son of Peter and Rennog Hansen. The father was a farmer of Norway, where his death occurred. The mother married a second time, and later removed to Gaustal, Norway, where she passed away, but some of her descendants still make that place their home. A sister of our subject came to America, and for a time resided in Vernon county, Wisconsin.

After leaving the common schools where his education was received, Mr. Kankrud became collector for a constable, which position he filled some seven years, and then returned to his native place, where he rented a farm for two years. At the end of that time he went to Gaustal, where he purchased land, which he operated about seven years. During his last year as collector he had married Ingeborg Johannes Datter, who was born December 6, 1812. In May, 1849, accompanied by his wife, Mr. Kankrud embarked on the "Presiosa," Capt. Jacob Jacobson, which sailed from the port of Drammen, Norway, and after a voyage of seven weeks and two days landed them at New York. From that city they went to Albany, thence to Buffalo, and by the lakes to Milwaukee, Wis., where they arrived August 10, 1849. There they hired a man with a team to convey them to Ixonia, Jefferson Co., Wis., and the first night after reaching Milwaukee they slept in the open air on the wharf where they landed. At Ixonia our subject purchased forty acres of land, on which stood a small log cabin, in which they lived until coming to Portage county.

In 1855 Mr. Kankrud purchased eighty acres of wild land in New Hope township, Portage county, after which he returned to Ixonia, disposing of his property there for $800, and in June, 1856, removed to his new farm, where his loving wife has since died. On his land he erected a dwelling, which forms part of the present home of the family. Mr. Kankrud has ever been an industrious hard-working man, noted for his philanthropic ideas, and his public-spiritedness and liberality as a citizen are almost proverbial in his neighborhood. With him now resides his adopted son, Johannes J.

JOHANNES J. KANKRUD was born in Norway, at Gaustal, May 8, 1842, and is the son of Iver J. and Helena (Peters Datter) Holsmarken, the former born May 13, 1821, and the latter March 1, 1821. His paternal grandfather, Johannes S. Holsmarken, when a young man was a soldier in the Norwegian army, participating in the war between Norway and Sweden, in 1812, and in later life rented a farm, where he carried on agricultural pursuits. The father received a fair education in his native tongue, and learned the trade of a shoemaker, which he followed at different times throughout life. With his family he came to America with Hans P. Kankrud, and after reaching Ixonia, procured work at his trade. His death occurred there October 1, 1855, and his wife, who had preceded him to the world beyond, also died there November 14, 1850. They were the parents of four children, the three sisters of Johannes being Bertha, born in Norway, May 19, 1844; Paulina, born in Norway, September 6, 1846; and Martha, born in Wisconsin, October 5, 1849.

In the district schools of Ixonia and New Hope townships, Johannes J. Kankrud acquired his education, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. Since his parents' death he has ever found a pleasant home with Mr. Kankrud. He now owns 500 acres of good land, on which he has made many improvements since it first came into his possession, and for about twelve seasons he has also operated a threshing machine in connection with the work upon his own place. In New Hope, October 3, 1870, Mr. Kankrud was married by Rev. Mickle to Miss Bertha Peterson, also born in Gaustal, Norway, a daughter of Peter and Olelia (Torgerson) Elveson, who were the parents of the following children: Bertha (Mrs. Kankrud), born February 19, 1848; Tobias Peterson, a farmer of Barron county, Wis., born April 8, 1851; Sina (deceased), born September 7, 1854; Eliza, born April 4, 1857; Agnette, born October 9, 1859, and Thea, born April 15, 1864. Along with her family Mrs. Kankrud sailed from Christiania, Norway, and after a voyage of seven weeks landed at Quebec, whence she came to the home of an aunt in Iola, Wis., with whom she remained six months, after which she was engaged as a domestic. Her father had died in Norway, and her mother, with her children, after landing in the New World, located in Barron county, Wis., where her death occurred in February, 1887.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kankrud began housekeeping on the old homestead, where the following children came to bless their union, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Ena, November 4, 1871, died in infancy; Peter Ingwold, November 8, 1872, also died in infancy; Halbert Julius, January 4, 1874; Oline, August 19, 1875; Hannah, February 3, 1878; Ida, April 21, 1880; Emma, February 6, 1884; Jennie Benora, May 4, 1889; and Lillie Amanda, November 19, 1891. In his political affiliations Mr. Kankrud entirely coincides with the doctrines and platform of the Republican party, and in the exercise of his elective franchise supports the candidates of that organization. He has been called upon to fill several public positions of honor and trust, being township treasurer two years, justice of the peace ten years, and assessor two years. With the United Norwegian Lutheran Church, of New Hope, he and his wife are identified, being among its most active members, while throughout the community they have many friends, and by all are held in the highest esteem.

MATHEW GORMAN, a well-known leading agriculturist of Lebanon township, Waupaca county, is a native of the Emerald Isle, born in County Kildare, and is the eldest in the family of five children born to Timothy and Catherine (Kelley) Gorman, of whom Mary, Rose and John are all deceased, and Peter, who is married, is a farmer of Lebanon township.

Mr. Gorman received his education in the common schools of Ireland, which he attended between the ages of eight until twelve, and two years later started out in life for himself, since which time he has been entirely dependent on his own resources. After learning gardening he followed that occupation for seven years in his native land. His father, who was a common laborer, died February 24, 1867, and on the 29th of the following July, our subject, accompanied by his mother and brother Peter and sister Rose, sailed from Liverpool on the "Alexander Marshall," which dropped anchor in the harbor of New York, September 21. The family came direct to Lebanon township, Waupaca county, where they lived with Michael Gorman until their own home could be built. Eighty acres of land were purchased on which not a stick of timber had been cut, or an improvement of any kind made. The work of clearing was at once begun, but our subject had to work for others in order to maintain the family. On that place he continued to reside some ten years, during which time he had placed about thirty acres under the plow, and with him his mother continued to live until his marriage, when she went to the home of her son Peter, who now operates the old homestead.

On October 1, 1877, Mr. Gorman was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Laughrin, a daughter of Bernard and Ann (Maloone) Laughrin, prominent and respected people of Lebanon township. To our subject and his wife were born eight children, in the order of birth named as follows: Anna, Elizabeth Rose, Timothy J., John Bernard, Catherine, Bernard, Mathew D. and John S., two of whom are deceased.

Mr. Gorman now operates his fine farm in Lebanon township, on which he has placed all the improvements, and it stands as a monument to his thrift and industry. The buildings are all of a substantial character, the neat appearance of the place denoting the enterprise and progressive spirit of the owner. For fourteen years he has served as clerk of his township, and his vote is always cast in support of the men and measures of the Democratic party. He is one of the trustees of the Catholic Church, of which he is a faithful member, and is a charter member of a branch lodge of the Catholic Knights, No. 155, of Lebanon.

NM. ENGLER, one of the leading merchants of Marion, Waupaca county, has been numbered among that city's representative business men since 1887. He has the honor of being a native of Wisconsin, having been born in Buchanan, Outagamie county, a son of Nicholas and Margaret (Tischhauser) Engler, natives of Switzerland, whence they emigrated to America in 1849, locating first in Fond du Lac county, Wis., where the father opened up a farm of 160 acres. There he made his home until 1853, when he sold out and became owner of a quarter section of land in Outagamie county. It was also wild, but in course of time the once raw tract was transformed into rich and fertile fields. He successfully carried on agricultural pursuits until 1866, when, having acquired a handsome competency, he retired from active business life and removed to Appleton, where he died January 1, 1880;

his widow still makes her home in that city, now (1895) at the age of sixty years. Their children, four in number, are as follows: Christian; now a merchant of St. Paul, Minn.; Margaret, wife of H. G. Saacker, who is interested in the machine business in Appleton, Wis.; N. M., subject of this sketch, and Minnie, who makes her home with her mother.

Under the parental roof our subject spent his childhood, his days being passed between play and work, and attending the common schools of the neighborhood, where he acquired a good English education. In 1887, he left home for Leopolis, where for some time he was employed as bookkeeper with N. M. Edwards and P. J. Hunl, continuing with those gentlemen until 1888, when he removed to New London, Wis. There he clerked in a general store for a time, and after six months came to Marion where he engaged as a salesman with the firm of Page & Kieth, continuing in their employ until 1892, in which year he purchased the store and admitted Charles R. Libby into partnership. The latter is located at New London, Wis., while Mr. Engler is sole manager of the store here. He is a wide-awake and energetic business man, and fair dealing and courteous treatment have brought to him a liberal patronage.

In 1879 he was united in marriage with Miss Flora A. Engel, daughter of John P. and Mary (Harrington) Engel, the former of German and the latter of Irish lineage. They became residents of West Concord, N. H., and the father engaged in business as a dyer. Mr. and Mrs. Engler have many friends in the community and occupy an enviable position in social circles. In his political affiliations he is an unswerving Republican, while, socially, he is connected with Marion Lodge, No. 256, I. O. O. F.

TIMOTHY I. MYNARD. The hardships, the penury and privations of pioneer life, and the success which comes from the sterling qualities that are developed by frontier toil, are exemplified in all their completeness in the modest career of Timothy I. Mynard, of Dayton township, Waupaca county. His early life was a struggle, but the habits that were thereby instilled have proved his material making, and mellowed his after years with just rewards.

Martin T. Mynard, his father, was an industrious carpenter before him. Born in Connecticut November 27, 1807, he, on October 12, 1833, married Harriet C. Ford, a native of the same State, born May 27, 1814. They settled at Virgil, Cortland Co., N. Y., and here their family of five children were born: William H. S., born July 28, 1838, and died November 28, 1842; Timothy I., born October 21, 1840; Cordelia S., born December 3, 1842, now Mrs. C. L. Green, of Farmington township; Martha M., born October 6, 1845, now Mrs. Winchester Strattan, of Dayton township; and Effie G., born January 19, 1849, now Mrs. Alvin Robbins, of Dayton township. A brother-in-law of Martin T. Mynard, Timothy Lewis by name, had settled in Dayton township, and, with a view to improving his circumstances, the carpenter resolved to follow him to the wild country. It was in the fall of 1855 that the trip was made, by rail to Milwaukee, thence by teams to Fond du Lac, thence by boat to Gill's Landing, and on through the woods to Dayton township. Here, in Section 17, Mr. Mynard bought forty acres of wild land, built a little house, 12 x 16 feet, and 12 feet high, hauling the lumber from Weyauwega, in which primitive little home the family of six lived, much of the burden falling upon Timothy I., the only son, then fifteen years of age. The market-place was Berlin, or, at times, Weyauwega. Game was abundant, and easily secured; the land was oak openings, and the first crop, winter wheat, on two acres of broken land, yielded twenty-four bushels per acre. On this farm Martin Mynard, after a lingering illness, died January 29, 1877; his wife survived until April 10, 1882, and both lie buried at Crystal Lake. Mr. Mynard was an earnest Republican, and was once elected justice of the peace, but never qualified.

After the removal to Wisconsin, Timothy I. Mynard had little time to attend school, and after a day's work he often had to chop wood by moonlight. As he grew older he occasionally worked for neighboring farmers, passing the winters in the woods. He was an expert chopper, and commanded the best wages, for he could always fell a tree just where he wanted it. At the age of twenty-nine years, December 30, 1869, he was united in marriage with Miss Sylvia E. Kelsey, after which he continued to live with his parents till the age of thirty-three, when he commenced for himself with little or no capital, for his earnings had gone largely toward the support of his parents and the family. In the fall of 1869 he purchased forty acres of land, part of his present farm, in Section 17, going in debt for the whole of it. On this little place he thus began housekeeping, and put forth a determined effort to clear himself from debt, a difficult undertaking at a time when wheat averaged only three or four bushels per acre. His wife proved a worthy helpmeet in those days of struggle, and gave every assistance possible. She picked blueberries to pay for their first dishes, which were purchased on time. Mr. Mynard had the rare faculty of knowing just what crop to raise. He planted wheat in years when wheat was profitable; raised hops when that product commanded a high price; potatoes he grew when the tuberous vegetable was scarce and valuable. And so the financial mists disappeared. Mr. Mynard added forty acres to his little place; then he added eighty more; again he purchased eighty acres, then eighty-five, and he now owns a well-improved farm of 325 acres, upon which, in 1890, he built one of the most substantial residences in the township. His children are Bertha E., born August 6, 1876, now engaged as a teacher, and Elmer I., born June 8, 1887.

Mr. Mynard is a Republican, but sympathizes strongly with the Prohibition movement. He neither smokes nor chews tobacco, and in forty years has been in a saloon only once, then to secure some burnt brandy for a soldier who had returned home sick. For years he has been clerk in District No. 2, and is universally recognized as one of Dayton's self-made and leading farmers. He and his wife have always used their influence in the cause of good morals and temperance, in both theory and practice.

Harlow P. Kelsey (father of Mrs. Sylvia E. Mynard), a wagon maker by trade, was born in Genesee county, N. Y., February 28, 1819, and was married in 1844 to Miss Amy Ann Landt, who was born in Delaware county, N. Y., March 10, 1823. Nine children—three sons and six daughters—were born to this union, of four of whom we are enabled to make mention, as follows: Mrs. Mary Ann Darling, born July 15, 1845, now living in Harlan, Iowa; Mrs. Emma B. Hervey, born June 18, 1847, died at her home in Iowa, April 3, 1895; Sylvia E., wife of Timothy I. Mynard, born April 15, 1849; and Byron, born August 19, 1851. The parents of these both lie buried in Belmont Cemetery.

WILLIAM H. CAREY, a popular and highly-esteemed citizen, at the present time serving as under sheriff of Wood county, and as marshal of the city of Centralia, was born in Rome, Adams Co., Wis., March 2, 1861, and is a son of John D. and Joannah (Moriarty) Carey, also a brother of D. E. Carey, a well-known resident of Wood county. When but three years old our subject was taken by his parents to Port Edwards, this State, and at the age of six years he came with them to Centralia, where in the public schools he acquired his education. On its completion he started out in life for himself, and worked at various occupations, including railroading. In 1887 he established himself in the livery business in Centralia, in connection with Walter J. Dickson, the partnership still continuing and, under the firm name of Dickson & Carey, they are doing a good business and conducting the largest and best-equipped stables in the city.

On October 12, 1887, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Carey and Miss Annie Boles, the accomplished and estimable daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Blaney) Boles. In the community they have many warm friends, and both are members of the Roman Catholic Church. In his political views, Mr. Carey is a Democrat, keeps well informed on the issues of the day, and has proven a capable and efficient officer. In 1887 he was elected marshal of Centralia, which position he has since filled with credit to himself and satisfaction of his constituents, and in January, 1893, he became under sheriff of Wood county. The life of Mr. Carey has been quietly passed, unmarked by exciting events, yet a straightforward career has gained for him the warm regard of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

H A. MEILIKE, M. D., one of the leading and most successful physicians and surgeons of Waupaca county, first came to Clintonville in 1876, when it gave little promise of its present growth and prosperity. He there opened a drug store, carrying a full stock of everything in that line, and remained in business until 1882, when he entered the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, Minn., attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of Keokuk, Iowa, and completed the course in 1887, graduating from the college in that year, after which he entered into the practice of his chosen profession in Lexington, Kentucky.

Dr. Meilike came to this country from Germany, being a native of Prussia, where he was born in 1854. He is a son of Gustave and Julia (Behnke) Meilike, the former a native of Germany, the latter born in Poland, though of German ancestry. The paternal grandfather, Charles Meilike, was born in Germany, came to this country in 1842, settling in the city of Oshkosh, Wis., there locating a farm, which he afterward sold to the Northern Insane Hospital. He continued to make Oshkosh his home, however, where his death occurred at the age of ninety-seven. His son, the father of the Doctor, there visited him in 1876, but he only lived about thirty days after his arrival; his widow died in Clintonville in 1887. Her father, Carl Behnke, whose birth also occurred in Germany, was reared to manhood in that country, and served as a soldier against Napoleon. Our subject's paternal great-grandfather was born in Lorraine, was a Huguenot and, like many others, was banished for his religious views. Dr. Meilike is one of a family of four children, the others being: Laura, wife of Aug. Froehlich, of Oshkosh, Wis.; Olga, wife of William Mantzke, who still resides in Germany; and Minnie, wife of Theodore Fillnow, who came to Waupaca county, in 1870, and makes his home in Bear Creek township. Our subject received his primary education in his native land, and afterward attended the University of Greifswald, in Germany. In 1873 he entered the regular army of the Fatherland, in which he served one year. After landing in the United States, he came at once to Waupaca county, Wis. (in 1876), settling in Clintonville, where he has since resided almost continuously. He holds membership with the Northwest Medical Society, and is also a member of the State Society of Wisconsin, and takes an active interest in everything pertaining to his profession, being also connected with the Mississippi River Society.

In New Holstein, Calumet Co., Wis., in 1890, Dr. Meilike was united in marriage with Miss Emma Dumke, a native of the United States, and a daughter of Charles Dumke, who came to America in 1861, first making their home in Manitowoc county, Wis. The father's death occurred in New Holstein, Wis., in 1890; the mother, who is a highly-respected lady, still makes her home at that place. The Doctor takes an active part in politics and is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, whose principles he warmly advocates. He was elected town clerk in 1877, and held that position several years; was made mayor of Clintonville in 1891, and also served the two following years, discharging the duties of the office to the general satisfaction, and was re-elected to that incumbency in 1895. He is a member of one of the pioneer families of Wisconsin, and has witnessed the wonderful changes that have taken place in and around Clintonville, to which he has given his hearty support and co-operation. He always takes an active interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community, and Waupaca county has no more worthy or highly-respected citizen.

OLE KNUTSON SANNES was born in October, 1830, in "The land of the midnight sun," and his father, Knute Knutson, was a Norwegian farmer who worked by day's labor in order to support his family, numbering five sons and five daughters. Our subject, the second in order of birth, received only a common school education, for his parents were poor, and he remained at home to assist them in the labors of the farm on which they lived. He continued under the parental roof until eighteen years of age, when he began working as a farm hand for his uncle, receiving the very scant wages of $35 per year, for labor in Norway could not command a high price.

About this time his uncle emigrated to America, and he entered into a contract with our subject to pay him $50 if he would accompany him; so bidding adieu to the home and friends of his youth, in March, 1849, he sailed with his uncle's family from Christianson, on a vessel that after a voyage of thirty days dropped anchor in the harbor of New York. Wisconsin was their destination, and to Neenah, this State, they came, traveling by boat from Buffalo, N. Y., to Sheboygan, whence they drove to Neenah. After a year, Mr. Sannes' uncle removed to Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, but he remained in the vicinity of Neenah for about seven years, working as a farm hand through the summer months, and in the lumber woods of Oconto county during the winter season. In the fall of 1856 he came to Farmington township, Waupaca county, and in the following winter cut timber north of Stevens Point. In the spring of 1857 he went to St. Louis, taking lumber down the Mississippi river to that place, and in the summer of that year he bought 120 acres of land in Sections 4 and 5, having acquired the necessary capital through earnest labor, perseverance and good management. With the exception of four acres which had been cleared, this land was all covered with brush and timber.

On October 5, 1857, in Farmington township, Mr. Sannes was united in marriage with Mary Olson, who was born in Norway, January 12, 1840, came to the United States when a maiden of ten summers, and for a number of years worked as a domestic, being employed in the home of a lawyer in Watertown, Wis. The vessel in which she crossed the ocean was upon the water sixteen weeks, during which time the provisions were exhausted and they had to stop at Newfoundland for further supplies. Mr. and Mrs. Sannes began their domestic life in a log cabin, and while the husband worked in clearing and developing the land the young wife kept the little home neat and tidy, frequently also assisting him in out-door labor. They were days of hard work, but the constant labor at length was rewarded by rich harvests which brought to them a good income, and made it possible for them to secure all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life, also to extend the boundaries of the farm until it now comprises 220 acres, 100 of which are cleared and under a high state of cultivation. The property is also improved with many good buildings, which stand as monuments to the thrift and enterprise of the owner. The home was blessed with the following children: Knute O., born October 4, 1858, now an agriculturist in Farmington township, married May 3, 1888, Annie Anderson; Ole, who died at the age of six months; Ole O., born April 11, 1862, a farmer of Scandinavia township; Theodore, born March 10, 1864, still at home; Andrew, born March 10, 1866, attending college at Northfield, Minn. (he graduated from the academy in 1892, and is now in the college leading to the degree of B. A.); Tommy O., born April 9, 1868, living at home; Tillie Caroline, born September 11, 1870, engaged in dressmaking at Stevens Point, Wis., and who was married June 26, 1895, to Martin H. Nyhus; Carl, who died in infancy; and Carrie Geoline, born November 15, 1874; Anna Tumine, born June 4, 1877, and Gina Mathilde, born September 15, 1879, all three living at home.

Mr. Sannes is a Republican, but has never sought office, and he and his family hold membership with the Lutheran Church, taking a commendable interest in its work and upbuilding. His life has been well-spent, and to-day he is one of the prosperous farmers and valued citizens of his township. He now owns a good farm, has aided two of his sons in getting homes of their own, and has reared a family of children who possess the industry and enterprise which have always been noted as the chief characteristics of the father. He came to America a poor boy, burdened with a $50 indebtedness, and unable to speak a word of English; but possessed of an indomitable courage, an unwavering perseverance and strong determination to succeed, he has, by the aid of his estimable wife, worked his way up from a humble position to one of affluence. During all the years of their married life, Mr. and Mrs. Sannes had never called a physician to their home until 1894, when the serious illness of our subject necessitated the services of a doctor. The prosperity which has come to them is well-merited, and the example of this worthy couple is deserving of emulation.

HERMAN FINGER, county treasurer of Vilas county, and a prosperous, highly-respected citizen of Eagle River, is a native of Wisconsin, born in Brookfield, Waukesha county, April 13, 1856.

Gottfried Finger, father of our subject, was by-birth a German, born in 1810, son of a well-to-do lumberman, who had a numerous family, Gottfried being the only one to come to America. In Germany he married Eva Camp, and in 1854 the young couple emigrated to America, making their home in Milwaukee some seven years. Mr. Finger being employed as a common laborer. He then purchased a team of oxen, and moved his family to Outagamie county, settling in the wilds near New London, where he was a prosperous agriculturist. He died May 27, 1895, his wife in 1885, the mother of ten children, as follows: August, Julius, Julia, Paulina, Adelia, Herman, Albert, Augusta and two that died in infancy; of whom August died at the age of forty-five years; Julius lives in Maple Creek, Wis.; Julia is the wife of Gottlieb Kroger; Paulina is the wife of A. Kenpf, and lives in Maple Creek, Wis.; Adelia died unmarried at the age of thirty years; Albert is a farmer of Union township, Waupaca county; and Augusta (Mrs. Severs) lives in Shawano, Wisconsin.

Herman Finger, the subject proper of this sketch, received his education at the district schools of the neighborhood of his place of birth, at the age of thirteen commencing work in the woods and on the river, and so continuing, working for others, until 1881, in which year he entered the employ of the Sherry Lumber Co. as foreman in charge of their lumbering and farming interests at Vesper, Wood county. At the end of five years he resigned this position, and then buying an interest in the Gerry Lumber Co., moved, in 1886, to Eagle River, where he has full charge of their business, their plant here consisting of sawmill, planing-mill, etc., the output being from ten million to sixteen million feet of lumber per annum. Ever since becoming a stockholder in the concern he has been vice-president and general manager of the company. In 1878 he bought a farm in Waupaca county which he improved and still owns, and his family made their home thereon the better part of two years. In addition to this he, in company with two others, owns a large tract of pine land in northern Minnesota.

In 1879 Mr. Finger was married to Miss Emma Law, who was born in New London, Wis., August 30, 1855, daughter of George W. and Isabel Law, Pennsylvanians by birth, in which State they were married, coming thence to New London, when it was but a trading post; here the father, who is a lumberman by vocation, is yet living, but the mother passed to the home beyond in 1891. They had five children: Mary, Emma, Victorina, Rebecca (who died at the age of eighteen years) and Davis. To Mr. and Mrs. Finger have been born six children, named, respectively: Mabel, Orley, Eva, Oscar, Viola and Effie. In his political preferences Mr. Finger is a Republican, and in 1894 he was elected county treasurer of Vilas county, an incumbency he fills with eminent ability. In fraternal affiliations he is one of the first charter members of Eagle River Lodge No. 248, F. & A. M., has always held some office therein from the time of its organization, being its present master, and he is a member of the Chapter at Antigo. He and his amiable wife are active members of the Congregational Church at Eagle River, and are liberal donors in the cause of religion. Mr. Finger is without doubt the leading business man of Vilas county, and ever a busy one, his time being exclusively devoted to his lumber manufacturing interests.

JOHAN O. HUUN, a retired merchant of Iola, Waupaca county, was born in Leirdalsoren, Norway, October 20, 1842, and is a twin brother of Isaac C. Huun, also of Iola, Waupaca county. Our subject was one of three children born to Isaac G. S. Huun and Johanna C. Huun, born Høstenæs; John O., Isaac C., and Tomena, who died at the age of three years. The father, who was a tinsmith and dealer, in Leirdal, Norway, was the son of Christopher Huun, a native of Germany, but the maternal ancestors of our subject were all natives of Norway.

When but nine years of age John O. Huun went to Bergen, Norway, to learn the trade of a merchant, serving an apprenticeship of five years, during which time he received no wages, but was given five dollars by his employer. At the age of sixteen he went to live with an aunt and there began to clerk in a dry-goods store, receiving $150 per year. He had previously been connected with the grocery business. At the end of four years he was offered a better position and full access to the family residence of his employer, which was not extended to every clerk. Mr. Huun had received but a very meagre education, and by this time he realized the need of a better one. He attended a Norwegian Sunday-school many years free of charge, and received a prize for proficiency; later he attended a private school, where he paid fifty cents per hour, and still later was a pupil at a night school, where the tuition was the same.

On May 24, 1869, he was united in marriage with Karen J. E. Amundsen, who was born in Bergen, Norway, October 18, 1842.

At the time of his marriage Mr. Huun was clerking for $300 per year, and was also traveling agent, going north of Bergen 600 miles selling dry-goods. In 1872, with a partner, he began business for himself, buying out a mill, bakery and dry-goods store, for which he went in debt, as the property cost him three thousand dollars. His partner proved dishonest, however, and the loss to him in time and money amounted to about five thousand dollars. He was in business for about ten years. In June, 1882, Mr. Huun concluded to come to America, and with his wife went by boat from Bergen to Christiansand, where they boarded the steamer "Geyser," which was seventeen days in crossing the Atlantic to New York City. His destination was Iola, Wis., where his brother was living, and he arrived here without a cent of money in his pockets. He first obtained work in a sawmill at Stevens Point, Wis., but at the end of a month fell and injured his side, and was compelled to return to his brother's home in Iola. On recovering he went to St. Paul, Minn., where he was employed at anything that he could find to do, at the end of some months returning to Iola, where he began clerking for Mr. Thompson. After leaving that gentleman Mr. Huun, in 1883, began business for himself in connection with his brother, they opening a grocery store under the firm name of O. Huun & Co., and the following year our subject became sole proprietor. He started with a cash capital of $300, at first carrying only groceries, but later he added a small stock of notions and shoes, and as his trade steadily increased enlarged his stock from time to time until he was at the head of a prosperous and paying business. His first location was in a building which he purchased from his brother, and later selling at a good profit, bought the Odd Fellows Hall, which he converted into a store room. In October, 1893, on account of ill health, he was compelled to sell out, disposing of his stock to Johnson Brothers, and he has since lived retired. In the same year he erected one of the best residences in Iola, with all modern conveniences (including a hot-air furnace), and there the family make their home, surrounded by their many friends, whom they delight to entertain.

Mr. Huun has ever been a staunch supporter of the Republican party, though he believes in honest government and the selection of honest men for office, regardless of their political views. Thoroughly realizing the evil power that money builds in politics, he hopes for the welfare of his adopted country to see the evil remedied, so that honest, capable men—although perhaps poor financially—may be elected to fill all offices, and that it will be a crime severely punishable to try to influence a man's vote by the corrupt use of money; and he hopes he will live to see the time when people will think less of the "almighty dollar," and more of their God and Creator. He is strongly in favor of a protective tariff, believing that under that system a country is more prosperous, as he has also lived under free trade in Europe, and appreciates protection. Both himself and wife are consistent members of the Lutheran Church, and he was at one time a teacher in one of the Norwegian Sunday-schools. He has never cared for political preferment, but he is now serving in the position of foreman and director of the Norwegian school, and takes quite an active part in educational affairs. Socially he is identified with the Odd Fellows Lodge, No. 282, at Iola. The property of Mr. Huun has all been acquired by the exercise of sound judgment, good business talents and industry, and he has won the confidence and respect of all with whom he has come in contact.

DE JAY KELSEY, carriage manufacturer and blacksmith, of Stevens Point, Portage county, was born in Columbus, Columbia Co., Wis., January 31, 1854, and is a son of David D. and Phoebe Ann (Persall) Kelsey, who were born in New York State.

In 1844, David D. Kelsey and his wife came west and located in Columbia county, Wis., where he followed his vocation of blacksmith, and where he now lives a retired life; here his wife died in 1861. They had two children, namely: DeJay, the subject of this sketch; and Naomi, wife of B. B. Barbour, a resident of Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Our subject was reared and educated in his native town of Columbus, Columbia Co., Wis., and at the age of seventeen left home for La Crosse, La Crosse Co., Wis., where he resided about a year. Afterward he worked at his trade in different towns and States in the Union until 1883, when he came to Stevens Point, Portage county, where he engaged in business, and he has been a resident of this city since.

In 1882, at Tomah, Monroe Co., Wis., DeJay Kelsey married Cora Isabel Sowle, who has borne him three children, one of whom is deceased, the others being Jay Verne and Mildred Rood. Mrs. Kelsey is a daughter of Hiram A. and Lucy A. Sowle, who were born in Vermont. Politically Mr. Kelsey is a staunch Republican, and socially is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. The family attend the Methodist Church. As a citizen, Mr. Kelsey is highly esteemed. He is a thorough master of his business, and by strict attention to the wants of his patrons has built up a large and increasing trade, while his genial manner and sterling qualities have won him a host of friends.

GJERT HERMANSON, one of the representative farmers and prominent citizens of St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, was born in Norway, February 26, 1825, and he is a son of Herman and Ellen (Sorenson) Erickson.

The father of our subject, who was a blacksmith by trade, was twice married, and by his first union with Anna Rebecca Erickson, had four children: Erick Hermanson, a farmer and blacksmith of St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county; Sarah Hermanson, wife of Gjert Hermanson, of Wittenberg, Wis. (both now deceased); Christine, (also deceased); and Anna, who died in Norway. The subject of this sketch is the eldest in the family of six children born of the second marriage, the others being Herman Hermanson, a farmer of South Dakota; Soren, who died from effects of service in the army during the Civil war, leaving a widow and six children, the former now a resident of St. Lawrence township; Anna, wife of John Aleson, a blacksmith of Norway; Lena, wife of Christ Amenson, a farmer of Amherst, Wis.; and Martha, wife of Amon Thorson, a farmer of St. Lawrence township.

In Norway Gjert Hermanson learned the trade of a blacksmith under his father's instruction, and received his literary education in the common schools. In 1846 he sailed for America, and on landing at New York came direct to Winneconne, Winnebago Co., Wis., where he worked on a farm three years. The year 1849 found him a resident of St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, where he had purchased 120 acres of land in Sections 6 and 7, paying the government price of $1.25 per acre. In addition to the cultivation and improvement of his own land, he began work for C. S. Ogden, by whom he was employed some two years. His little log shanty was only 16 x 20 feet, and covered with slabs, but it continued to be his home about four years. Everything was in its primitive condition, not a furrow had been turned on the farm, nor were there any roads made in the neighborhood. In 1850 the parents also came to the New World, and with Mr. Hermanson they resided two years, when they took up a homestead of eighty acres, and there spent the remainder of their lives. Our subject was married in 1851 to Rachel Christianson, who was also born in Norway, coming to America in 1846, the same year her husband crossed the ocean. Children as follows came to bless their union: Christian, a farmer of North Dakota; Herman (1) deceased; Jense, an agriculturist of South Dakota; Ole, a blacksmith of North Dakota; Albert, who helps operate the home farm; Herman (2), married in 1889, to Ida Larson, who died June 12, 1893, leaving a daughter, Anna (Herman now lives on the home farm); Helena, wife of Anton Hanson, proprietor of a hardware store in Minnesota; and Henry and Reinhart (twins), the former a farmer of Iola township, Waupaca county, the latter being now deceased. The mother of this family departed this life July 3, 1868.

Mr. Hermanson is the owner of 120 acres of good land, sixty-five of which he has placed under a high state of cultivation. He is a man of recognized ability, and with his family stands high in the community. During the war of the Rebellion he showed his loyalty to his adopted country by enlisting, in 1864, in Company A, Forty-second Wis. V. I. All through his service he was stationed at Cairo, Ill., doing guard duty, and at the close of the struggle was honorably discharged. Socially, he is a member of Iola Post, No. 99, G. A. R.; and politically is a stalwart Republican.

DANIEL CASE, a well-known citizen and one of the early settlers of Grand Rapids, Wood county, was born in Delaware county, N. Y., July 25, 1825, and is a son of James L. and Betsy (Preston) Case, both of whom were natives of New York. In their family were nine children, six of whom are yet living, as follows: Phinis, a prominent farmer of Iowa; Emily, wife of Jesse Turner, also a resident of Iowa; Daniel, subject of this record; Frederick, an old soldier located at Junction City, Wis.; Mary, widow of the late Charles Bartholomew, and a resident of Rockford, Ill.; and Charley, a great traveler, not staying in any one place for any length of time.

In taking up the personal history of Daniel Case, we present to our readers the life record of one who has long resided in Wood county, and is favorably known throughout the community. In the county of his nativity, Mr. Case acquired his education, and when he entered upon his business career took up lumbering, which he followed on the Delaware river until 1855. In that year he sought a home in the West, going first to Illinois, and thence to Iowa, and on leaving the Hawkeye State in 1858, he came to Grand Rapids. That was only ten years after the admission of Wisconsin into the Union, and Wood county was still largely undeveloped, so that Mr. Case has witnessed much of its growth and upbuilding. For a number of years after his arrival he again engaged in that industry which has long been one of Wisconsin's leading business interests—lumbering. He was successful in his undertakings, managing his affairs with sagacity. A laudable ambition was tempered by conservatism and careful management, and perseverance brought to him well-merited success, so that he is now the possessor of a handsome competence, and for the past few years he has lived retired, enjoying the fruits of his former toil.

In March, 1858, in Iowa, Mr. Case married Elizabeth Wilcox, daughter of Dijah and Elvira Wilcox, and to them were born four children, namely: Adella, born December 12, 1858, now the wife of Charles Margeson, a resident of Grand Rapids; Edith, born January 3, 1861, and wedded to Henry Stringer, who is now located in Armenia, Wis.; Minnie, born October 8, 1867, became the wife of Barney Brennan, and died in March, 1891; and Bessie, born November 1, 1870, now the wife of George Delap, also a resident of Grand Rapids. Mr. Case and his family belong to the Methodist Church, and he contributes liberally to its support. He has at heart the best interests of the community in which he makes his home, and co-operates in all enterprises that are calculated to promote the general welfare. Even in political views he is not bound by party ties, but holds himself free to support the candidate whom he thinks will best serve the interests of the people.

PHINEAS L. MUNGER, one of the younger and most enterprising farmers of Dayton township, Waupaca county, is the sole representative of a pioneer family of unusual prominence and influence. He was born in Dayton township January 3, 1859, son of Amos D. and Diantha (Lilley) Munger.

The Munger family gave many of its sons to the cause of religion. Dexter Munger, the father of Amos D., was a Baptist minister, whose pastorate for many years was at Attica, N. Y. He died at Linden, N. Y., his family consisting of six children—three sons and three daughters: Amos D. yielded up his life in his country's cause upon a Southern battlefield; Enos, a Baptist minister, who preached and died at Lakeland, Minn.; and Orrin, a Baptist minister, who died at Angelica, N. Y.; Esther, afterward Mrs. Secrest, who died in Minnesota; Julia, who died in her young womanhood, at Monson, Mass.; and Mary, now Mrs. Rundell, of Erie county, New York.

Amos D. Munger was born in Hartford county, Conn., January 19, 1822. As the son of a clergyman he obtained an education somewhat better than falls to the ordinary lot of men, in the schools of Attica, N. Y., whither his parents removed when Amos was quite young, and in his youth he taught school. Friends of the family had migrated to Wisconsin, and in 1850 Amos D. also resolved to seek a home in the West. Coming to Racine, Wis., in the autumn of that year he taught school in that thriving village during the winter of 1850-51. Becoming interested in Dayton township, Waupaca county, through a friend, Mr. Thompson, whose son had settled in that locality, he came, early in the spring of 1851, to that township, where he pre-empted 160 acres of wild land (at which time land had not come into the market) in Section 6, that township, and made improvements thereon, such as breaking several acres, building a small house and barn, etc. Late in the autumn of that year (1851) he returned to Racine and taught school that winter, and early in the spring of the following year he came home to Dayton, bringing with him a team and wagon, farm implements, flour, groceries, household goods, etc. After putting in the spring crops he made a trip to the East, and at Boston, Mass., was married, June 13, 1852, to Miss Diantha Lilley, who was born in the township of Pulaski, Oswego Co., N. Y., September 17, 1822, daughter of Phineas and Amy (Samson) Lilley. Phineas, son of Abner Lilley, who had emigrated to Connecticut from England, was born in Tolland, Hartford Co., Conn., in 1787; he was a farmer by occupation, and lived in Oswego county, N. Y., to the age of ninety years. His wife, Amy Samson, was born in Cheshire, Mass., in 1791, and died at Pulaski, N. Y., at the age of sixty years. Of their ten children Diantha, now Mrs. Munger, is the sole survivor.

Diantha Lilley was well educated, and had taught school near the home of her parents in central New York, but for several years prior to her marriage she had been living with a sister at Cambridge, Mass. Soon after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Munger started for their western home, via the lakes to Sheboygan, and thence by team via Fond du Lac and Berlin, Mrs. Munger bringing with her many supplies, which, as her foresight afterward demonstrated, proved invaluable in the new land. Although the contrast from eastern plenty to western want was about as marked as it could well be during the early years of her married life, Mrs. Munger, as she expresses it, "never felt lonesome until he was taken away." Mr. Munger followed farming until the summer of 1862, when, as the war cloud grew darker and darker, he could no longer resist the patriotic call of duty, and bidding wife and child adieu he shouldered musket and marched to the scene of strife, enlisting in Company G, Twenty-first Wis. V. I. Scarcely two months later, October 8, 1862, he fell at Perryville, Ky., and was buried on the field of battle. The bereaved widow remained for five years on the farm with her only child, Phineas L., a boy of three years at the time of his father's death. Then, in 1867, she sold the farm and removed to Waupaca to educate her son, where, except for a short time, she has since remained, building a comfortable home on Division street. For twenty-four years she has been a member of the First Baptist Church.

Phineas L. Munger was born January 3, 1859, in Dayton township. His earliest education was received in the schools of District No. 5, and later in the schools of Waupaca. He was a member of the high school class of 1876, which was the first that ever graduated from the school. After graduation, he at once began farming on forty acres, which is a part of his present farm in Dayton township. He was married, February 27, 1884, in Waupaca, to Miss Amy A. Richmond, who was born in Waushara county, and is the daughter of Merriek and Clarinda (Allen) Richmond. Her father was a farmer, but now keeps a boarding-house at Eagle River, Wis. Mrs. Richmond died in Waushara county, and was buried at Coloma, Wis. Their children were two in number—Mrs. Munger, and a son who died in infancy.

After his marriage Mr. Munger began housekeeping on the farm, which then comprised 120 acres. He has since increased it to 200 acres, and in 1892 he remodeled his fine home, which is attractively located in a spacious lawn covered with trees of forest growth. His only child is Norman D., born December 31, 1885. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Munger is a Republican, and has filled various local offices; at present, he is supervisor in his District. For one term he taught school in Belmont township, Portage county. His present valuable farm includes a portion of the pioneer home which his father located forty-three years ago. Though still young in years, Mr. Munger is one of Dayton's most prosperous and successful farmers.

GUNDER O. KROSTU is an extensive landowner in Farmington township, Waupaca county. He holds title to about 1000 acres of land, and has, on the well-improved home farm of 180 acres, a brick residence, erected in 1880, and since enlarged, than which there is no finer in the township. Mr. Krostu did not inherit this property, nor did it come to him by gift of others. Thirty years ago his chances of rising to a competence would not, perhaps, have been considered at all bright, for he was only the poor son of a poor Norwegian emigrant. But none knew the strength of his nervous fiber, his indomitable will; he has grown to prominence and affluence among his neighbors and wide circle of acquaintances solely by his own unaided efforts.

In the spring of 1861 ten Norwegian families, in order to better their circumstances, formed a little company and started for America. Among them was Ole Krostu, wife and seven children, of whom Gunder was the fifth child and third son. After a passage of nine weeks they landed at Quebec, Canada, and thence proceeded by boat, rail and boat to Milwaukee, thence by rail to Oshkosh, and by boat again to Gill's Landing. A few ox-teams were secured here, but not enough to accommodate all the women. All the men and the women by turns began the weary journey afoot. A brother of Ole Krostu lived in Waupaca county, and that was the destination of the party. Ole, who in his native land had been a farmer and stock raiser, rented a farm and with his eldest son, Sigel, with whom he lived, followed farming till his death, which occurred in 1881; the mother still lives, at the age of eighty-six.

Gunder O. Krostu was born June 22, 1844, and was seventeen years of age when the long voyage was made. He had received a fair education in Norway, and soon after his arrival in America he began working for himself, chiefly on the farm; but no opportunity to earn an honest dollar, whether in the woods or on the river, was neglected. Gunder Krostu had one purpose—to save his money and buy a farm. He worked steadily until 1868, and then purchased 240 acres of land, partly improved, in Section 9, Farmington township. His savings were sufficient to pay for about one-half of the place, and for the rest of the farm he went into debt. The year 1868 also witnessed his marriage in Waupaca to Tone Torgensen, a native of Norway, whose father died in southern Wisconsin.

Mr. Krostu began housekeeping in the log house which then stood on the farm of which he had just become the happy possessor. He was a farmer by occupation, and has always followed that calling excepting two or three winters which he spent in the woods, lumbering then being carried on in neighboring counties. In later years he has also dealt considerably in lumber, and in these operations he has been able to utilize the knowledge obtained earlier in life. This, combined with his natural business aptitude, has made his operations quite successful. His family consists of six living children:—Carl (agent for the Wisconsin Central railroad at Sheridan), Serena, Theodore, Julius, Hermann and Casper; three children, Carrie D. C., Josie and Casper, are deceased. In politics Mr. Krostu is a staunch Republican; in religious affiliation he is a member of the Lutheran Church. He is a highly respected and influential farmer, whose early start in life was won by hard work, and whose later business successes were due in large measure to his abilities as a financier and manager.

CHARLES H. BROWN. The history of the men who have participated in the development of any country affords interesting illustrations of the zeal and determination so essential to the successful prosecution of such an undertaking. The subject of this record is a striking example of that class of citizens, and therefore with pleasure we present to our readers the record of his life.

He comes of sturdy New England ancestry, and was born in Hinsdale, Berkshire Co., Mass., August 7, 1827. His parents, Daniel and Caroline (Smith) Brown, were also natives of the old Bay State, and had a family of three children, of whom Charles H. is the eldest; the sisters are Cornelia Jane, widow of Henry W. Jackson, and a resident of Centralia, Wis.; and Elizabeth, wife of Harvey Jackson, and living in Hinsdale, Mass. The parents have both passed away, the father having departed this life November 17, 1856, while the mother was called to her final rest October 21, 1852.

In the usual manner of farmer lads Charles H. Brown spent the days of his childhood and youth, aiding in subduing the soil and in the other work of the farm, also attending the common schools of his native town. One of the honored pioneers of Wood county, he dates his residence in Grand Rapids from 1855, and in 1858 he engaged as a salesman in a general store conducted by the firm of Garrison & Jackson, the first store in Centralia. After three years spent therein, he removed to his native home in Massachusetts, but a few months later again came to Centralia, where for many years he was engaged in logging and lumbering. That occupation is one of the leading industries of the State, and Mr. Brown is one of its typical representatives.

Mr. Brown was married in Hinsdale, Mass., December 31, 1862, to Miss Julia

Lyman, daughter of Henry D. and Ruth M. (Bartlett) Lyman. Two children were born to them, one of whom died in infancy, the other being Burton Lyman, born November 12, 1868. Mrs. Brown first saw the light in Hinsdale, Mass., January 29, 1838, and the other surviving members of the family are Henry George, who is living in Kalamazoo, Mich.; Ruth Amelia; Charles Edwin; and Florence M., widow of Peter McCallum. The father of this family died August 11, 1886, the mother in April, 1888. In 1881, Mr. Brown went to Dakota, and located in what is now the town of Dawson on the line of the Northern Pacific railroad, at which time only one house marked the site of the place, and it was occupied by the section master. Mr. Brown secured 160 acres of government land, built a house and barn, and two years later moved his family to their new home, where they continued to reside until 1889, when they again came to Centralia, Wood Co., Wis. In various public offices he has served, devoting his time and energies to a faithful discharge of his duties. For six successive years he was town clerk of Centralia, was town treasurer three successive years, and clerk of the Centralia school board six years. In his political views he is a stalwart Republican, and in religious faith he and his family are Methodists. Forty years ago he came to Wood county when it was a frontier settlement, and has therefore witnessed the greater part of its growth and development. With the work of progress and upbuilding he has long been identified, and the community recognizes in him a valued citizen—ever ready to promote its best interests—as well as one of the honored pioneers.

JOHAN M. OWENS, mechanical and electrical engineer, and a stockholder in the Wausau Electric Light Company, was born in Clermont county, Ohio, July 22, 1861, and is a son of John G. and Eliza (McNeill) Owens.

John G. Owens was born at Maysville, Ky., of Welsh ancestry, his wife at Cincinnati, Ohio, of Scotch ancestry. Both died at Clermont, Ohio, Mrs. Owens January 3, 1876, Mr. Owens June 22, 1884. They were the parents of seven children, five of whom are living, namely: Thomas C., residing in New Orleans; John M., the subject of this sketch; Edward; Frank, residing in Louisville, Ky.; and Nora, residing in Covington, Kentucky.

Our subject was educated in the public schools of his native town, and after leaving school became qualified as a stationary engineer. Having perfected himself in this occupation, he took a two-years' course in the Electrical College of Cincinnati, and worked two years as traveling engineer for the Westinghouse Electrical Company, erecting electrical plants in different cities, principally throughout Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia and Florida. Since then he has been superintendent and electrical engineer of electric-light plants in different cities. In 1890 he removed from Florence, Ala., to Rhinelander, Oneida Co., Wis., took charge of the electric-light plant of that city for two years, and in January, 1892, removed to Wausau, Marathon county, and became a stockholder and general superintendent of the electric-light plant of the city. Mr. Owens is a member of the F. & A. M., of Rhinelander; of Washington Chapter No. 232, Tusculumbia, Ala., and of Ivanhoe Commandery No. 22, Cincinnati. He is a thorough electrician, few having attained a more perfect knowledge of this business in all its details, is one of the live, progressive business men of Wausau, and is highly esteemed as a citizen.

JUDD WAIT, who is engaged in the meat business at Embarrass, Matteson township, Waupaca county, was born March 2, 1861, at Nekimi, Winnebago Co., Wis., and is a son of George F. and Pathina (Martin) Wait, who were both from Medina county, Ohio, and about the year 1849 came to Wisconsin, where George Wait was employed on the farm homesteaded by his future wife's father, who had come from Ohio, and who worked this farm for some years.

George F. Wait was born December 22, 1835, in Brunswick, Medina Co., Ohio, and is a son of James and Eliza (Ashley) Wait, who were from Whiteley, Mass. James Wait was a farmer by occupation; in religion a staunch Methodist. Both he and his wife always remained in Ohio after coming to the State, and both died in Brunswick, Medina county. They were the parents of ten children, as follows, all of them remaining at home until of an adult age: Samantha, Hester F., James L., Charles G., Julian B., George F. (previously mentioned in this sketch), Mary E., Amos A., John B. and Judd P. George F. Wait received a common-school education, such as the time afforded. In 1852 he went to Winneconne, Winnebago Co., Wis., where he worked in sawmills and the lumber woods, and remained about five years. He was engaged in the lumber business some seven or eight years, or until March 16, 1859, when he was united in marriage with Pathina Martin, by whom he had four children: Alice, now Mrs. James Cott, of Matteson; Judd, whose name introduces this sketch; Lillie, now Mrs. F. Ewer, of Matteson; and Frank, living at home.

For three years George F. Wait worked a farm, then, on August 21, 1862, enlisted in Company D, Thirty-second Wis. V. I.; they were sent first to Memphis, Tenn., where they remained nearly two years on picket duty, and did some little skirmishing. In the winter of 1864 they went to Vicksburg, then to Meridian and to the relief of Chattanooga; from there through Memphis, Cairo and Pittsburg Landing, and thence to Decatur, Ala., where they remained from April 7 until August 5. Near Courtland, Ala., was the first place where they were under fire. Their flag was carried until not a piece remained as large as a man's hand, but it was never fired upon, to their knowledge. Mr. Wait participated in the battle of Bentonville; but Sherman's last battle was the hottest engagement in which he took part. They were at the battle of the capture of Atlanta, though they were not called into action. Mr. Wait received his discharge June 12, 1865, the regiment marching from Atlanta to Washington, where they received their discharge. Mr. Wait returned to Winneconne, Winnebago

Co., Wis., remained four years, and in 1870 came to Matteson, Waupaca county. Here in Section 16 he bought eighty acres of wild land, at that time in a primitive condition. Deer and bear roamed about, and the hideous howling of the wolves was no uncommon sound. He built a small log house, about 12 x 20 feet, and the work of clearing was at once commenced. He had an ox-team and a drag plow, and his first crop was potatoes, oats and wheat; New London, Waupaca county, was the nearest market. In three years he bought forty acres more, and now has 120 acres, sixty-five of which are cleared, with good improvements thereon—the best farm in the township. In 1871 his wife died.

On June 12, 1872, George F. Wait again married, this time to Almira Graham, who was born in Brunswick, Ohio, September 22, 1844, daughter of Alanson and Jane (Stevenson) Graham, and they have five children: Elva, Alanson and Harry, all at home, and Graham and Roy. Mr. Wait is a successful farmer, and is still living with his second wife on the old homestead.

When Judd Wait was nearly ten years of age his own mother died, and when about eighteen he left home to seek his livelihood, in which he was successful. He was employed in the woods, and on the rivers, which he followed seven years. On August 20, 1884, he was united in marriage with Gertrude Matteson, and three children have been born to them: Hugh, May 15, 1886; Stella, April 2, 1890; and Gertrude, January 22, 1893. The parents of Mrs. Judd Wait, David and Margaret (Olmsted) Matteson, were originally from New York State and Canada, respectively. Four children were born to them: John, Gertrude (Mrs. Wait), Lyda and Kate. David Matteson came west with his parents, Roswell and Miranda (Palmer) Matteson. David Matteson's mother was a distant relative of John Palmer, of Matteson township, which township was named after Roswell Matteson, the first settler here. At the time he came there was only one house in the vicinity, a small log house in Clintonville, Larrabee township, owned by William Hyde, now of Appleton, Wis. Roswell Matteson came here with oxen from New London, Waupaca county. There was no bridge across the Embarrass river, and they had a hard time fording. He homesteaded a farm in the township, which is to-day owned by David and Margaret Matteson. Mrs. Wait's grandfather lived to about the age of ninety-one, her grandmother to the age of eighty-two.

When Mr. Wait was married he owned fifty acres of timber land in Matteson township, from which the timber was taken, and he had cleared a portion of it. He lived there three years, then, in 1890, sold his farm, came to Embarrass, and engaged in the meat business, in which he has since continued. Politically, he has always supported the Republican party, and he now holds the office of constable.

ANDREW O. TUBAAS, one of the active, prominent and enterprising citizens of Waupaca county, is at present engaged in agricultural pursuits in Iola township. He made his first appearance on the stage of life beneath the roof of his parents, Ole K. and Aaste Anderson (Tubaas) Tubaas, in Section 14, Iola township, August 10, 1859.

The parents, who were natives of Norway, were there married, and in the spring of 1854 accompanied the paternal grandfather of our subject, Kittel Halverson, to the New World. The five children of the latter all came with him, but his wife had previously died in Norway. On the "Johanna Marie" they set sail, and were six weeks and three days upon the Atlantic. The father and grandfather leaving the family at Rock River, Wis., proceeded to Iola township, Waupaca county, where they secured land in Section 14, and the former then returned for the family. A sister of our subject was born while the parents were crossing the ocean, but she died and was buried at sea. Since their arrival here the births of the following have occurred: Kittel O., a farmer of Harrison township, Waupaca county; Annie, now Mrs. Thor Thorson; Andrew O., subject of this sketch; Ole (1), who died in infancy; and Ole (2), who is a cook in the lumber woods. The mother died January 14, 1890, and now sleeps in Hitterdall Cemetery, Iola township. The father, who was a member of the Forty-fourth Wis. V. L., died at Nashville, Tenn., April 1, 1865, at the age of thirty-three years, four months and twenty-seven days, and was there buried.

Although but a small child when his father left for the army, Andrew O. Tubaas can distinctly remember him. Our subject acquired his education in the common schools of the neighborhood, which were much inferior to those of the present day, and he is heartily in sympathy with the improvements that have taken place, believing that a good education is essential to good government. He was reared to manhood under the parental roof, though he spent some time in the lumber woods, during the summers looking up farm work in Minnesota.

At the age of twenty-seven Mr. Tubaas married Miss Gena Ellerson, the ceremony being performed in Waupaca by a justice of the peace. She is a native of Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, and a daughter of Olaf Ellerson. By this marriage have been born three children: Oscar T., on March 18, 1888; Florence, November 18, 1890; and Alman G., born December 9, 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Tubaas began their domestic life on the farm where his aged mother still resided, and with them she found a pleasant home until her death. He still owns that place, which consists of a tract of 160 acres, eighty of which are well-improved and highly cultivated. Mr. Tubaas in the pursuance of his agricultural interests, has had very little time to give to politics, but at general elections votes the straight Republican ticket. For the past three years he has served as treasurer of Hitterdall Lutheran Church, to which his wife also belongs, and he aided in building the church edifice. He is widely and favorably known, and in all respects has deported himself as an honest man and a good citizen. He and his wife had the pleasure of visiting Chicago at the time of the World's Columbian Exposition, and to use their own words, "had a splendid time."

ROSWELL EWER, one of the farmers of Clintonville, Matteson township, Waupaca county, was born in Washington county, Wis., in 1855, a son of Esben and Lucy (Matteson) Ewer, the former of whom was one of the oldest settlers of Clintonville.

Our subject was reared in Matteson township, and received his education in the common schools. He bought eighty acres of land in Section 31, thirty of which were cleared, and built a good frame house thereon. Afterward he sold this farm, and he is now improving another forty acres.

On May 6, 1883, Roswell Ewer was united in marriage with Alice Ingersoll, who was born in Illinois. Her parents were early settlers of Bear Creek township, Waupaca Co., Wis. The mother is deceased, and the father now resides in Michigan. Mr. Ewer is a member of one of the oldest families in the township of Matteson, and has taken an active part in various matters for the general welfare.

PETER K. HILLER, a farmer of New Hope township, Portage county, is one of the intelligent and enterprising agriculturists of the county, who thoroughly understands his business. He was born in Norway, August 16, 1831, and is a son of Knute and Margaret (Bendickson) Hiller, natives of the same country. While a young man the father served as a sailor, but after his marriage settled down to a farm life. In the spring of 1845 he emigrated with his family to the United States, taking passage on the sailing vessel "Juno," which after a stormy voyage of eight weeks and four days landed them safely at New York, whence they went by boat to Albany, by canal to Buffalo, and on to Milwaukee, by the Great Lakes, arriving there July 3, 1845. By wagon they then proceeded on their journey to Norway, Wis., where they located on a farm, but the father did not long enjoy his new home, for he died there of fever and ague shortly after his arrival.

In Norway, Wis., the family remained eight years, or till in June, 1852, when the mother, with her children, removed to New Hope, Portage county, traveling thither with an ox-team, the journey consuming two weeks' time. While on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Anderson, of Scandinavia, Waupaca county, the mother died, and her remains were interred in New Hope Cemetery. In the family were four children: Mathias, Ann, Peter and Betsy. On coming to New Hope township, our subject purchased 120 acres of government land, which was all wild and unimproved, and after clearing a few acres he built a small house. His education was begun in his native land, and was completed in the common schools of this country, so that by subsequent reading and observation in later years he has become a well-informed man. In the spring of 1850 he went to Manistee, Mich., where he was employed in the lumber woods, during the summer running logs on the Manistee river. In the fall, however, he returned home, and since coming to New Hope township he has given his entire time and attention to his agricultural pursuits, in which he has been very successful, being numbered among the prosperous farmers of the community.

On February 1, 1866, at New Hope, Mr. Hiller wedded Miss Annie Rasmuson Bestul, the marriage ceremony being performed by Rev. Mickleson, pastor of the Norwegian Lutheran Church. Mrs. Hiller was born in Norway, May 22, 1844, and with her parents came to the United States when but nine years of age. She was the youngest in a family of eight children, the others being John, Belle, Nels, Ann, Jacob, Gunilla, and Ole. Mr. and Mrs. Hiller became the parents of six children—four sons and two daughters—namely: Carl, born July 14, 1867, still at home; Martin, born September 17, 1869, married Lina Hanson, and they now reside in Helvetia, Wis.; Dorothea, born October 13, 1871, still at home; Margaret, born April 20, 1874, died April 9, 1881; Reuben, born January 22, 1876, also under the parental roof, and Alfred, born December 1, 1879, died February 3, 1880. The mother of this family was called to her final rest in December, 1885, and her death was sincerely mourned.

In politics Mr. Hiller is a staunch Republican, always working for the best interests of his party, and for one year he served as clerk of the township school board. In religious belief he is a Lutheran, being one of the active members of the Church of that denomination in New Hope. He is a sturdy, honest, intelligent citizen, and enjoys the esteem and regard of all classes of people. His industrious habits and genial warm-heartedness endear him to all with whom he comes in contact

HERMAN L. BUMP, a prosperous representative citizen of Merrill, Lincoln county, is a native of New York State, born in Otsego county, October 7, 1847, and is a grandson of Barnett Bump, who first saw the light in the same locality June 27, 1779. The latter was by occupation a farmer and lumberer in Otsego county, and was highly thought of in the community where he lived. He married Phebe Bourn, who was born August 7, 1786, and six children came to their union, viz.: Laura, Elizabeth, Angeline, Phebe C., Barnett and James H., all now deceased. The father of these died August 9, 1844, the mother on May 20, 1849.

Barnett Bump, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Otsego county, N. Y., April 22, 1817, and inherited the old homestead, but in 1856 moved to Allegany county, same State, where he made his home some six years, or until the fall of 1863, when he came to Wisconsin, settling in Almond township, Portage county, on a piece of wild land, which he cleared and improved, and where he died February 14, 1877. He was married May 6, 1845, to Miss Clarissa B. Simons, who was born November 29, 1829, daughter of Alpha and Abigail (Hitchcock) Simons, natives of New York State, where they died, the father on July 10, 1837, the mother on March 1, 1856; they were the parents of three children: Lucia A., Levi A. and Clarissa B., the last named (wife of Barnett Bump) dying November 12, 1876, the mother of seven children, as follows: Herman L., Elisha L., George A. (who married and died without issue), Florence A., Adillah T. (deceased), Jessie N., and James B. (deceased).

The subject proper of this memoir received but a limited school training, and, up to the age of twenty-one years, remained at home, in the meantime also applying himself to various vocations. He then for some three years worked in sawmills, learning at the same time the trade of filer, which he has since followed, chiefly in Merrill, where he has been filer for the H. W. Wright Lumber Co. since 1889. For fifteen years he was in the employ of B. F. McMillan & Bro., near Marshfield, commencing there in the fall of 1876, and while there he was also (for about six years, commencing in 1882) engaged in the manufacture of staves and heading, owning a one-half interest in the business. To some extent he has also dealt in farm lands.

On December 5, 1871, Mr. Bump was united in marriage with Miss Mattie B. Trahern, who bore him three children: Della L., Mary E. and Eva C. The mother of these dying February 24, 1881, Mr. Bump for his second wife married, September 6, 1882, Miss Mary A. Gurley, who was born in Walworth county, Wis., daughter of Perry Gurley, and one child—Arthur Leroy—has blessed this union. Mr. and Mrs. Bump are members of the Episcopal Church; politically, he is a Republican; socially, he is an advanced member of the F. & A. M., I. O. O. F. and A. O. U. W. As a worthy, useful and loyal citizen, he is in the full enjoyment of the esteem of his neighbors.

EDWIN T. BROWN, a well-known and highly-respected citizen of Merrill, Lincoln county, is a native of the State of New York, born in Clinton, Oneida county, in November, 1837, and is a son of Jesse Brown, whose birth occurred in the same State. The father was twice married, his first union being with Angeline Phelps, who died in 1837, and they became the parents of six children, three of whom died in infancy and Amelia at the age of sixteen. Our subject is a child of this union. After the death of his first wife, Jesse Brown married her sister, Ruth Cowen, and he was called to his final home about the year 1875. In New York he carried on agricultural pursuits, and in the neighborhood where he resided was held in the highest regard.

Edwin T. Brown spent his boyhood and youth on the home farm, and attended the district schools in the winter season until nearing manhood. He remained with his father until he had reached the age of twenty-three, when he began freighting on the Erie canal, which pursuit he followed some five years. He then worked in a grist-mill in his native State, but later went to Ohio, where he spent one season. On his return to New York State he was employed in the Utica Asylum for one year, when, after his marriage in 1866, he removed to Michigan, in which State he spent one year, being employed as a carpenter in the flouring-mill at Kalamazoo. On the expiration of that time he again returned to New York, and for two years worked in a grist-mill. In 1871 he started west, locating in Fond du Lac, Wis., where for five years he had charge of a sawmill owned by the Chicago & North Western Railroad Company. Going to Salina, Kans., in 1877, he made that place his home for two years, during which time he engaged in farming. In 1879 we find him in Topeka, Kans., working in the car shops, and he was thus employed until 1883. In April of that year he came to Merrill, Wis., having secured the position of foreman for the Merrill Manufacturing Co., and as that firm failed six months later he then took complete charge, closing out the stock, at which he was engaged until September, 1885. That winter he went into the lumber woods, becoming scaler for the Wright Lumber Co., and remained with that firm until the fall of 1894, most of the time having charge of their shipping department.

At New York, in October, 1866, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Helen Underwood, and to them have been born two children, Lillian and Mabel, both of whom reside with their parents and are now engaged in school teaching. Mrs. Brown is a daughter of Chester B. and Susan (Stetson) Underwood, and is one of a family of six children—Mary, Chester, Edwin F., Helen M., Florence L. and Charles H. Her father, who was born in 1798, in Herkimer county, N. Y., was married in that State, in 1816, to Susan Stetson. Her birth occurred in Vermont in 1798, and she was a daughter of Benjamin and Mary Stetson, who by their marriage became the parents of thirteen children, ten of whom grew to manhood and womanhood, as follows: Benjamin, Jr., Jesse, Joel, Ezra, Sally, Clara, Mary, Amy, Hannah, and Susan. Mrs. Underwood died in 1879, and her husband passed away about five years later, his death occurring in the spring of 1884. He was a well-informed man, being a great reader, and held an honorable position in literary and social circles. William Underwood, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Brown, was a son of Agilla Underwood, a native of England; his birth occurred in Massachusetts, and for many years he was a minister of the Universalist Church, in Herkimer county, New York.

In politics, Mr. Brown now affiliates with the Republican party, but formerly was a Democrat. For five years he served as a member of the school board, and is always deeply interested in the cause of education, doing all in his power to advance the grade of schools in the community. He was also elected to the office of alderman of Merrill from the Fourth ward, and proved an efficient officer. For twenty years he has been connected with the I. O. O. F., in which he now holds the highest position, that of noble grand. He takes a lively interest in everything pertaining to the growth and prosperity of the county, where he is numbered among its best citizens.

WILLIAM W. BRUNNER was born May 14, 1857, in Washington county, Wis., and is a son of Samuel H. Brunner, who was born east of the mountains in Pennsylvania. He (Samuel) was only twelve years of age at the time of his father's death, and was thus thrown upon his own resources. In his younger years he learned the tailor's trade, which he afterward followed for some time in Philadelphia, Penn. He was married in the Keystone State to a young lady who was born in Schuylkill county, and later he engaged in merchandising, in hotel-keeping and in different lines of business, until his emigration westward. Two children had been born to them in the East, both of whom died in infancy.

About the year 1855, Samuel Brunner and his wife removed to Washington county, Wis., and located upon a partially-improved farm, following farming from that time, although he had never before engaged in agricultural pursuits. He made his home in Washington county until his death, which occurred in November, 1891; his widow is still living on the old homestead farm, which he had left to her. Their children born in Wisconsin were William W.; Andrew J., who resides on the home farm in Polk township, Washington county; Anna, now Mrs. F. Uber, of the same county; Alvina, wife of C. Klose, of Milwaukee, Wis.; Emma, now Mrs. Casper Hembel, living near Horicon, Wis., and Samuel, who died in infancy. The father was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party for whom he had great regard, and was a member of the Evangelical Church. Although he started out in life a poor boy, he became well-to-do, and was highly respected throughout the community in which he lived.

William W. Brunner received the education which could be obtained in the common schools of that early day, and remained at home until sixteen years of age, when he began working on neighboring farms. At the age of eighteen he commenced learning telegraphy at Jackson, Wis., on the line of the Chicago & North Western railroad. His first position of responsibility was at Sheridan, Wis., where he served as telegraph operator four years, beginning in 1880, then went to Theresa, Wis., on the same line of railroad, spending eight years in all in that business.

On May 16, 1883, at Sheridan, Wis., Mr. Brunner married Miss Edna Penney, a native of Farmington township, Waupaca county, and a daughter of William Penney. In the spring of 1888, having decided to give up his profession, he bought of Clayton Rice 110 acres of land in Sections 7 and 8, Farmington township, where he has since made his home. Our subject and his wife have three children: Irving Le Roy, Mabel and Myron P., but lost their first-born, a son. Mr. Brunner has always been a supporter of the Republican party, has served as township clerk, and supervisor one term each, discharging his duties in a capable and satisfactory manner. He belongs to the Evangelical Church, is a good farmer and well-to-do man, popular with friends and neighbors, and is a public-spirited and progressive citizen, one who withholds his co-operation from no enterprise that is calculated to prove of public benefit.

JOHN SCHMITT, one of the successful business men of Stevens Point, was born in Prussia, Germany, November 11, 1859. His grandparents, Gottlieb and Anna (Schoemer) Schmitt, were both natives of the same country, and there the father spent his entire life. He was a tailor by trade, in connection with which business he also followed dentistry, and there were several other doctors in the family. After his death his widow crossed the Atlantic to America, and spent her last days in Indiana; both passed away at an advanced age. The parents of our subject, Carl and Anna (Steuber) Schmitt, were natives of Germany, and the parents of three children: Peter, Carl and John. The father, who was a farmer by occupation, died when our subject was only eight years of age. The mother afterward became the wife of Nick Knop, and their children were Nick, Anna and Mary, the last two being at home. In 1881 Mr. Knop brought the family to the United States, landing at Philadelphia, Penn., whence he came direct to Stevens Point, where he and his wife still reside. By vocation he was a farmer, following that pursuit until his emigration.

When John Schmitt became a resident of Stevens Point he sought and obtained a situation with August Goerke, who at that time employed fifteen men. He continued his connection with that gentleman some ten years, and during the last three years was associated with him as a partner. In August, 1893, he withdrew from the firm to establish a business of his own, and has since conducted it alone; his trade has steadily increased, and he now employs nine men.

Like his parents, Mr. Schmitt is a member of the Catholic Church. In politics he is independent, preferring to give his entire time and attention to his business interests, in which he is meeting with a success that is well deserved.

JACOB HANSON was born August 9, 1850, in Denmark, and is a son of Hans Jensen, a farmer in comfortable circumstances who had a family of four sons that grew to mature years, the second son, Jacob, being the only one to come to America.

Our subject was reared upon a farm and attended the common schools until fourteen years of age, when he began to earn his own living, working for neighboring farmers. He heard much of the privileges and opportunities afforded young men in the United States, and wishing to test the truth of these reports, and secure a good home in America if possible, he left his native land April 27, 1867. Bidding adieu to home and friends, he sailed from Copenhagen to Hull, England, thence made his way by rail to Liverpool, where he took passage on a westward-bound vessel that reached Quebec after a voyage of seventeen days. From that place he went by rail to Oshkosh, Wis., by boat to Gill's Landing, and on foot came to Waupaca, where he had friends living. He was a stranger in a strange land, and could not speak one word of English; but he was willing to work at any employment that would yield him an honest living, and soon secured a position at cutting wood and slabs. He afterward worked for a year and a half with a farmer in Portage county, Wis.; but as his employer was Welsh and he was very anxious to learn the English language, he sought another position, where he could become familiar with the speech of the American people. He was thus employed until his marriage.

In 1876, in the city of Waupaca, he wedded Christina Peterson, a native of Denmark, who came to this country when a maiden of eleven summers. Her father, Peter Peterson, a farmer and fisherman by occupation, died in Denmark, and the mother afterward brought her family to the New World. Mr. Hanson spent the winter of 1873-4 in Waupaca, and in 1874 removed to a rented farm in Dayton township. He lived upon two rented farms in that township, and in 1880 leased his present farm in Section 32, Farmington township, which he purchased in 1883, contracting thereby an indebtedness of $700. The buildings were all greatly in need of repair, and the land was poorly cultivated, but to-day he has a valuable property, free from all financial encumbrance, with well-tilled fields, a good residence, substantial outbuildings and the other accessories of a model farm of the nineteenth century. He came to this country twenty-six years ago with no capital save an undaunted courage and laudable ambition; but, self-reliant and hopeful, he has steadily worked his way upward to prosperity.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hanson have been born five children: Caroline A., Edward P., Mattie E., Emma E. and Elmer J., all at home. The parents hold membership with the Lutheran Church, and in his political views Mr. Hanson has always been a Republican, never aspiring to office, however. He is the founder of his family in America, and his descendants in future years can point with pride to their progenitor, for he has lived an honorable and upright life.

JOHAN C. LEWIS is the senior member of the widely-known, enterprising firm of the J. C. Lewis Co., proprietors of a general hardware, crockery and farm machinery establishment in Antigo, Langlade county, the leading store of the kind in the city, he being manager and treasurer.

A native of Wisconsin, born July 8, 1856, in Columbia county, near the village of Cambria, he is a son of Hugh O. Lewis, who first saw the light July 30, 1830, in North Wales at the village of Elynin, in the parish of Prysgau. Our subject's grandfather, a farmer by occupation, died in Wales, leaving two children—Lewis and Hugh O.—the elder of whom inherited the estate and is still living there, his surname being Rees, which his five children also bear. Hugh O. Lewis, father of our subject, learned the trade of blacksmith in his native land, and at the age of twenty-one came to the United States, where, in New York, he took up his residence, having friends there, and worked at his trade. In that city he married Miss Elizabeth Jones, who was born in Llanbedr, near Harlech, Merionethshire, May 13, 1827, daughter of John and Jane Jones, who both died in the land of the Cymri. Her father was a school teacher, and also held some government office. His family consisted of one son—Robert, now a minister of the Gospel—and three daughters—Elizabeth, Jane and Ann—Elizabeth coming to America with friends. In the spring of 1856 Hugh O. Lewis and his wife came to Wisconsin, for a short time sojourning in Columbia county, near Cambria, and then removing into Portage, same county, where he established a blacksmith shop and agricultural implement depot, which he carried on until 1890, when he retired from business. His family numbered six children, as follows: Lewis H. (deceased in infancy), John C., Hugh G., Bennett R., Susie J. and Anna B. (now the wife of F. E. Moore, of Rhineland, Wis.) Politically, Hugh O. Lewis is a Republican, and for six years he served on the city board of Portage. In 1882 he paid a visit to his native Wales, and again in 1893, the first time alone, the second time accompanied by his wife and daughter.

John C. Lewis, the subject proper of these lines, received his education at the common and high schools of Portage, from which latter he graduated at the age of sixteen years. He then commenced an apprenticeship at the tinner's trade with J. E. Wells & Co., Portage, in whose employ he remained six and one-half years—in all three years at Portage and three and one-half years at Waupaca. In September, 1882, he came to Antigo, and in company with his brother-in-law, Wallace H. Lord, opened a hardware store there, the business being incorporated as a stock company January 26, 1889, under the corporate name of The J. C. Lewis Co., Mr. Lewis being manager and treasurer.

On November 2, 1881, Mr. Lewis was married at Waupaca to Miss Mattie Lord, of that city, daughter of George L. Lord, and the young couple then made their home in Merrill, Lincoln county, until moving to Antigo as above related. To this union have been born four children: Bessie E., J. Parish, Martha L. and Maelgwyn B. In his political preferences our subject has ever been a staunch Republican, and has always been prominently associated with the work of the party; he was supervisor the first year after the organization of Antigo as a city; served as county treasurer in 1887 and 1888, and has liberally and loyally done his share toward the building up of the young city. His company owns a fine block where their business is located, and he owns a handsome residence and other real estate. Socially, he is a thirty-second degree Freemason, and in Church relationship he and his amiable life partner are Episcopalians. The life of Mr. Lewis presents a striking example of industry and integrity, conducting to eminent success, and he commands and merits the general confidence and esteem of the community at large.

AMUND OLSEN is the owner of one of the finest farms in New Hope township, Portage county, where he has resided for over forty years, having settled in the township when it was only a sparsely settled wilderness.

Mr. Olsen is a native of Norway, born June 6, 1829, in Guldbrandsdal, son of Ole Johnson and Oster (Hansen), also natives of Norway, where Mr. Johnson followed farming all his life. They reared a family of five children, as follows: John, a farmer in Norway; Mary, living in Salt Lake City, Utah; Bertha, deceased; Ole, in Christiania, Norway; and Amund, the subject proper of these lines. The father of this family died about 1834, at the age of fifty-five.

Amund Olsen was reared to farming pursuits in his native land, and was married there, in 1845, to Mary Oleson, who was born in Norway, March 22, 1833, daughter of Ole and Allie (Knutsen) Nelson. This union has been blessed with children as follows, the three first named having been born in Norway: Ole, who married Anna Aslak, and lives on a farm in Minnesota; Edwin, who died in New Hope township, Portage Co., Wis., at the age of twenty-seven; Anna, who married John Waller, and died in the State of Washington; Mary, married and living in Chicago; Benjamin, a farmer in the State of Washington; Mina, Mrs. John Lee, living at home; Albert, at home; and John, who died at the age of seven. In the spring of 1853, with his wife and family—then consisting of three children—Mr. Olsen embarked on the sailing vessel "Argus," bound for Quebec, Canada, where they landed after a nine-weeks' voyage. Coming directly to New Hope township, Portage Co., Wis., he purchased eighty acres of new land, on which he built a log house, and he had his residence there until 1883, when he disposed of the property. During these years he was busily engaged clearing and cultivating his farm, the area of which he has increased by subsequent purchase to 240 acres, with good buildings and various other improvements. On selling this farm he invested in 160 acres of partly cleared land lying in Sections 2 and 3, New Hope township, where he has since had his home. Mr. Olsen has worked in the woods for thirteen winters, and for nine seasons he "ran the river," at times going as far south as St. Louis, Mo. He is what we may truly call a self-made man, for after paying passage money for himself and family to America he had but forty dollars with which to commence life on. Now he has a comfortable home and a productive farm, well situated and equipped with good buildings, and he is highly respected by all who know him as an honest, hard-working man, one who deserves the success which has attended him. In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Olsen are Lutherans, being members of the Norwegian Lutheran Church at New Hope.

CAPTAIN C. CALDWELL. One of the best known citizens of Waupaca county, and one whose name is familiar throughout the State of Wisconsin, is Capt. C. Caldwell, for over seven years superintendent of the Wisconsin Veterans Home, which is a most creditable State institution, and the pride of the G. A. R. It is situated in Farmington township. Capt. Caldwell has been pioneer, soldier, legislator, county official and farmer, and, in whatever sphere of public or private service his life has been cast, his actions have not only been above reproach, but signally meritorious, highly creditable to himself and pleasing beyond degree both to the public at large and to his own immediate constituents. He has had the happy faculty of retaining a wide popularity, and in the management of the Home has displayed notable efficiency.

Since the age of six years he has been a resident of Wisconsin, and, since nineteen, of Waupaca county. He was born in Charlotte township, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., September 25, 1830, son of Tyler C. and Mary (Warner) Caldwell, both natives of Rutland county, Vt., where Tyler was born July 11, 1798, son of Benjamin Caldwell, and Mary, his wife, the daughter of Capt. Warner (of the war of 1812), born October 9, 1804. Tyler and Mary Caldwell were married in Vermont, and subsequently migrated to Chautauqua county, N. Y. Their children were as follows: Columbia, who married Stephen P. Thresher, and died in California; Capt. C., subject of this sketch; Marietta, widow of Harvey S. Bowers, of Dayton township, Waupaca county; Sophia, who married George Campbell, and died in California; Emily, who was the wife of Augustus Chandler, and died in Iola township, Waupaca county; Harrison and Tyler (twins), who died in infancy.

In 1835 Tyler C. Caldwell made a preliminary trip from his home in Chautauqua county, N. Y., to Wisconsin, with a view of settling in that distant Territory. The same year his brother, Joseph Caldwell, had driven by team from his old home in Vermont to Wisconsin. Tyler met him at Racine, and together the brothers took up the first claims in what has since that time been known as "Caldwell's Prairie," in Racine county. Returning home, Tyler Caldwell in the following spring moved his family west, coming by boat from Buffalo to Kenosha, Wis., near which place the family lived for a time. This flourishing city was then a little settlement of three houses. Three years later the family removed up the Fox river to Rochester township, Racine county. Here they lived for ten years, and here Mr. Caldwell by contract built the first bridge over the Fox river, on the road from Racine to Janesville. In 1850 the pioneer family again moved northward, this time on a long and perilous journey, past the on-tops of civilization. By team they drove through the forests from Racine county to Waupaca county, and settled on what is now Section 22, Lind township. The land had not yet been surveyed by the government, and in building cabins and making clearings the pioneers were obliged to trust to Providence that section lines and roads would not interfere with the primitive habitations. When Waupaca county was first organized, in 1851, Tyler C. Caldwell was elected chairman of the town board, and in that capacity helped to divide the county into eight road districts, and to organize various towns. He was a prominent pioneer. Desiring to revisit his aged mother and the scenes of his childhood, he took a trip to Vermont in January, 1861, and a week after his arrival died in the home in which he was born. His mother lived to the age of 101 years, and his widow died in February, 1888, at the age of eighty-four years. Tyler Caldwell was a Whig in politics, later a Republican, voting for John C. Fremont. He was a great admirer of Henry Clay and Daniel Webster.

Capt. C. Caldwell at the age of eight years began driving a yoke of cattle, breaking the primitive prairie, receiving $10 per month for his services. For thirteen summers he followed this occupation. He reached Waupaca on his first visit October 28, 1849, coming up the river by skiff from Winneconne. His opportunities for education were meager, and his youth was employed clearing land, making shingles, and occasionally in shooting deer, prairie chickens and other game in which the country abounded. In February, 1852, with his brother-in-law, Stephen P. Thresher, he started for California by the new overland route, crossing the Missouri river May 11, reaching California July 28. For seven years he remained on the coast, engaged in gold mining and other pursuits. Returning to Wisconsin, in 1859, via the Isthmus and New York City, he resumed farming in Lind township. He was married at Weyauwega, November 21, 1861, to Mary L. Taggart, a native of New York and daughter of George W. Taggart, who, in 1837, migrated to Racine county, Wis., and about 1850 settled in Waupaca county.

On December 6, 1861, he enlisted in Company M, First Wisconsin Cavalry, a company which he was largely instrumental in raising. The regiment was ordered to Missouri, and first saw active service at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and the first active engagement at Chalk Bluffs, Mo., May 15, 1862. It did efficient service in ridding Missouri and Arkansas of the bushwhackers which overran that country during the earlier years of the war. In Missouri Private Caldwell was commissioned quartermaster of the regiment, and when it was ordered to join Gen. Rosecrans' army at Mufreesboro, Tenn., in the fall of 1862, he had received his commission as second lieutenant. Participating in the campaign about Mufreesboro, the regiment accompanied the army on to Chickamauga, and after the battle there it recrossed the river into Tennessee and proceeded toward Knoxville. In October, 1863, Capt. Caldwell was taken sick, and after a week spent in the Nashville hospital was sent home "to die," arriving in November. But by March 1, 1864, he had sufficiently recovered to return to his regiment, rejoining it at Cleveland, Tenn., March 20; while in charge of twenty-five men on detached duty he and nineteen of his little squad were captured on the "Ducktown road," twelve miles east of Cleveland, by Gen. Wheeler, now member of Congress from Alabama, and then in command of Rebel cavalry. He was sent to Andersonville, then to jail at Macon, Ga., thence to Savannah, one and a half miles, thence to Charleston, S. C., where they were put under fire while the Union army was shelling the city; then to Columbia, S. C., Raleigh, N. C., and Goldsboro, remaining a prisoner until exchanged, March 1, 1865. The day after his capture his commission as captain arrived at the regiment headquarters. He had been acting captain for some time, but never served actively under his commission. Imprisonment and the treatment received in confinement so broke down his health that what had been a fine specimen of humanity, six feet one inch in height, 190 pounds in weight, was a weak emaciated being, unable to even walk. Capt. Caldwell was sent home on a thirty-days' furlough, after spending two weeks at Annapolis, Md., and while he was still in Lind township Richmond fell and the war was practically over. He was honorably discharged from Camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio, May 15, 1865. Though in many battles, Capt. Caldwell was never wounded, but his health, by sickness and subsequent imprisonment, had been completely shattered.

Returning to his farm in Lind township, he superintended its operation, though himself physically unable to work. His fellow citizens soon honored him with a number of important offices. For two years he was clerk of Lind township, and for the same period member of the school board. He was elected register of deeds of Waupaca county in 1867, and while serving in that capacity he was also elected a member of Waupaca's city council. In 1870, he was elected assessor of Waupaca city and township. Returning to Lind township, in 1871, he partially resumed farming, though still not rugged in health, serving two terms as chairman. In 1872, and again in 1873, he was elected to the Wisconsin Legislature. In 1880 he was member of a building committee of five appointed by the Waupaca city council to erect the court house which was completed two years later. In the fall of 1882 he was elected superintendent of the county poor by the county board, and removed to the County Infirmary. He served here five years, lacking one month, when he resigned, December 1, 1887, to accept his present position as superintendent of the Wisconsin Veterans Home.

The children of Capt. Caldwell by his first wife are Minnie L., a school teacher at Baraboo, Wis., and Ida S., a clerk, at home. Mrs. Caldwell died January 6, 1866, and for his second wife he married her sister, Ida J. Taggart, the children by this marriage being George T., an electrician; Warner F., of Saxeville, Waushara county; Otis L., an engineer and electrician; Beatrix L., attending school at New London; and Eunice, at home. Mrs. Caldwell is the very successful matron of the Veterans Home. Capt. Caldwell is a Republican in politics, and from his long career in public life he has made a wide acquaintanceship throughout the county. He is prominent in G. A. R. circles, and to his children he has given exceptional educational advantages. Public-spirited, genial, able, he is an honor to the county and to the State which he now officially and humanely represents.

DAVID MORGAN. Those who win for themselves success through honorable business dealings, perseverance and enterprise are the men to whom a county owes its prosperity and progress, and such an one is the subject of this memoir. A native of Sheboygan county, Wis., he was born April 1, 1852, and is a son of William and Elizabeth (Reynolds) Morgan, both of whom were natives of Ireland, in which country they became the parents of one child, Thomas. With their little son they crossed the ocean to Canada, and about 1850 removed to Sheboygan county, Wis., where they lived on a farm until their removal to Manitowoc county. They afterward spent one year in Calumet county, where in the spring of 1861 William Morgan enlisted in the Union army as a member of Company K, Fourth Wis. V. I. Being taken sick he started home, but at Fond du Lac became suddenly worse and there died. His remains were interred in the cemetery at Chilton, Calumet county. He left a widow, three daughters and four sons, the eldest two sons being at that time in the army. A brief record of his children is as follows; Thomas is now a farmer of Portage county, Wis.; William died, in 1889, in California, whither he had gone for his health; Ellen became the wife of Frank Powers, and died in Wausau, Wis.; Reynolds died at the age of twenty-one; Mary Ann is the deceased wife of Ed Ross, of Farmington township; Elizabeth is the wife of D. A. Ross, of Waupaca, Wisconsin.

At the time of the father's death the family lived on a small farm in Calumet county, and during the mother's lifetime she kept the children at home; but in 1865 she was called to her final rest, and was interred by the side of her husband. He was a Republican in politics, and they were Presbyterians in religious belief. The children thus left without father or mother were kindly taken care of by neighboring families. After his father's death, David, then only eleven years old, cared for the farm, and in consequence his educational privileges were very limited, he attending only the common country schools. After his mother's death he went to live with George Oram, a farmer, with whom he remained two years, and the winter before he was fourteen years of age he was employed in the lumber regions. Each winter was thus passed for some time, and in summer months he engaged in farm work, thus securing a start in life.

On December 9, 1873, in Portage county, near Stevens Point, Mr. Morgan was united in marriage with Phoebe Ross, a native of Jefferson county, N. Y., and a daughter of Amasa Ross, one of the early settlers of Farmington township, Waupaca county. Near Mill Creek in Portage county, Mr. Morgan established his young wife in their new home, and there worked in sawmills until the fall of 1875, when he purchased in Section 18, Farmington township, eighty acres of land, only twenty of which were cleared. For many winters after that he continued to work in the lumber regions, in the summer months clearing and developing his farm, and since 1888 has devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits. He now owns 120 acres of valuable land, ninety of which is highly cultivated, and upon the place are good buildings and many other improvements which were placed there by the owner. The delightful home is situated on an elevation, which commands a view for miles around, and it is brightened by the presence of two children, Jennie, born September 3, 1883, and William D., born October 21, 1885. Mr. Morgan always supports the Republican party by his ballot, and is a charter member of Tent No. 7, K. M. of Sheridan.

HENRY H. WILKE, one of the leading business men of Waupaca county, is carrying on a furniture and undertaking establishment in Clintonville. He erected a good, two-story brick-veened block, 26 x 95 feet, in 1889, the upper portion of which is used as the Masonic Hall, while in the lower story he carries on business, and has a full and complete line of everything found in a first-class establishment of the kind. He came to Clintonville in 1887, and was first engaged in painting and paper hanging, but shortly afterward opened his present store.

Mr. Wilke was born in Ashford township, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., in 1857, and is a son of Christian and Maggie (Kirbel) Wilke. The father is a native of Prussia, and his parents, William and Minnie Wilke, were of the same nativity, emigrating to America in 1848, and coming to Fond du Lac county, Wis., where they settled on land in the midst of the wilderness, opening up a farm, where they made their home until their death, the father dying in 1864, the mother in 1850. Christian Wilke was an only child, and was but seventeen years of age on his arrival in Wisconsin. He was married in Fond du Lac county, where his wife had been reared, though she was a native of Hesse, Germany, and had migrated to that county with her father, who was one of its first settlers. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilke were born eight children: Mary, who died in 1891, in Washington county, Wis. (she was the wife of Charley Rhinehart); Henry H., our subject; Katie, wife of John Chantz, of New London, Wis.; Christian, who died in February, 1894, at New London; Minnie and Yetto, both at home; Willie, married and living in New London; and Charley, carrying on the home farm.

The early life of Henry H. Wilke was passed in Fond du Lac county, Wis., where he received his education in the schools of Ashford township, and there learned the trade of painting and paper hanging. He afterward went to Plymouth, Wis., where he engaged in carriage painting, which trade he followed for about fourteen years in Fond du Lac county. After coming to Clintonville, he had a partner, Richard Korb, for a time in the furniture business, but since 1891 has been alone. In 1887 he was married in Auburn township, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., to Miss Emma Pearschber, a native of that township, and a daughter of John and ——— (Bohlan) Pearschber, who were born in Hesse, Germany, becoming early pioneers of Fond du Lac county. The father enlisted in that county for the Civil war, serving some time, and on the old home farm he and his wife now reside. The union of our subject has been blessed with two children: Gracie and John Herbert.

Mr. Wilke is one of the honored native sons of Wisconsin, and has seen its development from an almost unbroken wilderness until it now ranks among the leading States of the Union. He is a Republican in politics, and holds membership with Clintonville Lodge, No. 197, F. & A. M., with Clintonville Lodge, No. 314, I. O. O. F., of which he has served as treasurer, and also with the Modern Woodmen of America. Mrs. Wilke is a consistent member of and active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Our subject is prompt and reliable in business transactions, and has won the respect and confidence of the people of Clintonville and vicinity.

HENRY SALES, one of the most highly respected citizens of Merrill, Lincoln county, is prominently connected with one of the leading business interests of the State—that of lumbering. He was born in Yorkshire, England, May 10, 1839, and is a son of Zachariah and Elizabeth (Alsap) Sales, who were natives of the same country, and parents of the following children: Elizabeth, George, Samuel, Zachariah, Charles, Rebecca and Henry. In 1845, accompanied by their family, Zachariah and his wife crossed the Atlantic to Canada, settling in Ontario, where the father secured a farm. There the parents spent their remaining days, the mother passing away in 1849, the father in 1855.

Henry Sales remained at home until his parents' death, working with his father, who was a carpenter by trade. His educational advantages were very limited, and his other privileges were somewhat meager. In 1856 he became a resident of the village of Jennie, now Merrill, Wis., which at that time contained but one mill and a country store. Here he secured employment in the lumber woods during the winter season, and in the summer months was employed in the mills; also worked as a pilot on the river, for all lumber was then floated down stream to the Mississippi. He continued in the employ of one firm for nine years, logging and running lumber on the river, and each winter since his arrival until the season of 1894-95 has found him in the lumber camps. During the past three winters he has been connected in business with Mr. Finn. He has often employed as many as one hundred men, and his opinions concerning lumbering are received as authority.

In Merrill, in 1865, Mr. Sales was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Herman, who was born in Norway in 1844, daughter of Herman and Dorothy Oleson, who had a family of five children: Anna, Ole, Ellen, Peter and Herman. The father, who is a farmer, in 1862 brought his family to America, locating upon a farm in Waupaca county, Wis., where he yet makes his home. Mr. and Mrs. Sales have one child, George Henry, who is living with them. He married Nellie Gillmartin, who was born in Ripon, Wis., and is a daughter of Mark and Catherine (Cone) Gillmartin, who were born, reared and married in Ireland. They became the parents of six children: James, Maggie, Sarah, Catherine, Nellie and Rose. The father of this family served four years in the Union army during the Civil war, and died in 1880. His widow is still living. George Henry Sales has one child, Bessie. The subject of this sketch also has an adopted daughter, Nellie, who came to them when a little child of six summers, and has been an inmate of their home for fourteen years.

Mr. Sales owns a fine residence one mile from Merrill, a commodious brick structure which is situated in the midst of a valuable farm of eighty acres. He holds membership with the I. O. O. F.; in politics is a Republican, and has served for six years as chairman of the county board of supervisors, yet has never been an office seeker, preferring to devote his time and attention to his business interests, in which he has met with good success.

GEORGE W. RILEY is the owner of a valuable farm of 200 acres in Section 23, Dayton township, Waupaca county. He possesses good business ability, and his successful management of affairs has made him one of the substantial farmers of the community. Much of the land is under a high state of cultivation, the place is divided into fields of convenient size, and good buildings add to its value and thrifty appearance.

Pennsylvania claims Mr. Riley as her son, his birth having occurred in Luzerne county, March 3, 1847. He is the eldest son and sixth child in the family of Elijah and Mary (Horton) Riley, and during his boyhood he accompanied his parents on their emigration to Wisconsin. In the usual manner of farmer lads he was reared to manhood, beginning work in the fields as soon as he was old enough to follow the plow. To his father he gave the benefit of his services until twenty years of age, when he went to the lumber woods and carried on operations along that line for thirteen consecutive winters, also "ruming the river," going down the Wisconsin and Mississippi. During the first season he was acknowledged to be an expert at this hazardous task, but it is characteristic of Mr. Riley that whatever he does, he does well.

On October 26, 1879, in Dayton township, was George W. Riley married to Mittie Lewis, who was born July 4, 1862, daughter of Alonzo and Harriet (Clark) Lewis. Her father, a farmer by occupation, claimed Vermont as the State of his nativity, and died in Waupaca county, April 30, 1888, his remains being interred in Crystal Lake Cemetery. His widow has since married James W. Barker, and is now living in Lind township, Waupaca county. Mr. and Mrs. Riley have one son, Clarence A., born July 22, 1881.

At the time of his marriage our subject owned eighty acres of land near Eatons Corners, and in March, 1886, he removed to a farm of 160 acres in Section 23, Dayton township. Later he disposed of a part of this, but afterward bought until he now has 200 acres, and with the exception of two winters spent at lumbering and on the river, has continuously followed farming. In his political affiliations he is a stalwart Republican, and with the school interests of the community has been officially connected. The architect of his own fortunes, he has built wisely and well, and has reared to his credit a monument of prosperity.

JOHNN TYRRELL was born November 25, 1855, in Cleveland, Ohio, and is a son of John and Mary (Le Grue) Tyrrell, and a younger brother of George Tyrrell, also a farmer of Bear Creek township, Waupaca county.

Our subject lived at home up to the age of twenty years, or until after the family had located in Bear Creek township. He engaged in the woods as a teamster, driving cattle, and followed that work for seventeen winters, from the time he was fourteen years of age. When fourteen he cut 150 cedar posts in a day—in fact did a man's work, and for five springs he followed the business of cook on the river. On June 1, 1878, John Tyrrell was united in marriage with Clara Bennett, daughter of John Bennett, a hotelkeeper of Iola, Wis. After his marriage Mr. Tyrrell remained at home with his father five months, then went to New London, Waupaca county, and worked in the woods during the winter, after which he was cook for his brother George. After remaining at New London six months he returned and built a house on his father's farm, where he lived, however, but six months. He then went to Marshall, Minn., and engaged with his brother-in-law, Lou Cram. Remaining there one year, he returned home and went to work on his father's farm, cutting cedar timber and telegraph poles. Again he went as cook on the river, and followed this occupation until 1885.

In 1881, while at Marshall, Minn., Mr. Tyrrell was separated from his first wife, and April 30, 1887, he was married, in Minnesota, to Maggie Clever. They returned to Bear Creek, Waupaca county, together, and he was employed by his father one year farming and threshing. Then he went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, remained one year, returned and was employed in the woods again one winter. For the next three years he worked a farm on shares, and in 1893 bought of C. A. Davis, for three thousand five hundred dollars, eighty acres of improved land, with good buildings. He has two children: Leta, born April 24, 1891, and a son, born February 14, 1894. Politically Mr. Tyrrell has always supported the Republican party, and he was elected justice of the peace in the spring of 1894.

SAMUEL V. WILMOT is one of the honored pioneers of Portage county, and is familiar with its history from the days when this was a frontier settlement, its lands wild and unimproved and its few homes widely scattered. In the work of progress and upbuilding he has always borne his part, and well does he deserve mention among the founders of the county.

Mr. Wilmot was born in Tioga township, Tioga Co., Penn., January 15, 1821, and is a son of Uriah and Delilah (Cook) Wilmot. His father was born in the town of Farmington, Hartford Co., Conn., September 20, 1786, and at the age of seventeen started with a horse and cart, traveling through New York and the Southern States, selling notions, being generally called by his customers "the Yankee Peddler." In his travels through New York, he became acquainted with the lady whom he afterward married. They located upon a farm in Tioga county, Penn., and when war broke out, in connection with his father-in-law, he enlisted under Gen. William Henry Harrison, doing duty in northern New York, Ohio and Indiana. In 1821 he located with his family in Tioga township, Tioga Co., Penn., where he engaged in farming and in operating a sawmill until 1843, when he emigrated to Boone county, Ill., accompanied by his son, Samuel, and his family. In July, 1844, the others of the family came to the West, and in 1853 Uriah Wilmot settled in Portage county, Wis., securing eighty acres of land in Section 34, Amherst township, with a land warrant that was granted him by the government for services rendered in the war of 1812. There he lived until his death which occurred in 1860; his wife died on the old home farm in 1858. Their children were Amanda, widow of Edward Wright and the mother of eight children; David, who wedded Mary Jane Allen, and is now deceased; Eliza, who became the wife of David Allen, and both are now deceased; Phoebe, deceased wife of Chauncey German, of Michigan, by whom she had thirteen children, twelve of them reaching mature years; Samuel V., subject of sketch; George (deceased), married to Caroline White, who is now living in Merrill, Wis., and has five children born of their union; Joel, who died in Pennsylvania in boyhood; John, who married Maria Rockefeller, and is living with his wife and four children in Amherst, Wis.; Hester A. (1), who died in childhood; and Hester A. (2), now the wife of Irvin Pike, of Stevens Point, Wis., by whom she has three children.

The educational privileges of Samuel V. Wilmot were very limited, he attending the district school in his native town during the winter of 1840-1. His father's family was large and their means limited, so at the age of six he went to live with his grandfather Cook, with whom he remained until sixteen years of age, when he ran away and joined the circus that had been giving a performance in Jackson, Penn. Being a great "tumbler" and good acrobat, he easily secured an engagement, but not satisfied with that life after a week he returned to his grandfather. A few weeks later he went to Ithaca, N. Y., and engaged as a coachman with a retired New York merchant who had built a summer home in that town, receiving $10 per month. A year later he returned to Pennsylvania, where he engaged in the lumber business on a small scale until his marriage, with the exception of two winters spent in school.

In Jackson, Tioga Co., Penn., October 6, 1842, Mr. Wilmot wedded Miss Emily Wylie, daughter of David and Elizabeth (Jarvis) Wylie, the former a native of Pennsylvania, the later of Canada, both now deceased. The grandparents, Simon and Elizabeth (Buck) Wylie, were of Scotch descent, and the former served in the Revolutionary war. David Wylie was a farmer, and by his marriage had the following children: Caroline and Wilhelmina (twins), Emily, Millicent and Donald. After the death of the father the mother married Melancton Wylie, brother of her first husband, and their children were Mary, Lydia and Frank.

Upon his marriage, Mr. Wilmot purchased 150 acres of land, eighteen of which were cleared; but after a time it was proved that this property really belonged to some English gentlemen and not to the one of whom he had bought, and he had to pay for it a second time. He operated that farm until 1843, when, with his family, he started by wagon to Buffalo, thence went by water to Chicago, where he hired a team and wagon to convey his household effects to Boone county, Ill. The mud was so bad around Chicago that the men of the party had to carry the ladies, crossing their hands in "chair fashion," and stopping to rest whenever they reached a dry spot. On reaching his destination, Mr. Wilmot, in order to pay for his team, was forced to sell a rifle, for which he had paid $25, receiving only $10 for it. He worked on a farm until February, 1845, when he went to Stevens Point, Wis., at that time containing only one house. There he left his wife, while he went further north and engaged in making shingles. In March she returned to her father's family in Illinois, and Mr. Wilmot joined her in June, there continuing until February, 1850, when he purchased a farm of 160 acres in Section 34, Amherst township, Portage Co., Wis. In July he brought his family to Portage county, and here began life in earnest. He added to his original purchase forty acres, and soon transformed his land into a rich and valuable farm. Mr. Wilmot's maternal grandfather and great-grandfather were Revolutionary soldiers, the former entering the army at the age of sixteen, while the latter served as one of Gen. Washington's body guards. With the blood of these heroes flowing in his veins, the spirit of patriotism was aroused in Mr. Wilmot when the South threatened secession, and in 1861 he joined the Third Wisconsin Cavalry; his foot, however, had been injured in a threshing machine in Illinois, and in consequence he was not accepted for service, but his loyalty to the Union was never questioned.

A brief record of the children of our subject is as follows: Elizabeth, born August 6, 1845, married Christian Morse, now deceased, and they had three children—Bertha, Charles and Samuel (she is now living with her second husband, Hayes Aldridge, in Amherst, and their children are Raymond and Chester); Wilhelmina, born May 29, 1849, became the wife of Asa Penny, and their children were Irene, Floyd, Le Roy and Minnie (after the death of her first husband she married Henry Clinton, and they are now living in Amherst Junction); Mary E., born July 31, 1854, was the wife of George Mitchell, of Amherst, and died leaving one son, Harry; Frank M., died in infancy; Walter, born June 6, 1857, married Lindy Penny, and their children are Harry, Elida, Bessie, Myrl, Kitty and Nellie; Arthur, born August 20, 1861, married Millie Olson, and with their children—Glenn, L. Earle and Genevieve—they live with his parents; Frank M., is deceased; Fred, born June 20, 1873, died February 4, 1882.

Mr. Wilmot served as town treasurer in 1853 and 1854, the first time taxes were collected in Amherst township, was constable in 1855, and for a number of years has served on the school board. In politics he is a Republican. In early life he and his wife held membership with the Methodist Church, but are now members of the United Brethern Church. He has lived in harmony with his professions, is honorable and upright, and his many excellencies of character have gained for him the confidence and esteem of a large circle of friends.

MATHIAS WAGNER was born March 22, 1852, in Kempfeld, Prussia, in the Rhine Province of Germany, and is a son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Neisus) Wagner. The father was a weaver by trade, and thus supported his family, which numbered eleven sons and one daughter. The parents both died in their native land. Our subject, who is the youngest child in the family, attended the public schools until fourteen years of age, when he began learning the trade of a brewer, which he followed for one year and eleven months. He then concluded to give up the business and come to the United States, where he hoped to better his financial condition and secure a good home. He had already saved some money, but being in his minority could not get possession of it, so his foreman advanced him the necessary sum, taking his back wages as security.

On April 22, 1868, Mr. Wagner bade good-by to home and friends, and from Liverpool took passage on a steamer bound for New York, where he arrived sixteen days later. Washington county, Wis., was his destination, his two brothers, William and Philip, being located there. At Young America he worked at the blacksmith's trade for two years, learning the business. When he arrived here he had no capital, save a strong heart and a pair of willing hands, and could not speak a word of English. When he had learned the business he followed blacksmithing a year, and upon the death of his brother William he found himself in charge of the shop. He remained in Young America until 1873, and then went to Milwaukee, where he worked at his trade in the ship shops for some six months, removing then to Barton, Washington county, where his brother Philip had located in the meantime. There he was employed until 1874, when he went to Peoria, Ill., and carried on blacksmithing until April, returning then to Barton. The Chicago & North Western railroad had just been completed, and looking for a favorable opening along its line, Mr. Wagner at length bought a lot and built a smithy at Fond du Lac. He had no capital, but his credit was good, and he was even forced to borrow $5 to buy his tools. For over four years he successfully conducted his shop there.

During this time Mr. Wagner was married in Campbellsport, Wis., July 22, 1876, to Miss Mary Meyer, who was born in Fond du Lac county, daughter of Philip Meyer, a farmer. In 1878 he sold out and removed his family to Bonduel, Shawano county, where he has since successfully engaged in business. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Wagner has been blessed with nine children: Annie (who is serving as postmistress at Bonduel), Matilda, Mathias, Adolph, Willie and Mary, at home; Christian, who died in infancy; Oscar at home; and Arthur, who died at the age of two and a half years. In 1880 Mr. Wagner erected a tasty and commodious brick residence near his shop, and there lived happily until November 28, 1894, when his elegant home, his barn, blacksmith shop, wagon shop and wood shed were all destroyed by fire, causing a loss of about seven thousand dollars. Thus the accumulated savings of many years were swept away within a few minutes. Many another man of less resolute purpose would have been discouraged, but with the same cheerful and courageous spirit that has always characterized him, Mr. Wagner began to rebuild and to retrieve his lost possessions. In 1890, in partnership with Theo Meyer, he built a steam flouring-mill, in which he still retains an interest. He is a man of good business and executive ability, and by his fair and honorable dealing has won a reputation of which he may be justly proud.

Politically, Mr. Wagner has always been a Democrat, and a staunch supporter of the party principles. He was appointed postmaster at Bonduel, and the building erected purposely to serve as an office was destroyed by fire with his other property. He then erected the one in which the post office is now located. He has for some time served as school director, and takes a deep interest in everything pertaining to the advancement of the cause of education, but has declined all other offices, preferring to give his time and attention to his business. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, Mr. Wagner being leader of the choir.

ROBERT H. JOHNSON, editor and proprietor of The Central Wisconsin, Wausau, Marathon county, has for twenty-nine years been actively identified with the interests of Wausau and vicinity. He was born March 20, 1846, in Milwaukee, Wis., son of Robert H. and Catherine (Ben) Johnson, who were both born in Ireland of well-to-do-families. Robert H. Johnson, Sr., who was an architect, died in 1858; his wife in 1851.

After the death of his father, Robert H. Johnson was placed in the care of his grandfather and aunt, and entered school at Notre Dame University, South Bend, Ind. Before he was sixteen years of age, in company with a fellow student, he ran away to Chicago to enlist as a soldier in the Union army, during the war of the Rebellion. On February 2, 1862, he was enrolled at Camp Douglas as a member of Company A, Fifty-eighth Ill. V. I., and in February, 1862, the regiment broke camp to report at Cairo, Ill., after which it was on the Ohio and Cumberland rivers. The Fifty-eighth was actively engaged in the siege of Fort Donelson until the capture of the fort, and were especially prominent in the battle of the 14th and the next day, suffering severely from the fire of a masked battery. The men had been without rations from Friday until Sunday morning, and their arms were almost worthless, yet notwithstanding all this they behaved with the coolness and discipline of veterans. They were at Shiloh where they again had their ranks depleted, mostly by capture; at the siege and capture of Corinth, at the battle of Iuka and at the second battle of Corinth, in September, passed the winter near Vicksburg, was with Gen. Sherman on his Meridian raid, and after the skirmishes and actions about that city were terminated went on the Tupelo expedition.

In June, 1864, Mr. Johnson veteranized in the field, and took his furlough to Wausau. The first active operations in which he afterward participated were in the Oxford raid, followed by the chase of Price, in the spring, through Missouri into Kansas. Returning, they went on another expedition, and were afterward assigned to the Red River expedition. Mr. Johnson was in the attack at Fort de Russy, and on its capitulation was one of the first to mount the parapet and, with the color-bearer, plant the Union flag over this Rebel stronghold. He fought in the actions at Pleasant Hill, Cloutierville and Marks-ville; was with the regiment when it was sent to aid Gen. Thomas at Nashville in December, and took a hand in the dispersion of Hood's army. After Nashville he was detailed as orderly on the staff of Surgeon Henry M. Crawford, and afterward as orderly on the staff of Gen. Gerard; also participated in the battle of Fort Blakely and capture of Mobile. Immediately after the capture of Mobile he was made special orderly at the headquarters of Maj. Gen. Charles R. Wood, commander of the department of Alabama. After a service in the army of four years and two months he was honorably discharged at Mobile, Ala., April 1, 1866, just after he was twenty years of age. Returning to civil life he went to Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., in April, 1866, attended school, and later accepted employment at logging, running the river, working in sawmills, and so forth.

On October 14, 1868, Mr. Johnson became the owner by purchase of The Central Wisconsin, the oldest paper in northern and central Wisconsin, which was established in 1857, and which he has since conducted, now occupying No. 303 Third street. This journal had been devoted to the interests of the Democratic party, but under his ownership was changed to support the Republican cause. He enlarged the paper, and under his energetic business and editorial management and political sagacity, it soon occupied a leading position among the newspapers of this part of Wisconsin, his steadfast, undeviating and energetic support of Republican principles making both the paper and its editor a power in the politics of the State. Since the time his ownership commenced the business has steadily increased, so that the building occupied was inadequate, and a larger space was needed. In 1880 Mr. Johnson erected a two-story brick block on Third street, fitted with modern appliances for the business, including steam power, which it was the first office in this part of the State to use, and moved into it. He is also the owner of a well-appointed and comfortably furnished home on the corner of Grant and Sixth streets, which he built in 1875, and has adorned it from time to time to suit the fancy of the household so as to make life the more enjoyable. It is located in one of the most pleasant parts of the city, and always presents a cheerful and hospitable appearance.

On December 25, 1875, Robert H. Johnson married Caroline Alban, by whom he has had the following named children: Clara Marie, Robert H., Cora and Laurence; Cora died in 1882, aged about one year. The parents of Mrs. Johnson were Col. James S. and Clara Alban, of Plover, Portage Co., Wis.; Col. Alban was commander of the Eighteenth Wis. V. I., and led his regiment in the battle of Shiloh, in which engagement he was killed.

During the campaign of 1884 Mr. Johnson issued the first daily paper ever printed in the Upper Wisconsin Valley. For two years he also published a paper printed in the German language, suspending it when its purpose was accomplished. On January 13, 1876, he was appointed postmaster at Wausau by President Grant; on January 8, 1880, he was reappointed by President Hayes, and by President Arthur February 8, 1884. He was retired by President Cleveland in February, 1885, for "offensive partisanship." Before this, however, he had held the appointment of internal revenue gauger for the Sixth District of Wisconsin. In August, 1890, he was appointed special agent of the United States Interior Department to collect statistics of manufactures at Wausau, Wis., and served until the work was completed. On December 11, 1890, he was appointed United States land agent at Wausau, and served until July 1, 1893, being removed by President Cleveland because he was a Republican. His accounts balanced exactly, to a cent. Socially, Mr. Johnson is a member of Lysander Cutler Post, G. A. R., of Wausau, of which he has been vice-commander and commander.

BRADLEY W. PULLING was born February 4, 1860, on Pulling's Island, which is located in Fox Lake, and forms part of the territory comprised within the boundaries of Dodge county, Wis. For some generations the family have resided in America, although the ancestors were originally of French birth, and the lineage can be traced back to the time of the French Reformation, when members of the family fled from France and sought homes in America. The grandfather of our subject, Bradley Pulling, was a prominent physician and surgeon of Genesee county, N. Y. While performing a surgical operation, on one occasion, he cut his thumb and blood-poisoning ensued, causing his untimely death at the age of forty-eight. In his family were three children: David J., Bradley and Nannie, the latter being now the widow of Judge Lanning, of Buffalo, New York.

The father of our subject was born in Genesee county, N. Y., in 1814, and acquired an excellent education, while on current events of the day he was always well informed, for he read and studied extensively, and possessed a retentive memory. He took up the study of law as a life work, but subsequently devoted his energies to other interests. He was first married in New York to Mary Smith, and they had three children, of whom two died in infancy, while the third, William J., is now a successful business man of Minneapolis, Minn. In 1845, after the death of his wife, the father came to the West, locating in Fox Lake, Wis. He then abandoned the practice of his profession for a time and embarked in merchandising; also purchased an island in Fox Lake, 160 acres in extent, which is now a summer resort of considerable note, known as Pulling's Island. At the time of his purchase only Indians lived there, but he soon began its improvement and made it a place of beauty. Subsequently he resumed the practice of law, and became one of the best known members of the bar in his section of the State, while for twenty-four years he was the able and honored judge of the Third Judicial Circuit of Wisconsin. His rulings on the bench were the result of careful thought and deliberation, the close deductions of evidence, and his addresses to juries were logical and masterful. In 1883 he resigned his position. In 1850 he again married, in Fox Lake, the lady of his choice being Miss Susan Webster, who was born in New Haven, Conn., and came to the West with her father, Martin Webster, her mother having died in the East. In the family were two sons, William and Henry, and two daughters, Susan and Jennie. Mr. Webster made farming his life work, and his labors on earth were ended in 1883. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Pulling, viz.: Martin, David, Bradley W., Fred H., and Smith B. In 1887 Judge Pulling and his wife removed to Florida, where he had purchased interests in orange and lemon groves, also in a tobacco plantation, and there in the sunny South he is spending the closing years of an honorable, upright life.

Bradley W. Pulling, whose name introduces this review, obtained his literary education in the schools of Oshkosh, and under his mother's instruction, but like many boys he did not care for the common branches of learning. At the age of eighteen he began the study of law, and after three years of thorough preparation was admitted to the bar on attaining his majority. Previous to this time he had taken up the study of music with the intention of making it a profession, but subsequently abandoned it and entered an insurance office with which he was connected for some time. After his admission to the bar, he opened an office and began practice in Oshkosh, Wis., then engaged with others in the real-estate business, he looking after the legal part of their affairs. In 1883 he went to Wausau, Wis., where in connection with law practice he engaged in real-estate dealing until 1890, when he came to Marshfield, and organized the Marshfield Land Company, of which he is manager. He has made a special study of real-estate values, and is thoroughly informed on everything connected with the business, so that he is enabled to buy and sell advantageously.

On July 8, 1884, Mr. Pulling was united in marriage with Emma Bouldrie, daughter of Nathan M. and Emma (Seamons) Bouldrie, who were natives of Massachusetts, and are now residents of Waupun, Wis. Their family numbered three children: Emma, William and Archie L., of whom William is deceased. The father was one of the honored veterans of the Civil war, who valiantly aided in the defense of the Union, and in the service was badly wounded. Mr. and Mrs. Pulling have an interesting family of three children: Howard E., Dorothy and Marie. The parents are members of the Episcopal Church, and in social circles hold an enviable position, their friends in the community being many. In politics, Mr. Pulling is a stalwart Republican, but has never been an office seeker.

WILLIAM E. PIPE, one of the substantial farmers of Portage county, is a native of Wisconsin, born March 25, 1856, in the town of Vinland, Winnebago county, a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Stickland) Pipe.

Thomas Pipe was born September 24, 1827, in Dongett, Somersetshire, England. In 1850, accompanied by his brother John V., who brought his family, he came to America, and the brothers settled in Greece Center, N. Y. On May 18, 1848, in Tarcombe Church, John V. Pipe had married Miss Elizabeth Stickland, and their two sons, John S. and Thomas, accompanied them to America; two other children were born to them in Greece Center, N. Y.,—Frank and Mary E. In October, 1850, Thomas Pipe came west, and located in Vinland, Wis. Wishing to return to England on business, J. V. Pipe took passage March 1, 1854, on the ill-fated steamer "City of Glasgow," which went down in mid-ocean with all on board.

After the death of his brother, Thomas Pipe visited the widow in her eastern home, and she accompanied him to Wisconsin. They were married in Vinland, June 24, 1855, and the following children were born to them: William E., whose name introduces this sketch; Florence I.; Effie A., and Charlotte E., born August 23, 1865, and died November 1, 1870. On February 28, 1857, they located on a farm in Farmington township, Waupaca county, and at the end of four years Mr. Pipe moved with his family into Waupaca, where he engaged in the buying of stock and in butchering for about eighteen years. While here he served as chairman, supervisor, and street commissioner for years. In 1875 he, with his wife, made a seven-months' visit to their native land. They located on the present homestead in Lanark, Portage county, April 13, 1876, and here Mr. Pipe was honored with the office of chairman some three or four years. His death occurred September 22, 1880. Few men stricken by the grim destroyer leave a place so hard to fill as that left vacant by the death of Thomas Pipe.

William E. Pipe received his education in the schools of Waupaca, and when fifteen years of age worked in the lumber camp with his father. He worked for his father in a store in Waupaca, and also in a livery stable for some time.

On November 29, 1883, at Oxford Junction, Jones Co., Iowa, William E. Pipe and Miss Mary A. Messer were united in marriage, and there have been born to them the following children: Mary E., born October 23, 1884; Mina M., September 18, 1886; Raymond T., May 19, 1889; and Effie A., September 28, 1891, deceased January 17, 1893. Mrs. Pipe's parents, Thomas and Sarah J. (Hutchinson) Messer, are both deceased. Thomas Messer was a native of Berwickshire, Scotland, came to this country when a young man, and was married in Centralia, Ill. His wife was a native of Illinois. After the death of his father Mr. Pipe bought the old homestead farm from his mother. His farm comprises 225 acres, most of which is cleared, and he is the owner of some fine blooded horses. He had assisted his father in improving the farm, and it is one of the best in Portage county. His house is fitted out with all the comforts of a well-regulated home, and presided over by his amiable wife. Mr. Pipe is a Republican in politics, but has never sought any political offices. He is a prominent member of Waupaca Lodge No. 29, K. of P. Both he and his wife are Protestants in their religious belief.

ANGUS BUIE is a native of Canada, born June 20, 1850, in Collingwood, Ontario. The family is of Scotch origin, and the father of our subject, Archibald Buie, was born in Scotland in 1800. No extended record has been kept of the ancestors. In the grandfather's family were three sons and three daughters, and two of the brothers were seafaring men, John being master of a vessel. He died and was buried in the East Indies.

Archibald Buie was reared on a farm, and in his native land married Sarah McDougal, by whom he had eight children, four being born in Scotland, namely: Duncan, Dugal, John and Archibald. After locating in Canada, Marian, Angus, Hugh and Flora were added to the family, and all are yet living except Duncan, who died in 1864. In 1846 the parents with their children crossed the Atlantic, and settled upon a farm within the British domain. The father was a well-educated man, strong of will and steadfast to principle, and was recognized as a leader in the community in which he lived. He was also a strong believer in the faith of the Presbyterian Church. His death occurred September 27, 1884, his wife passing away November 15, 1885, at the age of eighty-six years. She had one brother, Duncan, who emigrated to Canada, and there followed farming, but little else is known concerning her people.

Angus Buie remained at home until eighteen years of age, aiding in the labors of the farm through the summer months, in the winter attending the common schools, to which he had to walk a distance of three miles. On leaving home he went to Saginaw, Mich., where for three years he worked in the lumber woods during the winter months, and when the warm weather came went upon the water as a raftsmen. Poor health caused him to return to his home, where he remained six months, then removed to Muskegon, Mich., working in the lumber woods for O. P. Pillsbury & Co. For fourteen years he remained with that firm as foreman of their different lumber camps, and his long service well indicates his fidelity to duty. In October, 1886, he came to the present site of Tomahawk, then covered by a dense forest, and was foreman for the Tomahawk Land & Boom Co. three years. He was next made superintendent of that company, which position he still holds, having under his control 175 men. He possesses excellent ability as a manager, and, while in no way displaying the qualities of an overbearing taskmaster, manages to keep his men interested in their work, thus securing the best interests of both employer and employees.

Mr. Buie has been twice married. In Canada, in 1879, he wedded Miss Isabel McMillan, and to them were born three children: Duncan, Anna and Thomas H. The last named was born in Tomahawk, and the company gave him a city lot on which the family is now living. Mrs. Buie was born in Canada, and was a daughter of Alexander and Anna (Cameron) McMillan, natives of Scotland. They had eight children, namely: Maggie, Alexander, Duncan, Peter, Isabel, John, Anna and Mary. Mrs. Buie died November 7, 1882, and April 29, 1891, Mr. Buie married Mary Dibb, a native of New Lisbon, Wis., and a daughter of John and Amanda (Sharp) Dibb, whose family numbered five children: Thomas, Jennie, Mary, James and Cora. The father, who was one of seventeen children, was born in England in 1828, and after his emigration to America, wedded Miss Sharp, who was born in Vermont in 1822. They are now farming people of New Lisbon, Wisconsin.

Mr. Buie exercises his right of franchise in support of the Democracy, and was the first mayor of Tomahawk, serving for two years. He laid the foundation of that town, and has since been actively identified with its upbuilding. He seeks no office, but is an active worker in his party. For many years he has been connected with the Masonic fraternity, and is one of its esteemed and faithful members. Mrs. Buie is a member of the Eastern Star.

MAJOR C. WERDEN DEANE, an honored citizen of the city of Antigo, Langlade county, traces his ancestry to one of two brothers by that name, who came over in the "Mayflower" from Northumberland, England, and settled in Taunton, Massachusetts.

Job Deane, the grandfather of Maj. C. Werden Deane, was born at Taunton, Mass., married Mercy Werden, daughter of a Baptist minister, and to them were born seven children. Job, who was a farmer by occupation, died at Manchester, Vt., about the year 1820. He served throughout the Revolutionary war, was under Gen. Gates at Saratoga, and carried dispatches from Gen. Washington at Valley Forge to Gen. Gates at Saratoga. He was also an active Indian fighter.

Peter W. Deane, one of the four sons of Job, and the father of the subject of this sketch, was a native of North Adams, Mass., born in 1797, and was married to Philinda Willey, who was a native of New Hampshire, born in 1798. To this marriage came ten children, two of whom, C. Werden and Mrs. Lemira M. Clarke, are still living; one son, Benjamin W., a lawyer by profession, was secretary of the State of Vermont, and died in 1862. The husband of Mrs. Clarke, Isaac L. Clarke, served as lieutenant-colonel of the Ninety-sixth Illinois Infantry, and was killed at the battle of Chickamauga, Georgia. The father (Peter W.) was a man of high standing in the community in which he lived; was looked upon as one of the pillars of the Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon more than half a century. He served as a county judge for a number of years, and for a period of twenty-three years as a representative and State senator. His death occurred in Vermont in 1878, that of his wife in 1865.

Maj. C. Werden Deane was born at Grafton, Vt., September 17, 1839. His early education was received in the common schools, and also at Lelands and Gray Seminary, remaining in school until fifteen years of age. His spare hours were passed in his father's woolen-mill, which he entered at the age of nine years, and where he remained until he had completed his trade. When seventeen years old he began reading law in the office of his brother Benjamin, and two years later entered the law school at Albany, N. Y., from which he was graduated in 1860, Senator Vilas and Col. John H. Knight, of Ashland, Wis., being members of the class. The following fall he settled at Pentwater, Mich., where he followed his profession until the fall of 1862, having in the meantime been elected county attorney. In October, 1862, he entered the service as captain of Company I, Sixth Regiment Michigan Cavalry, and in November of 1863 was promoted to major of the regiment, of which he was at different times in command. He commanded at Cedar Creek in 1864, and for some time afterward. He resigned from the service in January, 1865. Maj. Deane was a gallant officer, and exhibited great bravery on more than one field. He was in the Army of the Potomac, participating in many of the engagements of that army. On July 4, 1863, during the battle of Gettysburg, he, in command of 250 men, destroyed Gen. Lee's pontoon bridge at Falling Waters, Md. That same year he and thirty-nine men were attacked near Seneca, along the Potomac, by Gen. Mosby's force of 250 men. Maj. Deane held his ground for a time, and succeeded in cutting his way out and making his escape, losing but four killed and fifteen taken prisoners, while Gen. Mosby's loss was double that number. During 1863, and the early part of 1864, he was a good portion of the time on detached service through Virginia and Maryland, commanding some 800 men from different regiments. In April, 1864, he joined his regiment near Culpeper, Va. He was in Gen. Custer's brigade, also fought under Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley and about Richmond, and at one time was knocked off his horse by a minie ball. [For full particulars of the major's army record, see the "History of Michigan Troops."] On resigning his command the Major returned to Pentwater, resumed the practice of law and engaged in the real-estate business, which were his occupations until in 1869, when he moved to Chicago and followed the same line of employment until 1887, at which time, owing to ill-health, he left that city and settled in Antigo where he has since practiced his profession, and also has the only abstract of titles office in Langlade county. He is now serving his second term as city attorney, and is a member of the school board. He has held the office of court commissioner of the United States Court, county attorney and other minor offices. In politics he is a Republican, and in 1866 he served as a representative to the State Legislature. He is a member of George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., Chicago, secretary of the Antigo Masonic Lodge, of which order he has been a member for thirty-five years, always taking an active part in its affairs, and is also scribe of the Antigo Chapter and of the Council of Michigan.

Maj. Deane was married in 1866, in Detroit, Mich., to Adele E., daughter of Warren D. and Caroline (Taylor) Woodward, natives of New York. The father, who was a wagonmaker by trade, settled in Indiana in 1840; both parents died in Michigan City, Ind., where Mrs. Deane was born. The latter is an active member of the Episcopal Church. No children have been born to this union.

IGNATIUS D. STEFFEN, M. S., M. D.
The physician occupies one of the most responsible, as well as confidential, relations in our social existence, and to worthily and acceptably fill such a position is one of the most difficult tasks ever imposed on man. Such a task we find successfully assumed by Dr. Ignatius D. Steffen, one of the most successful practitioners in northern Wisconsin.

Our subject was born December 17, 1855, in Hortonville, Outagamie Co., Wis., a grandson of Jacob Steffen, who came from Prussia to the United States, settling in the village of Hortonville, Wis., in 1852, and died in 1870. He was a farmer by occupation, and before leaving the Fatherland served in the Prussian army. Thrice married, he had two children by his first wife—Nicholas (now deceased) and John J. (a resident of Appleton, Wis.); by his second marriage he had six children—John, Leonard, Mathias, Ignatius, Jacob and Francis; by his third wife (who is also now deceased) he had one daughter. Of the sons, Jacob and Francis were soldiers in the Civil war, serving in the Thirty-second Wis. V. I., Jacob dying at Vicksburg, Miss. Francis served throughout the entire struggle, during which he was promoted to sergeant, and afterward became a man of great prominence, a well-known agriculturist. He was clerk of the court, chairman of the county and town boards, and served two terms in the Legislature; he died in December, 1879, leaving a widow and five children.

John Steffen, father of our subject, was born, in 1824, in Coblenz, Rhenish Prussia, and was reared to farming pursuits. In his native land he was married to Miss Paulina Stark, who was born, in 1822 in Prussia, where her father, who was a pipe manufacturer, died; her mother came to America and died in 1894. One brother of Mrs. Steffen, Adam by name, lived in Prussia, while another brother, Peter, and one sister, Lucy, came to America. About the year 1847 Mr. and Mrs. John Steffen emigrated to America, and for nine years made their home near Saratoga Springs, N. Y., where he worked on a farm.

In 1855 they came west to Wisconsin, locating on wild land in Outagamie county, near Hortonville, where they cleared a farm out of the wilderness, and continued to reside thereon until 1886, in which year they moved into Hortonville, where Mr. Steffen has since lived a retired life; his wife died there in 1893. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom are yet living Jacob, Nicholas, Peter, Ignatius D., Louis, Martin, Mary (now Mrs. Olk, of Antigo) and John H. Although not an active politician, John Steffen has held various town offices.

Ignatius D. Steffen, the subject proper of this sketch, was reared on his father's farm in Outagamie county, attending the common schools during the winter months until he was seventeen years old, or till 1873, when he entered Lawrence University, at Appleton, graduating from that institution in 1879. During these years he also taught school so as to assist in his education, and after graduating he became principal of the Hortonville school, an incumbency he filled four years, at the same time taking up and prosecuting the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. H. D. Hardacker, of Hortonville, Outagamie county, one year, after which, in 1885, he entered Rush Medical College, Chicago, graduating from there in February, 1887. Coming at once to Antigo, he here opened his present office, where he has since successfully practiced his chosen profession, having established a reputation second to none in the county.

On July 19, 1883, Dr. Steffen was married to Miss Effie L. Nye, who was born in Ellington, Outagamie Co., Wis., daughter of George F. and Eliza (McGregor) Nye, who had four children, to wit: Minnie (deceased wife of George Barron), Effie L., Ella B. (now Mrs. Fred L. Moses, of Ripon, Wis.) and John L. The father, who was a carpenter by trade, was of English descent, the mother of Scotch; she died in 1872. To Dr. and Mrs. Steffen have been born three children: Bernice E., Lyman A. and Glyndon F.

The Doctor is surgeon of the Chicago & North Western railroad, and in addition to his profession has dealt to some extent in real estate, at present owning farm lands in the county. He is active and prominent in social and fraternal affairs, a member of the Wisconsin State, Fox River Valley and Daniel Brainard Medical Societies; of the Pension Board of his District; of the F. & A. M. and R. A. M., and of the Modern Woodmen of America, being delegate this year from the Ninth Congressional District of the head camp meeting at Madison, Wis. Politically he is a Democrat, an active worker in the ranks of the party, and in 1890

he served as mayor of Antigo, the city water-works being established during his incumbency. He was a member of the school board five years, and president of same during 1890-91; was supervisor in 1893; member of the County Central Committee, of the board of health four years, and city physician same length of time. The Doctor has always taken a lively interest in all that pertains to the welfare and prosperity of Antigo, and has done much toward maintaining its high standing among the cities of northern Wisconsin.

CHARLES B. McDONALD, prominent among the progressive and prosperous citizens of Antigo, Langlade county, and without mention of whom a biographical record of this section of northern Wisconsin would be incomplete, is a native of New York State, born March 3, 1849, at Rome, Oneida county, of stalwart Highland-Scotch ancestry.

George B. McDonald, his father, was also born at Rome, N. Y., where he first saw the light in 1824, his parents having settled there some time after their arrival from Scotland, bringing with them those habits of industry and frugality that are well-known characteristics of that hardy race—characteristics that have been inherited in a marked degree by their descendants. George B. had one brother, Hilliard, and two sisters, who married and settled in Michigan. He himself married Miss Sarah T. Butler, of Oneida county, N. Y., where she was born in 1827, daughter of Ezekiel and Eunice (Shaw) Butler, who were also of Scottish extraction, well-to-do farming people of the better class, who ultimately moved to Illinois, where the family became prominent in many ways. One of Mrs. George B. McDonald's brothers, Eugene K., is general manager of the McCormick Reaper Works at Chicago, and a sister, Caroline, is the wife of Dr. Utley, of Whiteside county, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Ezekiel Butler had a family of eleven children, named respectively: Nancy, John, Harriet, Caroline, Sarah, David, Eunice, Lydia, Seward, Eugene K. and Ezekiel. In 1857

the family came to Appleton, Wis., where the parents made their home eleven years, thence moved to Whiteside county, Ill., and there the father died in 1882, the mother surviving him till 1895. Mr. McDonald, who was a man of superior executive ability, was a contractor on and builder of railroads and canals, having at all times in his business under his charge large and numerous gangs of "navvies;" and yet for all he was by no means an educated man.

The subject proper of these lines received but a limited common-school education, having at the age of sixteen to commence work, his time for a few years being mostly occupied in the lumber woods. When nineteen years old he leased a farm in Whiteside county, Ill., which he conducted ten years, and then removed to Brown county, Wis., opening soon afterward a general store at Little Kaukauna, remaining there until July, 1883, the time of his coming to Antigo. Here he built the Excelsior mill which he operated one year, when he again embarked in general mercantile business, opening his present store in that city, in which he has since continued. His present store, built by him in 1894, is one of the finest in the county, and although he has had severe reverses by fire and other causes, he has met with the success due to a life of energy, honesty and integrity.

In December, 1870, Mr. McDonald was married in Brown county, Wis., to Miss Elsie Briggs, who was born in 1848, in Sheldon township, Wyoming Co., N. Y., daughter of Jason and Janet (Phillips) Briggs, both natives of New York State, the father born in 1823, the mother in 1825; they were the parents of three children: Emily, Elsie and Ellen. The Briggs family came to Brown county, Wis., in 1852, where they followed farming for several years, and where the father died in 1884, and the mother, who is of English descent, is yet living. To Mr. and Mrs. McDonald were born two children: Marion, now the wife of Louis Buckman, of Antigo, and Charles, who died in infancy. Mr. McDonald is a wide-awake business man, ever alive to the interests of the community in which he lives, and where he is held in the highest respect. In addition to his regular mercantile business he deals considerably in real estate; is a stockholder in and director of the Antigo Bank, and he is public-spirited and liberal of his means wherever the interests of his city and county are considered. In politics he is independent, is no office-seeker, though he has frequently been offered public positions of honor and trust. He is a passionate lover of fine-bred horses, taking a great interest in them, and at the present time is the owner of an exceedingly fine high-bred colt, being a Delmarch, and shows a speed of 2:30 or less. In his lifetime Mr. McDonald has bred and handled many fine horses, and his judgment being good and sound he is frequently consulted on such matters by his friends. He is quite an expert, as an amateur, in photography, and has taken many fine views around Antigo; part of one winter he spent in the South taking photographic views of the scenery.

Such in brief is a sketch of the life of Charles B. McDonald, a typical self-made man, who by his own unaided efforts has climbed the ladder of success, and established for himself a business and social reputation second to none in northern Wisconsin.

GEORGE NEWSOME, whose well-directed efforts and good business ability have made him one of the leading farmers of Dayton township, Waupaca county, was born in Steuben county, N. Y., January 9, 1847, and is a son of Joseph and Nancy (Bailey) Newsome.

The father, a farmer and railroad contractor by occupation, was a native of Yorkshire, England, born April 29, 1806; his father was a pilot, and others of the family were sea-faring men. When a young man, Joseph Newsome, came to the United States. He had previously followed teaming, and one morning while thus engaged received from a smuggling vessel sufficient high wine to enable him and his brothers, Robert and John, with their families, to come to the United States. Their father died in England, and the mother afterward crossed the ocean and made her home with a daughter in New York until her death. Joseph Newsome settled in Genesee county, N. Y., and supported himself by farm work, for he had no means. In Livingston county, that State, in 1831, he married Nancy Bailey, who was born there February 19, 1805, a daughter of Benjamin Bailey, a farmer. Soon after their marriage, they located in Steuben county, and had children as follows: Benjamin, born May 4, 1832, died in Addison, Steuben Co., N. Y.; Joseph, born November 1, 1833, remained at home until twenty-one years of age, when he came to this State; Allen, born August 28, 1836, died in Muskegon, Mich.; David, born December 25, 1838, when last heard of was mining in Buffalo county, Colo.; Mrs. Mary A. Farmer, born February 10, 1840, is living in Waupaca county; Martha, born January 24, 1844, became the wife of Horace Goble, her death occurring in Dayton township; Sarah, twin sister of Martha, and wife of Otis Bates, of Muskegon, Mich., and George. The father of this family came to Wisconsin in the fall of 1866, and located upon a farm which is now the home of his youngest son. The mother died there in June, 1870, and was buried in Crystal Lake Cemetery. Mr. Newsome afterward married Mrs. Anna (Nelson) Duncan, widow of Silas Duncan, and his death occurred on the old homestead in the fall of 1881, his remains being interred in Crystal Lake Cemetery; he was a large man, six feet tall and weighing 220 pounds. In politics he was always a Democrat.

The educational privileges of George Newsome were limited, for after the age of nine he never attended school during the summer, his services being required upon the home farm. At the age of thirteen he began earning his own living, and was employed by a drover from Lorain county, Ohio, who had gone to Steuben county, N. Y., to purchase fine-wool sheep. Mr. Newsome returned with this gentleman—Walter Foote, of Rochester—and continued in his employ some five years, accompanying him on his business trips, buying and selling stock. Once, while at Joliet, Ill., he visited his brother Allen, living in that vicinity, and in September, 1866, came on a visit to friends in Waupaca county, where he has since remained. In the summer he was employed at farm labor, during the winter in the pineries, and in the spring on the river. With capital he acquired through his own efforts he purchased, in the fall of 1869, sixty acres of land in Section 25, Dayton township, Waupaca county, and to that has since added until he now owns 200 acres in Sections 25 and 35, on which he has made extensive improvements, transforming this tract into a valuable and productive farm. Prosperity has attended his efforts, and he is now the possessor of a handsome property.

On August 18, 1872, in Waushara county, Wis., Mr. Newsome married Miss Emily Dopkins, a native of that county, born January 29, 1853, daughter of Lewis and Emeline (Lane) Dopkins, natives of New York. Their children are Maud E., who was born April 4, 1874, and is now the wife of Linder Wilson, of Springwater, Waushara county; Minnie M., who was born October 10, 1875, and is the wife of Miner Stinemates, of Dayton township; Gladys L., born April 29, 1878; George L., born June 13, 1881; and Bertha E., born July 26, 1883. Prior to 1892 Mr. Newsome was a stalwart Democrat, but is now an ardent advocate of the Republican party, although not an office seeker. He is a self-made man in the truest sense of that oft-misused term, and for his success deserves great credit. His example shows what can be accomplished by enterprise, perseverance and good management, and should serve to encourage others to press forward.

M B. HULL. This prominent and well-known citizen of Larrabee township, Waupaca county, has been for many years a citizen of Wisconsin, engaged in agriculture, and was a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion. He was born May 30, 1841, in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., and is the son of Eli B. and Abigail (Slater) Hull.

Eli B. Hull, whose father was in the Revolutionary war, was born in New Hampshire, and was a millwright by occupation. He came to Wisconsin in 1844, and voted to form that Territory into a State. He opened up a farm in Ashford township, Fond du Lac county, made that his home until 1868, moved to Tennessee, near Nashville, and there resided until his death, in 1882. Mrs. Eli B. Hull was born in Vermont, daughter of Joseph Slater, a lieutenant in the war of 1812, and died in 1884. They had a family of eight children of whom six are living, namely: Alden, who resides in Fond du Lac county, Wis.; Harriet, wife of Ransom Henningway, of Fond du Lac; Joseph, who lives in Fond du Lac county; Lyman, a Congregational minister in Garden City, Kans.; Fannie, wife of George W. Chapman, of Marathon county, Wis.; and M. B., the subject of this sketch.

M. B. Hull was reared in Wisconsin from the age of four years, educated principally in the schools of Fond du Lac county, and attended school in the winter of 1859 in Defiance county, Ohio. He lived two years in Kenosha, and then in Southport, Kenosha Co., Wis. In Fond du Lac, in 1861, he enlisted in Company E, Sixth Wis. V. I., for three years; was mustered in at Madison, July 16, 1861, served in McDowell's Corps in the army of the Potomac, was honorably discharged on account of disability at Alexandria, Va., in 1862, and returned to Fond du Lac county. In 1864 he again enlisted at Fond du Lac, and went to Madison, but was not accepted.

In Fond du Lac county, Wis., in 1864, Mr. Hull was united in marriage with Miss Irene Parsons, who was born in New York, and they have two children: Estella, who is teaching in the home district, and Dora, wife of John Piehl, of Dupont township. The parents of Mrs. Hull, Harvey and Adaline (West) Parsons, were born in New York State, came to Fond du Lac county in 1850, opened up a farm in Auburn township, then moved to Fayette county, Iowa, and later to McHenry county, Ill., where Mr. Parsons died in 1872. In 1873 Mr. Hull located in the woods in Section 9, Dupont township, Waupaca county, improved a farm of eighty acres, then moved to Montgomery county, Iowa, in 1888, remained there one year, came to Larrabee township, Waupaca county, in 1889, and located on a farm in Section 13, where he now resides. Mr. Hull is a Republican in politics, was chairman of Dupont township for seven years, and for many years justice of the peace in the same township. He is post commander of the J. B. Wyman Post, No. 32; a member of Clintonville Lodge No. 314, I. O. O. F., and the oldest past grand in the lodge.

WILLIS D. WORDEN, one of the pioneer and prosperous farmers of Buena Vista township, Portage county, was born in Middlebury township, Wyoming Co., N. Y., July 14, 1830, son of Stephen and Marcia Worden, both natives of Massachusetts, and grandson of Silas Worden, who was during the Revolutionary war assistant-surgeon to his father, in the Continental army. After the war Silas Worden continued to practice surgery in Massachusetts until he was stricken with total blindness; even after that calamity he once set the broken leg of his grandson William. He died in Wyoming county, N. Y. about 1846, aged eighty-two years; his wife surviving him until 1855. Silas Worden was twice married, and by his first wife he had four children: Hulda, Henry, Archibald and Stephen. The mother of these died in 1813, and Silas Worden for his second wife married Naomi Sage, by whom he had one son, Heman.

Stephen Worden was born in 1804, was reared on a Massachusetts farm, in which State he married Marcia Higgins. From there he migrated to Wyoming county, N. Y., thence in the fall of 1852, with his wife and family, he came to Wisconsin. Remaining two years in Scott township, Columbia county, he came to Stockton township, Portage county, entering eighty acres of government land and building a home, which he occupied until 1876. He then sold his farm and lived with his son-in-law Mr. Howard, in Buena Vista township, until his death, which occurred January 18, 1877; his wife, who was born in 1807, survived until May 9, 1879. Their family of eight children was as follows: Willis D., subject of this sketch; Albert, unmarried, born December 9, 1831; Clarinda, born December 17, 1833, married first to Obediah Griffin, by whom she had one child, Orin, and afterward to Hiram Griffin (brother of her first husband), by whom she had five children: Henry, Ellen, William, Len and Effie; Alvina, born January 11, 1836, married to John Howard, a farmer of Buena Vista township, by whom she had two children, O. C. and Orin; George H., born February 23, 1838, a carpenter and joiner of Amherst township, married a Mrs. Adams, by whom he had five children: Ellen, Flora (deceased), Lillie, and Minnie and Mina (twins); Polly M., born December 31, 1840, married first to Wesley Fancher (by whom she had one child, Wesley), and after his death was married to William Fancher, by whom she had two children, Charles and Bert; William Henry, born May 28, 1842, carpenter at Stevens Point, married to Alzina Grover, who is the mother of five children: Della, Burdette (deceased), Eli, Henry, and Bert (deceased); Annetta, born November 7, 1845, died February 22, 1846.

Willis D. Worden, the subject proper of these lines, received a common-school education in his native town. He is a natural mechanic and has worked at shoemaking, carpentering, and masonry, though he never served time at any trade. He was married at Middlebury, N. Y., April 21, 1850, to Susan Nelson, who was born September 2, 1832, at Gloucester, Mass., daughter of Freeman and Celinda (Keach) Nelson, and granddaughter of George Nelson, all of Massachusetts birth, who lived for a time in New York, but returned to their native State, and died there at a ripe old age. The children of George Nelson were: John, Andrew, Adin, Louisa, Eunice, Ruie and Freeman. The youngest son, Freeman, married Celinda Keach in Massachusetts, and followed his trade of shoemaking. With his family he removed to Attica, N. Y., and thence to Middlebury, Wyoming county, whence, in 1851, he emigrated to Oconomowoc, Wis. Two years later he came to Nelsonville, Portage county, and in 1855 he settled on eighty acres of land in Stockton township. Here his wife died in October, 1876, and he followed her to the grave in 1883. Nine children were born to Freeman and Celinda Nelson, as follows: Susan, now Mrs. Worden; Freeman Nelson, Jr. (he had five children: Elvin, Elmer, Carrie Jane, Jessie and John); George Nelson (he had four children: George, Robert, Chester and May); Mary, married first to Jacob Fancher and after his death to Alex. Emy; Gardner, a farmer of Buena Vista township, married first to Libbie Gardner, by whom he had three children: Etta, Annie (deceased) and Al. (his second wife was Sarah Eaton, by whom he had one child, who died in infancy; his third and present wife is Mary Stevens); Louisa, now Mrs. Chester Dwinell; Andrew, married first to Alice Rushie, by whom he had four children, Arthur, Victor, Ella and Emma Emmaette (by his second marriage, to Mrs. Lucinda Vealy, a widow, he has eight children, Lena, John, George, Linda, Pearl, Andrew, Oscar, and Pallice, wife of Orson Francher, of Stevens Point, and mother of four children, William, George, Cora and Pearl); William, a farmer near Antigo, Wis., married first to Emma Lewis, by whom he has two children, William and Katie by his second wife, Lucy Calkins, he has three children, Flossie, Hattie and one whose name is not given.

With his wife and eldest brother, Willis D. Worden accompanied his father to Wisconsin in 1853. The lake voyage of seven days was so rough and stormy that the vessel was obliged to put in at Detroit to escape a storm. Remaining with his father for a year and a half in Columbia county, and following farming and shoemaking, he came to Stockton township in the spring of 1854, and settled on 120 acres of wild government land. He lived there two years in a log cabin, then selling his property, was a tenant one year, after which he bought eighty acres of land, which he was occupying at the time the war broke out. On August 14, 1862, he enlisted at Stockton in Company E, Thirty-second Wis. V. I.; from the camp at Oshkosh he went in November to Memphis, Tenn., which was headquarters for eleven months. The regiment was then sent to Vicksburg. Going into camp at Meridian, Miss., it was engaged one week in destroying railroads, and after the fall of Vicksburg it returned to Memphis, thence proceeding via Cairo to Paducah, Ky., where it brushed against the enemy; thence proceeded indirectly to Decatur, Ala., where it lay encamped five months. Advancing to Atlanta, it did guard and picket duty, and after the evacuation of Atlanta, marched three days and three nights to Jonesboro. In the following battle the Thirty-second supported the batteries. Returning to Atlanta and resting a few days, the regiment participated in the glorious march to the sea, and was thirty days in reaching Savannah, tearing up railroad tracks on the way. Just before the battle there the Thirty-second was ordered out on a track-destroying expedition in the adjoining country. Embarking at Savannah in boats, it landed at Beaufort, N. C., and thence marched on to Washington, making the journey in fifty-nine days, during which it engaged in numerous skirmishes with the enemy. At the battle of Bentonville the Thirty-second was on the extreme right of Sherman's army, and was engaged for three days and three nights. Mr. Worden was mustered out at Washington June 12, 1865, and discharged nearly two weeks later at Milwaukee. He reached home June 24, 1864. At Memphis he lay sick in the hospital for about six weeks, but was sick three months after rejoining his regiment, though never off duty during this time.

Mr. Worden traded his property in Stockton for a tavern in Seymour, but seven months later he returned with his family to Stockton township. Working out as a farm hand for about a year, he, in 1877, bought his present farm of eighty acres of wild land in Buena Vista township, Section 15. He built a home and cleared up the farm, which he has ever since occupied, adding to it sixty acres in Section 23. Mr. and Mrs. Worden have eight children, as follows: Marion, a farmer of Buena Vista, born at Middlebury, N. Y., May 14, 1852, married October 29, 1879, at Stockton to Emaline Aber, by whom he had seven children; Mary, Dora, Henry, Willis, Irving, Eva and Claude; Mary A., born in Columbia county, Wis., August 2, 1854, died October 6, 1863; Merritt U., born in Stockton township, July 30, 1856, married July 5, 1875, to Rosa Callans, by whom he has four children, Flora, Emma, Austin and Elmer; Nettie A., born May 3, 1858, married October 13, 1875, to John Aber, a farmer of Pine Grove township, and mother of four children, Della, Nancy, Nettie and John; George H., born May 13, 1860, married January 9, 1881, to Jane Vanderworth, by whom he had six children, Walter, Leo, Ava, Effie, Susan and Ruby; Frank E., born April 12, 1862, died January 31, 1862; Emma E., born April 24, 1867, died May 6, same year; Homer D., born September 11, 1873, married, December 2, 1894, to Bertha Ruter, who was born in Germany in 1876, and when six years old came to America with her parents, now residents of Buena Vista township.

Mr. Worden is a member of G. A. R. Post No. 149, Plover. He is a Republican, but is not actively interested in politics, and while in Stockton township he was supervisor for two years. In religious belief he is a Protestant, but not connected with any Church society. In disposition he is genial and kind-hearted, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

THOMAS T. BURR. The life of this worthy gentleman has been strongly marked by enterprise and energy, and forms an example well worthy of emulation. A native of Chautauqua county, N. Y., he was born September 14, 1830, and is a son of Daniel and Mary (Hawes) Burr, also natives of the Empire State, who were the parents of eleven children.

When our subject was about three years of age they removed to Beachwood, Penn., and thence to Ohio, where Thomas began his education in the district schools, his privileges in that direction being very meagre. In 1849 he became a resident of the then new State of Wisconsin, locating in Albany, Green county, but in less than a year he removed to Wood county, making his home in the town of Seneca until 1861, at which time he became a resident of Grand Rapids. In the township just mentioned he was married in 1857, the lady of his choice being Miss Mary Jane, who was born May 14, 1839, daughter of William and Jane Leachman, and by this union there were seven children, as follows: Charles Maylon, born in Seneca township, March 10, 1859; Rosetta Arminda, born in Grand Rapids, June 26, 1862; Elmer T., born October 23, 1866; Almon, born September 23, 1868; Leland, born September 7, 1871, died in 1874; Frank, born September 1, 1873, died in infancy; and Celia May, born in Grand Rapids, May 30, 1877; with the exception of the eldest child, all were born in Grand Rapids.

Mr. Burr manifested his loyalty to the government during the Civil war by enlisting in September, 1861, in the Twelfth Wis. V. I.; but after he had served about eleven months he was discharged at Leavenworth, Kans., on account of physical disability caused by exposure and hardships. He at once returned to his home, and has since continuously resided in Grand Rapids, one of its valued and highly-esteemed citizens. He holds membership with the Grand Army of the Republic Post, No. 22, and in politics he is a stalwart supporter of the Republican party. He and his family attend the Congregational Church. Their home is a hospitable one, and the members of the household occupy an enviable position in social circles.

AO. TOWNE is the owner of one of the fine farms of Portage county, his home and its surroundings comprising one of the best-appointed country places in Belmont township. His fields are well tilled, he keeps only a good grade of stock, his improvements are modern, and everything about the place indicates the careful supervision of the owner.

Mr. Towne was born in Hodgdon, Me., October 20, 1848, and his school privileges were those afforded at that day by the public institutions of learning. With his parents he came to Wisconsin during his boyhood, and was reared on the old home farm, which is now in his possession, so that the place is dear to him from the associations of early youth. On April 14, 1871, he was united in marriage in Belmont township, with Miss Sarah M. Fairbanks, who was born in that township July 9, 1855, a daughter of Cyrus and Evaline Fairbanks, the former a native of Jefferson county, N. Y., the latter of Calais, Me. Mr. and Mrs. Towne have three children—one son and two daughters—Gertrude E., now the wife of Thomas M. Deering, a resident of Rose township, Waushara county, Wis.; and Ray E. and Maud E., at home. The family circle yet remains unbroken by the hand of death.

Upon their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Towne went to live with his parents. Our subject devotes his time and energies to agricultural pursuits, and his farm comprises 152 acres of Wisconsin's rich land, while his home, erected in 1894, is one of the finest in Belmont township. Hospitality there abounds, and both Mr. and Mrs. Towne extend to their many friends a hearty welcome. This worthy couple are consistent members of the Methodist Church, both have been teachers in the Sunday-school, and he is now serving as church steward. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and feels a deep interest in the success and growth of his party. The best interests of the community ever find in him a friend.

JOHAN D. SWAN. Among the most solid and substantial elements in our national fabric are the sons and daughters of old Scotia who have become citizens of this "land of the free," as well as those who trace descent from them. The genius of Scott, the patriotism and thrilling pathos of Caledonia's bard, the devotion of her clergy, the memories of Bruce and Bannockburn, are living forces, repeated in the lives of many, and help to crown the glories of the great Republic. Of the honored number from such a parentage is Mr. Swan, whose steady and successful career is one well worthy of emulation. He was born October 9, 1858, in the township of Lanark, Portage Co., Wis., son of Thomas and Martha (McJennet) Swan.

Thomas Swan was born in February, 1811, in Lanark, Scotland, came with his parents to America in 1821, settling in Lanark, Canada, at which place he was married. In 1847 he came with his family to Wisconsin, locating in the town of Vinland, Winnebago county, where he remained a short time, and then moved to a farm in what is now Lanark, Portage county, being one of those who gave the town its name. With the assistance of his son John D., he carried on the farm until 1885, when he sold out to the latter, and now makes his home with him. After receiving his education in the district schools of Lanark, Portage county, John D. Swan went north and worked for six winters in lumber camps. He also worked in Minnesota, and in 1880 at Stevens Point, delivering ice. On April 17, 1884, he was united in marriage with Miss Marian Ovens, and their union has been blessed with two children: William R., born April 14, 1885, and Helen E., born October 22, 1890. Mrs. Swan is the daughter of James and Helen (Swan) Ovens, who were natives of Scotland. She attended school in Lanark, Portage county, until she was fifteen years of age, then went to the high school at Waupaca, Waupaca county, for one year, after which she taught school in Portage county for a number of years, up to the time of her marriage.

In 1885 Mr. Swan bought his present farm of 160 acres from his father, and now has one hundred acres of this property under cultivation. In the summer of 1894 he was employed as traveling salesman for agricultural implements by Gallagher & Haney, of Waupaca, Waupaca county, but resigned this position, as it interfered with his farming interests. He has always voted the Republican ticket, and in religion both he and his wife are Presbyterians.

STEIN BROTHERS is the name of a well-known firm of Clintonville, composed of George and Charley Stein, dealers in general merchandise, grain and farm produce. They are now conducting a paying business, and are recognized as leading business men of the town in which they are located.

Charley Stein was born in Medina, Outagamie county, Wis., July 3, 1861, son of John and Catherine (Zehner) Stein, both natives of Pennsylvania, born of German lineage. The father has followed both farming and carpentering. In an early day he became a resident of Wisconsin, and has since been identified with its interests. At this writing he makes his home in Clintonville, and is one of its highly-respected citizens. He left his native State in 1834, removing to Lancaster county, Ohio, where he was united in marriage with Miss Zehner. He then brought his family to Wisconsin, settling near Medina, Outagamie county, where he purchased a tract of timber land, and opened up a fine farm, which he placed under a high state of cultivation and improved with all modern accessories. There he carried on agricultural pursuits until 1889, when he sold out, and with his wife came to Clintonville, where they are now living.

This worthy couple became the parents of eight children: Samuel, who died in the army; Elizabeth, wife of Demming McClatchie, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Mary, wife John Kennedy, a resident of Shiocton, Outagamie county; Lorana, deceased; Almeda, living in Clintonville; Nancy Lewis, located in Outagamie county; John; and George and Charley, of the firm of Stein Brothers. The children were reared on the old homestead and the public schools of the neighborhood afforded them their educational privileges. In 1884 Charley Stein went to Dakota, where he engaged in farming, and the next year he was joined by his brother George. He spent four years in the West and South, working at the carpenter's trade during a part of this time, but in 1886 George returned to Wisconsin. In 1888 Charley Stein again went to Medina, Wis. They traded their property in the West with G. W. Jones for the elevator and other business property they own in Clintonville, and have since built up an extensive business as dealers in farm produce, flour and groceries, lime, brick, cement, hair, etc. Their trade is constantly increasing and has now assumed extensive proportions, while the income derived therefrom numbers them among the substantial citizens of the community. They possess good business and executive ability, and their diligence and enterprise have been the chief factors in their success.

In 1894 Charley Stein was united in marriage with Miss Dora Van Doren. In December, 1890, George Stein had married Miss Nellie Briggs, and they are now the parents of a little daughter, Catherine. The brothers hold membership with the Methodist Church, and are straightforward, honorable business men who have won the confidence of all with whom they have been brought in contact. In politics they are supporters of the men and measures of the Republican party, and Charley Stein has served as alderman from his ward for two terms.

NC. NELSON, a highly-esteemed representative citizen of Iola township, Waupaca county, is a native of Norway, born November 25, 1850. His father, Abraham Nelson, a blacksmith by trade, sailed in 1851 with his family for America, reaching New York after a voyage of about seven weeks. He was a consumptive, and with the hope of benefiting his health sought a home in the New World. They came direct to Wisconsin by way of the lakes and Milwaukee, and made a location near First Lake. In the spring of 1854 he removed to Iola township, locating in Section 32, on an old claim, where the former proprietor had made some improvements. There was no house, however, and Abraham Nelson erected a hewn log house, 16 x 24 feet, which stood about five rods east of the present home of our subject. He also built a blacksmith shop upon his farm, being the first to follow his trade in Iola township. When in Norway he had also operated a sawmill in connection with his farm and smithy, and was always an industrious, enterprising man. He came to Iola township when the city of Iola was yet a thing of the future, not a building standing on its site. He continued his residence on the farm in Section 32 until consumption finally terminated his life in the fall of 1857. He was laid to rest in the old cemetery at Scandinavia. In religious belief he was a Lutheran, and contributed to the building of the first church of Scandinavia. There were five children who came with the parents to this country: Andrenna, who died on the home farm in Iola township; Louisa, wife of Nels Olson, of Scandinavia; Christina, wife of Johannes Olson, of Iola; Johanna, wife of Julius Ingbreton, of Iola; and N. C. The death of the father thus left a widow and four children, and for some time thereafter the mother rented her farm. Later she married Hans Hawell, and is now living in Iola at the age of seventy-eight.

N. C. Nelson, who was an infant at the time his parents crossed the Atlantic, was reared to manhood amid the wild scenes of frontier life in Wisconsin. He began his education under the instruction of Sarah Hopkins, and attended the common schools of the neighborhood, in which he has since seen great improvement—an advancement he heartily endorses. He spent his life upon the home farm, aiding in the labors of the field until sixteen years of age, when he began work in the lumber woods, then the popular employment for young men, thus spending nine winters in work for others. He “ran the river” for nine seasons, and made six trips to St. Louis with lumber, going down the Wisconsin and Mississippi. On September 25, 1879, in Scandinavia, Wis., Mr. Nelson married Miss Carrie G. Brece, who was born in that place, June 27, 1855, a daughter of Amund, one of the early settlers of Scandinavia. In the village of Iola Mr. Nelson owned a house and lot, and there the young couple began their domestic life. They have four children: Ida S., born July 13, 1880; Hannah Lettie, born April 17, 1882; Nora C., born March 2, 1887; and Arnet F., born March 28, 1890.

For some time prior to his marriage Mr. Nelson followed blacksmithing in Iola, and continued it until April 10, 1880, when he removed to his present farm in Section 32, Iola township. It then comprised ninety-four acres, and was owned by his widowed mother. He there built a shop and carried on blacksmithing for a time, and to some extent he has engaged in the lumber business, getting out timber. He now owns 334 acres of land, one hundred of which are under a high state of cultivation, and the place is accounted as one of the model farms of the county. In 1893 he built the finest brick house in Iola township, and in 1887 he put up an excellent barn, 60 x 44 feet, with an underground stable. In politics, Mr. Nelson is a Republican, and has held several school offices. He and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church, in which he acted as trustee, and he is a charter member of Iola Lodge, No. 282, I. O. O. F. He is truly a self-made man, of excellent business ability, keen discrimination and good judgment, and his success is entirely due to his own efforts. In manner he is pleasant and genial, and his elegant home, the abode of hospitality, is always open for the reception of his many friends.

JOHANNES OLSON, one of the well-known and highly esteemed citizens of Iola township, Waupaca county, served his country during the Civil war. His birth occurred in the town of Ixonia, Jefferson Co., Wis., November 15, 1845.

His father, Ole Johnson, was a common laborer in Norway, and like many of his countrymen he concluded to come to the United States, where better opportunities were afforded a poor man, homes being cheaper and labor better paid. The voyage to America, which was made in 1843, was a long and dangerous one, the vessel on which they sailed being old, and on the high seas they encountered a severe test for it. After thirteen weeks they landed safely at New York. Their destination was Stoughton, Wis., at which time railroads had not been built through, and the journey had to be made by water. After going up the Hudson to Albany they went by way of the Erie canal to Buffalo, being hauled by mules; from there by the lakes to Wisconsin. They did not locate at Stoughton, as they first intended, but the father purchased forty acres of land in Ixonia township, Jefferson county, where the family made their home until 1857, during which time Wisconsin was admitted as a State, and the northern part of the State offered superior inducements to the early settlers. Mr. Olson had added thirty acres to his farm, which then comprised seventy acres; this he sold, and with the family removed to New Hope, Portage county.

The journey was made with oxen, and only such household articles as were absolutely needed were brought. They were twelve days in coming to Scandinavia, Waupaca county, where they paused. The route lay through Watertown, Berlin, Pine River and Waupaca, many places on the road being almost impassable, while the streams had to be forded, though a few were spanned with poor bridges. Such were the hardships and difficulties the early pioneers had to encounter in coming to a new portion of the State. The family came to Section 10, New Hope township, Portage county, where the father had previously located 320 acres of land. It was yet in a primitive condition, and a log cabin, 14 x 16 feet, was their first shelter. Game was plentiful, deer being in droves, as well as other wild animals. There were necessarily many drawbacks; their grain had to be hauled to Neenah, Waupaca, and even to Appleton, to get cash for it. Such difficulties, with only oxen for beasts of burden, give but a faint idea of what the pioneers had to endure. In 1862 Mr. Johnson sold his farm and purchased another tract in the same township, where his remaining days were passed. He had gathered a comfortable amount of earthly goods, his farm was well kept, and he was truly a successful farmer. He was a short, thick-set man, at one time strong and robust, and his death ensued from heart disease, in 1866, when he was aged forty-nine. His wife, who was born August 24, 1820, died January 24, 1862, and they both lie buried in New Hope Cemetery. They were members of the Lutheran Church of that place, which was the first church organized there, and Mr. Johnson helped to erect the house of worship. In political sentiment he was a stalwart Republican, and like all patriotic members of that party was much elated at Lincoln's election.

In the family there were eight children: Regnheld, born in Norway, February 24, 1843, died of scarlet fever February 7, 1859, in New Hope township, Portage Co., Wis.; Johannes, our subject; John, born in Jefferson county, October 8, 1848, and now residing in New Hope, Portage county; Ida, born April 15, 1852, in Jefferson county, died of scarlet fever February 6, 1859, only twenty-four hours before her eldest sister; Lena, also a native of Jefferson county, now the wife of Johannes Halverson, of Alban township, Portage county; Annie, who was born in Jefferson county, now the wife of Anton Johnson, of Stevens Point, Wis.; the two younger children were born at New Hope—Julius, an employe in the pinery districts, and Ida, married, and living in Minnesota.

Our subject acquired his education in the district schools of Wisconsin, but being the eldest son he was naturally the one of whom help at home would be asked. As it was a new farm, work was plentiful, and his schooling was thus neglected. He has witnessed the great changes in the schools of the present day, which he fully endorses, believing education essential for good government, and while not having the chances himself he realizes, how necessary it is. His early life was not unlike that of most farmer lads, and he remained at home until his enlistment in the Union army during the Civil war. At Scandinavia, Wis., July 19, 1864, Mr. Olson became a member of Company A, Forty-second Wis. V. I., under Capt. Duncan McGregor. He was mustered in at Madison, Wis., whence he was sent to Cairo, Ill., where headquarters were made until his discharge, doing guard and patrol duty, at times going down the Mississippi as far as Vicksburg. He was discharged at Cairo, June 22, 1865, and returned home. At the time of his enlistment he was a strong robust man, to whom a sick day was unknown, being five feet ten inches in height and weighing 181 pounds. While he was not wounded, he sustained what has proven far worse—the loss of his health and strength, as the result of the malarial nature of the surroundings at Cairo, and the frequent inundations there. He contracted the disease which proved fatal to many of his comrades, and probably his youth and vigorous constitution was all that saved his life. He has never seen a well day since.

In Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, October 23, 1870, Mr. Olson was united in marriage with Miss Christina Nelson, who was born in Norway, May 11, 1846, and came with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Nelson, to the New World when only five years old. Her brother, N. C. Nelson, is one of the leading farmers of Iola township. By her marriage she has become the mother of ten children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Oscar A., August 16, 1871, at Stevens Point, Wis.; Henry E., October 30, 1872; Julius R., April 5, 1874; Sophia R., April 7, 1876; Clara J., June 16, 1878; Ida M., March 28, 1880; James A., April 28, 1882; John E., March 29, 1884; Louisa, February 27, 1886, and Nels E., August 24, 1889. The four eldest were born at Stevens Point, and the others in Iola township, Waupaca county; they are all still at home.

At the time of his marriage Mr. Olson was making his headquarters at Stevens Point, and working wherever he could find employment. He then located at that place, where he owned a house and lot, and there remained until the spring of 1877, when he removed to Iola township, and rented the Abraham Nelson farm for three years. In the spring of 1880 he purchased 160 acres in Section 33, the same township, which he went in debt for. There were a few small improvements upon the place, but no fence or house, and he has since sold forty acres. Since 1882 Mr. Olson has not been able to perform a day's work, the entire management of the farm being looked after by his sons, who are industrious, enterprising young men. They have been of great assistance to him, who without their aid would have been left in any but a fortunate condition. This fact alone is the source of no small amount of satisfaction to the parents, whose lives have been spent for their family, and they now have the pleasure of seeing them growing up into good and worthy citizens. Mr. Olson and his family are consistent members of the Lutheran Church of Scandinavia, and he is a charter member of Iola Post, No. 99, Grand Army of the Republic.

ITHAMAR LAWRENCE, police justice of the village of Mosinee, Marathon county, was born in Middlebury, Vt., June 29, 1838, and is a son of Harvey H. and Chloe E. (Ball) Lawrence, who were of English and Welsh ancestry.

Harvey H. Lawrence was born in Weybridge, Vt., July 10, 1792, and his wife, whose maiden name was Chloe E. Ball, was born July 2, 1802, in the same State, and about sixty miles from Weybridge. In Vermont, where Mr. Lawrence was engaged in agricultural pursuits, they resided until 1858, then came west and located in Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis. At Wausau Mr. Harvey Lawrence served as postmaster for six years, being the second postmaster appointed in that place, and after resigning that office he lived a retired life; he died December 26, 1876, his faithful wife having preceded him to the grave, her death having occurred in Berlin, Wis., June 28, 1870. They had born to them eleven children, only two of whom are now living: Henry, who resides in Chicago, Ill.; and Ithamar, the subject of this sketch.

Ithamar Lawrence was educated at Middlebury Academy, Vt., and after completing his education, and when eighteen years of age, came west, locating at Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., where he was engaged in the lumbering business for about six years. On January 16, 1862, in Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., Wis., Ithamar Lawrence was united in marriage with Miss Hattie A. Crane, and to their union have been born four children, all living, namely: Effie, born October 11, 1865, wife of William Wilson, and residing in Wausau; Charles A., October 6, 1867; Frank E., August 9, 1869, and Harry A., August 11, 1878—the three first mentioned having been born in Oshkosh, and Harry A. in Mosinee. Mrs. Ithamar Lawrence is a daughter of Timothy E. and Aphia (Gordon) Crane.

Timothy E. Crane was born in Eddington, Maine, in 1814. He removed to Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., Wis., in 1857, and was an honored resident of that city until his death, which occurred January 6, 1893. Aphia (Gordon) Crane, his wife, was born in Hollis, Maine, in 1820, and died in Orono, Maine, October 6, 1854. They had born to them a family of four children, of whom two are now living—Hattie A., Mrs. Lawrence, and Emma, wife of Timothy Swan, residing in Oshkosh. In 1859 Mr. Lawrence removed to Mineral Point, Iowa Co., Wis., and from that time until 1861 was engaged in railroading on the Mineral Point railway, the Chicago & North Western, the Green Bay & Winona, and also during that time, for one year, in railroading for the government in the State of Georgia. He lived in Oshkosh until moving, in 1873, to New London; was lumbering on the Wolf river for a few years, and then resided four years in New London, Waupaca Co., Wis.; he removed to Mosinee, Marathon county, in 1876, was occupied in lumbering and logging with his brother until 1885, and since that date has been engaged as a lumber scaler. In 1888 he was appointed police justice for the town of Mosinee, and still fills that position with honor to himself and to the satisfaction of the residents of the village. Mr. Lawrence is an old and highly-respected resident of Mosinee, and is honored by all who know him. In political views he is a stanch Republican. Mr. Lawrence and his wife attend the Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM F. CORCORAN is a native of Ireland, born in County Tipperary, February 21, 1844, son of James and Margaret (Ryan) Corcoran, natives of the same country.

In 1847, when our subject was in his infancy, they bade adieu to home and friends and crossed the briny deep to the New World, first locating in Canada, where they passed the succeeding nine years of their lives. In 1854 they became residents of Wisconsin, settling in Sauk county, but after a short time removed to Grand Rapids. Here the father spent his remaining days, and was called to the home beyond, in 1891, at the advanced age of eighty-two years; his widow still survives him and is now living in South Dakota. Their family numbered twelve children, only three of whom are living at the time of this writing (summer of 1895). William F. is the eldest of the surviving children, the others being Mary, wife of Timothy Conway, a resident of Washington; and Margaret, wife of John Stivers, who is located in Huron, South Dakota.

William F. Corcoran was a lad of ten summers when with the family he came to this State. His interests have since been identified with those of Grand Rapids, and he is recognized as one of her valued and progressive citizens. The common schools afforded him his educational privileges, and when his school life was ended he became identified with the lumber interests, working in the forests of Wood county and on the river. For sixteen years he was employed as foreman by the firm of George A. Neeves & Son, and his long continuance with them indicates his fidelity to their interests and his efficiency in their service. In 1870, he began the business of surveying and making timber estimates, and for the last ten years has engaged in business in his own interest along that line. He well deserves the success that has come to him, for he has ever made the most of his opportunities and used ever legitimate advantage for winning prosperity.

On July 12, 1873, Mr. Corcoran was united in marriage with Miss Mary A., daughter of Michael and Catherine (Moran) Brennan, both now deceased; she has two surviving brothers—John T. and William D., both living in Grand Rapids. Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran have had a family of eight children whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Mary G., May 6, 1875; John W., December 23, 1876; Michael J., February 8, 1879, and died July 12, 1881; Catherine L., February 10, 1883; Charles E., February 25, 1888; and Thomas Emmett, April 16, 1891. They have an adopted son, Michael Francis, whose parents are both deceased, his father, Michael Corcoran, having been a brother of our subject. In politics, Mr. Corcoran is a Democrat, having supported that party since attaining his majority. In 1889 he was appointed county surveyor, and filled the position in such a trustworthy manner that on the expiration of his two-years' term he was re-appointed in 1891, serving until 1893. He is a man of strict integrity, and a well-spent life has gained for him the esteem and confidence of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

IRA PURDY is numbered among the venerable residents and early settlers of Grand Rapids, Wood county, whose heads are crowned with the snows of many winters that mark well-spent lives, and who have been spared to see the place of their abode transformed from a mere hamlet into a flourishing manufacturing town. Our subject was born in Palmyra township, Wayne county, Penn., May 6, 1819, and is a son of James and Charity (Carey) Purdy. The family at one time numbered seven children, three of whom have departed this life, the four yet living being Ira; Eliza, wife of W. H. Mapes, of Milwaukee, Wis.; William, who is residing in Luzerne county, Penn.; and Manson, a resident of Iowa.

Ira Purdy received but a limited education in the district schools of his native town, and then began learning the trade of sash and blind making, at which he worked for about three years. He then learned millwrighting, and after removing from Wayne county to Luzerne county, Penn., he followed the latter occupation four years. His next place of residence was in Northampton, Conn., and thence he emigrated westward, settling in Whiteside county, Ill., where he worked at his trade of millwright from September, 1845, until January, 1846. The latter year witnessed his arrival in Grand Rapids, and here he embarked in logging and millwright work. Four years were passed in that way, when he removed to Marathon county, Wis., but after a year passed there he went to Plover, Wis., where the two succeeding years of his life were spent. Again coming to Grand Rapids, he resided here continuously until 1881, in which year he went to North Dakota, where for six years he devoted his time and energies to agricultural pursuits. Since 1888 he has again been identified with the interests of Grand Rapids and Wood county, and is numbered among the valued and enterprising citizens of this locality.

Mr. Purdy has been twice married; first time to Miss Susan Kline, who lived less than a year, and for his second wife he wedded Miss Mary Powers, by whom he has had one daughter, now the wife of A. W. Rumsey, of Grand Rapids. He and his wife attend the Baptist Church, and in both Church and social circles, they have many warm friends. He has long witnessed the growth and development of this locality, and in all matters pertaining to its welfare has manifested a commendable interest.

JOHN A. STEWART, mayor of Clintonville, Waupaca county, was elected to that important office in the spring of 1894, and is discharging his duties in a capable and able manner. He is one of the foremost men of the county, taking an active interest in its welfare and advancement. In 1880 he became a resident of Clintonville, where he has since been principally engaged in handling tan-bark, meeting with excellent success. Before coming to this county Mr. Stewart had resided in Chicago, locating in that city in 1860, where he was engaged as a bookkeeper until the fall of 1863, in which year he entered the provost marshal's office in Marengo, Ill., remaining there until 1865. In that year he returned to Chicago, where he engaged in the commission business, and was also connected with the Board of Trade until 1879, when he again went to Marengo, and a year later came to Clintonville.

Mr. Stewart was born in Canada in 1836, and is a son of Alexander and Jane (Cansic) Stewart, the father a native of Perthshire, Scotland, the mother of Yorkshire, England. Their wedding was celebrated in Edinburgh, Scotland, and they emigrated to Canada in 1834, where for five years they made their home, coming to McHenry county, Ill., in 1839, and settling on a farm. The father there made his home until his death, in 1866; the mother survived him several years, dying on the old home farm in 1883. The family of this worthy couple consisted of eight children, a brief record of whom is as follows: Elizabeth, widow of J. G. Vawter, lives in Rockford, Ill.; Jeannette, wife of O. C. Higgins, resides near Harvard, Ill.; Jane, wife of S. S. Crandall, is also a resident of Rockford; Margaret, who died in Dixon, Ill., in 1853, was the wife of W. Scott Stewart; Alexander Stephen enlisted in 1862 in the Ninety-fifth Ills. V. I., Company A, of which he was made captain, serving three years, and died in Indianapolis, Ind., in 1890; John A. is the next in order of birth; William H. resides near St. Croix Falls, Wis.; Kate still makes her home on the farm in McHenry county, Illinois.

The subject proper of these lines was reared to manhood in McHenry county, engaging in agricultural pursuits, and there received most of his education, afterward, in 1854, taking a commercial course under D. V. Bell, of Chicago. In 1855 he went to Winterset, Iowa, where he engaged in mercantile business some six months, and then returned to Marengo, Ill., clerking in a dry-goods store. In May, 1866, Mr. Stewart wedded Mary A. Bayley, a native of Australia, and a daughter of Elisha and Mary A. (Beale) Bayley, who were born in England. The parents afterward removed to Chicago, and there the father engaged in the real-estate business, dying there in 1864; the mother's death occurred in 1889 in the same city. There the wife of our subject also died in 1879, and is buried in Oakwood cemetery. Mr. Stewart was again married, this time in October, 1885, to Miss Ella J. Chambers, a native of Weyauwega, Wis., and a daughter of William Chambers, an honored pioneer of that place. Unto Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have been born four children: Ella Gertrude, Marjorie Kate, Mary Elizabeth, and John Malcolm.

In politics, Mr. Stewart advocates the principles of the Republican party, which he has supported since casting his first vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1860. He served as alderman for three years, but now holds the highest municipal office, that of mayor of Clintonville, and in his position as head of village affairs is exercising the same good judgment which has been conspicuous in all his relations in life. He has seen many changes take place in Waupaca county, and has aided materially in its development, being therefore numbered among its most prominent and highly respected citizens.

CR. MALLORY (deceased) was for many years connected with the agricultural interests of Waupaca county, making his home in St. Lawrence township. He was born in the town of Milton, Chittenden Co., Vt., November 5, 1821, and was a son of Moses Mallory, a native of Northfield, Mass. In Vermont the father married Polly Newell, a native of Milton, that State, and our subject was the only son and oldest child born to them. In the common schools he acquired his education, and when a young man began boating on the Lake Champlain, following the same some ten years.

On March 13, 1850, Mr. Mallory was married in the town of Westford, Vt., to Adeline Allen, who was born January 13, 1828, in Oakham, Worcester Co. Mass., a daughter of Lysander and Mary (Woodbury) Allen, natives of the same county, the father's birth occurring in the town of Oakham, the mother's in Barre. Mrs. Mallory is one of their family of eight children—five sons and three daughters—the others being: Seneca W., who died in Vermont, in September, 1850; Mary G., whose death occurred about the same time in Vermont; Lysander H., a manufacturer of Amherst, Mass.; Haskell H., a resident of Springfield, Mass.; Charlotte E., who died in Essex, Vt., in June, 1850; Lewis W., a lumber merchant of Amherst, Mass.; and J. West, who died in September, 1850. The father and three of the children died in the same month, the entire family being ill with typhoid fever at that time. He and his wife were buried in the town of Westford, Chittenden Co., Vt., though the latter's death occurred in Massachusetts, in March, 1884, when she had reached the age of eighty years. After his marriage, Mr. Mallory began railroading on the Vermont Central railroad, and later was employed by the Michigan Southern & Northern Indiana Railroad Company, now the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad Company, serving as conductor for several years on both freight and passenger trains.

In the spring of 1858 Mr. Mallory left Colchester, Vt., for Wisconsin, accompanied by his wife and two sons, West A., born October 15, 1852, and R. C. By way of the Vermont Central they traveled to Rouses Point, thence to Ogdensburg, N. Y., from there by boat to Toronto, and thence to Collingwood. They then proceeded to Green Bay, Wis., via the straits of Mackinaw, from that place to Oshkosh, thence to Northport by way of the Wolf river, then by wagons to St. Lawrence township, Waupaca county, where they settled in Section 36. Mr. Mallory had previously been through this territory in search of pine land, and was thus acquainted with the country. While their log house was being built the family made their home with William Cain, and, although the country was new and sparsely settled, their home was quite pleasant. The boys were lost at one time while playing but a short distance from the house. After their arrival in this State a daughter was born—Mary, whose birth occurred December 30, 1858. She is now Mrs. John Ritchie, of Royalton township, Waupaca county. The father began to clear and improve the land, making it one of the best farms of the neighborhood.

Mr. Mallory was a man of great strength, and after coming to Wisconsin had charge of a log train north of Stevens Point. His weight avoirdupois was instrumental in causing him to give up his position with the Wisconsin Central railroad, in 1873, after being in the employ of that company for about a year. His death occurred October 29, 1890, after an illness of only about two weeks, and he was interred in the brick school house cemetery. In later life he affiliated with the Republican party, prior to which he was a staunch supporter of the Whig party, voting for William Henry Harrison, and during the campaign of 1840 he drove a team which hauled a log cabin.

Since his death Mrs. Mallory resides with her son, R. C. In the fall of 1872, she and her family returned to Amherst, Mass., where they spent a year visiting.

R. C. MALLORY, the second son of C. R. Mallory, was born in Essex, Vt., September 19, 1854, and came to Wisconsin with his parents when four years old. He conned his lessons in the Block School House, where almost his entire education was received, with the exception of the year spent in Massachusetts, where he also pursued his studies. He has always considered Waupaca county his home, although for three or four winters he was employed in the lumber regions and also "ran the river," being on the Wolf river and tributaries. He endured all the hardships incident to that business. In Parfreyville, Wis., January 3, 1885, Mr. Mallory married Miss Kate Hanna, a native of Waupaca county, and a daughter of Isaac and Margaret (Lindsay) Hanna, natives of Ireland, the former of whom is a farmer and lumberman. To our subject and wife have been born seven children: Frankie, Lee A., Dee Lindsay, Rex C., Bernice, and Margaret and Adeline (twins).

Mr. Mallory has made farming his principal occupation, and now owns 160 acres on the northeast quarter of Section 36, St. Lawrence township. He is an industrious, energetic man, and the improvements upon the place are all of a high character. He takes great interest in county and township affairs, and always casts his ballot with the Republican party. Socially he is a member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge No. 211, Ogdensburg.

BYRON J. LAMBERT. Success comes not alone by taking advantage of surrounding opportunities, but from creating them. Garfield says: "We must not wait for things to turn up; we must turn them up." With this view of life acting as a motive power, Mr. Lambert has steadily and persistently worked his way upward, attaining the goal of his hopes. He is now one of the most prominent business men of Merrill, Lincoln county.

Our subject is a native of Wisconsin, born in Markesan, Green Lake county, November 15, 1857, and is a son of Charles D. Lambert, whose birth occurred in England on March 23, 1829. The father has two brothers living—Robert, who still makes his home in England; and Henry, a resident of Painted Post, N. Y. When Charles was but seven years old his parents died, and he was bound out to a farmer of England, who soon afterward came to America and located in the State of New York. He remained with that gentleman several years, and then followed the lake for a time, after which he came to Kenosha, Wis., but still later removed to Markesan. In the latter city the father was married, in 1853, to Miss Maria A. Crown, who was born in Vermont in 1832, a daughter of Adison and Amity Crown, who were the parents of nine children: Moses, Auldin, Oren, Frank, Martha, Harriet, Hannah, Cynthia and Maria. Her parents, who were also natives of the Green Mountain State, where the father engaged in farming, came to Wisconsin, locating in Marquette county. There the mother died in 1880, and the father passed away three years later. To Mr. and Mrs. Lambert were born nine children: Charles, Brion, Louis, Frank, John, Archibald, Albert, Melissa and Frances. During the Civil war the father served in the army as a mechanic, being located at Nashville, Tenn. After his return home he began the furniture business in Markesan, Wis., which he still continues. He has been variously employed since coming to America, working for a time at both the carpenter's and butcher's trades, and has also conducted a hotel.

In the common schools of Wisconsin Byron J. Lambert received his early education. At the age of seventeen he began assisting his father in the furniture business, and he remained at home until he had reached the age of twenty-two. He then went to Waupun, Wis., where he was employed as bookkeeper by Hopkins & Jennings, pump and windmill manufacturers, and for a while traveled for the same company. In December, 1880, he arrived in Merrill, and clerked in the "Merrill House" for one year, at the end of which time he entered the employ of P. B. Champagne as bookkeeper in his store and lumber business, serving in that capacity from 1881 to 1886. In the latter year, however, he bought an interest in the store, and the firm name became B. J. Lambert & Co. Here he carried on general merchandising until 1890, when he sold out. In 1885 he was made secretary and treasurer of the P. B. Champagne Lumber Company, which offices he held until the company was re-organized in 1888. On the death of Mr. Champagne, in July, 1890, Mr. Lambert was appointed executor of his will, and re-elected treasurer of the Champagne Lumber Company. This office he continued to hold until January 1, 1894, when he resigned and has since lived retired, though he is still a stockholder of the company and also of the National Bank of Merrill.

On September 8, 1892, Mr. Lambert was united in marriage with Miss Emma Strickland, daughter of George and Helen Strickland. Politically our subject has always cast his vote with the Democratic party, but has no desire for office, preferring to give his undivided attention to his personal interests. With the Masonic fraternity he holds high membership, having attained the Thirty-second degree, and for two years he served as master of Merrill Lodge.

FREDERICK RUNGE, who is now conducting a general store in Merrill, Lincoln county, has for fifteen years there made his home, and is numbered among the most progressive business men. He came to this country from Germany, his birth having occurred in Prussia, February 3, 1843, and is a son of Jacob Runge, who was born in the same province April 27, 1811. The latter was one of a family of four children, the others being John, Christopher and Jane; Christopher died in 1845, at the age of eighteen years.

Jacob Runge, the father of our subject, was a shoemaker by trade, and in his native land wedded Charlotte Genrich, by whom he had nine children, as follows: Matilda, Frederick, Charles, Amelia, Gustina, Ferdinandiana, Albert, Wilhelmina and Alvina, the latter of whom is now deceased. On leaving the Fatherland for the New World, in 1865, the father was accompanied by all his family (with the exception of our subject who was then in the German army), locating in Oshkosh, Wis., where he passed away February 14, 1879; his wife was called to the final home in 1892, while a resident of Merrill.

The subject proper of these lines during his boyhood received the education that was afforded by the common schools of Germany, and as soon as old enough began learning the shoemaker's trade with his father. In August, 1863, he entered the Prussian army, serving in the infantry for nearly three years and a half, and participating in the war between Prussia and Austria. His time having expired in December, 1866, he was mustered out, and in the following April started for America, the sailing vessel on which he embarked occupying more than six weeks in making the voyage across the Atlantic. After landing on the shores of this country he went direct to Oshkosh, Wis., where he worked at his trade until 1873. In that year he removed to Escanaba, Mich., where he was similarly employed for one year, when he returned to Oshkosh and purchased a shoe shop, which, however, was destroyed by fire in 1875. He then emigrated to Missouri, locating in the city of Macon, where he opened another shop, but was again burned out three years later. He immediately resumed business, however, continuing in the same until 1880, when he sold out and returned to Wisconsin. This time he located in Merrill, where he established a similar line of business, and in 1885 added a harness shop. This he carried on until 1894, when on selling out he built his present store building, in which he is carrying a general line of merchandise. He is always pleasant and accommodating, and attends strictly to the wishes of his customers, for which reason he is receiving a liberal patronage.

In Oshkosh, Wis., in November, 1878, Mr. Runge married Miss Anna Puestow, who was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, in 1848, and came to the United States with her mother in 1867. Her father had died in his native land, leaving a widow with six children, namely: Sophia, Anna, Dora, Mary, Charles and Henry; the mother is still living and has now reached the ripe old age of eighty years. To Mr. and Mrs. Runge have been born eleven children, four of whom are now deceased: Paul, Elsie, Oswald and Elizabeth. Those living are Mary, Charles, Anna, Frederick, William, Christine and Gustave; of these Mary, now the wife of William Johonas, resides in Merrill. Mr. Runge is entirely a self-made man and deserves much credit for the success he has achieved. On landing in America he had only six dollars in his pocket, and from this small beginning he has steadily worked his way upward until he is now a well-to-do man, the proprietor of one of the best general stores in Merrill. He and his family are communicants of the German Lutheran Church, while in politics he is independent.

ALPHEUS M. LANING, a largely interested mill-owner and progressive citizen of Antigo, Langlade county, was born in Dodge county, Wis., March 21, 1852, a son of Azariah and Jane (McConnell) Laning.

The father of our subject was a native of Guernsey county, Ohio, a son of Abraham Laning, a Methodist minister who had a family of ten children, five sons—Richard, Azariah, Isaac, Joseph and John—and five daughters whose names are not known, all of whom, excepting Azariah, moved to Missouri and died there. The latter was twice married, first time, in Ohio, to Margaret McCune, and they then moved to Wisconsin, where two children—Hannah M. and Leroy—were born to them. In 1849, soon after the birth of Leroy, the mother died, and two years later, in April, 1851, Azariah Laning married Jane McConnell, a native of Ohio, born June 10, 1828, in Belmont county, daughter of Alexander and Jane (McCune) McConnell, respectable farming people who were the parents of six children—three sons, Alexander, James and Thomas, and three daughters, Mary, Hannah M. and Jane. In 1844 the family came to Wisconsin, settling in Dodge county, on a farm.

R. M. Lanning

The parents were both of Scotch descent, the mother's family being especially prominent. The McCunes trace their lineage back to Queen Mary's time, to one John McCune who wrote freely and fearlessly on "the freedom of the Press." This brought upon the family the wrath of the Queen, and they, being persecuted, fled to the North of Ireland for safety. Some time later two of their descendants, James and Thomas, anxious to escape with others to a land of individual freedom, came to America. Mrs. Laning's grandfather, Thomas McCune, when seventeen years of age, enlisted as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and served seven years, coming out as colonel. In 1798 he settled in Ohio, and from then until the time of his death he was prominent in the history of the State. He was always in public life, spending eleven years in the State Legislature. Here also, in 1800, the four McConnell brothers—James, Alexander, William and Robert—settled, and for many years were farmers in that State. Azariah Laning had three children, viz.: Alpheus M., Libbie and Mary, the last named being now deceased.

Alpheus M. Laning, the subject proper of these lines, was educated at Ripon, Wis., having the advantages of both the high school and college there. After finishing school he remained with his father at Ripon up to the time of the latter's death, which occurred April 25, 1880. They were sash and door manufacturers, and in connection carried on an extensive contracting and building business. After the death of the father, Alpheus took entire charge of the concern, and carried it on after reorganizing it into a stock company. In 1890 the plant was removed to Antigo, when the nature of the business was slightly changed. The company is now known as the "Antigo Screen-door Co.," carrying on the manufacture of screen-doors, windows, etc., and owning, in connection, a large sawmill. Mr. Laning is now president of the organization, and general manager of both the factory and the mill, each of which carries a payroll of about fifty men, and does an exceptionally large and successful business.

On October 25, 1876, Mr. Laning was married, at Ripon, Wis., to Miss Maria Horton, daughter of Aaron and Irene (Tryon) Horton, well-to-do farming people, both natives of New York State, and who were among the first settlers of Fond du Lac county, Wis., where the mother died in 1890, the father in 1893. They were the parents of ten children, six of whom are living, as follows: Charles, in South Dakota; George A., a photographer, of Beaver Dam, Wis.; Malinda, now Mrs. F. M. Lampson, of Oshkosh, Wis.; Josephine, wife of J. W. Watson, of Fond du Lac, Wis.; Isadore, wife of Frank Mayham, of Brandon, Wis.; and Maria, wife of Alpheus M. Laning. Those deceased are: Sarah, Mrs. Clark; Harriet, Mrs. Goodall; William, who left two sons, George and Frank; and Amanda, who died at the age of seventeen years. To Mr. and Mrs. Laning have been born six children: George, Fred, Roy, Lynn, May and Guy. Politically Mr. Laning is a staunch Republican, a strong party man, though never seeking political honors; he is now alderman of Antigo, and held a similar office in Ripon three years while making his home there. In 1889 he visited the Pacific coast, and he has also traveled widely throughout the South. In religious faith he is a member of the Congregational Church at Antigo, his sister being the wife of Rev. Campbell, pastor of that congregation. Socially he is a member of the F. & A. M., and is a Knight Templar. Mr. and Mrs. Laning and family enjoy the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends in and around Antigo, in the social life of which city they maintain a prominent position.

WM. EDW. LANGENBERG, proprietor of one of the leading industries of Stevens Point, Portage county, is a native of New York City, born August 29, 1850, son of Edward Langenberg, who was born April 18, 1821, in Weimar, Saxony, Germany.

In his native land the father of our subject learned the tailor's trade, and as his parents were in limited circumstances he early started out in life for himself. In 1848 he crossed the Atlantic on a sailing vessel to America, the voyage lasting seven weeks. In New York City he worked at his trade, and there married Johannah Von-Nesse, a native of Arnstadt, Germany, born June 28, 1824. After his marriage he had but $1.25 to begin life with. Two children were born in New York, a daughter, who died in infancy, and our subject. Later, Edward Langenberg removed to North Bergen, Hudson county, N. J., where he took out naturalization papers, and there followed his trade. In 1853, in search of a home, he came to Wisconsin, locating near Sauk City, where he had his first experience at farming; two years later, however, he came by team to Little Eau Plaine, Portage county; by a small steamer he went from Stevens Point to near where Dancy, Wis., now stands. He rented a house, but after a short time removed to Big Eau Plaine, Marathon county, Wis. Near Drake's mill he purchased a small tract of land and followed logging, shingle-making and farming; then, early in the spring of 1860, he came to Stevens Point, where he carried on his trade of tailoring, also clerking for George Green, a merchant.

In June of the same year Edward Langenberg traded a yoke of oxen for ten acres of land in Section 20, Hull township, Portage county, and soon afterward added thirty acres more. On that farm a small frame house was erected, 14 x 24 feet, in which the family lived, though the father still clerked and followed his trade in Stevens Point. A clearing was made and farming carried on; the father would chop two cords of wood in a day, help our subject load it into a wagon for market, and then work until late at night at his trade. They thus got the money to pay for a yoke of oxen, and added to their farm until it contained eighty acres. The mother passed away there February 2, 1889, and was buried in the Episcopal Cemetery at Stevens Point. In that city, May 11, 1890, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Emily Podach, the father's death occurred. They were Lutherans in religious belief, while politically Mr. Langenberg was a Republican, and for one term he served as clerk of Hull township, Portage county. After the arrival in Wisconsin the family circle was increased by the birth of three children: Frank, born November 22, 1855, at Little Eau Plaine, and now living with our subject; Emily, born at Big Eau Plaine, Marathon Co., Wis., February 8, 1859, is the wife of Frank Podach, of Stevens Point; and Clara, born June 5, 1861, died September 13, same year. The father was an industrious, hard-working man, and at his death left the family in comfortable circumstances.

W. E. Langenberg was but a child when his parents came to Wisconsin, and still quite a small boy on their arrival in Portage county. He was unable to attend school until ten years of age, and received his first literary instruction at the Old White School House on Water street, Stevens Point. His educational privileges were quite meagre, however, as he left the school room at the age of fourteen. His training at work was not so limited, and he remained at home until after reaching his majority. In an Episcopal Church at Stevens Point, March 17, 1872, Mr. Langenberg was united in marriage with Mary E. Roberts, a native of Maine, born March 8, 1851, daughter of Joseph Roberts. They were blessed with a family of six children: Edward Wm., born in Hull township, Portage county, December 17, 1872, was educated in the high school and business college of Stevens Point, being the first graduate of the latter, and is at present bookkeeper for his father, whom he serves in an able manner; George J., born August 30, 1874, is also employed by his father; Walter, born February 21, 1877, died in infancy; Jennie J., born January 30, 1879, is at home; Frederick, born July 21, 1880, died September 15, 1881; and Ida J., born June 27, 1882, is also at home. The mother of this family died October 1, 1882, and was buried in the Episcopal Cemetery. She attended the church of that denomination, and was a highly respected lady. On February 3, 1884, at Menominee, Wis., Mr. Langenberg wedded Miss Augusta L. Strache, who was born in Zechin, Germany, September 6, 1864, and is a daughter of Christian Strache. To them have been born five children: Katherine E., born November 13, 1884; Charles, born April 10, 1886, died August 20, same year; Hattie A., born June 29, 1887; Ella L., born June 18, 1889; and William E., born September 30, 1891.

The brick making industry, in which our subject has now been engaged for nearly thirty years, was established in the fall of 1866 on the home farm. There was a great demand for brick at that time at Stevens Point, and a brewer who had burned the brick for his own plant advised the father of Mr. Langenberg to engage in their manufacture. During the rainy season, when the oxen's feet would sink deep in the ground, they would find traces of clay. In 1866 the father began brick making, tramping the clay with his feet, and in this way made 4,000 bricks which were air-dried and never burned, yet sold readily at $20 per thousand, the customers coming to the yard for them. Good prices and demand for brick prompted a more extensive venture, and in 1867 a partnership was formed with George Zimmer, which was dissolved that fall; the following year a connection was formed with William Zimmer for one season. The father was then alone until 1870, when our subject was admitted to partnership, but during the years previous had been in the employ of his father. For five years the connection continued, when Mr. Langenberg withdrew, but still worked for his father, and for a time at the carpenter's trade in Stevens Point. In June, 1880, along with Frank Podach, he purchased the business of his father, the firm style becoming Langenberg & Podach, but two years later Mr. Podach withdrew. Edward Langenberg & Son then conducted it until November 13, 1885, when our subject became sole owner, still continuing the business. The plant has been enlarged from time to time, until it now has a capacity of five million brick annually, and a kiln capacity of one million and a half. There has been a wonderful change in the method of making the bricks; at first the mud was mixed with the feet, then oxen were used, and later horse-power and a pug mill; in the fall of 1881 steam power was added, and a P. L. Sword brick machine, manufactured at Tecumseh, Mich.; they still use the same make of machinery.

In 1889 Mr. Langenberg began handling lime, cement, plaster and tile in connection with the sale of his brick, and now carries on business at No. 147 Main street, Stevens Point, where, in 1894, he erected a substantial two-story brick block. He also owns a sawmill, and in 1889, in partnership with his father, established a general store, which he disposed of on the father's death.

Mr. Langenberg is a very busy man, and understands every detail of his business, which has grown to such proportions that he now employs from twenty-five to fifty men all the year round. Although he started out with comparatively nothing save his own indomitable energy, he has now a comfortable competence, and ranks among the prosperous business men of Stevens Point. He is a Republican in politics, and a member of Eintracht Verein. Mrs. Langenberg, who is a most estimable lady, holds membership with the Lutheran Church.

WILLIAM A. CRAVEN, one of the honored veterans of the Civil war, enlisted at Madison, Wis., in September, 1861, as a member of Company H, Eighth Wis. V. I., serving under Capt. Stephen Estes and Gen. Halleck in the Western army, Sixteenth Army Corps. The troops first went to St. Louis, afterward to Fredericktown and Pilot Knob, and made Sulphur Springs their winter quarters. They then proceeded to Cairo, from there to Island No. 10, Pittsburg Landing and Corinth, participating in the battles at those places and also Iuka, and afterward talking part in the second battle of Corinth. The regiment was then engaged in the siege of Vicksburg, thence went to Memphis, Tenn., and under A. J. Smith was in the Red River expedition. Mr. Craven received his discharge in 1863, but was the first man to re-enlist, becoming a member of the same company and regiment. He first went to Oxford, afterward to Coffeyville and Abbeville, and then pursued Price on his raid through Missouri. The regiment then returned to St. Louis, from there went to Nashville, Tenn., and thence to New Orleans. They then took part in the siege of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, and Mr. Craven then received his final discharge in September, 1865, at Demopolis, Ala., having served as a valiant soldier for three years. He had endured all the hardships and privations of army life, and was always found at his post of duty.

Mr. Craven was born in Crawford county, Penn., in 1842, and is a son of Jesse and Lodecia (Muller) Craven, the former a native of the same State, the later of Ohio. They were married in Pennsylvania, and in 1850 emigrated to Watertown, Wis., where the father engaged in carpentering, and was also a bridge contractor and builder. His death there occurred in 1878; his widow is still living, and now making her home with her daughter. In the family were three children: William A., subject of this sketch; Mary, wife of William Foote, of Outagamie county, Wis.; and George, who makes his home in Indian Territory.

William A. Craven learned carpentering in his youth, and in the schools of Watertown, Wis., received his education. He was but eight years of age on coming to this State, and here he has passed nearly his entire life. In 1866 he went to Manhattan, Kans.; there worked at the carpenter's trade. He was married in that city October 4, same year, to Mary E. Graft, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of John and Emzy Graft, both natives of Virginia. The parents removed to Kansas at an early day, becoming pioneers of Manhattan, being there at the time of the Lane troubles. The father was a farmer by occupation, and later removed to Iowa, where he opened up a farm in Page county, but his death occurred at Manhattan, Kans. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Craven were nine children, two of whom are now deceased: Inez, who died in 1887 at the age of sixteen years, and Mabel, who died in 1891 at the age of twelve; those living are: Ira E., a lumberman of northern Wisconsin; Austin, a jeweler of Marion, Wis.; Jesse, a lumberman at Rhinelander; Charley, who is engaged in business with his father; and Willie, Maggie, Archie and Bessie.

In 1879 Mr. Craven returned to Wisconsin, settling in Clintonville, Waupaca county, where he has since made his home. This place was then but a small town, and here he worked at the trade of millwright, traveling all over the northern part of the State engaged in the same line of work. He is a representative of one of the honored pioneer families of Wisconsin, and has taken an active interest in its prosperity. Socially, he holds membership with J. B. Wyman Post, No. 32, G. A. R., being one of its charter members, while his wife is an active member of J. B. Wyman W. R. C., Clintonville, Wis. In politics he affiliates with the Republicans, deeming that in that party is the best guarantee for the perpetuation of the principles of free government. He is a very liberal and public-spirited man, taking a foremost position in every movement or enterprise promising benefit to the community at large.

JOSEPH SHACKETT, a prosperous farmer of Clintonville, Bear Creek township, Waupaca county, was born August 10, 1837, in Montreal, Canada. His parents, Peter and Amelia (Plant) Shackett, were born in Canada, and were of French descent. They had a family of children as follows: Louis, Sophia, Frank, Lucy, John, Matilda, Antony, Joseph (of whom we write) and a twin brother, Ella, and two that died in infancy. Peter Shackett was a day laborer.

Joseph Shackett had very limited opportunities for an education, as the family was large, and it was necessary that the children should early seek a living for themselves. He began working out at the early age of thirteen, and has ever since earned his own living. When fifteen he went to what was called the North Island, and lived with an uncle for five years; then returning home, he remained about five years, working as a day laborer.

On January 6, 1860, Joseph Shackett was married to Ellen Jolin, and six children have been born to them: Julia, Nellie, Hattie, Jessie, Frank and George, three of whom are married, the other three making their home with their parents. Mrs. Joseph Shackett is a daughter of Mitchell and Rose (Brow) Jolin, who were the parents of six children: James, Ellen (Mrs. Shackett), Zebulon, Elizabeth, Orilla, and one that died in infancy. Mr. Shackett's people lived and died in Canada. He and his wife and her people came to Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., January 2, 1862, and finally, after about eleven years, Mr. and Mrs. Jolin, with some of their children, came to Bear Creek township, Waupaca county, and bought forty acres of land in its primitive condition, when there were no roads but Indian trails to mark their way. Here they passed the remainder of their lives, and here they started to hew out of the wilderness what is now a pleasant home. Mr. Shackett, meanwhile, worked in a sawmill in Fond du Lac, and became head sawyer, and he has been connected with this business from time to time ever since. He and his family came to Bear Creek one year after his wife's people, and he helped clear his father-in-law's land, and, in fact, paid for the place. The old people both died in the log house which they built soon after coming—Mrs. Jolin on May 8, 1890, Mr. Jolin November 10, 1890, and they were both buried in Clintonville. Mr. Shackett has about thirty-five acres of land cleared, has built a substantial house, and has a happy home. Politically he is a Republican, and he and his wife are both members of the Catholic Church.

DANIEL GRAHAM. Among the first residents of Eagle River, Vilas county, this is a well-known name, Mr. Graham having, since his coming here in 1882, been one of its most active and public-spirited citizens, both in business and social circles.

He was born in Lockport, N. Y., July 18, 1842, son of Daniel Graham, Sr., who was a native of Massachusetts, born in 1795 in Northampton. His father, also named Daniel, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and emigrating to America married here and settled in Massachusetts, where he followed farming. He had a family of twelve children, of whom seven are named respectively: Elisha, Daniel, Job, Esther, Priscilla, Adeline and Thomas. Grandfather Graham served five years in the Revolutionary war, and was wounded in the battle of Trenton. He and his wife both died at Northampton.

Daniel Graham, father of our subject, married Parmelia Sackett, who was born in 1800 at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., a descendant of the well-known Sackett family of that place; she had brothers and sisters, but little is known of them or of the parents. When about twelve years of age she went to live with a family named St. Johns, near Lewiston, N. Y. At the fall of Fort Niagara, in 1813, the entire family were taken prisoners by the Indians, and Mrs. Graham saw the Indians burn two of Mrs. St. Johns' children in the fireplace; the others were released that night by the British General Brock, and they set out on foot for Batavia, N. Y., Mrs. Graham meeting her husband for the first time on that trip; he was a soldier with Mr. St. Johns at Fort Niagara, was taken prisoner and paroled. Daniel Graham served throughout the war of 1812, was at Lundy's Lane under Scott, and after the conflict he married and settled in Lockport township, Niagara Co., N. Y., buying his first land of the Holland Land Purchase Company. After improving this place he sold it and then purchased the old homestead of over 300 acres, where he passed the rest of his life, dying there in 1854; his widow died in 1887. They were the parents of ten children, of whom seven lived to maturity, viz.: Angeline, Adeline, Tompkins, Welthy, Edward, Frank and Daniel; George, Josephine and Thomas died young, and were buried in the family cemetery at Lockport, N. Y. Daniel Graham, Sr., was a strong Whig, and took an active part in the affairs of his locality, holding many positions of trust in his township and county—such as commissioner, county judge and offices of like importance. He had prospered as an agriculturist, and was in good circumstances at the time of his death which was caused by cholera.

Daniel Graham, whose name introduces this sketch, was reared on the home farm and received a good public-school education, attending the district schools of the home neighborhood and also Lockport High School. In 1856, when fourteen years of age, having brothers in Chicago he went to that city and there took a course in Bryant & Stratton's Business College. In the fall of 1858 he went to New Orleans in company with A. P. Marshall, a levee contractor, and then went on a surveying trip along the Mississippi and Red rivers with Robert Tinney, State surveyor of Louisiana, with whom he remained until March, 1861, when he returned to Chicago. Mr. Tinney became colonel of the First Louisiana Regiment, and he offered Mr. Graham a place in the regiment, but our subject, being a loyal Union man, enlisted, in August, 1861, in Company I, Sixty-seventh Ill. V. I., for three months, at the end of which time he was honorably discharged. On December 24, 1862, he again enlisted, this time in the Third Wisconsin Battery, under Capt. L. H. Drury, and served to the end of the war in the army of the Cumberland, participating in the battles of Stone River, Duck Creek, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain, after which he was transferred with two guns to the U. S. steamer, "Lookout," taking supplies up to Knoxville. He saw over a year of such service, and was in several fights with guerrillas, a band of 300 once attacking them, but they were put to flight. In the spring of 1864 he was released from this duty, and was with Sherman up to the siege of Atlanta, in the engagements that followed, and next went with Gen. Thomas to Tennessee, being with him at Franklin and three days later at Nashville. He was then attached to the brigade detailed to capture Jefferson Davis, and on July 3, 1865, received an honorable discharge at Madison, Wis., as sergeant, to which rank he had been promoted shortly after his second enlistment. At the battle of Chickamauga his command lost their rear battery, and he was wounded and taken prisoner, but he soon made his escape. Mr. Graham's eyesight had been weakened during his service in the army, and for a few years he did little work. His first business venture was the manufacturing of staves and headings, in Chilton, Wis., which he carried on twelve years, at the end of that time going to Antigo, where he was employed as surveyor and woodsman, entering pine lands, some two years. In 1882 he came to Eagle River, then in Oneida county, being one of the first settlers here, and since that time has been engaged in lumbering and surveying.

Mr. Graham is a Republican in politics, and an active man in his section, having since 1885 been county surveyor of Oneida county, and, since its organization, of Vilas county; also serving as chairman of the town and county board, court commissioner, justice of the peace, and in other offices. In 1893 he was one of those instrumental in having Vilas county set off from Oneida county, and he is universally recognized as one of the most enterprising citizens in the locality.

In 1884 Mr. Graham was united in marriage to Estella M. Wright, who was born in Waupaca, Wis., daughter of James and Mary (Sommers) Wright, the former of whom was killed in the battle of Port Hudson. Mrs. Graham had one brother and one sister—Wallace and Dora. After the father's death Mrs. Wright, who now lives at Antigo, married Henry Shipley, by whom she had two children: Alvin and Lillian. Socially, Mr. Graham is a member of the K. of P.

GEORGE S. ROBERTSON, one of the honored band who have come to Wisconsin and hewed a home out of the wilderness, is engaged in the active management of his farm in Section 36, Royalton township, Waupaca county. He was born in the city of Glasgow, Scotland, in February, 1855, and is a son of Duncan and Mary (Houston) Robertson, who were natives of Ayrshire, Scotland.

Duncan Robertson grew to maturity on a farm in Ayrshire, and at the age of twenty-six went to Glasgow, where he was afterward married, and worked in a bonded warehouse there, which occupation he followed till he left Scotland to come to America. Arriving in Royalton township, Waupaca Co., Wis., in 1868, he bought at first forty acres in the virgin forest, where the family made their home. His death occurred in Royalton township in 1881. Politically he was a Democrat, and in religious affiliation a member of the Presbyterian Church. His widow owns the home farm, where she continues to reside, and which now consists of one hundred acres, with good improvements, seventy of which are cleared. Their children were: William, living at home; Duncan, who died in Glasgow in 1861; George, who died at the age of a year and a half; George S., the subject of this record; Walter, a farmer in Dayton township; John, who died in Glasgow; Andrew, living on the home farm; and Christina, who was a teacher in the Weyauwega schools, and in Northport and Phillips, Wis., and died in 1893.

George S. Robertson passed his earlier years in Glasgow, Scotland, and was educated in the schools of that city. At the age of eleven he was employed as an office boy for commission merchant and civil engineer, and remained with the same employer till he left his native land, when he came to Wisconsin with his father and mother and the rest of the family. Coming to Royalton township, Waupaca county, in 1868, he engaged in farming and aided in clearing his father's land. In 1876 he bought a timber tract of ninety acres, part of which he afterward cleared, locating upon it in 1880, and he now owns 110 acres of land, of which over sixty are cleared; he does general farming, and has a good herd of Jersey cattle.

In 1879, in Royalton township, Waupaca county, George S. Robertson and Miss Josephine Ballard were united in marriage, and two children have been born to them—Mary and Duncan. Mr. Robertson is a Democrat, and is the district clerk of his district. He has done his share in clearing the land in Royalton township, has noted the progress of improvement, and ever been interested in the welfare of the county. Mrs. Robertson was born in Berlin, Wis., daughter of Lyman and Mary (South) Ballard. Lyman Ballard, son of Nathan Ballard, was born in New York in 1825, in which State Mary South, who became his wife, was also born. He grew to manhood in New York, was a farmer by occupation, and came to Wisconsin about the year 1859, locating near Berlin. He afterward removed to Royalton township, Waupaca county, went to Casselton, N. Dak., about 1882, and there died in 1887; his widow now resides in Todd county, Minn. They had a family of nine children, as follows: Royal, residing in Casselton, N. Dak.; Rispa, twin sister, wife of Wallace Wells, of Manawa, Wis.; Daniel, residing in Minnesota; Josephine (Mrs. Robertson); Wallace, who died in 1882, in Waupaca county, Wis., at the age of twenty-two; Nelson, who died in Duluth, Minn., in 1893; Mary, who died at the age of two years; Ralph and Effie, both residing in Minnesota. Mrs. Robertson was reared in Waupaca county, and has witnessed much of its growth and progress.

JOHAN MOREY, an enterprising and progressive farmer of Waupaca township, Waupaca county, claims England as the land of his birth, which event occurred in Cheshire, April 5, 1833. His father, William Morey, was a native of the same locality, born in June, 1809. He was a farmer by occupation and rented the land which he operated, but owned a pleasant little cottage in Shropshire. The grandfather of our subject, James Morey, also a native of Cheshire, and a farmer by occupation, wedded Mary Wharrahm, and four children blessed their union: John, William, James and Ann. The father of this family died in England in March, 1849, after which the mother and her daughter crossed the ocean to Canada, where her last days were passed.

William Morey was reared on the old homestead, and to his father gave the benefit of his services until he had attained his majority. In 1831 he married Ann Platte, a native of Cheshire, and a daughter of John Platte, who was foreman of an estate in that locality. John Platte had four sons and five daughters: Samuel, John, George, Thomas, Ann, Elizabeth, Margaret, Ellen, and Mary. The parents both died in England. In the year 1850 William Morey, accompanied by his family, crossed the wide ocean to the New World, settling on Prince Edward Island, where he followed farming six years. He then removed to St. Lawrence county, N. Y., and upon the farm which he there purchased made his home ten years, when he came to the West, locating in Lafayette county, Wis. The succeeding three years of his life were passed upon a farm of 200 acres which he there purchased, and then occurred his removal to Portage county, Wis., where he made his home some ten years. Selling out, he then joined his son James in Massachusetts, where his death occurred in 1880. His wife passed away in 1889. They were people of fair education, and their many excellencies of character won them high regard. Their children, three in number—John, Ann and James—were all born in Cheshire.

Mr. Morey, whose name opens this article, acquired his education in the common schools, and under the parental roof spent the days of his childhood, continuing at home until his marriage. That event was celebrated in Prince Edward Island in 1850, the lady of his choice being Miss Sarah Kett, a daughter of Francis and Phyllis (Short) Kett, who were born and married in England, in which country her father followed farming. Crossing the Atlantic, they located in Canada, but afterward went to Massachusetts, where the mother's death occurred in 1882. The father subsequently returned to Canada, where he departed this life in 1886. Frank, James, John, Mary Ann, Eliza and Sarah were their six children.

Six years after his marriage John Morey removed to St. Lawrence county, N. Y., in company with his father, and resided in that locality nine years, or until June, 1865, when Waupaca county gained him as one of her valued citizens. His first location was in Farmington township, where he bought a tract of land, to the cultivation and improvement of which he devoted his energies some seventeen years. At the end of that time he purchased a farm in Waupaca township, the same on which his son Frank now resides, and a year later became the owner of his present valuable farm, comprising 228 acres, then but partially improved. He was the first farmer that began the cultivation of potatoes on an extensive scale, and shipped the first car load of vegetables from Waupaca about the year 1875. He is industrious and enterprising, and carries forward to successful completion whatever he undertakes.

Mr. and Mrs. Morey had a family of fourteen children, eight of whom are yet living: James, John, William, Richard, Frank, Sarah J., Caleb and Walter; Mary Ann and Abigail grew to mature years, and were married ere death claimed them; Bennie died at the age of fourteen, Edward at the age of nine, and two in infancy. Mr. Morey upholds by his ballot the men and measures of the Democratic party, has served as township assessor and in other local offices, and has been officially connected with the schools of this locality for a number of years. He is a warm friend of the cause of education and of all enterprises and interests that are calculated to promote the general welfare. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in his younger years was an active worker in the lodge. A self-made man, he started out in life with no capital save a determination to succeed and worked his way steadily upward, overcoming the difficulties and obstacles in his path until he is now numbered among the substantial citizens of the community.

EDWARD Y. SMITH (deceased) was during his lifetime one of the intelligent, substantial and hard-working pioneers of Belmont township, Portage county. He was a descendant of an old New England family, but was not a man who courted notoriety. He attended strictly to the business of a farmer, and the work that lay before him was thoroughly done. No man stood higher in the esteem of the community than he.

Mr. Smith was born in the Island of Martha's Vineyard, Mass., March 29, 1833, the son of Harrison and Sophrona Smith. Harrison Smith was superintendent of the poorhouse on Martha's Vineyard, and had a family of six children, as follows: Jane, now living at Minneapolis, Minn., widow of Cornelius Blount, a merchant and early settler in Dakota; Lyman A., who moved to Missouri; Charles F., who died in Portage City; Edward Y.; Samuel B., who removed to Arkansas; Ann, a maiden lady, who lives at Decorah, Iowa; the older boys followed fishing, and frequently shipped in the whalers that put out from the adjacent coast. In 1849, when Edward was fourteen years old, his father moved west with his family, settling in Lisbon township, Waukesha Co., Wis. He was a well-to-do man, and a thorough-bred "Yankee," priding himself upon his Puritan ancestry. He died on his farm about 1851, and his widow survived only three months; both were buried in Lisbon township.

Edward Y. Smith attended the schools of Massachusetts, and after the death of his parents in Wisconsin the home was broken up. He was a born farmer, and worked out for others. While thus employed he met his wife, Miss Elizabeth C. Moyes. She was born in Perthshire, Scotland, June 20, 1834, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Rogers) Moyes, who in 1840 emigrated to America, landing with their six children at Quebec. After visiting relatives in Canada they came to Lisbon township, Waukesha county. The children were as follows: Jeannette, now Mrs. W. D. Dopp, of Belmont township; John, who died in Dane county, Wis.; Elizabeth C. and Margaret (twins), the former being the widow of Mr. Smith, subject of this sketch, the latter being the widow of Gilbert Dopp, of Monterey, Waukesha county; James, of Lisbon township, Waukesha county, and Mary, now Mrs. Benjamin Dopp, of Monterey, Waukesha county. John Moyes was a poor man, and supported his family by hard work. His good wife ably seconded him, and in times of necessity proved a valuable assistant in the harvest field. He died December 2, 1847, on the small farm which he had purchased in Lisbon township. His wife survived until April, 1889, and passed away in Monterey, Wis., aged eighty-five years. Elizabeth C. was a self-made woman. She desired an education, but her parents were too poor to help her. She began working out when twelve years old for her board and for the privilege of attending school. When she began receiving wages for her services she gave the money to her parents to help pay for their home. She managed to obtain a good education, and thus fitted herself for teaching school. She taught a number of terms when wages were as low as ten shillings per week, and later also when ten dollars per month was rated a fair salary.

The marriage of Edward Y. Smith, then a farm hand, to Elizabeth C. Moyes, this young schoolteacher, occurred December 2, 1853, at Brookfield, Waukesha county. For eighteen months after marriage she lived with her mother, while her husband worked out. He was then ready to found his future home. He purchased eighty acres in Section 36, Belmont township, Portage county, and with his wife and young child Julia, and a few effects, started in a covered wagon for the distant home; they also brought with them a little stock, including one cow; the journey consumed six days. They settled in a little log cabin, 12 x 14 feet, and here they passed their happiest years, sweetened as it was by the sense of ownership and independence. There was more comfort in that little log house than in the substantial home which followed it; here, too, four children were added to the family. Mr. Smith industriously continued his pioneer labors, and added to his farm from time to time until, at his death, which occurred through an accident, October 5, 1888, he owned 260 acres; he was buried in the cemetery near Towne, Portage county. Mr. Smith was a Republican, and while not a politician took an interest in public affairs, at times being called to fill some local office. He was a self-made man, one who worked hard for his home, and who was highly esteemed by all who knew him. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith are: Julia, now Mrs. Samuel Riley, of Dayton, Waupaca county; Owen C., a tinner, of Templeton, Waukesha county; Isadore S., now Mrs. Henry Pope, of Dayton township, Waupaca county; Margaret A., now Mrs. Fred Minton, of Lanark, Portage county; Wallace A., Clifford H., Bertha M., Lyman A., all at home, as is also Otha (an adopted son).

Since the death of Mr. Smith his widow has had charge of the farm. She has made additions to their home, one of the pleasantest and most commodious in the township, and both before and since her husband's death she has proved herself to be a thorough business woman. She had been of great assistance to Mr. Smith, and is most highly respected. Formerly a Congregationalist, Mrs. Smith is now a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WARREN L. HARRIS, who was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, has a farm in Section 20, Larrabee township, Waupaca county. He located in the township in 1881, and bought in the woods a farm of forty acres, which he has since improved. He was born in New York in 1847, and is the son of William L. and Abigail (Harris) Harris.

William L. Harris, father of our subject, was born in Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., was reared to manhood and married in his native State, and in 1854 came to Waupaca county, Wis., where he died three months later. His wife survived him twenty years, and died in 1874 in Waupaca township, Waupaca county. They reared a family of six children, as follows: George, who resides in Larrabee township, was in the army; Warren L. is the subject of these lines; William resides in Waupaca township; Samuel S. is sheriff of Rock county, Neb.; James died in Waupaca county in 1880, and Mary is the wife of Samuel Warren, of Deadwood, South Dakota.

Warren L. Harris came to the city of Waupaca, Waupaca county, in 1854, when he was eight years of age, and was educated in the schools of that place. On February 29, 1864, he enlisted in Company B, Tenth Wis. V. I., and at Fond du Lac was mustered into Company G, Twenty-first Wis. V. I. He served with Sherman on the "march to the sea," and took part in the review at the National Capital. On July 19, 1865, at Louisville, Ky., he received an honorable discharge, and then returned to Waupaca township, where he followed farming, and opened up his farm. In Waupaca township, Waupaca county, in 1872, Warren L. Harris and Miss Emma Jane Beach were united in marriage, and one child was born to them—Herbert. Mrs. Harris was born in Canada, and was the daughter of David Beach, of Union township, Waupaca county. She died in Union township in 1878. In 1880, in Larrabee township, Mr. Harris again married, taking for his second wife Miss Flora M. Cook, daughter of a pioneer of the township, and three children have been born to them: Frankie, L. Oliver (who died at the age of four months), and Roy C. In politics Mr. Harris is a Republican. He has been a member of the town board for nine years, school clerk for twelve years, is justice of the peace, and holds all three of these offices at this time (July, 1895). He is a member of J. B. Wyman Post No. 32, G. A. R., officer of the day, and has been commander of the Post. He has been delegate to the county convention. Mr. Harris takes much interest in what he believes to be for the welfare of the county.

PETER JOHNSEN is one of the leading and influential citizens of Waupaca township, Waupaca county, and identifies himself with all interests calculated to promote the general welfare. He was born on the island of Lolland, Denmark, August 11, 1845, his birth occurring at the home of his grandfather, where he lived for seven years. His father, John Petersen, was at that time absent in the army. He, too, was of Danish nativity, born in 1826, and was a soldier of the war of 1848, continuing in the service for some years. After his return the family again went to their own home, the father owning a small farm. His wife bore the maiden name of Margareta Rasmasson, and by their marriage they became the parents of four children: Peter, Hans, Kieston and Mary.

Our subject attended the public schools between the ages of seven and fourteen years, and then started out in life for himself. He secured work as a farm hand, and continued with one man for seven years; then worked for another farmer one year, after which he returned to his first employer, continuing with him until his emigration to America. In April, 1866, he left Denmark, and crossing the broad Atlantic landed in New York City, but in the West he hoped to make his home, and so continued his journey until May 11, when he arrived in Oshkosh, Wis. He was a stranger in a strange land, with an indebtedness of ten dollars resting upon him; but with good courage and a laudable ambition he began work, and in the years which have followed he has prospered. He spent eighteen months in Oshkosh, working in a sawmill and chopping wood in the winter—for he scorned no employment which would yield him an honest living. In the autumn of 1867 Mr. Johnsen came to Waupaca county, and with the capital which he had acquired purchased eighty acres of his present farm. As the years have passed he has added to this from time to time, until now 200 acres pay to him a rich tribute for the cultivation and care he bestows upon them, while the substantial buildings he has erected stand as manuments to his thrift and enterprise, and the neat appearance of the place indicates his careful supervision. He also has other property besides this farm.

Mr. Johnsen was married in Waupaca, Wis., March 20, 1868, to Mary Rasmussen, who was born in Denmark, February 25, 1846. Her parents sailed for the New World, and later she crossed the Atlantic on the same vessel on which her future husband was a passenger. To them have been born seven children: Anna, now the wife of Hans Rasmussen; William, a farmer of Waupaca township; Mrs. Maggie Peterson, residing in Saxeville township; Julia, Peter, Louie and Alfred. Mr. Johnsen votes with the Republican party, and has been quite a leader in town politics. He is now serving as township supervisor, has been officially connected with the schools, and is a warm friend of the cause of education, doing all in his power for its promotion. Both he and his wife are consistent and faithful members of the Danish Lutheran Church, contribute liberally to its support, and are active workers in its interests. In 1887 Mr.

Johnsen returned to Denmark, spending four pleasant months in visiting his native land and renewing the acquaintances of his early life. But he is content with his American home, for in this country he has met with prosperity and gained many warm friends.

JOHAN H. SMITH, whose well-spent life has gained him the high regard of all with whom business or social relations have brought him in contact, is a native of Germany, born in the Province of Nassau, July 24, 1832.

His father, John H. Smith, Sr., who was born at the same place, March 17, 1804, was a mason and contractor and did a great deal of work on the public buildings of his native land. In 1828 he married Catherine Smith, and they became the parents of ten children, all born in Germany, of whom five died in infancy; the others were John H., Carl, Catherine, Susan and William A. In 1852, the father, accompanied by his family, sailed for the United States, and landing in New York City, there spent one year working at his trade. In the autumn of 1853 he arrived in Milwaukee, Wis., where he carried on masonry work three years. In the meantime his son John had come to Waupaca county, and either the father followed him, locating on a farm in Section 6, Waupaca township, where he carried on agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1874. He was a very active man, well liked and highly respected by all who knew him. His wife, who survived him some years, passed away in 1890.

John H. Smith, whose name opens this review, was nineteen years of age at the time of his arrival in the United States. He here learned the trade of cigar making which he followed for one year in New York, after which he spent the succeeding year at work as a farm hand. Hoping then to benefit his financial condition in the West, he sought a home in Milwaukee, Wis., where he was employed at general labor. In October, 1856, he came to Waupaca, and purchased forty acres of land, to which his father soon after removed. He then began working at the mason's trade, which he had learned of his father in his earlier years, and soon began taking contracts for railroad and other work. After the breaking out of the Civil war, Mr. Smith, prompted by a spirit of patriotism, enlisted December 1, 1861, in Company F, Eighteenth Wis. V. I., commanded by Capt. Roberts. At Milwaukee he joined his regiment which soon afterward went to the front and took part in its first battle at Pittsburg Landing. He also participated in the battle of Corinth and several skirmishes, after which he was taken ill with fever, and being unfitted for further service was honorably discharged in December, 1862. He at once returned home, and as soon as he had recovered his health resumed his old business of contracting, helping to erect many of the best buildings in the county. His earnings he has invested in his farm, and to-day has one of the most valuable farming properties in Waupaca county, comprising 200 acres of rich and arable land, highly cultivated and well improved with a pleasant residence and substantial barns and out-buildings. He is to-day recognized as one of the leading farmers of the county.

An important event in the life of Mr. Smith occurred in January, 1860, when was celebrated his marriage with Harriet Hales, who was born in England in 1838, a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Taylor) Hales. They came to America in May, 1856, with their six children—Robert, Benjamin, Martha, Sarah, Harriet and Katie—and settled in Waupaca township, Waupaca county. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith were born four children: Carl, Fred and Ernest, at home, and Sarah, who died in infancy.

Mr. Smith joined the Republican party on its organization, and was a great admirer of Fremont, but since Horace Greely was a candidate for the Presidency, he has supported the men and measures of the Democratic party. For five years he served as assessor of his township, and for years was a school officer, taking an active interest in the cause of education, and doing all in his power for its promotion. His own school privileges were somewhat limited; he attended school in Germany but never the English schools, yet has learned to read and write the English language, and is now a well-informed man, keeping himself well posted on all the questions of the day, both political and otherwise, and reads extensively both newspapers and books. Socially, he is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic. In March, 1894, he and his wife went to California to visit his brother William, and spent two months in traveling over the western country, greatly enjoying the trip. Mr. Smith is pre-eminently a self-made man. In his earlier years he was the mainstay of his parents, and provided them with a home, after which he started out to secure a home of his own. His efforts have been crowned with prosperity, and he has worked his way upward from a humble position to one of affluence.

GEORGE R. TAYLOR, M. D., the oldest practicing physician of Waupaca county, and one of its most highly honored citizens, was born in the city of Bristol, England, October 28, 1822, son of Robert Taylor, a builder and contractor, who was born in the same city in 1796.

In his youth Robert was a marine in the English navy, on the frigate "Vengeur," which was sent to America during the war of 1812, and while here Mr. Taylor was engaged against Gen. Jackson at the battle of New Orleans, January 8, 1815. After his discharge from the navy he purchased a small piece of land at Bristol and began what promised to become a successful career. He had some seventy-two buildings under way in 1830, but the panic of 1831 swept away his entire property. Unable to recover from this crushing blow Mr. Taylor resolved to start anew in America. In 1842 he sent in advance his family, consisting of his wife, Hannah (Hopkins), and seven children—Hannah, Robert, Mary, George R., Lydia, Jemima and Eliza—who settled on government land in Jefferson county, Wis., Mr. Taylor following the same year. Later he removed his family to a timber claim in Concord township, Jefferson county, and there died in 1849, the wife surviving until 1877. Mr. Taylor, though a man of limited education, possessed many noteworthy and sterling traits, and had brilliant possibilities, which in another setting would have made him a prominent character.

George R. Taylor, as might easily be foreseen, was in early life made familiar with many privations, but these perhaps proved to be his making. He was apprenticed to the tinner's trade at Bristol after his father's failure, and worked in the shop until his father emigrated to America, his only schooling having been received before he was nine years old. Arriving with his father's family in America, he remained on the farm for five years, helping to clear it up. He then returned to his trade, and for three years superintended a tinshop at Watertown, Wis. Too ambitious to remain a tinner all his life, Mr. Taylor went in 1850 to Madison, and while there employed at his trade studied medicine with Dr. Chapman. Without any means, he was obliged to work to pay expenses. Four years later he attended lectures at the Marine Hospital Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, receiving his diploma in 1855. For two years he practiced medicine at his old home in Jefferson county, then, in 1856, located at Waupaca, where he has ever since practiced, except while in the army. In the fall of 1863 he enlisted in the United States service as surgeon, and remained until the close of the war, being stationed most of the time at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Dr. Taylor was married in 1856, to Eliza Herron, daughter of David and Sarah Ann Herron, who were natives of New York, and afterward moved to Michigan, where Eliza was born. Dr. and Mrs. Taylor have had six children: Florence, Sarah Ann, George, Bessie, Edna and Edith. Appreciating the advantages of an education, Dr. Taylor has kept all his children at school until their graduation. He has been warmly attached to the public-school system, and for many years has been a member of the school board. In politics he is a Republican, and both he and his wife are members of the Congregational Church. If the "lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime," there are many lessons to be learned from the early struggles and happy life in the later years of Dr. Taylor. Men may remain in the obscurity in which untoward circumstances have placed them, or they may if so disposed toil onward and upward toward the light, with assurances of a crowning success, if only the efforts be well directed and unrelaxed.

A E. HAGNA, a prosperous young business man of Iola, Waupaca county, whose success is due to his own efforts, was born in Norway, October 16, 1857, and is a son of Ellef Hagna, a farmer of ordinary means, who had a family of eight sons, namely: Ellef, of Norway; A. E., subject of sketch; Ole, of Norway; Targrim, of Iola; Johannes; Ole; John, who died in infancy; and John, who is still living. The sons who lived to adult age all came to the United States except those who are still living in Norway.

The subject proper of this record received such educational privileges as were afforded by the schools of rural districts, and remained at home until fifteen years of age, when he began to learn the tailor's trade, which he followed until the spring of 1880; but wages were low in Norway, and chances for advancement were meagre. He and his brother Targrim, therefore, concluded to seek their fortune in the United States, and their father giving them money for the trip they bade farewell to their old home and friends, and in the month of May sailed from Christiania on the steamer "Anglo" for England, then embarking at Liverpool on the "City of Berlin," which after a voyage of twelve days dropped anchor in the harbor of New York. The destination of the young men was Iola, Wis., where they had friends living, and in the latter part of June they reached that city.

Our subject could not then secure work at his trade, and as he was dependent on his own labors for a living he did what he could, accepting a position with the Michigan, Lake Shore & Wisconsin Railroad Company. He was unaccustomed to such hard labor, but he wished to succeed and this worthy ambition inspired him to continued effort. He was unable to speak a word of English, yet he pressed on and continued his service on the railroad until Christmas, 1880, when Targrim cut a limb, and in consequence the brothers were forced to remain idle for two weeks. They then returned to Iola and spent the winter with a friend, Halver Johnson, a farmer, doing chores for their board. In the spring of 1881 Mr. Hagna secured work at his trade in Wau-paca with a Mr. Stearns, with whom he continued from March until July 4, when going to Amherst, Wis., he was there employed for a year and a half. He afterward worked for August Goerke of Stevens Point until Christmas, 1881, when he went to Wausau, spending two years in the employ of Charles Weisner. His next service was in Minneapolis, where he worked at his trade for a year, and in March, 1885, he opened a merchant-tailoring establishment and clothing store in Iola in partnership with his brother Targrim, who remained a member of the firm until December 1, 1888, when our subject became sole proprietor.

On November 11, 1890, Mr. Hagna was married in Iola, to Miss Lola Johnson, a native of Norway, and a daughter of Johannes Johnson, a farmer of Iola. They have one son—Elmer, born May 7, 1891, an interesting little fellow. The parents are members of the Lutheran Church. They have a pleasant home, and in addition Mr. Hagna owns his store and business, which he has acquired entirely through his own exertions, industry and good management being the keynote of his success. He turns out an excellent grade of work, and his straightforward, honorable dealing has secured him the confidence and won him the patronage of the public. In politics he is a Republican, and though not an office seeker manifests a commendable interest in the success of his party.

DAVID OVENS is one of the representative men of Lanark township, is a systematic farmer, and is highly esteemed in the community in which he lives. He was born December 18, 1860, in Lanark, Portage Co., Wis., and is the son of James and Helen (Swan) Ovens.

James Ovens came to the States from Lower Canada in 1856, and settled in Section 26, Lanark township, Portage Co., Wis. About 1859, in Portage county, he married Helen Swan, and children have been born to them as follows: David, subject proper of these lines; Marion, now the wife of John D. Swan; and Genie and Thomas, living with her parents. Mrs. Ovens was the daughter of May and Thomas Swan, and came from Blackford, Perthshire, Scotland. With her mother she sailed, in July, 1857, from Glasgow to Liverpool, where they took passage on the vessel "Pomona," and after a voyage of three weeks and three days landed in New York. Their destination was Portage county, Wis., whither they came by water and rail. Here they met a brother of Helen Swan, with whom they made their home until her marriage.

David Ovens received a common-school education when a boy, and then went north and worked for a few years in the lumber woods, where he saved up enough money to buy a farm, which has now 160 acres, of which ninety are under cultivation. With the exception of the time spent in the lumber woods, he made his home with his father until he was twenty-five years of age. David Ovens was united in marriage in 1885 with Miss Mary Lombard, of Stockton, by whom he has had three children: Mary, born March 13, 1887; James, December 21, 1889, and Charles, March 26, 1892. Mrs. Ovens is the daughter of Washington and Mary J. (Kemp) Lombard. For one year after his marriage Mr. Ovens lived with his parents, and worked his farm; then moved into his present abode. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and is much pleased at the recent victory of that party. He now holds the office of supervisor of Lanark township. In religion both he and his excellent wife are believers in the Protestant faith.

GUNDER O. WEMME, one of the most popular farmers in New Hope township, Portage county, was born in Norway, June 19, 1829, and is a son of Ole K. and Ingeborg (Gunderson) Wemme, both natives of Norway, the former born in 1789, the latter in 1787. By a former marriage the father had two children—Arcold and Knute—both living in Norway. The mother of our subject died in Norway in 1852, leaving four children—two sons and two daughters: Ole, a farmer of Bosque Co., Tex., married Antoinette Mortenson, and they have eight children: Oscar, Matilda, Josephine, Julia, Malisa, Beatrice, Martin and Eleanor; Gunborg wedded Jerrold Grimland, a farmer of New Hope township, and they have nine children: Christina, George, August, Julius, Bertinus, Mary, Olive, Emma and Peter; Anna (deceased) was the wife of John Gunderson, a farmer of Waupaca Co., Wis., and to them were born five children: Mary, Louisa, Jorgena, Oscar and Gustav.

During his boyhood Gunder O. Wemme received a very limited education, but has since acquired a vast store of knowledge from books and experience, so that he is a well-informed man. In May, 1853, his father, sister Anna and himself, engaged passage at Arndal, Norway, on the sailing vessel "Brothers," and after a voyage of nine weeks and two days, landed at St. John, New Brunswick. Having no money with which to come farther, he and his father were obliged to there seek employment; but the sister proceeded on with friends who had come over with them. They worked at anything they could find to do, and after saving a few dollars, started for Weyauwega, Waupaca Co., Wis., which they reached August 22, 1853. The father died in this country August 12, 1867. On the following day after his arrival in Weyauwega, our subject secured a position as deck hand on the "Badger State," the first steamer used on Wolf river, and went to work for sixteen dollars per month; but at the end of two weeks was promoted to pilot, as the regular one was ill, his wages being raised to twenty-five dollars. At the close of the season he went to Stevens Point, Wis., where he worked until the following spring at anything he could get to do. He then went into the lumber woods at Pine river, where he remained until the spring of 1855, when he returned to Stevens Point, there learning the mason's trade, and for the first season received one dollar per day, but the following year received two dollars.

While in the pineries Mr. Wemme had pre-empted 160 acres of land, in Section 29, New Hope township, Portage county, to which he has since added a forty-acre tract, and in the fall of 1855 he built a log house on his place, which is now used as his kitchen. After his marriage he took up his residence there, and was obliged to walk to Stevens Point or Waupaca, Wis., for provisions, returning with them on his back. He still continues to follow his trade during a portion of the year, and is considered one of the most skillful masons in the county.

On the old homestead, December 13, 1856, Rev. Duse, of Scandinavia, Wis., performed a wedding ceremony which united the destinies of Mr. Wemme and Miss Bertha Helena Johanneson Rambeck, whose birth occurred in Norway, May 2, 1838. Her parents, Johannes Hanson and Maria (Nelson) Rambeck, were both natives of Norway, the father born September 28, 1812, the mother August 10, 1802. They both died in Portage county, the former September 28, 1880, and the latter September 8, 1891, and now lie buried in the cemetery of New Hope.

With her parents and three brothers Mrs. Wemme left Christiania, May 2, 1853, on the "William Tell," which sailed for Quebec, where they landed six weeks and three days later, and came direct to Rock River, Wis., where the father rented a farm, but the daughter obtained employment in Milwaukee, working there six months as a domestic, and then returned to Rock River. Soon after the family removed to New Hope township, making the journey in a wagon drawn by oxen, and the father bought 160 acres in Section 12, where he erected a log house. At the end of ten years, however, he gave that property to his sons, and purchased a forty-acre tract, on which he erected a house, which continued to be the home of the parents until 1872, when they came to live with their daughter, Mrs. Wemme. By a former marriage Mrs. Rambeck had one son—Hans—who wedded Ostra Olson, and died in Hamlin county, S. Dak., January 16, 1888. Mrs. Wemme had two brothers, one of whom is still living—Olaves, a farmer of New Hope township, married to Miranda Larson, by whom he has three children: Julius, Matilda and Johan. The other brother, Johan, who was a private in Company I, Fifteenth Wis. V. I., was wounded at Missionary Ridge; he married Bertha Johnson, with whom he went to California, where he died, leaving considerable property.

Mr. and Mrs. Wemme are the parents of the following children: Ole, born August 8, 1857, died August 20, same year; Emma Matilde, born December 3, 1858, married in New Hope June 26, 1883, to Albert Engom, a farmer of Hamlin county, S. Dak.; Josine Louise, born March 27, 1861, married April 8, 1880, to Gunder Olson, also a farmer of Hamlin county, S. Dak. (they have four children: Matilda, who is with our subject, Gustave, Mabel and Lawrence); Oscar Martin, born February 5, 1863, died February 15, 1880; Clara Julia, born March 18, 1865, married in New Hope December 19, 1883, to C. L. Olson, a farmer of Amherst, Wis. (they have four children: Alvin Gustav, Harry Edmund, Clara Josephine and Helen Cora); Johan Nicolai, born June 19, 1867, died March 8, 1878; Gustave Halbert, born October 7, 1869, died February 25, 1878; Henry Anton, born June 20, 1872, is a farmer of Dakota; Hannah Bertine, born December 14, 1874, Othilde Emelia, born February 20, 1877, and Johan Halbert, born September 17, 1879, are all at home.

In the spring of 1885 Mr. Wemme made a visit to his children in Dakota, remaining two weeks, since which time he has three times visited them, while in the fall of 1892 his wife and son John also made a trip to Dakota. In 1891 he purchased 160 acres of wild land in Hamlin county, which is now operated by one of his sons. He is one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of New Hope township, and has been called upon to fill several positions of honor and trust, being school director several years, also clerk and treasurer; township chairman fourteen consecutive years; and served as supervisor many terms. He is now holding the office of president of the Home Insurance Company. Mr. Wemme has ever been a great reader, and consequently is a pleasing conversationalist. With the United Norwegian Lutheran Church he and his wife hold membership, while in politics he is a strong Republican.

JOHAN FINNEY, M. D., the oldest practicing physician of the northern part of Waupaca county, his residence being in Clintonville, was born in Rochester, N. Y., in 1846, a son of Patrick and Julia (Donahue) Finney, who emigrated to Canada and lived there some years. They were natives of Ireland, the father born in the parish of Kilbegenath, Ballinasloe, County Galway, the mother in Glanflesk, County Kerry.

In 1849 Patrick Finney moved his family to Washington, county, Wis., and there opened up a claim. Engaging in mercantile pursuits at Milwaukee, and later in the hotel business at De Kalb Center, Ill., for a short time, he in 1855 located on a farm in Clayton county, Iowa, but in 1861 returned to Madison, Wis. Here in August, 1861, he enlisted in the "Iron Brigade," in the Seventh Wis. V. I., Company A, for three years or during the war. He was wounded in the battle of Gainesville, Va., and there lost an arm. Returning to Madison, Wis., he died at Oshkosh in 1888; his widow now resides in Chicago. Patrick and Julia Finney reared a family of nine children, as follows: John, the subject of this sketch; Mary, of Chicago, Ill.; Jerry, a county commissioner of Big Stone county, Minn., and present member of the Minnesota State Legislature; Rosa, wife of Charles Barton, a Chicago merchant; Julia, wife of John Birmingham, of Chicago; Dennis, of Wausau, Wis.; Lavina, of Chicago; Patrick Henry, a resident of Chicago; and George, now living at Wausau, Wisconsin.

John Finney was three years old when the family moved to Washington county, Wis. He received a portion of his medical education at Cincinnati, taking a course at the Ohio Medical College, from 1868 to 1870, after which he attended two courses of lectures at the Bennett Medical College, Chicago, graduating from that institution March 20, 1881. In 1893-94 he attended the course at the Rush Medical College, Chicago, and graduated from that celebrated School of Medicine and Surgery May 23, 1894, and he also attended clinics at Philadelphia, making a specialty of surgery and the diseases of women. On April 5, 1870, he commenced practice at Oshkosh, Wis., remaining until August 10, 1873, when he removed to Kaukauna, practicing there and at Holland, Wis., until June, 1874, at which time he came to Clintonville, where he has since been actively engaged in the duties of his profession. He is a member of the National Association of Railroad Surgeons, filling the position of surgeon for the Chicago & North Western Railroad Company at Clintonville. He is president of the Finney Drug & Medicine Co., and in 1890 erected a two-story brick building (24 x 60 feet), the firm carrying a full and complete line of drugs, paints, oils, etc. From 1876 to 1878 he engaged in the drug business, then sold out and practiced his profession exclusively till 1890, when the Finney Drug & Medicine Co. was organized.

In politics Dr. Finney is a Republican. He was the first mayor of Clintonville, serving two years, and assisting in framing the city charter. He has been president of the village board, and is now member of the school board. In 1888 he was elected the Presidential elector for the Ninth Congressional District, and cast a successful vote for President Harrison; at Madison he was elected by the Electoral College as State messenger, to convey the result of the vote of that body to the president of the U. S. Senate at Washington. D. C., John J. Ingalls being President Pro-Tem. at that time. Dr. Finney is a member of Clintonville Lodge No. 197, F. & A. M., New London Chapter No. 64, Oshkosh Commandery No. 11, and Wisconsin Consistory and Mystic Shrine, Tripoli Temple. He is also a member of Clintonville Lodge No. 314, I. O. O. F., and of Waipaca Lodge K. of P. He has always been one of the leading members of the Sons of Veterans in Wisconsin, having as a member of the National Staff been

State organizer in Wisconsin, and he organized sixteen posts.

On June 15, 1873, Dr. Finney was married at Oshkosh to Isabelle O'Brien, who was born at Norristown, Penn., daughter of John and Susan (McNaugh) O'Brien, the former of whom was born in England and reared in Cappoquin, County Waterford, Ireland, the latter born in Londonderry, Ireland; they were early residents of Nekimi township, Winnebago Co., Wis. Two children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Finney: William Harrison, now attending the University of Wisconsin, a student in the scientific course; and John Alexander, who died at the age of two years and seven months.

THOMAS N. NICHOLSON was born May 20, 1848, in Laval, Montmorency Co., Quebec, Canada, a son of William and Johanna (Fleming) Nicholson, who were of Irish extraction, and were the parents of sixteen children, among whom were the following: Mary Ann, William, Thomas N. (subject of this sketch), John, Michael J., Francis, Elizabeth, Bridget, Rose Ann and Joseph, seven of whom are yet living. William Nicholson (Sr.), was a successful farmer. He and his wife spent all but a few years of their lives in Canada, where he had homesteaded a farm of one hundred acres. During their remaining days they resided in Island Pond, Vermont.

Partly because his father's family was so large, Thomas N. Nicholson, as well as his brothers and sisters, had but poor opportunities for an education, and he attended school perhaps not more than six months, all told. He was "put into the collar" pretty young, and was a great help to his father as long as he was at home, where he remained until about sixteen years of age. He then went into the lumber woods, and was engaged at such work several years. When Mr. Nicholson left Canada, he came to Milwaukee, Wis.; thence proceeded to Green Bay; from there to Peshtigo, where he was in railroad employ about two months; then went to Stevens Point, where he was again in railroad employ. From Stevens Point he moved to New London, Waupaca county, found employment in the woods, remained six months, and then worked "driving logs" on the river. Going, then, to Marquette county, Mich., he engaged at day labor, but soon afterward was given charge of the building of dams on the head waters of the Escanaba river; was there six months, and then removed to Matteson township, Waupaca Co., Wis., and went to school. Returning to Michigan, he worked in the repair shop of the Michigamme Iron Mine as general carpenter on building and repairing work. Here he remained until coming, in 1880, to Embarrass, Matteson township, where he commenced in the saloon business, in which he was successful. He built three good buildings, and put in a stock of groceries, clothing and merchandise, and has since continued in that line of business. Mr. Nicholson is a very handy man, being a blacksmith, barber, storekeeper and farmer. He owns several pieces of land in Wisconsin, besides mining property in Vermont. He is the author of several useful inventions, among others having a patent (No. 494,684, April 4, 1893) on a potato digger, which digs and picks up the potatoes, leaving the vines and weeds on one side of the machine.

On January 4, 1881, Thomas N. Nicholson was united in marriage with Hattie Potts, and two children have been born to them—Joseph William, March 29, 1886, and Levina, October 31, 1890. The parents of Mrs. Nicholson were Joseph and Eliza (Crozer) Potts, the former of whom is deceased, the latter still living. Politically Mr. Nicholson has always supported the Republican party, and his first vote was cast for Gen. Garfield.

SAMUEL M. MANLEY is a successful farmer, and was a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion. He was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., July 25, 1838, and is a son of Martin and Lodema (More) Manley.

Martin Manley was a farmer, and became a successful man. There were born to him and his wife the following named children: Lucy, now Mrs. George Marden, of St. Lawrence county, N. Y.; Samuel M., the subject of this sketch; Jeannette, widow of William Smith, and living in Chatfield, Minn.; and Newton, also in Minnesota, leading a retired life. Mrs. Manley died about 1845, at probably thirty-five years of age. Mr. Manley again married, for his second wife taking Louisa Daniels, and they became the parents of the following children: George, residing on the homestead in St. Lawrence county, N. Y.; Joysen, in Potsdam, N. Y.; Horace, deceased; and Silva, now Mrs. Clark Tubbs, of Pine Grove, Portage Co., Wisconsin.

Samuel M. Manley received a common-school education, such as the time and locality afforded, and commenced work pretty young. His first knowledge of farming was acquired on the old homestead in New York, and under his father's directions. When sixteen years of age he left his parents, and in 1854 came to Buena Vista township, Portage Co., Wis., in company with his sister Lucy and her husband, George Marden. They came to Pine Grove, and locating on the creek built a log shanty 12 x 16, but found that the land was already purchased. They lived there that winter, engaged in hunting and in making shingles, and in the spring removed to what is now Bancroft, Portage county, where together they built a good log house, which still stands and is occupied. Their land was in a primitive condition, inhabited only by Indians, and bear, deer, etc., and the howling of wolves was no uncommon sound. There were no roads, and only Indian trails marked the ways. They broke about ten acres of land, and were mostly engaged in hunting. From there they went to Buena Vista, Portage county, and took a hotel, and Mr. Manley stayed there that winter. His brother-in-law and sister then returned to New York, and Mr. Manley was employed driving timber on the river for about one year and a half, then worked for a man named William Roe, in Grand Rapids, Wood Co., Wis., and remained there until the time of his marriage.

On September 2, 1860, Samuel M. Manley married Irena M. Markham, who was born in Coral, McHenry Co., Ill., June 23, 1843, and they have become the parents of six children, namely: Albert, residing in Almond township, Portage county; James, a ranchman in Montana; Alice, Mrs. James Russell, of Almond township; Cora, Mrs. Charles Wilson, of Pine Grove, Portage county; Charles, in Stevens Point, attending business college, and Martin, at home. The parents of Mrs. Manly, James and Adelia (Bowen) Markham, were from Canada, and located in Illinois. There were born to them the following named children: Irena M., Mrs. Manley; Eugenia, now deceased; Jane, now Mrs. Charles Parker, of New York; Seth, in Watertown, S. Dak.; Ellen, now Mrs. Joseph Pettis, of Meehan, and residing on the old homestead in this State; Pamela, Mrs. Frank Lamberton, of Sturgis, S. Dak.; John, in Huron, S. Dak.; William, in Dakota, and Evaline, deceased (the two last named being twins). James Markham was a farmer, and by trade a shoemaker. About 1848 he came with his wife to Buena Vista township, Portage Co., Wis., driving through from Illinois with horses, and it took some two weeks to make the journey. He settled on 160 acres of land, not at that time for sale, held it until it came upon the market, and then bought it. He built a log house, which is still standing, and moved into it before the roof was on. The shingles he made himself. The work of breaking up the land was commenced at once. Mr. Kollock was the nearest neighbor, and there was scarcely anything in Stevens Point at that time. They were in Buena Vista for a number of years, when the land was sold, and he then bought more land in Pine Grove, same county, where they lived some eleven years. Next they were in Grand Rapids, Wood county, for two years, then went to Meehan, in Plover township, Portage county, bought land and there spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. Markham died May 20, 1881, and his wife March 22, 1884.

When Mr. Manley was married he went to Grand Rapids, Wood county, rented a farm, and lived there one year. In 1861 he went from Grand Rapids to Pine Grove, lived with his wife's people that winter, then rented land on which he made his home until 1865. On August 25, 1864, he enlisted in Company F, Fifth Wis. V. I., and was mustered into service at Madison. They were sent to Washington, thence to Alexandria, Va., and did guard and picket duty. Their first engagement was at Petersburg, March 25, 1865, and in the charge on that city, April 2, 1865, he received a wound in the hand which resulted in the loss of a finger, and he was sent to Washington to hospital. He was discharged June 16, 1865, at Madison, and returned home. By this time he had bought eighty-seven acres of land in Section 6, Almond township, Portage county, where he now lives. There was a small board shanty which they occupied for a time, and the work of clearing the timber and breaking up the soil was heavy. At first he had no team, but as soon as able he bought a pair of oxen, the first team costing $160. Afterward he bought seventy-six acres more land. His first grain was cut with a cradle. In 1867 he commenced to run a breaking team through the breaking season, which was June 10 to the first of August. At that time it was not considered well to break land out of season, as the sod would not rot. He operated a team seven summers, the team he used to break with being five yoke of oxen, while the plows he used would turn a furrow from twenty-two to twenty-four inches wide. Two acres a day was called a fair day's work for two men, one to drive, the other to hold the plow. About the first of August the harvest began; then a good cradler was looked for as much as a good binder is now, and not having much land broken at that time Mr. Manley used to cradle for his neighbor, getting fifty cents per acre, and cut from four to six acres a day; and sometimes he was engaged to cradle for the harvest three or four months before the time. Mr. Manley has never been engaged in any other business than farming, and his success is due to the united efforts of himself and wife. Mr. Manley receives a pension. Politically he has continued to be a staunch Republican. He has been constable in Almond township, and is a member of Post No. 197, G. A. R., of Plainfield, Waushara county.

CALEB J. SHEARER, one of the most enterprising young business men of Waupaca, was born in that city in July, 1857. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Shearer, was a glass merchant in Scotland, whose son, Thomas J., the father of Caleb J., was of a venturesome disposition, and as a young man went to Australia to there make his fortune. He engaged in mercantile pursuits at Melbourne and there married Miss Elizabeth Barr, a Scotch young lady. At the end of four years of Australian life Mr. Shearer returned to Scotland, and after traveling a year through that country, Ireland, Wales and France, he came to America, in 1857, and purchased land in the town of Farmington, Waupaca Co., Wis. Mr. Shearer had thoroughly imbibed the miner's indomitable spirit, and in 1858 he returned to Australia, where he was interested in a valuable gold mine. He was last seen while hunting, and though large sums of money have been expended in investigating his mysterious disappearance no trace of him has ever been discovered. His bereaved family consisted of widow and two children, Rebecca, born in Australia, and Caleb J. In 1867 the widowed mother was united in marriage with Lieut. John Jardine, a Scotch contractor and lumber dealer at Waupaca. He had come to America when a young man, and served four years in the Civil war, enlisting in the Eighth Wis. V. I., and mustered out in 1865 as a first lieutenant. He died in 1882, leaving two children, Anna and John.

Young Caleb had fitted himself for the practice of law, his education being received in the schools of Waupaca city and at Eau Claire, Wis. He had spent two years in the law office of E. L. Brown, an earnest and enthusiastic disciple of Blackstone and Kent, but the death of his stepfather, Lieut. Jardine, left the latter's flourishing business without a director, and circumstances seemed to point out to young Shearer a new line of duty. He accordingly bade adieu to his first love, the law, and assumed the labors and responsibilities of an active business career. His efforts have not been confined to the planing-mill and lumber yard. Loyal to the community in which he lived, he has ever sought to advance its interests. He was one of the active founders and is now a director of the Starch Company. He is also a director of the Waupaca First National Bank, and is interested in the Creamery and Silver Lake Cottage Co. Seventeen men find employment in his planing-mill, and his lumber interests are scattered among many localities.

An ardent Republican, Mr. Shearer has for the past fifteen years been a member of the city council nearly all the time, either as alderman or as a member of the county board. He was twice nominated and elected mayor of the city, and served with marked distinction. In social circles he is a Mason and a Knight of Pythias. He was married at Waupaca, in 1882, to Miss Florence Jeffers, a native of Buffalo, N. Y., daughter of Seymour G. and Jane (Barry) Jeffers, the former of whom, a native of New York, of Scotch descent, was for many years an officer of the Union Steamboat Co.; the mother was a native of New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Shearer have one child, Jean E. They attend the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CHARLES A. STINCHFIELD, a worthy representative of the agricultural interests of Waupaca county, was born in Batavia, Ill., May 28, 1851, and upon the home farm was reared, while in the public schools of Waupaca, he acquired his education. On September 26, 1878, he married Ida E. Vaughan, and to them were born four children: Irma, Florence, Winifred and Roswell. Mrs. Stinchfield is one of Waupaca's fair daughters, born in that city in 1858, unto John M. and Diana Vaughan, who were natives of New York.

Our subject carries on the old homestead farm, while his brother Daniel resides in the city of Waupaca, a printer by trade. He is independent in politics and takes great interest in the questions of the day, but holds himself free to support any candidate whom he thinks best qualified for office regardless of party affiliations. At this writing he is serving as town clerk, has also been town supervisor and has held other local offices, discharging the duties devolving upon him in a manner to win universal commendation. His well-spent life, passed almost entirely in Waupaca county, has gained him high regard.

GEORGE J. HANSON is one of the thrifty and well-to-do citizens of Waupaca to whom it seems natural to accumulate easily. He possesses that rare mental gift of knowing what to do under certain circumstances, and then doing it. He is a man to whose counsels others defer, for people instinctively feel that what he says is right. Mr. Hanson has been a resident of Waupaca county for a quarter of a century, and during that time has established for himself a name as one of its most sagacious and enterprising citizens.

He was born in the western part of Denmark December 29, 1844, son of Jens and Carrie (Freeman) Hanson, who had six children: Francis, Peter P., George J., Jens C., Carrie and Alex M. The father, who was a landowner, died in 1864; the mother is still living at the old home with her son Peter P. The eldest son, who was a soldier, died at Copenhagen in 1864. George J. was reared on the farm, attending school between the ages of seven and fourteen, as required by law, and assisting his father. Until the year 1869, when he came to America, he was engaged regularly on the home farm, excepting a part of two years when he worked out. He crossed the ocean with his younger brother, Alex M., and landing at New York City they proceeded westward to Gill's Landing, Wis., whence they walked to Waupaca city. Their brother Jens C., who had been in the country some two years, met them at Oshkosh, and they remained on his farm in Waupaca county during the first winter, engaged principally in chopping wood and cutting and delivering ties. Mr. Hanson, who had some means, then bought a small farm of eighty acres, erected buildings, otherwise improved it, and soon after added forty acres to the place.

In January, 1871, George J. Hanson married Carrie Anderson, who was born in Denmark in 1851, daughter of Hans and Mary Anderson, who in 1862 emigrated with their three children—Carrie, Andrew and Sophia—from Denmark to Wisconsin, settling in Royalton township, Waupaca county, where the mother died in 1881. To Mr. and Mrs. Hanson six children have been born: Emma (now Mrs. Barton), Franklin, George, Elma, Winnie and Alton. Mr. Hanson continued farming for five years, then sold his property and moved to Waupaca. Here for a short time he was proprietor of a store and restaurant, and he also started a brickyard which he conducted three years, but both of these businesses he successively sold. He purchased and occupied a farm in Royalton township, and in 1883 sold this and returned to Waupaca, where he invested in real estate, including his residence and two stores. For the past ten years he has been dealing extensively in produce, handling potatoes quite largely. In 1885 he bought eighty acres within the city limits; this he has platted and has sold many of the lots. Mr. Hanson is a Republican in politics; socially, a prominent member of the I. O. O. F. Himself and wife are members of the Danish Lutheran Church.

HENRY A. KYES, a worthy representative of one of the early families of northern Wisconsin, is a leader in the business and political world of Merrill, and a prominent factor in promoting those interests best calculated to benefit the city. He possesses the true Western spirit of progress and enterprise—a spirit that has placed the West on a par with the older East—and is justly recognized as one of the leading citizens of this community.

Mr. Kyes is a native of Colesville, Broome Co., N. Y., born November 10, 1836, a son of Ashley Kyes, who first saw the light in the Empire State in 1809, his parents being English, farther than which nothing is known of his ancestry. The mother of our subject in her maidenhood was Maria Shay, and her birth occurred in New York in 1814, a daughter of James Shay, who was a farmer, mill owner and blacksmith. He had a family of five children: Eli, Maria, Charlotte, Harriet and Eleanor. In 1837 Ashley Kyes removed with his family to Michigan, spending about a year in the southern part of that State. In 1839, however, he returned to New York, and when he again started westward became a resident of Medina county, Ohio, locating upon a farm which he made his home until 1850, the year of his removal to Marquette county, Wis. In this State he settled upon the Indian Reservation, which had just been opened up for settlement, securing a tract of land which he cultivated and improved for some time. Having sold his farm, he in 1865 removed to Waseca county, Minn., where the mother died in 1883. The father then sold his farm, and since then has lived with his son William in Appleton, Minn. In their family were nine children: Henry A., Edgar, Lucius, James (deceased), Charles, William, Melissa, Arvilla, and Sarah (deceased). Three of the sons were soldiers of the Civil war—Edgar, Lucius and James, the last named serving throughout the struggle as a member of the Tenth Ill. V. C. The father of this family, who was both a farmer and a carpenter, improved two good farms in this State. He was a pioneer of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Ohio and Michigan, and wherever he has resided he has been recognized as a leading and influential citizen. His political views in early life were in support of the principles of the Whig party, and on its dissolution he became a Republican. For many years he served as justice of the peace, and was ever a competent and faithful officer.

Henry A. Kyes, the eldest child in the family, received but limited educational privileges, for his youth was passed in frontier settlements and his services were generally needed on the home farm, where he remained until eighteen years of age, at which time he started northward. On the banks of the Eau Claire river he first secured employment in the lumber camps, working in the woods in the winter months, while in the summer he engaged in "running lumber" from Wausau and other points to the Mississippi, thence down that stream to St. Louis and other points. He was thus engaged until 1857 when he became a resident of Jennie, Wis., as the town of Merrill was then called. Here he entered the employ of Benjamin F. Cooper, working in the woods in the winter and running on the river in summer until 1862. In company with D. A. Kline he then went to Tomahawk, Wis., where they began logging for themselves, carrying on business at that place until the spring of 1866, after which they followed that calling in different places until 1875. Their usual method of procedure was to purchase land and then cut the timber, and, generally, they cut and shipped their own lumber. The partnership was dissolved in 1875, but Mr. Kyes continued the concern alone until 1880, since which time he has engaged in the real-estate business, and has platted a forty-acre addition to the city of Merrill, called the "Kyes Addition." He is now doing a flourishing business, and derives therefrom a good income.

Mr. Kyes was married January 3, 1869, to Jane Augusta Hill, who was born in Cataugus county, N. Y., about the year 1847, and was of Irish descent. She located in Wisconsin in an early day, and by her marriage became the mother of five children, namely: Henry Noel, William Ashley, James W., Fred and Melissa F. Mrs. Kyes died in March, 1877, at Jennie (now Merrill), and in October, 1893, Mr. Kyes married Augusta Burgraft, who was born in Green Lake, Wis., in 1863, a daughter of William and Caroline (Spar-kool) Burgraff, natives of Germany, who were married in Wisconsin. By occupation the father was a miller and cooper, and during the Civil war he served in defense of the Union. His death occurred in 1885; his widow is now living in Fond du Lac county. Their family numbered seven children: Herman Frank, Emma, Augusta, Mary, Jane, Anna and Edith. The parents of Mr. Kyes' first wife, Henry and Alice Hill, were natives of New York, and came to Wisconsin in 1848. Their children were Alvina, Jane A., Helen, Henry and Alice. The mother died in Wisconsin in 1847. In the Empire State the father followed farming, but after coming to Wisconsin worked in the pineries. His death here occurred in 1878.

In politics Mr. Kyes is a staunch Democrat, and has been an active worker in the party. He aided in the organization of Lincoln county, served as a member of the board of supervisors, was deputy sheriff two years, and for four years served as under sheriff. For six years he was city assessor and was elected again in 1895; he was a member of the school board five years, all of which facts indicate the confidence and trust reposed in him by his fellow townsmen, and his fidelity to duty.

GEORGE W. BEMIS, register of deeds of Langlade county, was one of the brave defenders of the Union in the war of the Rebellion, and is a prominent and much-respected citizen of Norwood township, Langlade county. He was born in Auburn, Geauga Co., Ohio, March 5, 1840, and is a son of Levi and Polly (Thompson) Bemis.

Benjamin Bemis, father of Levi Bemis, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and two battles were fought on his farm in New York State, called "Bemis Heights." Benjamin Bemis was a farmer by occupation, married a Miss Polly Baldwin, and they had a family of seven children, namely: Benjamin, Abner, Levi, Willard, Polly, Katherine and Fannie. The family came to New York State in an early day, where Benjamin Bemis, Sr., died in 1847; his wife died in 1828. The Bemises are of Scotch-English descent, and trace their origin as far back as the "Mayflower."

Levi Bemis was born in Windham county, Vt., in December, 1796, was a farmer by occupation, a shoemaker by trade, went as a soldier in the war of 1812, when but sixteen years of age, serving as a drummer, and was at Sackett's Harbor and in other engagements. He married Polly Thompson, who was born in Rhode Island, and they had ten children—seven sons and three daughters—six of whom are now living, namely: Jessie, Lorain, Alfred, George W. (the subject of this sketch), Hannah and Angeline; those deceased are Rebecca, Willard, Joel, and Henry, who was a soldier in the Tenth Wis. V. I., was taken prisoner at Chickamauga, and died in Andersonville prison in 1864. Joel was married, and left a widow and one child, Monroe. Little is known of the family of Polly Bemis, except that she had four brothers whose names were Alfred, Needham, Crowell and Robert, and their father, Robert Thompson, was in the Revolutionary war, was one of Washington's life guards, and after the struggle went to Canada, where he died. In 1835 Levi Bemis went to Ohio, and about the year 1843 pushed on to Illinois with a team, locating in Kane county. He came to Wisconsin in 1846, settled on a piece of land near Oshkosh, and here his wife, Polly Bemis, died within three weeks after their arrival; Mr. Bemis passed away in June, 1861, in Outagamie county, Wis., where he had settled in 1854. Politically he was a Democrat, and was active in party matters.

George W. Bemis was reared on a farm, educated in the common schools, remained with his father as long as he lived, and then took the homestead, in Outagamie county, Wis., which contained forty acres of land. He enlisted on February 7, 1862, in Company I, Third Wis. V. C., which regiment was assigned to the Western army; he served until September, 1865, and was a corporal when discharged. He was taken prisoner at Spring River, Mo., in 1863, but escaped within an hour. Mr. Bemis was never absent from his company during his service, and was in the battles of Cane Hill, Prairie Grove, Salem, Baxter's Springs, and Dardanelle, in Arkansas. The company to which he belonged was detached from the regiment and sent to look after guerrillas in the States of Missouri, Texas and Kansas, and in the Indian Territory. During the war Mr. Bemis re-enlisted as a veteran, and on his return in 1865 he again went to farming at the old home in Outagamie county, which occupation he followed until March, 1880.

In December, 1867, our subject was united in marriage with Lydia L. Spencer, who was born in New York State in 1847, and they had three children: Osca, George M., and Edna. The parents of Mrs. Bemis, Jay and Margaret Spencer, were born in New York State and in New Jersey, respectively. They had ten children, namely: John, Myron, Susan, Sarah, Maria, Eliza, May, Lydia L. (Mrs. Spencer), Hattie and George. Jay Spencer was a farmer by occupation, came with his family to Wisconsin, in 1855, and settled in Outagamie county, where he died in 1878. His widow, Margaret Spencer, died in Langlade county in 1892. In March, 1880, Mr. Bemis settled his family on a homestead in Norwood township, Langlade county, which he has improved and where he has since resided. There were but seven families in Norwood township when he came, and their nearest railroad station was at Clintonville, Wau-paca county, forty-five miles distant. Mrs. Bemis died in July, 1891, and Edna keeps house for her father. Osca is now the wife of Edward Daskam, a real-estate dealer in Antigo. A Republican in politics, Mr. Bemis has always been prominent in his party, took an active part when Langlade county was organized in 1881; was elected register of deeds in 1894, notwithstanding the county is strongly Democratic; is a member of the Republican County Committee, and has held different town offices. Socially, he is a member of the G. A. R., and the family are identified with the Baptist Church.

JOHAN E. ROEPKE, member of the firm of Roepke & Meisner, prominent merchants and real-estate dealers in Birnamwood, Shawano county, was born in Newton township, Manitowoc county, Wis., January 16, 1859. His parents were John Roepke and Mary (Schloeter) Roepke, natives of Hanover, Germany, in which place they were married in 1846.

John Roepke came to America in 1847, and settled upon a tract of wild land in Manitowoc county, his wife joining him the following year. They had five children: Anna, Lizzie, Diedrich, Herman and John E. Mr. Roepke soon after his arrival in this country built on his farm a sawmill, which was run by water power, and was the first mill in that section. He operated this some eighteen years, then sold it and bought a saw and grist mill in the same county, dying in 1868 soon after making the latter purchase. He was a well-educated man, popular in his community, and was a staunch Republican.

John E. Roepke, the subject of this sketch, was educated in the common schools and remained at home until he was twenty-five years old, learning the trade of a miller, and working in his father's mill. (After the latter's death the business was carried on by his widow who was a good manager). Mr. Roepke was married June 11, 1884, to Minnie Pleuss and to them have been born three children: Walter, Edna and Otman. Mr. Roepke is the head of the firm of Roepke & Meisner, general merchants and lumbermen who came to Birnamwood in 1884. They also deal largely in real estate, owning some 4,300 acres of pine and farm lands. They bought out a store when they first came to the place, although they had no experience as merchants, and have been remarkably successful in all their enterprises. Mr. Roepke looks after the store, Mr. Meisner attending to the outside business. Mr. Roepke has a fine residence, and is a man well-to-do in the world. Politically he is a Republican, and although he has held some minor town offices he is too much occupied with his own business to care for office; in religious faith he is a member of the German Lutheran Church; socially he is identified with the Modern Woodmen, in which order he holds office and takes a prominent part. He is a public-spirited man, ever ready to assist in all projects which have for their object the welfare of the town and county.

NORMAN A. EMERSON was born April 26, 1864, at Iron Ridge, Dodge Co., Wis. Norman Emerson, his father, was a native of Vermont, a son of Asa Emerson, a farmer by vocation, who had but one child, Norman, who was reared to agricultural pursuits, his boyhood being passed much in the manner of other lads in his day. In early life he moved to the State of New York, where he married Nancy Chapman, by whom he had seven children, as follows: Mary, Martha, Amanda, Nettie (who died in August, 1894), John W., David W. and Norman A. In 1840 the family came to Wisconsin, locating at Iron Ridge, Dodge county, where the father followed his trade, that of a cooper, and also engaged in the lumber business till 1867, when he and his wife moved to Loyal, Clark county. Here the mother died in 1887; the father passed away in 1890 at the home of his son John W. He was an energetic business man, and left behind an enviable record for honesty and uprightness. During the war of the Rebellion he served his country in the Union army.

Norman A. Emerson, the subject proper of these lines, received a liberal common-school education, and at the age of eighteen commenced working in the lumber woods during the winter season, his summers being occupied on the river, and being economical, as well as industrious, he not only made money, but also saved it. In 1887 he moved to Tomahawk, Lincoln county, and commenced dealing in timber lands—buying and selling to advantage—finally becoming owner of a large tract of timber land. In March, 1895, the Bank of Tomahawk was established, of which he is president. In 1889, at Madison, Wis., he was united in marriage with Miss Amy L. Warnes, and three children have come to brighten the home: Elsa, Helen, and a son not yet named. In his political sympathies Mr. Emerson is a Democrat; socially, he affiliated with Tomahawk Lodge, No. 243, F. & A. M., and in religious faith he and his wife are members of the M. E. Church.

Mrs. Norman A. Emerson is a native of the State of Michigan, born in Polkton township, Ottawa county, in 1858, a daughter of Ishmael and Melissa (House) Warnes, who were the parents of seven children, of whom Oliver F. and Amy L. are living, the others having died young. The parents were both natives of the State of New York, and there, in Jefferson county, were married, soon afterward moving to Michigan, later to Wisconsin, and settling near Madison, where the mother died in 1864. Two years later the father married Miss Jessie Micklejohn, who bore him three children: Jessie, Sabina, and one deceased in infancy. From Wisconsin the family moved to Tennessee, thence to Oregon, in 1892, where they now reside. Mrs. Emerson's father is well educated, as was also her mother, and both at one time were school teachers, a profession the daughter followed until her marriage with Mr. Emerson. Mr. Warnes was a miller by trade, and his son, Oliver F., was head miller some eight years for Pillsbury, of Minneapolis, Minn., but is now living at Anoka, that State, being manager of their mill at that place. Mrs. Emerson's maternal grandparents were natives of New York State, the grandmother being a daughter of John Franklin and a niece of Benjamin Franklin. Mr. Warnes' father was a native of England, whence in an early day he came to America. Her mother's father is still living in Lewis county, N. Y., at the advanced age of eighty-four years.

JOHAN PETERSON, one of the practical and progressive farmers of Portage county, resides in Section 2, Belmont township, where he has a nice home, barns and outbuildings, models of convenience, and well-tilled fields which together constitute one of the valuable farms of the neighborhood.

Mr. Peterson was born January 4, 1860, and is one of the eight children of Peter Jacobson, a farmer and weaver of Denmark. His education was obtained in the public schools of his native land, and there he passed his first twenty years, emigrating to the New World in May, 1880. Bidding adieu to home and friends, he sailed for the United States, embarking at Copenhagen on the 9th of April, and reaching New York on the 8th of May, having stopped while en route in England. He had to borrow the money to pay his passage, and it was the hope of bettering his financial condition that led him to emigrate. His destination was Waupaca, Wis., but after a short time passed there, he came to Belmont township, Portage county, and began work for his father-in-law, J. P. Rasmussen, by whom he was employed two years. On the expiration of that period he removed to Iowa, purchasing a farm in Webster county, which he owned and operated in connection with his brother, Hans P. There he made his home until 1893, when he returned to Portage county.

On March 24, that year, at Waupaca, Wis., Mr. Peterson was married to Miss Anna Rasmussen, a native of Belmont township, and a daughter of James P. and Johanna M. (Nelson) Rasmussen. Their union has been blessed with one child, a son, Carl W., born February 19, 1894. Mr. Peterson votes with the Republican party, manifests a commendable interest in its success and keeps well informed on the issues of the day. Both he and his estimable wife hold membership with the Lutheran Church, and contribute liberally to its support. In his business dealings, Mr. Peterson has been very successful. He started out in life for himself a poor boy, dependent entirely upon his own resources, and his diligence, perseverance and capable management have brought him success until he is now the owner of 240 acres of valuable land, and is numbered among the substantial farmers of the community. Industry is certainly one of his chief characteristics, and has brought to him a prosperity that is well deserved.

ARTHUR B. MILLARD, president and manager of the Millard Publishing Company, at Antigo, Langlade county, is one of the best known citizens of that place, having held numerous public offices, and as journalist is intimately connected with the every-day life and interests of the town and county. He comes of good old Eastern stock, his paternal grandparents being Arnold and Maria (Schleiter) Millard, natives of New York, while those on his mother's side were Alanson and Amity (Stebbins Crown, natives of Vermont.

Arthur Burton Millard was born in Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., May 24, 1857, a son of Burton and Harriet (Crown) Millard, the former born in Scio, N. Y., in 1828, the latter in Caledonia county, Vt., in January, 1832. They were married in Princeton, Green Lake Co., Wis., in 1851, and became the parents of four children namely: Hattie M., Albert M., Arthur B., and Paul J. The father was a millwright and carpenter. In 1861 he enlisted in Company G. Fifth Wis. V. I., and was shot while on picket duty at Lee's Mills, Va., on April 30, 1862. Arthur Millard attended the common schools of his native place until 1868 when he entered the printing office of the Central Wisconsin as an apprentice, and worked at his trade most of the time until he came to Antigo in 1882, where, in company with his brother Paul J., he established the Weekly News Item, the first issue of which appeared August 26, 1882, and of which he has had complete control ever since its start.

A. B. Millard was married October 9, 1883, to Miss Fannie M. Lambert, of Markesan, Wis., a daughter of Charles and Maria (Crown) Lambert, the former of whom was a native of England, the latter of Vermont. They have two children, Hazel A. and Byron J. In 1883 Mr. Millard was appointed deputy county clerk of Langlade county which office he held two years, having full control of the entire business. He was elected county clerk in 1885, and held that office until January 1, 1887. In April of that year he was made supervisor of the First ward of the city of Antigo, and served one year. In 1893, when Paul J. Millard was appointed postmaster at Antigo, the firm of Millard Bros. was dissolved, and the business was transferred to the Millard Publishing Company, of which, as has been stated, our subject is president and manager. He is a member of Antigo Lodge No. 231, F. & A. M., Antigo Chapter, No. 64, R. A. M., and St. Omer Commandery, K. T., No. 19, of Wausau.

LORIN B. BEMIS, who is conducting a lively business with his son, Louis C. Bemis, in Antigo, Langlade county, was born in Ellisbury, Jefferson Co., N. Y., July 6, 1822, and is a son of Levi and Polly (Thompson) Bemis, who were born respectively in Windham county, Vt., in December, 1796, and in Rhode Island, in 1800.

The subject of this sketch was given the advantages of a common-school education, and learned the trade of shoemaker. In the spring of 1842, when about twenty years of age, he went to Illinois, and located in Batavia, Kane county, where he remained some four years working at the carpenter's trade. In 1846 he proceeded to Oshkosh, Wis., where he worked at the carpenter's trade, and located on some land nine miles from Oshkosh, after three years making his home on this farm, and there remained until 1885, when he came to Langlade county, and bought a farm in Norwood township, being one of the first settlers there. He enlisted for the Mexican war under Col. (afterward Gen.) Logan, and marched some sixty miles, but missed the boat at Peoria, and could not go.

In February, 1852, Lorin B. Bemis was united in marriage with Adelia C. Clemens, who was born at Hyde Park, November 20, 1832, and they had six children, only one of whom survives—Louis C., who is engaged in the livery business with his father; Edwin C., died at the age of thirty-nine years; Berton when twelve years of age, and Alfred, Albert, and one other in infancy. The parents of Mrs. L. B. Bemis, Horace and Mary E. (Dugar) Clemens, had ten children, one of whom died while an infant. The others were Edwin D., Laura A., Sarah N., Hiram R., Adelia C. (Mrs. Bemis), Carlista N., Julia A., Horace B., and George S. Five children are now living, namely: Laura A., Sarah N., Adelia C., Horace B., and George S. The father of Horace Clemens, Sr., David Clemens, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. His family was of English descent. Horace Clemens, Sr., was born in Vermont, in 1798, was a farmer by occupation, came to Wisconsin in 1845, settled near Oshkosh, and died in 1890. His wife, Mary E. Clemens, was born in 1803, and died November 7, 1877. Her people were of French descent.

Mr. Bemis enlisted twice during the war of the Rebellion, but he was not accepted on account of a gunshot wound which he had received by accident many years before. He sold his farm near Oshkosh in 1892, resided on his farm in Langlade county until about the same time, then sold that also and settled in the city of Antigo, a retired farmer. Politically a Democrat, he is an active worker in his party, has been town treasurer and supervisor, and has held other minor offices. He is well-to-do, and has the satisfaction of having earned his property himself.

THOMAS SWAN, JR., a prosperous farmer of Lanark township, Portage county, was born March 16, 1848, a son of Thomas and Martha (McJennette) Swan, both natives of Scotland, the former born in Lanark, son of James and Jeanette (Somerville) Swan, also natives of Lanark, Scotland.

Thomas Swan, Sr., came to Canada with his parents in 1821, and settled on a farm in the town of Lanark, in what is now the Province of Ontario. Martha McJennette came with her parents from Scotland in her youth, and in after years was married to Thomas Swan, Sr. In 1847 they came to Wisconsin, residing in Vinland, Winnebago county, until March, 1852, when they moved to a farm in Section 36, in what is now Lanark township, Portage county. Mrs. Swan died there December 25, 1888, and Mr. Swan is now, at the age of eighty-four years, living with John D. Swan on the old farm which he secured from the government. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, as was also his wife. His father and mother came to Lanark township with him, and both died there, the father in October, 1863, at the age of ninety-one years, the mother in December, 1866, aged ninety-three. Thomas Swan, Sr., attended the first town meeting held in what is now Lanark township, Portage county, at which he proposed the name, "Lanark," for it, and it being put to the vote was carried. To Thomas Swan, Sr., and Martha Swan were born children as follows: James, who died April 10, 1895, at the age of fifty-seven years; Thomas (1), who was killed by a falling tree; Jane, who married Moses H. Finch (deceased some twelve years ago), of Stevens Point, their children being Benoni, Martha (a school teacher at Stevens Point), Eliza-both (also a teacher in Stevens Point), Thomas and Mary; Jennie is the wife of John Gardner Spencer, of Marathon, Wis., their children being John (deceased in boyhood), Oscar (attending commercial college at Valparaiso, Ind.), Bessie (a school teacher in Spencer), Myra and John; Robert went to California in 1865, and settled in Orick, Humboldt county, where he is a merchant and postmaster; Thomas (2) is he of whom we write; Martha is the wife of Oscar Lattin, of Battle Creek, Mich., their children being: Harvey, Thomas, Ethel, Jennie, Robert, Annie and Ray; Elizabeth is the wife of W. H. Potts, and their children are Walter, Martha, James and Frank; William (1) died in boyhood; William (2), now living in Stockton, Portage county, Wis., married Miss Minnie Morrell (now deceased), by whom he had three children: John, George and Blanche (he married for his second wife Myrtle, widow of Charles Hartwell, and after her decease wedded Miss Eda Putts); John D. married Miss Marion Owens, and their children are William and Helen.

Thomas Swan, Jr., obtained his education in the district school at Lanark, Wis. After he came of age he bought his present farm of 120 acres, which he worked while living at home, and in 1873 he received a tract of timber land from the government, in Spencer, Wis. For two winters he lumbered off this homestead, selling the first cut for $1,600, but the second cut, valued at $2,000, was destroyed by fire. He then sold the land, and worked in lumber camps during the winter of 1875-76. When he bought his present farm the only building upon it was a frame shanty. This he repaired somewhat, and lived in it some six months after his marriage.

On December 25, 1877, Thomas Swan, Jr., married Edna Bemis, and their children are as follows: Grace A., born June 15, 1879; Leon B., born January 4, 1881; Doll, born October 23, 1886; and Jessie, born April 29, 1889. Mr. Swan intends to give his children a thorough education, and after they have finished in the schools of Lanark he proposes to remove the family to Stevens Point, where the girls will complete their education, and Leon will go from there to college. Mrs. Swan is the daughter of Levi and Sarah (Wheeler) Bemis, natives of New York. Sarah Bemis died in Lanark, Wis., June 14, 1888, a member of the Methodist Church. In 1861, at Reedsburg, Wis., Levi Bemis enlisted in Company B, Twelfth Wis. V. I., for three years, and after this term expired re-enlisted for three years. At the end of this time he received a thirty-days' furlough, came home to visit his family, and then returned and served till the close of the war. He fought under Sherman, and was with him on his march to the sea; he is now living with his son at Lyndon, Wisconsin.

Mr. Swan, besides his property in Lanark township, owns a little real estate in Cook county, Ill. He is a Republican in politics, and in 1884 was elected assessor, which office he has held ever since.

EDWARD MILLER was born May 14, 1869, in Bear Creek township, Waupaca county, where he still resides, engaged in farming, and is a son of Charles and Anna (Raisler) Miller, both of German descent.

Charles Miller was a farmer and miller, and also a carpenter. There were ten children in his family—Ernest, Pauline, Bertha, Emma, Mollie, Charles, William, Edward, Louise and Clara—of whom seven are now living; and, of these, four are married, all but Edward, William and Louise. In 1854 the family came to America, landing in New York after a voyage of forty-seven days. They came directly to Dodge county, Wis., remained there two months, then came on foot to Bear Creek, a distance of one hundred miles. Mrs. Miller carried a babe in her arms and one on her back, and they slept at night under the wagon which carried their goods. Until a small shanty had been built they remained with Welcome Hyde, and Mr. Miller worked for him. For five years they never had a cent of money, and for two years no flour, using cornmeal made with water into "johnnycake," and their pork was bought of Mr. Hyde at the rate of nineteen cents a pound. Their hardy and frugal life presents a striking contrast to the customs so prevalent in these days of ostentatious pride and wasteful extravagance. After living with Mr. Hyde two years they bought of him eighty acres of land, on which the homestead is still located. Here they built a log house, which they occupied but a short time, when a larger one was built in its stead. They had for tools the familiar axe and grub-hoe, besides the old carpenter's tools which Mr. Miller brought from Germany, and the work of clearing, once commenced, went gradually on to completion.

Mr. Miller died January 21, 1881, and was buried in Bear Creek Cemetery. His widow still lives on the homestead, only two of their family of ten children being now left at home to care for their aged mother.

Edward Miller, whose name introduces this sketch, now conducts the farm, and has been of no small assistance to his mother, and as a faithful and dutiful son he is an example to set before the idle and the thoughtless. He now has sixty acres of the homestead. His father was a Republican in politics, and held offices of both honor and trust in his town, the duties of which were discharged in a manner that reflected credit upon himself and gave satisfaction to his constituents. Edward Miller holds substantially the same views in politics as his father before him.

PAUL J. MILLARD, an honored citizen of and postmaster at Antigo, Langlade county, was born at Wausau, Marathon Co., Wis., June 23, 1859, and is a son of Burton and Harriet (Crown) Millard.

Arnold Millard, father of Burton Millard, was a farmer in New York State, and his children were Burton, Augustus, Benjamin and Mahala. At Princeton, Green Lake Co., Wis., in 1851, Burton Millard was united in marriage with Harriet Crown, who was born in Caledonia county, Vt., and they had four children, namely: Hattie M., Albert M., Arthur B., and Paul J. (whose name introduces this sketch). The parents of Mrs. Burton Millard, Alanson (a farmer) and Amity (Stebbins) Crown, came to Wisconsin in an early day and settled in Green Lake county. They had seven children, as follows: Harriet (Mrs. Millard), Martha, Alden, Maria, Oren, Frank and Cynthia. Burton Millard was a millwright, and after his marriage he settled in Wausau, Wis., where he followed his trade. He was a Republican in politics, was sheriff of Marathon county, was elected to the Assembly in 1858, served in other minor offices, and was a very prominent man in all politics. On the demand for soldiers when war was declared at the time of the Rebellion, he enlisted in Company G, Fifth Wis. V. I., was always a brave soldier, and was killed at Lee's Mills, Va., April 30, 1862, while on picket duty, and is buried in the National Cemetery in Virginia. He was first buried on the field in a pine board coffin, which in most cases was not provided in those days, and later his body was removed to the National Cemetery. His widow, Mrs. Harriet Millard, again married, in 1867, her husband being Dr. T. Smith, of Wausau, Wis., and she is still living; they have had three children: Laura C., Mary E., and Charles A.

Paul J. Millard received his education in the common schools at Wausau, worked at home until the age of nineteen, then engaged as time-keeper on a railroad, and was thus employed until 1882. In company with his brother, Arthur B., he came to Antigo and August 26, 1882, started a Democratic newspaper called the Weekly News Item. The subject of this sketch was appointed postmaster at Antigo, March 23, 1893, at which time he severed his connection with the newspaper. He has been alderman in his ward and was candidate for county treasurer in 1892.

In 1885 Paul J. Millard was united in marriage with Hattie M. Waite, who was born at Ogdensburg, Waupaca Co., Wis., October 17, 1861, and they have three sons: Glenn E., Arnold B., and Paul V. The parents of Mrs. Millard, Smith and Alvira (Eldridge) Waite, had six children: Abbie H., Mark W., Mary E., Hattie M. (Mrs. Millard), Fannie G., and John. Smith Waite was born in New York, February 1, 1825, is a farmer by occupation, and, with his wife, was among the early settlers of Waupaca county, where he still resides. He was a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and served all through in Company K, Seventeenth Wis. V. I. His wife, Alvira L. Waite, was born in Bucksport, Maine, March 13, 1833, and died on May 23, 1869. Paul J. Millard is a member of the F. & A. M., of Antigo Chapter, of Antigo, and of St. Omer Commandery at Wausau.

JOHN SIPEK, a general and popular hotel-keeper in Antigo, Langlade county, was born in Centerville township, Manitowoc Co., Wis., June 19, 1860, and is a son of Joseph and Anna (Rine) Sipek.

Joseph Sipek was the son of Joseph, Sr., and Veronica (Gregor) Sipek, who both died in Austria, and who had five children, as follows: Joseph, Jr.; John, who lives in Green Bay; Wenzel in Austria; and Anna and Catherine, who both came to America. Joseph Sipek, Sr., was a mason by trade, a soldier in 1809 and fought against Napoleon the Great. His son, Joseph Sipek, Jr., was born in Austria, in March, 1827, was a shoemaker in that country, married Anna Rine, and had nine children, namely: Catherine (now deceased), Elizabeth, Wenzel, Pauline (deceased), John (the subject of this sketch), Mary, Adolph, Anna and Emma. In 1857 Joseph Sipek, Jr., embarked for America with his family and, after arriving in this country, came direct to Wisconsin, taking up a farm in Centerville township, Manitowoc county, which he improved, and upon which he lived until 1882. He sold out that year, bought land in Township 32 north, Range 11 east, Neva township, resided there until 1891, and then moved to Antigo township. He is still a hale and hearty man, has accumulated what he possesses by his own perseverance and industry, has reared, educated and helped his children, and still has plenty left.

John Sipek, the subject of this sketch, remained at home and assisted his father with the work until he was twenty-one years old, being given school advantages only to the age of thirteen. In 1881, on reaching his majority, he came to Neva township, Langlade county, purchased a farm, his father advancing the money, and resided there some nine years, clearing about sixty acres. On February 8, 1885, he was united in marriage with Emma Skyrevoda, who was born in Manitowoc county, Wis., in 1868, and they had four children: Matilda, Alvina, and John living, and Joseph who died when two years old. The parents of Mrs. Sipek, Anton and Elizabeth (Krache) Skyrevoda, were both born in Austria, and were among the early settlers of Manitowoc county; Anton Skyrevoda has been a farmer by occupation, but now, with his wife, is living retired. They have had five children: Emma (Mrs. Sipek), Adolph, Anna, Mary and Lydia.

During the spring of 1890 John Sipek rented his farm in Neva township and came to Antigo, where he bought the land, built his present home, and keeps a hotel called the "Farmers' Home." He is always independent in politics, was school clerk two years, and member of the town board one year. In 1890 he spent some time in visiting different sections of the country, remained about three weeks in Nebraska and about four weeks in California, came from there to Chicago, and then returned home.

JOHN P. PETERSON represents in his personality one of the most prominent successes of Waupaca county. He came to the county from Sweden a poor young man, made a small purchase of land in Scandinavia township, gave it his strict attention and the benefit of his hardy young strength, and thus soon had it converted into an improved and productive farm. To this nucleus he added steadily, and in 1893 he apportioned by sale among his sons 600 acres of land as fine as may be found within the limits of Waupaca county. Few men among the thrifty Norsemen who have made this country their home stands higher in public esteem, for sterling character, for business sagacity, for fidelity to trust and all social relations, than does John P. Peterson.

He was born in Sweden, December 1, 1827, son of Peter and Stena Anderson. In the family, as far back as record can be traced, runs a vein of native mechanical skill which has in no small measure assisted the various members in their success in life. Peter and Stena Anderson had seven children; Martestina, deceased; Carl, deceased; Annie, a resident of Sweden; Carl, deceased; Andreas, of Scandinavia village, Waupaca county; August, of Nelsonville, Wis., and John P. The parents emigrated to America in 1869, many years after their son had crossed the ocean, and located in Scandinavia township, Waupaca Co., Wis. Here they followed agricultural pursuits, making their home with John P. until death overtook them, the father dying December 29, 1882, the mother on July 17, 1893. Both were worthy members of the Lutheran Church.

John P. Peterson was reared on a farm in Sweden, receiving the best education his environment afforded. In 1851, at the age of twenty-three, he resolved to found a home in America. For four years he followed common labor in Dane county, Wis., and other places; then in 1855 purchased 160 acres of government and other land in Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, and with unwavering effort applied himself vigorously to clearing and farming this his first acquisition. He succeeded beyond expectation. Other broad acres adjoining his homestead fell into his possession, and as noted above he, in 1893, sold his 600 acres of well-improved land to three of his sons, and has since led a richly deserved and sensible retired life on the old place. His success was due to his own energies and hard work, and to a careful attention to his business interests.

His marriage to Helena M. Hoyord, which occurred in Scandinavia township, October 24, 1855, was the second to be solemnized in that township, Mr. Peterson himself being the third settler in that neighborhood. He has consequently experienced all the hardships and privations that are unavoidably associated with pioneer life, and Mrs. Peterson, whose natural gifts and refined character can not be overestimated, proved a worthy helpmate. She was the daughter of Peter and Annie Hoyord, and was born in Norway August 29, 1835. She died May 4, 1889, and is buried in Scandinavia cemetery. Mr. Peterson, fully appreciating the priceless value of education, has given most of his ten children a course in the high school as a supplement to their common-school education. The prosperous and contented family is now located as follows: Carl P. is at home; John Oscar is a farmer of Farmington township; P. Amelia is the wife of Louis Thompson, a real-estate dealer of Chicago; Andrew M. is a merchant at Scandinavia; Otto F. is a farmer of Scandinavia; Hannah is the wife of T. Tronson, a farmer of Amherst; Henry W. operates the saw and feed mill on the home farm, built by Mr. Peterson in 1862 and operated by him until 1893; Teman A. is a salesman in Scandinavia; Helen Luella lives in Scandinavia; Susan is deceased. In politics Mr. Peterson is a Republican, and he cast his first vote for John C. Fremont in 1856. He has filled every office in the township except that of constable and clerk, and has held office continuously for twenty-seven years. In this remarkable continuance of public service he has filled all positions of honor and trust with satisfaction to his constituents and credit to himself. Mr. Peterson holds to the faith of the Lutheran Church, and in all the relations of life, public and private, he has acquitted himself as a man above reproach, as an exemplar of the highest type of citizenship.

SALVE KNUTSON, a farmer of Amherst township, Portage county, was born in Sanes, Norway, June 7, 1852, and was brought by his parents to this country when he was an infant. He is a son of Knute and Sena (Oleson) Salverson, both also born in Norway.

Knute Salverson was the son of Salve Knutson, who died in Norway many years ago, and whose children were Knute (big), Dora, Knute (little) and Osmond. Knute Salverson, father of the subject of this sketch, had one child by his first marriage—Salve Knutson, deceased; three by his second marriage, of whom Christiana, the eldest, is deceased, and two died in infancy; and by his third marriage, the following:

Emma (1), deceased; Julia, who married Knute Osmanson, a farmer of Red River, Minn.; Annie, deceased; Salve, of whom we write—all four of whom were born in Norway; and Ole, deceased; Emma (2), at home; Mary, who married John O. Johnson, a farmer of Minnesota; and Torger, living at home—all four born in Amherst. Knute Salverson, with his wife and family, sailed from Norway in June, 1853, when his son Salve was only about a year old, and after a voyage of seven weeks landed at New York, coming directly to Rock River, Wis. Here he worked at the carpenter's trade, which he had learned in Norway. From Rock River the family moved to Scandinavia, Waupaca county, where they remained with a friend till the following fall, 1854. In the summer of 1854, Mr. Salverson bought 180 acres of wild land in Amherst township, Portage county, and, after making a clearing, built a home, to which he brought his family, who have resided there ever since. Mr. Salverson died at home January 10, 1886, where his widow also died November 20, 1894, and they are buried in Scandinavia. Both were members of the Lutheran Church.

Salve Knutson, son of the foregoing, and subject of this sketch, received a meager education in the schools of Scandinavia and Amherst. In May, 1877, he went west into Minnesota, hired out as a farm hand, and worked farms for himself until the fall of 1878; then returned home and has worked his farm ever since. After their father's death, he and his brother Torger made extensive improvements upon the farm. Mr. Knutson is yet unmarried. In politics he is a strong Republican, and in religion a Lutheran.

His great-grandfather Hunter migrated from Scotland to the North of Ireland, whence he came to America in a very early day. He had three sons—Andrew, Thomas and Henry—the two latter settling in Michigan about the year 1797, though nothing is now known of them or their descendants. Their parents both died in Maryland. Andrew Hunter (grandfather of our subject) was born in Cecil county, Maryland, in 1761, moved to Canada in 1797, and there married Miss Maggie Wilson, by whom he had thirteen children, to wit: James, Rachel, Hugh, Margaret, Joseph, Martha, John (a physician at one time of Hamilton, Ontario), Mary, George, Ann, Henry, Thomas, and one that died in infancy. The father of these, who was a well-to-do farmer, giving each of his children, when of age, a good farm, died in the winter of 1852, at the advanced age of ninety-one, his wife passing away in 1861. She was of Scotch parentage, and had two brothers—Hugh and John—the former of whom was a farmer and local preacher, the latter a farmer and politician, having for some sixteen years been a member of the Canadian Parliament, during eight of which he was speaker of the House of Commons. James, the eldest son of Andrew, and the father of Adolphus G., was born in 1800, in Grimsby, Canada, and until he came of age assisted his father on the home farm, when, or at the time of his marriage, he was given a farm by his father near the old home. He married Arethusa Kilbourn, who was born in 1805, daughter of John and Melinda Hubbard Kilbourn, and three children were born to this union: Alfred J., Andrew H. and Adolphus G.; of whom Alfred J. died, in 1861, in Canada, and Andrew H. in Tennessee, in 1875. The father of these served on the side of law and order during the Canadian Rebellion of 1837, and died in October, 1838. His widow subsequently married Samuel C. Kenny, and died in 1848. By her second marriage she had two children: John H. and Samuel C., both of whom married, Samuel dying without issue; John had six children—Samuel C., Anna, Viola, Adele, Alfred and Josephine. The mother of Mr. Hunter traces her family in this country back to April 15, 1635, when Thomas Kilbourn, with his family, embarked from London in the ship "Increase" for America, the Kilbourns of this country springing from him. They trace back in England to 1170, when William De Kilbourn owned a large estate in Yorkshire. He, William De Kilbourn, was called the proudest Briton of the Thirteenth Century, he being a great entertainer, "King John of England" having been one of his guests. William De Kilbourn died in 1233, aged about sixty years.

Adolphus C. Hunter, the subject proper of these lines, was three years old when his father died, and when he lost his mother, up to which time he worked on a farm, attending school during the winter months, and then commenced clerking in a shoe store. In 1853 he went to Cleveland, Ohio, where for one winter he worked in a lumber yard, returning to Canada in the spring of 1854, taking charge of a sawmill and lumber yard in the town of Bayham, Elgin county, one year, or until 1855, when, in company with his brother Alfred J., he commenced the manufacture of lumber in that county. Up to the death of Alfred J., in 1861, they also owned a lumber yard in Huron, Ohio, but our subject then sold out his entire business interest both here and in Canada. In 1859 he shipped before the mast on a Lake Erie vessel, for the three following years sailing the lakes, being promoted to mate in 1861. In 1863 he took charge of Shaw & Williams's sawmill at Port Burwell, Ontario, with whom he remained some seven years, part of the time at Saginaw, Mich., where the firm had located. In the fall of 1868 Mr. Hunter and his brother Andrew H. (the style of the co-partnership being Hunter Bros.) followed the business of vessel owners and shippers and lumber inspectors (which he had been engaged in many years in Canada), in which they continued until the death of Andrew in 1875. In 1871 they fitted up a sawmill at Cincinnati, Ohio, in connection with A. Fay (firm being Fay & Hunter), which they placed on a flat-boat, Adolphus taking it to Clark's Landing, Tenn., on the Obion river, where he remained, operating it till 1878, when he closed up everything at a loss, and returned to Saginaw, Mich., later moving to Muskegon, same State, where for two years he followed the business of lumber inspector. After this he was in the employ of James S. Kirk & Co., soap manufacturers, of Chicago, for nine months buying lumber for them, and then having the entire charge of their soap-box factory at Muskegon, Mich. In April, 1893, they moved their plant to Rhineland, where Mr. Hunter has since had his home. In addition to his duties as superintendent of from sixty to eighty men, the turning out of the boxes, etc., he buys all the lumber consumed in that extensive business.

On October 7, 1880, at Muskegon, Mich., Mr. Hunter was married to Miss Emma Cherney, born in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1855, daughter of Joseph Cherney, a cabinet maker by trade, who was born in Bohemia, Austria, and came to America in 1854. He was killed in 1887 by accidentally falling into the hold of a steamship; his widow is yet living, the mother of children named as follows: Fannie, Josephine, Emma, Mary, Anna, William, Maggie, Carrie and Louise. To Mr. and Mrs. Hunter have been born two children: Alfred J. and Harry K. The home of the family, built in 1894, is both elegant and commodious, and in its entirety is a reflex of the culture and good taste of its owners. In his political preferences Mr. Hunter is a straight Republican, and, though frequently pressed to accept office, has invariably declined to accept; socially, he is a Knight Templar, and a member of the I. O. O. F. His education was limited to the common schools of his boyhood, and two terms at an academy, but he has been a great reader, and a keen observer of men and things, and he is a typical self-made man; in fact, his success in life has been the direct result of his own exertions, and not of that "good luck" which the world (little understanding what the words impart) so often ascribes to those who rise unaided to positions of affluence and honor. On his mother's side he comes of a long line of doctors, lawyers, statesmen and soldiers, chiefly in Connecticut, and in the Indian wars of this country his great-grandfather, old John Kilbourn, defeated the Indian Chief Philip and 200 warriors, in Connecticut. He was also an officer in the Revolutionary war, in which he was wounded, and the nobility of his nature has descended to his succeeding generations.

F D. NABER. Prominent among the foremost, in progressiveness and prosperity, of Shawano county business men, stands this gentleman, a worthy son of a worthy father—Judge Naber.

Mr. Naber was born May 21, 1853, in Mayville, Dodge Co., Wis., where, when a child, his parents left him in the care of his grandfather Naber, at the time they moved to Shawano, the schools of which latter new place were much inferior to those of Mayville. Here he remained until he was fourteen years old, receiving his elementary educational training, the schools he attended being for the most part German; then, re-joining his parents at Shawano, he completed his education at the English school of that then village, which was held in a frame building still to be seen in the southwest portion of the present city limits. His school days over at an early age, he entered his father's store, where his first lessons in mercantile business were secured, and while yet a boy he began to buy and sell land for the timber growing on it, showing an unusually early aptitude for commercial life. All his transactions in those days, up to the time of his majority, were made, necessarily, in his father's name, and the success of his ventures were the foreshadowings of his future prosperity. He thus continued till he had passed his majority and reached the prime of his early manhood, when he began to launch into still wider fields. In 1881 he purchased from Charles L. Wiley the then almost defunct drug store in Shawano, the fixtures being worth $1,300, while the value of the stock amounted to not more than $400; but the push, energy and sound management of Mr. Naber soon fanned the embers of an expiring business into new and healthy life, for ere long the drug store became one of the most popular and extensive in northern Wisconsin—in fact, no town in all the State, of the size of Shawano, could boast of such a well-equipped store, at the same time enjoying so large a patronage. In 1884 a new business block, one of the best in Shawano, was built to accommodate the increasing trade, but in 1893 our subject, on account of failing health, had to retire from the business, his brother, Charles C. (who had been employed in the store some ten years), succeeding him. Charles continued to conduct the concern till June, 1894, when the hand of Death removed him from his usefulness. The drug business was then formed into a stock company, entitled the Naber Drug Co., with F. D. Naber as vice-president.

In February, 1894, our subject was active in the formation of the Wolf River Paper and Fibre Co., who erected an extensive plant at Shawano for the manufacture of paper pulp from wood, which plant was equipped with the latest improved machinery, etc. Of this important industry Mr. Naber was elected treasurer and appointed superintendent, incumbencies he has since filled with eminent ability. He is also president of the Shawano Water-power Co., who constructed a dam at Shawano; is vice-president of the Shawano Shoe Co., and a director of the Shawano Bank. To the city of Shawano he has made two additions, known, respectively, as "Naber's Addition" and "Fairview Addition," one of which has been made to the southeast part of the corporation limits; and in very many other ways has he enhanced the growth and prosperity of the city of his adoption. In 1891 he completed what is said to be the finest private residence in the city, where he and his family live, and he also owns several other dwelling houses.

An August 8, 1882, Mr. Naber was married, at Clintonville, Wis., to Miss Mary Bucholtz, a native of Belle Plaine township, Shawano county, daughter of Alexander Bucholtz, who was among the noble army of pioneers of Shawano county. Four bright children have been born to this union, their names and dates of birth being as follows: F. Bernard, September 17, 1883; Paulina M., June 15, 1885; Alexander H., October 10, 1888, and Charles F., January 21, 1895. Although Mr. Naber has ever been foremost in all movements tending to the welfare and prosperity of the community at large, yet he has never aspired to political honor, being content, as a staunch Democrat, to give his friends and party the benefit of his influence, aside from which, politics have no attractions for him. In addition to his other interests Mr. Naber owns several thousand acres of timber land, and for years he has been engaged in buying and selling that class of real estate. In every way he is one of the leading men of Shawano county, one of the shrewdest, most capable and yet most unassuming, a happy combination of characteristics that have won for him many warm friends.

JACOB BENTZ, who for a number of years was one of the leading general merchants of Clintonville, Waupaca county, senior member of the firm of J. Bentz & Son, has been immigrant, pioneer and merchant. Well educated in Germany, his native land, he came to America to participate in its freedom and opportunities, and after spending years of toil in the undeveloped State of Wisconsin, he in his more mature years became a prosperous and prominent business man.

Mr. Bentz was born in the village of Ingerkingen, Wurtemberg, Germany, January 1, 1839, son of Jacob and Mary (Messler) Bentz, who died when our subject was ten years old. The father was a farmer and brick maker, owning a farm of 100 acres, and reared a family of nine children, as follows: Ulrich, Joseph, John, Jacob, Anton, Francis, Theresa, Crecencia and Mathias, six of whom are now living, all but one being in Germany. Joseph came to America, enlisted at Cincinnati, Ohio, as an artilleryman in the Union army, and died during the war, while still in the service. Jacob Bentz received in his native land a high-school education, studying Latin, Greek and some French, and in 1856, at the age of seventeen years, sailed for America. Landing at New York City, after a voyage of seven weeks, he came directly to Kenosha, Wis., where he rented a farm and there engaged in agriculture some three years. In 1861 he married Mary Newhouse (a lady of German descent, whose parents emigrated from Westphalia) and moved to Waukegan, Ill., where he purchased an improved form of forty acres. Selling out three years later, he bought 123 acres in Bear Creek township, Waupaca Co., Wis., on which tract stood a small log house, and only five acres of the land were cleared. With only rude tools at his command, Mr. Bentz began the arduous work of clearing up this forest-grown farm, remaining here until 1880, when he rented the place and moved to Clintonville. Here he purchased a lot, erected a substantial store building, and stocked it with general merchandise worth about fifteen hundred dollars, which he had gradually increased until he carried about ten thousand dollars' worth of goods, along with his son conducting one of the most prosperous mercantile establishments in the northern part of Waupaca county. On May 20, 1894, he retired from mercantile business, turning the entire concern over to his son, Joseph Bentz, who has since continued it. Mr. Bentz's retirement was caused principally by failing health.

Mrs. Bentz died in 1888, leaving four children; Joseph, mentioned above; Frances, now Mrs. Gustave Humm, of Clintonville; Mary, wife of Mathias Zehr, of Larrabee township, and Pauline, at home. Mr. Bentz was again united in marriage, July 2, 1889, this time to Catherine Smith, daughter of Michael and Mary (Corrigan) Smith, who emigrated from Ireland to America in 1841, farming for eight years in Fairfield county, Conn.; then in May, 1849, coming to Wisconsin. Sojourning for a short time at Franklin, Milwaukee county, they moved to Caledonia township, where he bought and operated a small farm until 1857, in that year selling it and moving to property he had bought in 1849, an eighty-two acre tract in Dale township, Outagamie county, which was then still in a primitive condition. Here with bear, deer and Indians for near neighbors, Michael Smith cleared his farm of eighty acres and lived until 1880, when he removed to Clintonville. His wife died October 10, 1865, leaving four children: Catherine, now Mrs. Bentz; Mary Anna, now

Mrs. Mader, and living in Bear Creek, Waupaca Co., Wis.; John and Edward. Mr. Smith now resides with Mr. Bentz. By his second marriage Mr. Bentz has two children, John and Regina.

In politics Mr. Bentz is a Democrat. He is a public-spirited citizen, and has satisfactorily filled many local offices, for two years serving as treasurer of Bear Creek township, Waupaca Co., two years as treasurer of Larrabee township, and two years as city treasurer of Clintonville; for two years he served on the town board. Himself and family are members of the Catholic Church. In 1886 Mr. Bentz took a three-months' trip to his native land. He possesses a ripe judgment on business matters, and has stored within his memory a wide range of information. He is one of Waupaca county's most valuable and esteemed citizens.

AUGUSTUS F. BANDELIN, late proprietor of the popular hostelry known as the "Centralia Hotel," of Centralia, Wood county, was a pleasant, genial gentleman, having many warm friends, and few enemies, if any. The record of his life is as follows: A native of Northern Prussia; he was born near the shores of the Baltic Sea July 3, 1850, and was a son of John and Angeline (Bandelin) Bandelin. The relationship of second cousins existed between the parents, and both were natives of Prussia. The father was a sea captain, and after his arrival in the United States sailed on the Great Lakes for three or four years. He then turned his attention to the more quiet pursuit of farming which he followed in connection with various other enterprises up to the time of his death, which occurred in Watertown, Wis., October 7, 1892, he having reached the advanced age of eighty-three years. His wife died May 7, 1887, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. Of their family of six children, three yet survive as follows: Mary, widow of Robert Haas; John; and Bertha, wife of William Wandersee.

Augustus F. Bandelin was a lad of only seven summers when with his parents he came to Wisconsin, locating in Watertown. His primary education, acquired in the public schools of that place, was supplemented by study in the Northwestern University, where, in addition to the other branches of learning he pursued, he mastered several languages. He was a progressive man, always keeping well informed on the issues of the day, and was conversant with current events. When his literary education was completed he entered upon his business career, serving as salesman and bookkeeper in Watertown until 1880, when he removed to Centralia, and purchased land, erecting thereon a hotel which he occupied up to the time of his decease, conducting a first-class establishment, complete in all its appointments, his house becoming a favorite hostelry with the traveling public.

While in Watertown, Wis., Mr. Bandelin was married August 11, 1873, to Emma Maria Erickson, a native of Norway, born April 8, 1850. They became the parents of seven children, namely: Fritz, who was born in New London, Wis., March 19, 1874, and died in Watertown September 19, following; Carl H. F., born in Dubuque, Iowa, October 9, 1875; Oscar G. F., born in Watertown, October 28, 1877; Esther, who was born in Watertown September 3, 1879, and died in Grand Rapids, Wis., April 26, 1882; Alexander, born in Grand Rapids, December 26, 1881; Aurelia Caroline, born in Grand Rapids, June 21, 1883; and Augustus W. A., born in Centralia May 2, 1885. The mother and children attend the Centralia Unity Church. In his political affiliations Mr. Bandelin was a Republican. He had that pleasant and genial manner so essential for one in his calling, and was alike popular with young and old, rich and poor. He died December 12, 1894.

JOSEPH SWEENEY was formerly, for four years, agent for the Pabst Brewing Company at Grand Rapids, Wood county, but is now living on his eighty-acre farm in the thriving little town of Biron, about two miles from Grand Rapids. He was born in Canada, March 3, 1854, and is a son of Horace and Elizabeth Sweeney whose family numbered five children, as follows: Mitchell W., now residing in Merrill, Wis.; Mary, wife of Frederick Clousit, who is located in Grand Rapids; John, an engineer residing in Marshfield, Wis.; Joseph, subject of this sketch; and Catherine, wife of Nelson Pippin, also of Grand Rapids.

The subject of these lines was brought to Grand Rapids, when only eighteen months old, by his parents, who are numbered among its pioneer settlers. His father embarked in the livery business, and after completing his education in the public schools Joseph began work in his father's stables, and followed the livery business until December, 1891, when he was appointed to the position of agent for the Pabst Brewing Company of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

On October 25, 1873, Mr. Sweeney was united in marriage with Miss Almeda Kightlinger, a native of Pennsylvania, and to them have been born eight children, seven of whom are living, namely: Joseph, Hattie, Arthur, Albert, Frank, Earl and Wilbur. The parents are communicants of the Roman Catholic Church, and in his political views Mr. Sweeney is a Democrat, but has had neither time nor inclination for public office, preferring to devote his energies to his business interests.

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON ALLEN is one of the worthy citizens that the Keystone State has furnished to Portage county. He was born March 26, 1841, in Tioga county, Penn., son of David and Elizabeth (Wilmot) Allen, the father born in 1817 in Dryden, Tompkins Co., N. Y., whence in early manhood he removed to Pennsylvania, and there for a short time engaged in farming, subsequently returning to Tompkins county, and making his home in the town of Ithaca. Previous to this time he had worked on the Erie canal, and returning to his old business in 1831 bought a canal-boat of which he himself acted as captain, engaging in this during the summers until 1849; during the winter time for a number of year he made shingles. While in Pennsylvania he was married March 13, 1837, and in 1850 he migrated westward with his family to Illinois, there working farms on shares until the fall of 1852, when he came alone to Portage county, Wis., and here purchased a quarter of Section 35, Amherst township. Having made a clearing and built a log house, he was joined by his family in the fall of 1853, and here they have ever since remained. Mr. Allen worked in the woods for several years after his removal hither, and for about ten years furnished provisions to different lumber camps, on contract. In 1866 he paid a visit to relations in New York State. He has led a long and useful life, but age is beginning to tell on him, and he has been in poor health for some time.

William H. H. Allen removed with his parents in childhood to Tompkins county, N. Y., and in the town of Ithaca acquired the greater part of his education, his physical training being obtained through farm labor. He attended school to a limited extent in Illinois, subsequently came with the family to Amherst, Wis., and was here married, May 18, 1861, to Miss Ellen A. Tarr, daughter of Rufus and Clarinda (Ames) Tarr, the former of whom was born in Maine; the paternal grandfather was a native of England. Mrs. Allen was born in Bangor, Maine, July 4, 1845, and when a little maiden of five summers came to the West with her mother and brother, the family settling in Sheboygan, Wis., and Mrs. Tarr engaged in dressmaking for four years. They were then joined by the father, and removing to Weyauwega, Wis., settled on a rented farm; but after a short time went to Dayton township, Waupaca county, where Mr. Tarr purchased eighty acres of wild land. After cultivating that farm for three years he sold, and for a similar period operated a rented farm in Amherst township, Portage county. Between 1864 and 1874 he lived upon a rented farm in Dayton township, Waupaca county, and then purchased eighty acres in the same township—the place of his residence at the time of this writing. His wife died in Amherst, of consumption, in January, 1861. The children of the family were Ellen A., wife of Mr. Allen; Renello, who died in infancy; Frank, a farmer of Hartley, Wis., who married Esther Gano, by whom he had seven children, three yet living; Mary, wife of Wesley Brooks, of Springwater, Waushara Co., Wis., by whom she has eight children, all living; and Viola M., who died in infancy. For his second wife Mr. Tarr married Miss Sarah Jane Bates, and their children are William, Marion, Wert, Harriet, Chester and Lucy.

Mrs. Allen left school at the age of fourteen to care for her mother and the household, but though the task was a heavy one for the young girl it was ably and faithfully performed. She continued at home until her marriage, when with her husband she took up her residence upon an eighty-acre farm which he had purchased a short time previous. In 1867 Mr. Allen sold that property and removed to Springwater, Wis., purchasing a farm of 120 acres, which he successfully cultivated for some time. On September 29, 1881, a day never to be forgotten by the people of that locality, a terrible cyclone swept over the region, destroying everything in its path. The buildings of Mr. Allen were utterly demolished, and the family barely escaped with their lives. His neighbors, however, kindly came to his assistance, and aided him in erecting a new house, into which he moved within three weeks. With brave heart and unflinching perseverance he set to work to retrieve his lost possessions, and by constant industry, which is never without its reward, at length accomplished the task. In 1890 he disposed of that farm and brought his family to Amherst township, Portage county, purchasing his present farm of eighty acres. During several winter seasons he worked in the lumber camps, and throughout his life he has used every opportunity to secure for himself and family a pleasant home.

The first child of Mr. and Mrs. Allen died in infancy, unnamed; Mina B. is the wife of Julian Wilcott, a farmer of Belmont, Wis., by whom she had six children, the four living being Homer, Lloyd, Cecil and Clyde; Nettie A. became the wife of Ernest Kurtz, and died leaving one child, William H.; Cora E. is the wife of John Pinkerton, and their only daughter is named Bessie; Eliza

M. is the wife of William Tarr, a farmer of Dayton, Wis., and their children are Exie, Ethel, Herbert and Vedy, all at home; and Fred and Gladys F.; Grant, Frank and Bessie, also children of William Allen, all died of scarlet fever in the spring of 1881.

During the Civil war Mr. Allen responded to the President's call for troops, enlisting in June, 1864, at Waupaca, as a member of Company A, Forty-second Wis. V. I., under Capt. Duncan McGregor. After three weeks' drill in Madison, Wis., the company was ordered to Washington, but while en route received word to go no farther than Cairo, Ill.; it was on detached duty most of the time, being in no field service. Mr. Allen was mustered out in Madison, in June, 1865. He cast his first vote when only sixteen years old. He was employed at shingle-making in Knowlton, Wis., and the proprietor of a hotel at that place told him and a number of other boys that he would give them an extra good dinner if they would vote for Fremont. As Mr. Allen's sympathies were with the Republican party he did this, and has since supported its candidates. Socially, he is a member of the Temple of Honor, to which his wife also belongs, and of Capt. Eckels Post, G. A. R., of Amherst. Though dependent upon his own resources from an early age, and though his path has been crossed by difficulties and obstacles, he has nevertheless worked his way upward, and is now numbered among the substantial farmers of his adopted county.

GR. LEER, who owns and operates a good farm of forty acres in Iola township, Waupaca county, and has also 120 acres of timber land, came to this country twenty-six years ago a poor man, and has made himself one of the substantial citizens of this community. He was born in Norway, December 30, 1838, and is a son of Reier G. Leer, a farmer, who earned his living by day's labor. He had five sons and six daughters, who, with the exception of one son and two daughters who died in Norway, all came to the United States. The father died in that country, but the mother, who was born in May, 1817, is living in Harrison township, Waupaca county.

Our subject is the second child and eldest son. His educational and other privileges were exceedingly meagre, and at the age of seventeen he began to learn the tailor's trade, which he followed three years, when, thinking it an unprofitable business, he began work as a farm hand, and later with a number of young men went to the lumber woods in Sweden, being there employed and on a "log drive" for six and a half years. At the age of twenty-nine Mr. Leer was married in Norway to Esther Anderson, who was born November 26, 1844, and ere coming to America they had one son, Reier, who is now farming in Harrison township, Waupaca county. In the spring of 1869, with his wife and child, our subject sailed for the United States. The opportunity for a man to accumulate enough to get a good home were very poor in Norway, and with the help of others he secured enough money for the contemplated voyage. He embarked on the "Flora," which seven weeks later reached Quebec, and for a year he lived in Dane county, Wis., where he took a contract for grubbing. He was able to save some of his earnings, and desirous of getting a home of his own he removed to the Indian lands in northern Wisconsin, where many settlers were locating, he having previously visited this place. For about nine months he lived with Tron Tronson, and then purchased forty acres of land in Section 9, Iola township, Waupaca county, on which not a furrow had been turned or an improvement made. He had to go in debt for the land, but for two winter seasons worked in the woods and earned enough to pay off the mortgage. He afterward added to the original purchase until he now owns a valuable property of 160 acres, which is well-improved and under a high state of cultivation.

Since coming to this country Mr. and Mrs. Leer have had seven children: Annie, wife of Andrew Gutho, of Harrison township, Waupaca county; Edward, a farmer of the same township; Carrie and Thomas, at home; Martha (1), who died at the age of three years, and was the first person buried in Hitterdall Cemetery; Gena and Martha (2), who are still under the parental roof. In his political views Mr. Leer is a Republican. He is a prominent member of the Hitterdall Lutheran Church, and was instrumental in building the house of worship. He has served as church trustee, and takes a deep interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community. On his arrival in the United States he was in debt to the extent of $50, on which he had to pay seven per cent interest. He could speak not a word of English, but he resolved to secure a good home for himself and family, and to this end has led a busy and useful life which has resulted as he anticipated. He spent fourteen winters working in the lumber woods, and for three springs ran the river from Trapp, Wis., to St. Louis. Honesty and fair dealing have always characterized his business transactions, and he has not only gained a comfortable competence, but has won the confidence and respect of those with whom he has been brought in contact, and has gained many warm friends.

LEWIS F. SHOEMAKER is numbered among the native sons of Waupaca county, his birth having occurred on the old family homestead in Section 15, Dayton township, March 27, 1856, his parents being Frederick and Jane (Lewis) Shoemaker.

Our subject attended the district schools in the neighborhood, proving an ambitious and thorough student, desirous to gain better advantage along that line, but his health forced him to leave the school room. At the age of fourteen he had a third grade teacher's certificate, and while in his sixteenth year he successfully engaged in teaching, being first employed in Springwater, Waushara county, at $28 per month. Later he taught school in Almond township, Portage county, for $40 per month, and soon, instead of seeking a school, his ability was such that his services were sought by different school directors, and he could command the highest salary paid to teachers. For fourteen terms (fifty-six months) he successfully followed this profession, but during all this time he considered the farmstead his home. In the winter of 1877-78 he was employed as a school teacher in Wayne county, Neb., and when the school season was over he returned to his home, where in connection with his brother he managed the farm, his father being one of the extensive land owners of the county.

On March 19, 1890, Mr. Shoemaker increased his happiness and prosperity by his marriage to Miss Ella E. Poland, who was born in Dayton township, January 8, 1863, a daughter of S. S. and Mary (Warren) Poland, who came from Knox county, Ohio, to this State in an early day, and are yet living in Dayton township. The young couple began their domestic life at the old homestead, and there remained until September 21, 1893, when they removed to Section 16, Dayton township, where the subject of this review had erected a very fine residence upon a farm of 170 acres, being a part of the old home farm. The home, a large and beautiful residence, is neatly and tastefully furnished and is the abode of warm-hearted hospitality. A little daughter, Laura M., born April 8, 1892, adds joy and brightness to the household. The parents occupy an enviable position in social circles, and their friends in the community are many; they hold membership with the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Shoemaker is one of the leading supporters of the Republican party in his neighborhood, and has filled various positions of honor and trust, discharging his duties in a manner that has won him the highest commendation. He was township clerk for five years, preceding April, 1891; in the spring of 1893 he became chairman of the board of supervisors, was re-elected in 1894, and again in 1895 without opposition. He served on the committee to settle with the county officers, and on various important committees while a member of the county board. During the summer of 1895 he served on the building committee to erect new buildings on the County Poor Farm, the former buildings having been destroyed by fire. He has also been clerk of the school district, and though prominent in municipal affairs yet finds time to devote to Church work, and is serving as superintendent of the Sunday-school. He has been a member of the Farmers Union, and served as its shipping agent. He is foremost among the leading men of his township, and a prosperous farmer, having inherited the excellent business traits of his father.

EW. STRATTON, one of the substantial farmers and valued citizens of Waupaca county, claims Vermont as the State of his nativity, having been born in Addison county April 13, 1842. His parents, Joel and Adeline (Lewis) Stratton, were also natives of the Green Mountain State, and were farming people.

In 1846, with their two children, E. W. and Edgar, they started for Wisconsin, journeying by way of the lakes to Milwaukee, and making a location near Burlington. Subsequently they removed to Walworth county, and in June, 1854, the father made his first purchase of land in Section 8, Dayton township, Waupaca county. Three more children had been added to the family in the meantime: Emma, now the wife of Nelson Brigham, of Waushara county, Wis., Wellington, of Dayton township; and Martha, wife of E. M. Bailey, a newspaper editor of Britt, Iowa. After living on his first farm for two years, the father removed to the vicinity of Stratton's Lake, and afterward took up his residence near Crystal Lake, where he remained until April, 1894, since which time he has lived retired in Fremont, Wis. The family was further increased, in Dayton township, by the addition of the following children: Oliver S. and Charles L., now farmers of that township; Ella, who became the wife of John A. Lewis, and died in Dayton township; Alice, wife of Robert Pinkerton, of Dayton township, and Frankie, who died at the age of four months. The mother, who was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, died in Dayton township. In his political views, Mr. Stratton is a Republican. He reared a large family of children, who do credit to his name, and accumulated a competency that now supplies him with all the comforts of life.

E. W. Stratton, the eldest child, was reared on a farm, and in the winter season worked in the lumber woods. He enlisted February 18, 1864, at Appleton, Wis., in Company G, Twenty-first Wis. V. I., went to Madison, thence to Lookout Mountain, in Tennessee, and was for six days under fire at Buzzard's Roost, after which he started with the regiment for Atlanta. He was wounded at the battle of Resaca, May 13, 1864, and for eighteen days remained in field hospitals, after which he was sent to a hospital in Chattanooga, Tenn., and later to Nashville, where he remained two weeks. He then went to the convalescent hospital at Jeffersonville, Ind., and on to Madison, Ind., thence to Madison, Wis., after which he was transferred to Davenport, Iowa, where he was honorably discharged September 1, 1865, returning at once to his home in Waupaca county.

While home on a furlough, September 1, 1864, Mr. Stratton was joined in wedlock with Martha M. Mynard, who was born in the town of Virgil, Cortland Co., N. Y., October 6, 1845, and was brought to Waupaca county in the fall of 1855, by her parents, Martin and Harriet (Ford) Mynard. She taught in School District No. 6, Dayton township, and is a cultured lady, enjoying the warm regard of many friends. One son has blessed this union: William L., who was born August 23, 1866, and follows farming in Dayton township. He married Miss Katie Green, April 4, 1889, and they have a son, Earl M., born June 28, 1892, and one daughter, born June 10, 1895.

In February, 1867, Mr. Stratton located upon his present farm, which he had previously purchased, and to the original tract of eighty acres has added until now 160 acres yield to him a golden tribute in return for the care and labor he bestows upon the land. He has been very successful in his dealings, and is accounted one of the substantial and progressive agriculturists of the community. He is the oldest representative of a family that probably stands without an equal in Waupaca county. The parents were people of ordinary means, and the sons were early thrown upon their own resources, but have become the most prosperous farmers in the "banner township" of the county. They are highly respected men and law-abiding citizens, and the example which they furnish to their posterity is surely one worthy of emulation. In 1891 our subject erected one of the finest residences in the township, and also, in 1894, a fine barn 32 x 70 feet, with 20-foot posts. The many improvements upon the place are monuments to his enterprise. In politics, Mr. Stratton is a staunch Republican, and has served as constable and in school offices, but has never sought political preferment. He is a member of Garfield Post No. 21, G. A. R., of Waupaca, is a wide-awake and enterprising citizen, one who gives his hearty support to any enterprise calculated to prove of public benefit, and is a well-informed man, keeping abreast with the times in all particulars.

SAMUEL S. POLAND is numbered among the honored pioneers of Waupaca county, having located here when the land was wild and unimproved, when settlements were widely scattered, and when the traveler followed Indian trails through the forest. Deer and other wild game were then plentiful, and the work of progress and civilization seemed scarcely begun.

In the history of his adopted county, Mr. Poland well deserves mention. He was born in Franklin county, Penn., January 11, 1831, and is a son of Charles L. and Mary (Stoner) Poland, the former born in Franklin county, in 1805, the latter in 1807. The father was a farmer by occupation, and with his wife and two children, Samuel and Abraham, removed to Knox county, Ohio, where he spent his remaining days, being almost eighty years of age at the time of his death; the mother passed away some years previous. In Knox county, Ohio, the following children were born to them: Charles, a farmer of Milford township, Knox Co., Ohio; John and Edwin, of the same county; William, of Harrison county, Mo.; Freeling, also of Harrison county; Wesley, who was a member of the Fourth Ohio Cavalry, and was killed at the battle of Stone River; Mrs. Mary Bradfield, of Knox county, Ohio; Margaret, wife of Henry Benie, of Knox county. The oldest son, Abraham, also lives in Knox county. This family had eight representatives in the Union army during the Civil war, and their loyalty was beyond question.

The early education of Samuel S. Poland, acquired in the district schools, was supplemented by one term at the high school of Chesterville, Ohio. He was reared on his father's farm, and in 1852 visited southern Wisconsin, but in the month of July returned to Ohio. In 1854 he went to Polk and Dallas counties, Iowa, but on account of chills and fever he returned to Waupaca county, Wis., in the fall, and spent the winter with Thomas T. Warren. In the winter of 1855-56, he taught the first school in District No. 3, and for nine terms he followed that profession, having previously been employed as a teacher for two terms in Ohio. In the spring of 1855, he located his present farm in Section 34, Dayton township, and soon began its improvement, for it was then in its primitive condition. In the fall of 1857 Mr. Poland was married in Dayton township to Miss Mary Warren, a native of Knox county, Ohio, born February 8, 1834, daughter of Otis and Elizabeth (Stephens) Warren, Vermont people, who came to this State in June, 1854. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Poland: Warren, who died at the age of sixteen years; Edwin Chester, a school teacher; Ella E., wife of L. F. Shoemaker, of Waupaca county; Lucinda and Wesley, who died in childhood; and Clara, wife of Truman Shoemaker, of Dayton.

During the Civil war Mr. Poland offered his services to the government, and went to Madison, Wis., but was rejected on account of physical disability, one limb being shorter than the other, the result of an attack of white swelling which he had suffered when a boy of eleven years. He has ever been a loyal citizen, devoted to the best interests of the community in which he makes his home, and whatever tends to advance the general welfare receives his hearty support and co-operation. He voted with the Republican party until 1876, since which time he has been independent. He served as supervisor of his township, and for twenty-seven years was school treasurer, but has never been an office seeker, preferring to devote his time and attention to his business interests. He has reclaimed from the wilderness 160 acres of land, and transformed it into one of the fine farms of his adopted county.

THOR THORSON, one of the active, prominent and most enterprising citizens of Helvetia township, Waupaca county, is at present engaged in farming in Section 6. He was born in Norway, March 26, 1852, and is a son of Stein Thorson, who was there engaged in shoemaking. In the family were six children, of whom our subject is the only son.

In the fall of 1853 the family embarked on a sailing vessel bound for the New World, and after a voyage of fourteen weeks landed at Quebec. Their first location was in Philadelphia, Penn., where the father worked at his trade. On leaving that city they emigrated to Rock River, Wis., where they remained one year, at the end of which time they came to Waupaca county, where land was cheaper, and the father wished to obtain a home for his family. They made the trip in a covered wagon with an ox-team, sleeping by the roadside where night overtook them. It was a long and tedious journey, the roads not being as good as at the present day. In the northern part of Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, the father purchased eighty acres of wild land, on which he built a small log cabin, 12 x 16 feet, into which the family moved, and the barn was only large enough to hold one cow. This was the first home of the family in America, and, though small and humble, they enjoyed it, knowing that it was their own. The father had a bench in one corner, and there worked at his trade, though he was also employed at various other occupations in order to support his family of little ones. On that farm they continued to live several years, during which time it was partially improved, but in course of time it was traded for eighty acres of new land in Section 6, Helvetia township, a log house being the only improvement. In the trade he had received some money, and the farm was free from debt. Not a stick of timber had been cut, and it required considerable labor before the land was made ready for the plow. There the father spent the remainder of his life, dying July 2, 1885; the mother passed away October 18, 1891, and they now lie side by side in the Scandinavia Cemetery. They were both faithful members of the Lutheran Church of Scandinavia.

Thor Thorson, our subject, had but little or no educational advantages, for at the age of thirteen he began work, being placed in charge of a yoke of cattle, horses at that time being few and high-priced, and any man who owned a horse was thought to be wealthy. Being a new country, work was plentiful, and thus his physical training was not neglected. At the age of eighteen he began working in the lumber woods during the winter, while his summers were spent upon the home farm. For eighteen seasons he was in the pineries, during three springs he engaged in log driving, and during nine autumns he followed threshing. In Waupaca, August 27, 1877, Mr. Thorson married Miss Hannah Tubas, the ceremony being performed by Samuel Bailey, a justice of the peace. She was born in Iola township, Waupaca county, October 28, 1857. To this union have been born seven children—Susanna, Oliver, Laura, Julia, Edgar, Willie and Alma.

After his marriage Mr. Thorson still remained with his parents, who were getting old and needed his assistance. He now has 160 acres of land in Section 1, Iola township, and Section 6, Helvetia, eighty acres of which have been transformed into rich and arable land. He is one of the most industrious men of the community, and has witnessed and aided in the wonderful changes that have taken place since his arrival in the county. He has seen such times as will never be witnessed by his children, as the country is now opened up, and improved machinery makes work much easier. When he removed to his present farm wild animals and game abounded in the forests, wolves could be heard howling all night long, deer could be seen in droves, and bears, prairie chickens and other wild game could be found in abundance. Those days are all past and gone, and the wild animals were either killed or left as the country became more thickly settled. Mr. Thorson has ever been a hard worker, not stopping on account of bad weather, which is now felt by the presence of rheumatism. His place is neat and orderly in appearance, supplied with all modern machinery, and everything about the farm denotes the industrious and progressive spirit of the owner. Possessing the esteem and respect of the entire community, he may well be ranked among the honest and representative Norwegian citizens of Waupaca county. Politically, he supports the Republican party, and has held the office of pathmaster; in religious belief he is a Lutheran, a member of the Church at Iola.

FRANK ADELBERT SOUTHWICK, M. D. The physician occupies one of the most responsible, as well as confidential, relations in our social existence. To him are entrusted our innermost secrets, as well as the lives and welfare of our dearest friends. To worthy and acceptably fill such a position is one of the most difficult tasks ever imposed on man, yet such a task we find successfully assumed by Dr. F. A. Southwick, the well-known successful practitioner of Stevens Point, Portage county, Wisconsin.

Our subject is a native of New Hampshire, born in Groton, Grafton county, May 14, 1858, a son of Isaac D. and Laura (Annis) Southwick, both of New Hampshire nativity, born in Rumney and Orford, respectively. Nathaniel Southwick, great-grandfather of the Doctor, was of English descent, and was a resident of Danvers, Mass.; his son Amos (grandfather of Dr. Southwick) moved from Weare, N. H., to Rumney, same State, when Isaac D. Southwick (father of our subject) was nine years old. The family of Annis were of Scotch extraction, and Laura (Annis) Southwick, mother of our subject, was a daughter of John and Nancy (Pitt) Annis. Isaac D. Southwick was a carpenter by trade, which he followed until he was thirty-six years of age, part of the time in Philadelphia, and then returned to New Hampshire, where during the later years of his life he was engaged in agricultural pursuits. The father died April 4, 1879, aged seventy-two years, the mother on February 12, 1878, aged sixty-two.

The subject proper of these lines received a liberal education at Kimball Union Academy, Meriden, N. H., graduating therefrom when eighteen years old, and then commenced the study of medicine in the Medical Department of Dartmouth College, which institution he attended one year, after which he spent two years at Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine, graduating from the medical department of same in September, 1881, after which he commenced the practice of his profession in Buxton, Maine. Here he remained till November 27, 1889, when he removed to Stevens Point, and at once renewed his practice with every prospect of a bright and successful future before him. In 1891-92 he took a course of study at the Post-graduate School in New York, becoming eminently qualified by both study and experience to take a leading position among the eminent physicians of the State, which his wide clientele and unqualified success pronounce he has already attained.

In September, 1883, Dr. Southwick was married, at Salisbury, N. H., to Miss Mattie L. Sawyer, daughter of Nathaniel and Lucy (Wood) Sawyer, who were born in Salisbury and Lebanon respectively, and three children have come to brighten their home: Margaret, born October 14, 1884; Katherine, born January 9, 1886, and Louise, born December 30, 1894. Socially, the Doctor is a Mason, and a member of the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the United Order of American Mechanics; in religious faith he and his wife are Presbyterians. While a student at Bowdoin College, Dr. Southwick enjoyed not only the acquaintance but also the genuine friendship of the celebrated Dr. William Warren Greene, professor of surgery in that institution. Their personal intercourse was of a more intimate nature than is customary between professors and students, and during eight months of two successive years our subject acted as assistant to Surgeon Greene, and frequently accompanied him on occasions of capital operations in various parts of the New England States. Dr. Greene died while on his way home from attending the International Medical Congress held at London, England, August 8, 1881, and was buried at sea.

GEORGE MARCHANT, whose long and well-spent life has gained him the high regard of all with whom he has been brought in contact, was born at Silver Hill, County of Sussex, England, December 15, 1831, and is a son of Richard and Jane Marchant. His father, who was in somewhat limited circumstances, supported his family of eleven children by gardening. George attended the free schools of his native country, and when quite young he learned the value of money and began to save what he could. For some time he drove a team, and, laying up his earnings, at the age of eighteen years he had almost enough to bring him to America. He had heard much of the privileges and advantages afforded young men in the land of the free, and resolved to try his fortune on this side of the Atlantic; so in June, 1849, he took passage at London on the sailing vessel "Laurie," which, after a voyage of seven weeks and four days, reached the harbor of Quebec. A number of the passengers on the "Laurie" were en route for Madison county, N. Y., and thither our subject bent his steps, reaching his destination with but thirty English shillings in his pocket.

The first money which Mr. Marchant earned in America was seventy-five cents, received for a half-day's labor in helping to raise a house. He had no experience as a farmer, but at length obtained a position as a farm hand with Horatio Pope, and so faithful was he to his duties that he was retained in Mr. Pope's employ for two and a half years. Out of his earnings for four and a half years he saved almost $500, and in the fall of 1853, with that capital, he came to the West in search of a favorable location. In November he arrived in Lind township, Waupaca county, having accompanied the family of Stephen Harrison, and during the succeeding winter he purchased eighty acres of land in Section 30, Lind township, all in its primitive condition. A log cabin had been started, and he completed the house in course of construction; then turned his attention to the development of the land, raising the first crops grown in this locality. For a time he worked in the woods and on the river, but did not locate permanently upon his farm until his marriage, in 1857, in Lind township, to Miss Ann Harrison, daughter of Stephen and Ann Harrison. She was born at Silver Hill, September 13, 1834, and was one of the family with which Mr. Marchant came to the West. To this worthy couple have been born four children: Charles A., who operates the old home farm; Mary, wife of George Faulks, of Lind township; and Jane and Katie.

Mr. and Mrs. Marchant have always lived on their present farm, and Mr. Marchant has since devoted his energies to the raising of hops and cereals adapted to this climate. He now owns 210 acres of rich land in his present farm, also twenty acres in Waushara county, and the improvements upon his place are monuments to his perseverance and enterprise. He has made of his property one of the valuable farms of the county, and by his untiring labor which has overcome all obstacles, his sagacity and capable management, he has won his place among the substantial citizens of the county. He has always been a lover of fine horses, and keeps on hand several head of fine stock. On questions of national importance, Mr. Marchant is a stalwart Democrat, but at local elections, when no issue is involved, he votes independently. He has never been an aspirant for office, preferring to give his entire attention to his business interests. His dealings have been characterized by straightforward and honorable methods, and it is said of him that his word is as good as his bond. He is charitable and benevolent, and even through the days when his own capital was very limited he would send money home to his mother and sisters in England. He has provided his children with good advantages, both educational and otherwise, and his greatest happiness comes from promoting the comfort and welfare of his family.

E P. SCHEIBE, who is connected with the Marshfield Brewing Company as manager, has always resided in Wisconsin. He was born in Manitowoc, September 1, 1861, and comes of a sturdy and worthy German family, his father being Christian Scheibe, who was born in Germany in 1824, while his mother, who bore the maiden name of Josephine Goetzler, was also a native of that country. Having crossed the briny deep to the United States, he came to Wisconsin, and for a time resided in the city of Manitowoc. In 1867 he removed to Centerville, Manitowoc county, where he conducted a brewery until 1889, when the plant was destroyed by fire. In the family are six children: Emil, Emma, Adolph, Richard, Gustav and Amelia.

Our subject secured his education in the high school of his native city, and at the age of fifteen entered his father's brewery to learn the trade, at which he served a regular three-years' apprenticeship. He then became bookkeeper in the brewery, and held that position eight years, thus continuing with his father as an employe eleven years, on the expiration of which time he came to Marshfield, and in the fall of 1889 began the erection of a brewery in partnership with Albert Schneider, conducting it in connection with that gentleman until February 20, 1893, when the Marshfield Brewing Company was organized with a capital stock of $65,000. Mr. Scheibe has since been its manager, and the success of the concern is largely due to the able administration of its affairs by him.

In 1883 Mr. Scheibe married Miss Minnie Schutte, who is a native of Wisconsin, and they have four children: Erwin, Ella, Hugo and Oscar. Mrs. Scheibe's parents were both natives of Germany, but are now living on a farm in Sheboygan county, this State. Mr. and Mrs. Scheibe attend the Lutheran Church, and he is a member of the Knights of Honor and the Sons of Hermann. An active, energetic business man, all that he has having been acquired through his own efforts, to-day he is the possessor of a comfortable competence. He is recognized as one of the leaders of the Democratic party in Wood county, taking quite an active interest in political affairs and doing all in his power to promote the growth and insure the success of his party. His fellow townsmen, appreciating his worth and ability have frequently called him to public office, and for three years he served as school director, while, in 1889, he was elected to the State Legislature from the First District of Manitowoc county, Wis., and at this writing he is serving as alderman of the First ward of Marshfield. His fidelity to his duties of citizenship, and his faithfulness in public office, have won him the commendation of friends of all shades of politics throughout the community.

MICHAEL STEINMETZ. It is not the statesman on the lecture platform or those occupying seats in the legislative halls that make the nation but their supporters at home—the enterprising, progressive business men who promote the public welfare and add to the material and intellectual prosperity of the communities with which they are connected. Each community has its representatives of this class, and among them in Marshfield is numbered Mr. Steinmetz.

He was born in the town of Addison, Washington Co., Wis., January 11, 1852. His grandfather, Matthew Steinmetz, was born in Germany, in 1797, and worked as a common laborer to support his family, consisting of wife and seven children. The eldest child, Henry, father of our subject, was born in Luxumburg, Germany, in 1820, and was the first of the family to come to America, the date of his emigration being 1845. In 1860 the other members of the family crossed the Atlantic, and settled on a farm in Washington county, Wis., where the father died in 1890, the mother in 1891. Henry Steinmetz learned the blacksmith's trade in his native land, and followed that pursuit in this country until his marriage, which was celebrated in 1847, the lady of his choice being Mary Sekman, who was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1824. They became the parents of nine children: Henry, Michael, Theodore, Angeline, Mary, Maggie, Katie, Annie and Lizzie. Upon his marriage the father turned his attention to agricultural pursuits and cleared and improved a farm of 210 acres in Washington county, Wis., where he resided until 1891, since which time he has been a resident of Marshfield.

Thus, from an honorable and respected family is Michael Steinmetz sprung. To his father he gave the benefit of his services until nineteen years of age, working in the fields until after the autumn crops were gathered, when he would enter the common schools and pursue his studies up to the opening of spring, when he would be again found at the plow. On leaving home he took up carpentering, and after working as an employe for four years, he, at the age of twenty-three, began contracting and building, which he followed until twenty-eight years of age, spending two years of that time in St. Paul, Minn. His residence in Marshfield dates from 1879, at which time he opened a hotel and saloon in that place, where the "Thomas House" now stands, conducting it for five years, when he sold out. During the succeeding two and a half years he was engaged in dealing in staves, and his next venture was as proprietor of a grocery store, which he conducted alone for five months. Forming a partnership, he then established a general store, but after ten months bought out his partner, and has since been sole proprietor of one of the leading mercantile establishments in the city. In 1892 he erected his present fine store building, a two-story brick structure, 44 x 70 feet, which is fitted up with a full line of general merchandise. He enjoys a liberal and constantly increasing trade, and has won a success that is the just reward of industry, perseverance and honorable dealing. Other business interests have claimed the time and attention of Mr. Steinmetz: is one of the stockholders in a creamery and brewery, and is a director in the German-

American National Bank. He is also president of the Marshfield Brewing Company, and owns a fine farm conveniently and pleasantly located a half mile from the city.

On November 28, 1879, Mr. Steinmetz was married to Miss Anna Doll, a native of Washington county, Wis., and a daughter of Henry and Gertrude (Kaiser) Doll, who were both born in Kellon, Germany. They came to America in 1848, settling upon a farm in Washington county, where they lived until 1883, the date of their removal to Marshfield. Their children, five in number, are Fred, Maggie, Mary, Anna and Lizzie. Eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Steinmetz: Theodore A., Eugene J., Frances R., Helen M., Elizabeth E., Fenjolia M., Fred W., and four who died in infancy. Mr. Steinmetz holds membership in the Catholic Church, and has been honored with public office, his fellow townsmen appreciating his worth and ability. For ten years he has served as alderman, and is now president of the city board. His devotion to public interests has long been known and recognized, and the welfare of the community is largely due to his earnest efforts in its behalf. At the time of his marriage, Mr. Steinmetz had managed to save $600, and the remainder of his property he has since accumulated. Steadily has he worked his way upward, and through the legitimate channels of business, has secured a success which numbers him among the leading and representative men of his adopted county.

FRED P. AND JACOB SIPHER, JR. Fred P. Sipher was born May 12, 1833, in Herkimer county, N. Y. The parents of Fred P. and Jacob Sipher, Jacob and Catharine (Windecker) Sipher, had six children, as follows: John, who died in Cattaraugus county, N. Y.; Levi, who died in the army near Nashville, Tenn.; Moses, who resides in Monmouth, Ill.; Mary, who married Elias Hayes, and died in Montgomery county, N. Y.; Jacob, who died in Lind township, Waupaca Co., Wis., and Fred P., the two last named being the subjects of this sketch. Jacob

Sipher, Sr., who was a carpenter and joiner by trade, died in 1834, leaving a widow and six children, but no property, as he was a comparatively poor man. His widow kept the family together, aiding in their support by spinning, weaving, etc., and died in 1850, in Herkimer county, N. Y. Only two of this family, both of them sons, came to Wisconsin.

Fred P. Sipher had but a limited education, no schooling at all, and when but a boy went to work among the farmers. In the fall of 1852 he left Dunkirk, N. Y., for the West, coming by rail, by water and by stage to where an acquaintance lived, in the prairie country near Oshkosh, Winnebago county. Here he found work at threshing, and later in the pine woods at ten dollars a month, which at that time seemed to him big wages. On August 23, 1854, in the township of Utica, Winnebago Co., Wis., Fred P. Sipher was united in marriage with Lucy E. Skinner, who was born in Vermont, and by her he had the following named children: Dora M., now Mrs. Dan Brooks, of Pierce county, Neb.; Olive, who died at the age of three years and three months; Alva, now Mrs. Aaron Dewey, of Lind township, Waupaca Co., Wis.; and Levi and Eli, twins (Levi resides in Royalton, Waupaca Co., Wis., and Eli is a carpenter in Chamberlain, South Dakota). After his marriage Mr. Sipher located a farm in Winnebago county. On March 19, 1864, he enlisted at Oshkosh in Company D, Eighth Wis. V. I. The first active engagement which he saw was at Guntown, Miss.; then followed an expedition in Arkansas and in Missouri to St. Louis, in which States he was doing guard and skirmish duty. Thence he went to Nashville, and later to winter quarters at East Fork, Tenn. He was at Mobile, Ala., and after the fall of Spanish Fort, was en route to Montgomery, Ala., at the time of the receipt of the news of Lincoln's death. After the closing of the war his company was at Uniontown, Ala., guarding a railroad. He was mustered out at Demopolis, Ala., September 6, 1865, and received his final discharge at Madison, Wis., September 16, 1865. In 1867 Mr. Sipher removed to Lind township, Waupaca county, where he has since lived. His wife died on November 19, 1878, and was buried in the township of Utica, Winnebago Co., Wisconsin.

Jacob Sipher (Jr.), brother of Fred P., was born March 27, 1828, in Herkimer county, N. Y., and was a carpenter, though he never served a regular apprenticeship at the trade. He married Eliza M. Snyder in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., and by her had three children: William, Ellen, and Emma (now Mrs. M. Aman, and living in Waupaca county, Wis.). In 1855 Jacob Sipher came to Wisconsin to look about. He was first in Winnebago county, afterward located at Parfreyville, in Dayton township, Waupaca county, and later removed to Section 11, Lind township, same county, where he afterward lived to the time of his decease, and where his first wife died. On June 11, 1873, in Weyauwega, Waupaca county, he again married, taking as his second wife Elizabeth B. Harvey, by whom he had the following named children: Ralph and Mary, who both died in infancy, and Myrtle L., living at home. At the time of the war Jacob Sipher served for one year in Company F, Forty-fourth Wis. V. I. As soon as the war closed he began to fail in health, and was never robust afterward. He gradually sank away, dying May 31, 1878, and was buried in Weyauwega. He was a Democrat in politics.

Mrs. Jacob Sipher was born in New York September 21, 1842, and is a daughter of Marcus and Ann (Mackey) Harvey, who came to Wisconsin in September, 1855, locating at Weyauwega, Waupaca county. They were the parents of the following children: Sarah J., who married W. R. Smith, now of Lind township, Waupaca county; Newton W., of Knowlton, Marathon county; Susan, who married, and who died in Weyauwega; Ann, who died young; Elizabeth, who married Jacob Sipher; Eleazer L., deceased; Thomas, of Auroraville, Wauwasha county; and Marcus E., of Lind township.

In April, 1881, in Lind township, Waupaca Co., Wis., Fred P. Sipher again married, taking to wife the widow of his brother Jacob, deceased. She had remained on the home place. To this union, on April 20, 1889, was born a son, Fred H., who is at home with his parents. Fred P. Sipher is a member of Andrew Chambers Post No. 180, G. A. R., in Weyauwega, Waupaca county. He is a staunch Republican, and a good neighbor, but no office-seeker. Mr. and Mrs. Sipher are respected people, have a comfortable home, and have friends among all their neighbors.

JOHAN W. MORGAN. In every active and progressive community there are men whose force of character, and whose interest in the public welfare, make them natural leaders. They move in larger circles than the rank and file of men, and their suggestions and official conduct must bear the stamp of public approval, else they are quickly retired to the ranks again by the people, whose voice in this land is supreme. Mr. Morgan, well-known as the owner of the "Spring Brook Farm," one-half mile south of Embarrass Village, in the township of Matteson, Waupaca county, belongs to that favored social element of which the public has expressed its approval. He enjoys to an eminent degree the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens. This is amply shown by the fact that for ten continuous years—from 1877 to 1887—he has served his township as chairman, and that in 1894 he was again elected to that position. The greater part of the interim Mr. Morgan spent as a government farmer on the Indian reservation, Lac Court Oreilles. Mr. Morgan is also a pioneer. In 1857 he came when a boy with his father to Matteson township, Waupaca county, and settled on wild government land, which he helped to open up.

Our subject is the son of William D. and Mary A. (Kirkpatrick) Morgan, and was born in Richland county, Ohio, in 1843. William D. Morgan was a Virginian by birth, while his wife was born and reared in Pennsylvania, and they were married in Ohio, in 1848 removing to Miami county, Ind. In 1854 they migrated to Wisconsin, first opening up a farm in Omro township, Winnebago county. Two years later they removed to Belle Plaine township, Shawano county, coming by boat on the Wolf and Embarrass rivers, and twelve months later, in 1857, the family made a permanent settlement in Matteson township, Waupaca county, where Mr. Morgan died in 1889, his wife surviving until 1894. William D. Morgan was a Democrat of the Southern type. He served as supervisor in Matteson township, and was widely respected. His family consisted of David A., now residing at Antigo, Wis.; John W.; Rachel J., who died in 1877, and H. D., of Matteson township.

John W. Morgan in his boyhood attended the schools of Omro township (Winnebago county) and Matteson. He aided his father in opening up the farm, and in 1860, at the age of seventeen years, he bought a timber tract in the woods, and now owns a good farm of 200 acres, one-half of which is cleared and under cultivation. Mr. Morgan enlisted, September 11, 1862, at Oshkosh, in Company C, Twenty-first Wis. V. I., for three years or during the war. The regiment proceeded to Covington, Ky., and thence to Louisville. It was engaged in the sanguinary struggle at Perryville, Ky., October 8, 1862, where Private Morgan fell severely wounded, in consequence of which he was removed to the Louisville hospital, and there honorably discharged from service, January 30, 1863. In February, 1863, Mr. Morgan re-enlisted, at St. Louis, in the Mississippi Marine Brigade, for three years or during the war. He participated in the protracted siege of Vicksburg, and was honorably discharged at that city, in February, 1865. Returning to Matteson township, he has since made that his home, except during the four years—1889 to 1893—when he was employed by the government as a farmer on the Indian reservation in Sawyer county.

In 1876 Mr. Morgan began the study of law, and from that time until 1889 devoted a considerable part of his time to the practice of that profession in Waupaca county, principally in justice courts. Though not admitted to the bar to practice in courts of record, he acquired in his vicinity a reputation second hardly to any attorney in his county for legal learning, and he is still often consulted by his neighbors on subjects relating to legal usage. In 1892 Mr. Morgan commenced the breeding of fine Shropshire sheep on his celebrated "Spring Brook Farm," in Matteson township, situated one-half mile south of Embarrass. His first herd consisted of several head of the pure-bred imported Shropshire stock, everywhere prized both for the mutton and wool—the latter, which is of medium length and fine quality, commanding at present the highest price in the market, and averaging from twelve to fifteen pounds to the fleece. These sheep at maturity weigh from 200 to 300 pounds, and are undoubtedly the best for mutton raised or bred in the State of Wisconsin. The herd has since been largely increased, and kept specially for sale for breeding purposes, and there is no doubt that the introduction of this fine grade of sheep into this part of Wisconsin will improve the quality of sheep throughout the State, and keep it up to the standard. Mr. Morgan makes a specialty of sheep, but he also pays considerable attention to raising and breeding pure-bred Jersey cattle and Clydesdale horses. In fact, all his stock is thorough-bred and valuable, even the poultry—Spangled Hamburg and Buff Cochins fowls—and for sale at "Spring Brook Farm" at "live and let live" prices, for Mr. Morgan has acquired his popularity as much by his fairness and honesty as by his ability and enterprise.

Mr. Morgan was married, in Matteson township, in 1866, to Miss Lana Ewer, a native of Washington county, Wis., and daughter of Esben and Lucy (Matteson) Ewer, natives of New York, and early Wisconsin pioneers. To Mr. and Mrs. Morgan six children were born: Roswell J., who is married, and now resides at Antigo; Nora, a teacher, who taught one year in Waupaca county, and for five years in the Indian reservation; Mattie, Maggie, Gracie, and Rill, the youngest, who was born on the Indian reservation. Mr. Morgan is an earnest Republican. He is a member of J. B. Wyman Post, No. 32, G. A. R., and was one of the promoters of the Waupaca County Institute. He is one of the best informed and most progressive citizens of Waupaca county, one who is substantially interested in her welfare, and many long years of residence within her borders have thoroughly familiarized him with her needs.

ORIN D. SANDERS is one of the proprietors of the Baldwin Creamery Co., Weyauwega, the largest manufacturers of butter and cheese in Waupaca county, and he is actively engaged in promoting the business of that most thriving industry. It has already proved a valuable accession to the dairy interests of the county, though of comparatively recent origin.

Mr. Sanders is a native of Waupaca county, born in Lind township in 1859, and is the son of P. P. and Elizabeth (Smith) Sanders, the former of whom about the year 1852 came to Lind township, Waupaca county, from New York State, settling in the woods. Partially clearing the place, he sold it, and bought another. Later he moved to Brandon, Fond du Lac county, and later still to Ripon. In 1873 he engaged in the meat-market business in Weyauwega, and for ten years conducted same profitably; then went to Ashland, Wis., and engaged in the same business. His next change of location was to Florida, thence to the State of Washington. He has since retired, and now lives at the residence of his son, Orin D. His two children are Milton and Orin D. Milton owns a grocery and meat business at Ashland, Wis., which he started in 1882, and has since continuously conducted, save for about two years, from 1891 to 1893, which he spent at Weyauwega.

Orin D. Sanders received a common-school education in the district schools of Lind and Weyauwega townships, and from the age of sixteen until he was twenty-four assisted his father in the meat business. He remained with him eight years, and then, in 1883, settled on a farm in Weyauwega township where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1892, when he became interested in the Baldwin Creamery Co., and has since devoted his attention thereto, by his efforts contributing in no small degree to its success. He was married, in Weyauwega, to Miss Elizabeth (Libbie) Wagner, who was born in that town, daughter of Peter and Catherine Wagner, natives of Germany who emigrated to America and settled in Lind township, Waupaca Co., Wis., where they still reside. Mr. Sanders has for four years served as town clerk at Weyauwega. His political preferences are with the Prohibition party, and his religious connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Baldwin Creamery Co. succeeded to the property of the cheese factory, which was 22 x 30 feet in size, and was erected in 1888. The creamery business was established in 1892, and a two-story building, 24 x 31, was added to the old structure, additions also being made to the boiler room, and expensive improved machinery for gathering cream added. Besides the members of the firm six men find employment here. The company runs four wagons, and the output for the season is about one hundred and sixty thousand pounds of butter, and fifty thousand pounds of cheese.

OLIVER YORTON, a prominent retired farmer of Amherst, and a pioneer of Portage county, was born in Lenox township, near the village of Clockville, Madison Co., N. Y., September 7, 1827, son of Paul and Hannah (Marcal) Yorton, both born in New York State, of German ancestry, who were early settlers in this country; Oliver Yorton's grandfather fought in the Revolutionary war, and his father in the war of 1812. Paul Yorton and his wife both died in the State of New York, the parents of eleven children, of whom eight are now living, namely: Henry, in Ashland, Wis.; Oliver, the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, wife of Louis Buyea, residing in Michigan; Marion, widow of Henry Benson, her home being in the town of Stockton, Portage county; Reuben, in Stevens Point, same county; Paul, in Stockton; Hannah, wife of William Carey, of Michigan; and William, residing in Clarksville, New York.

The boyhood days of Oliver Yorton were spent upon the homestead farm, and in the old log schoolhouse, with its big fireplace, he received a limited education when the duties of farm work would permit. He left his native town in 1848, and for about a year worked in a sawmill in Flint, Mich., then returned to Clarksville and worked there for three years in a gristmill. In 1853 he came to Wisconsin and located at Stevens Point, where he was engaged in lumbering and running the river. At Stevens Point, January 28, 1857, Oliver Yorton was united in marriage with Miss Marcia Spaulding, and five children have been born to them, namely: Ida, born February 5, 1858, married September 29, 1880, to David Iverson, and died October 16, 1885; Frank A., born October 15, 1859, residing at home with his parents; Florence, born June 11, 1862, married to Charles W. Anderson December 25, 1879, and died December 21, 1882; Effie, born February 22, 1861, married to George Anthony, and residing in the village of Amherst; and James O., born July 16, 1879, deceased in infancy. Mrs. Yorton was born in Essex county, N. Y., daughter of Safford and Adeline (Wells) Spaulding.

About 1858 Mr. Yorton moved to Stockton, Portage county, where he followed farming about fourteen years. In 1873 he removed to the town of Amherst, same county, and continued actively engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1889, when he removed to the village of Amherst, where he lives a quiet, retired life, though still retaining and conducting the farm. Mr. Yorton served four terms as town treasurer of Stockton, and has been supervisor and assessor of the town of Amherst. He is a member of Amherst Lodge No. 274, I. O. O. F., and in political views is a Republican. The family attend the Methodist Church. Mr. Yorton is one of the progressive citizens of Amherst, taking an active part in measures tending to the advancement of the town or of the county generally, and he and his family are held in high esteem.

LUCIUS FOSTER. The study of biography is a profitable as well as an interesting one, especially if we would heed the obvious lessons contained therein. This is particularly true of the record of a self-made man whose perseverance, diligence and good management have brought him success and enabled him to rise from an humble position to one of affluence. In the career of Mr. Foster we see pictured forth those traits of character which bring prosperity, and read in his history the struggles and triumphs of one who was early thrown upon his own resources and steadily worked his way upward.

He was born in the town of Antwerp, Jefferson Co., N. Y., November 22, 1822, and belongs to a family that has been connected with this country since Colonial days. When the United States was still in the possession of Great Britain three brothers by the name of Foster crossed the Atlantic from England and located in Connecticut. One of these, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a hero of the Revolution. He married and had two sons—Hoptestall and John—and three daughters, one of whom became the wife of Dr. Hyde, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The first son, the grandfather of Lucius Foster, was born in Connecticut, became a tailor by trade, and in the Nutmeg State both he and his wife spent their entire lives. Their son, Hoptestall, was born in Connecticut, July 27, 1783, and there married, in February, 1808, Laura Osborn, a native of that State, born November 12, 1786. Soon after he removed with his young wife to Jefferson county, N. Y., where he cleared three farms. During his residence there his wife was called to the home beyond, her death occurring in 1838. Five children had been born of that marriage, but the only daughter, Eliza, died at the age of four years. The four sons are Harvey, Volney, Hoptestall E. and Lucius. For his second wife he wedded Mrs. Harris. In 1839 he emigrated with his family to Jefferson county, Wis., and locating upon a tract of wild land transformed it into a fine farm. He erected a good home, and was a tireless worker, making of his place one of the most valuable farm properties in that section of the State. His life which was well spent won him the respect of all, and his death, which occurred in 1868, was deeply mourned by those who knew him.

Lucius Foster made his home with his parents until seventeen years of age, although in the meantime he worked for others to a limited extent, earning his livelihood by farm labor. His intellectual training was obtained in the common schools, and few advantages came to him in his earlier years. He came to the West with the family, and in 1849 located in Dodge county, Wis., where he was employed two years, within which time he saved enough money to buy a team, after which he engaged in teaming. Living frugally and working earnestly, he at length secured sufficient capital to enable him to embark in the restaurant business, and he also opened a small store in Fox Lake, Wis. In the meantime he chose as a companion and helpmeet on life's journey Miss Margaret Richards, who was born in Great Bend, Penn., in 1831. Their wedding was celebrated July 3, 1850, and they have two sons, Charles and Orr, both now married, and who are connected with their father in business, carrying on the "Fremont House," which is the leading hotel in Marshfield. They purchased this fine property in October, 1890, and in its management have been very successful, receiving a large patronage, which is well deserved, for the hotel is conducted in first-class style.

While Lucius Foster was residing in Fox Lake he soon added to his restaurant business, and became the proprietor of a general mercantile establishment which he conducted fourteen years, when, selling out, he removed to Melrose, Wis., on the Black river, and there purchased a hotel, conducting same for nine years. His next home was in Sparta, Monroe county, where for two years he carried on a farm, when he traded his land for a stock of groceries, and for four years carried on a grocery store in Sparta. On the expiration of that period he traded his store for a farm in Bush prairie, Monroe county, devoting his energies to its cultivation some twelve years, and then rented the "Eau Claire House," in Eau Claire, Wis., which he conducted four years. His next removal took him again to Dodge county, where he carried on farming until coming to Marshfield. He is well known to the traveling public, and his genial, pleasant manner, which springs from a true interest in his fellow men wins him many friends. In politics he is a Democrat, and has several times been honored with public office. Mr. Foster is a man of indefatigable energy and resolute purpose, and though he has met with reverses in life he has overcome these by persistence, and is now numbered among the substantial citizens of Marshfield.

GEORGE W. DURRANT was born in Massachusetts February 17, 1851, and is a son of Thomas and Margaret (Day) Durrant. Thomas Durrant was born in England in 1811, and there learned the trade of shoemaker. When a boy of twenty years he came to Prince Edward Island. Afterward he lived for seventeen years in Nova Scotia, where, in 1843, he married Margaret Day, who was born in that Province. Mr. and Mrs. Durrant became the parents of the following children: William, who was a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion, being a member of the Fourteenth Wis. V. I., and died in Minnesota soon after the war; Thomas, also a Union soldier in the war, now a farmer of Lanark township, Portage Co., Wis.; Charles, killed in the army at Whitewater Bridge, Mo.; James and John, of Farmington, Waupaca county; George W., subject of this sketch; Willard, of Lind township, Waupaca county; Mary, who was the wife of Royal Ballard, and died in North Dakota; and Benjamin, a farmer.

In 1848 Thomas Durrant removed to Boston, Mass., where he remained till the spring of 1855. He had followed his trade of shoemaker and saved some money; and, as the West at that time offered better chances for a home to a man of his means than the Eastern States, he concluded, in May, 1855, to come to Wisconsin. The journey was made partly by rail, partly by water, and Waupaca county was his destination; there were no railroads at that time into this part of Wisconsin, so he came from Oshkosh to Gill's Landing by boat, and then by wheeled conveyance to the town of Waupaca, Waupaca county, where his first settlement was made. He bought land in Section 4 of that township, made it his home for six years, sold it out to a Mr. Plowman, and removed to Hortonville, Outagamie county, where he remained one year, going then to Farmington. Afterward he bought 120 acres in Lanark township, Portage county, and again went to farming. After about half a dozen years there he bought a farm in Section 3, Lind township, Waupaca county, where but few and rude improvements had been made. Here he made his home till his death which occurred on this farm July 29, 1884; his wife died in March, 1885; each was seventy-five years of age, at the time of death, and they were both buried in Waupaca Cemetery. Mr. Durrant added to the value of his farm in many ways, and when he died the improvements had practically all been made. He was greatly handicapped as the result of many unfortunate happenings, but none affected him so much physically as the loss of his left leg at the knee. This leg was first wounded by a scythe, then was in some way attached, and later was broken by being caught under the stringer of a bridge, which gave way while he was crossing with a loaded team. Politically he was a Republican, though no office-seeker, and he took little or no interest in politics.

George W. Durrant was but a child when his parents came to Wisconsin. He received a common-school education such as the times afforded, was reared on the farm, and, except for the term of ten winters has been on the farm. On May 14, 1874, in Waupaca, Waupaca county, he was united in marriage with Miss Catharine McCunn, who was born January 21, 1857, in Glasgow, Scotland, and they have had children as follows: William, who died at the age of four years; Frank T., Winnie and Jeanette, all at home; and, since this was written, a little son, Kirkwood G., born April 7, 1895. Mrs. Durrant was reared from the age of ten years in Farmington township, Waupaca county, her parents, James and Janet (Niven) McCunn, having come to the United States May 19, 1867. After his marriage George W. Durrant located in Lind township, Waupaca county, remained one winter, then moved to Waupaca, and then to Scandinavia township, both in Waupaca county, and in 1884 came to the "home farm" in Lind township, in the same county, where he yet lives, having 120 acres in Lind township and forty in Waushara county. He follows general farming and stock raising, is one of Lind's good farmers, well-to-do, and a citizen well known and of good repute. Politically he is a Republican, takes some interest in political matters, and has held public offices in the township.

THOMAS G. BACON, an honored veteran of the Civil war, and a worthy representative of the agricultural and official interests of Belmont township, Portage county, was born March 9, 1821, in the town of Digby, Nova Scotia. His parents were Thomas and Rachel (Marshall) Bacon, respectable farming people in comfortable circumstances. In March, 1847, he was struck by a falling tree, and died four hours later; his wife long survived him, reaching the advanced age of eighty years.

The subject proper of this sketch is the second son and third child in a family numbering five sons and four daughters. He attended the subscription schools, and at the age of fourteen he left home, going to New York City with a carpenter and contractor, for whom he worked fifteen months, when his employer failed. He then returned to his native land and worked at his trade for a short time, after which he removed to Maine, following carpentering in the neighborhood of Eastport and Lubeck, that State. When a young man Mr. Bacon was married in Nova Scotia to Sarah Ropp, a native of that country, who bore him three children: Mary, and two who died in infancy. His second marriage was celebrated in Hodgdon, Maine, the lady of his choice being Martha A. Towne, who was born March 3, 1834, a daughter of Howard P. and Sarah A. (Foster) Towne. Together they traveled life's journey for many years, but were separated by death November 5, 1881, the wife being called to her final rest. The children of that marriage were John B., who died at the age of five years; James D., a resident farmer of Belmont township; Sarah, wife of James H. Rice, of the same township; Edward, who died at the age of twenty-nine years; Laura A., at home; Winfield, who died at the age of twenty-three years; Sylvester, at home; Hattie, wife of William Russell, of Buena Vista township, Portage county; Eva and Ralph.

Mr. Bacon dates his arrival in Wisconsin from 1854, at which time, with his family, he accompanied his brother-in-law, David Towne, to Chicago, and went to Mendota, Ill., where he worked at the carpenter's trade for his wife's uncle. On leaving that place he proceeded to Green Bay, Wis., but after three days there continued on his way to Menasha, thence to Oshkosh, went up the Wolf river to Gill's Landing, and with a team and lumber wagon to Waupaca, where he arrived July 8, 1854. He spent one winter and two summers in that place, working at his trade, and in the fall of 1855 came to Belmont township, Portage county, with his wife's father and brother. He was one of the pioneers of this locality, and is familiar with its history from that early day. He located in Section 29, Belmont township, and afterward removed to Section 35, but though he lived on a farm he followed carpentering, and in this way has done much for the development of that locality.

On December 16, 1861, in Plover, Wis., Mr. Bacon joined the "boys in blue" by enlisting in Company E, Eighteenth Regiment, Wis. V. I., went to Milwaukee, and thence to Pittsburg Landing, where occurred the first engagement in which he participated. He was in the fight all day Sunday until about five o'clock in the evening when he was taken prisoner, sent to Corinth, thence to Mobile, and up the Alabama river to a prison about twelve miles from Selma. He was afterward transferred to Montgomery and later to Macon, Ga., where he was paroled and given in charge of the Tenth Wisconsin Regiment in June, 1862. Exposure brought on illness, and he was sent home, arriving July 3, 1862, in a precarious condition. He afterward again tendered his services to the government, but on medical examination in Madison was rejected, and since his army experience he has never been the same man physically.

On questions of national importance Mr. Bacon is a stalwart Republican, but at local elections he votes for the man and not the party. He has held the office of treasurer longer than any man in his township, having served in that position eighteen years, when he retired from same, also resigning the position of school treasurer after some twenty-five or thirty years of service. He also served on the town board three years, and was justice of the peace two years, in all which offices he discharged his duties with a promptness and fidelity that is well indicated by his long retention in the position. In his social relations, he is connected with Belmont Post No. 115, G. A. R., and in his religious belief he is a Baptist, as was also his wife. He has led a busy and useful life, was a loyal soldier, a trusted official, and is a valued and respected citizen.

MRS. HATTIE (PORTER) WHIPPLE, one of the most highly esteemed residents of Lanark township, Portage county, is a native of Wisconsin, born January 29, 1848, in Racine county, daughter of John and Ann (Shey) Porter.

John Porter was born April 17, 1829, in the State of Ohio, where he received a good education, and was reared to farm life. He came to Wisconsin, first locating in Milwaukee, and was married in that city, to Miss Ann Shey, who was born June 10, 1835, in County Waterford, Ireland. In 1845, in company with her mother and three brothers—Patrick, Thomas and John—she came to the United States, landing in New York City, whence they came westward, locating in Chicago, Ill., where the mother died of ship fever. After remaining in that city four years, Ann Shey, removed to Milwaukee, and there secured employment as domestic in the only hotel the town could boast of in that early day. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Porter took up their residence on a farm which he had purchased, twelve miles from Milwaukee, and there resided twelve years, during which time children as follows were born to them: Henry, deceased in boyhood; Mary, deceased in infancy; Lester, who enlisted in Company H, Thirtieth Wis. V. I., serving three years, and was discharged at the end of the war; George, who enlisted in 1861, when but fifteen years old, at Wautoma, Wis., in Company H, Sixteenth Wis. V. I., running away from home for that purpose, and joining the regiment at Berlin, went with them to Madison, where they were drilled until March, 1862, when they proceeded to the seat of war (he was wounded at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, taken prisoner by the Confederates, and died on the way to Libby Prison). In Racine county the following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Porter: Hattie; John; Belle; Milton and Andrew J.; Jennie, born at Neenah, Winnebago county, died in 1891; Alvord and Samuel were born at Mt. Morris, Waushara county.

During the California gold fever Mr. Porter sold his farm, and decided to seek his fortune in the Far West. He set out with his family in a "Conestoga" wagon, and joined an emigrant train, making the journey with them as far as Council Bluffs, Iowa, at which point he changed his mind and returned to Wisconsin, settling in Racine county for a short time. Removing thence to Neenah, Winnebago county, he there bought a farm on which he lived eight years, when he sold and moved to Waushara county, where he now has his home.

Mrs. Hattie (Porter) Whipple received her education at Mount Morris, Waushara county, where her father was teaching school, attending up to the age of eighteen years. She then for a few years engaged in housework, and previous to her marriage was employed for a time in the hotel at Lanark. On October 14, 1873, she was married to Ira Whipple, who was born in Erie county, N. Y., where he married, afterward moving to Illinois, and thence to Winnebago county, Wis., where he bought a farm and conducted same some eight years. He then traded this place for a tract of 200 acres in Lanark township, Portage county, where he made a permanent home and passed the remainder of his life. By his first wife he had children as follows: Annette, now of Little Butte, Wyo.; Frank, a druggist at Waupaca; Emmarette, who died August 11, 1877, when twenty-four years of age, previous to which she was engaged in missionary work among the Teontine Indians in Dakota, being located at Fort Sully, and was on her way to Wisconsin to visit her parents when taken sick at Chicago, where she died after a short illness, mourned by all who knew her. To Ira and Hattie (Porter) Whipple were born children as follows: Ada A., born October 11, 1874; Gertie M., born May 4, 1876; Sarah J., born March 1, 1878; Theron J., born December 14, 1880; Myra L., born September 7, 1882; Amy D., born July 27, 1884; Hattie R., born January 16, 1886; and Harry R., born October 8, 1888. In 1861 Ira Whipple came to the town of Lanark, and was a member of the board of supervisors of Portage county seven years; also justice of the peace for nearly eight years; postmaster at Badger, Portage county, two years and a half, and took the census of 1880.

On March 17, 1864, Ira Whipple enlisted in Company B, Thirty-eighth Wis. V. I., and received his discharge July 26, 1865. He died May 14, 1888, since when Mrs. Whipple has carried on the farm, and within eighteen months from the time of his decease had paid debts on the farm amounting to several thousand dollars, a proof indeed of her excellent business ability, which is recognized by all who know her. She is a Presbyterian in religious faith.

L M. VANNORMAN, a well-to-do farmer of Larrabee township, Waupaca county, and who was a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion, was born in 1832, in Onondaga county, N. Y., son of William R. and Elmina (Perrine) Vannorman.

William R. Vannorman was born in Massachusetts, his wife in New York. They came to Winnebago county, Wis., in 1852, and settled in Omro village, where he followed the business of butcher and grocer for twenty years or more. His death occurred in Oshkosh, Wis., in 1874, and that of his wife, who survived him four years, in Waushara county, Wis. (Mrs. Vannorman's father, John Perrine, born in New York of Holland ancestry, was in the war of 1812). They reared a family of six children, namely: L. M., the subject of this sketch; Oliver, residing in Waukesha county, Wis.; Phedyma, wife of James H. Weston, of Martelle, Jones Co., Iowa; Hattie E., wife of Francis Marion Nash, of Nashville, Vt., who enlisted at Sparta, Wis., in Company I, Seventh Wis. V. I., was discharged for disability, came home, re-enlisted in April, 1864, in the Seventh Wis. V. I., Company I, served till the close of the war, and was discharged at Madison, Wis. (in 1864, at the battle of the Wilderness, he received a gunshot wound, and was taken to the hospital at Federal Hill, Baltimore, Md.); Ransom S. enlisted in June, 1861, in Company G, Fifth Wis. V. I., was a member of the Fifth Army Corps, and was killed at the battle of Spottsylvania; and Abbie L., who was the wife of John Eldred, of Waushara county, Wis., and died in 1888.

L. M. Vannorman was reared in New York, and educated in the schools of that State. On December 25, 1851, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Caroline Daniels, who was born in Oswego county, N. Y., and by their marriage twelve children have been born, as follows: Carmy, residing in Matteson township, Waupaca county; Earl, married, and residing at Clintonville, Waupaca county; Charles, married, and residing at Whitcomb, Shawano county, Wis.; Hannah, the wife of William E. Rice, of Matteson township; Truman; Cephas A.; Ransom M., and Niles. Of this family they have buried three sons—Ransom, Carmy and Roy—and one daughter—Cornelia. Mrs. Vannorman's parents, David and Sally (Keller) Daniels, were born in New York, and came in 1859 to Waushara county, Wis., where, in 1865, Mr. Daniels enlisted in the Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., and served till the close of the war. His death occurred at Appleton, Wis., in 1881, that of his wife in 1886, also at Appleton. They had three children: George, who resides at Neillsville, Clark Co., Wis.; Mary Caroline (Mrs. Van-norman); and Cornelia, the widow of Abram Russell, who was in the One Hundred and Tenth N. Y. V. I., and was killed, in 1890, in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Mr. Vannorman came to Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., Wis., April 29, 1852, then to Omro, in the same county, remained two years, went to Waushara county, and located in the woods near Eureka, where he opened up a farm. On February 22, 1864, at Auroraville, Waushara county, he enlisted in Company I, Seventh Wis. V. I., known as the "Iron Brigade," was mustered into service at Madison, Wis., and assigned to the Fifth Army Corps, Army of the Potomac. He received a gunshot wound at the battle of the Wilderness, was two days in the field hospital, for some time in the hospital at Washington, came home on thirty days' furlough, then returned to the hospital, and in September, 1864, rejoined his regiment at Petersburg, Va. He was at Petersburg, Five Forks, Appomattox, Hatcher's Run, and at the Review at Washington, D. C., was honorably discharged at Louisville, Ky., July 3, 1865, returned to Waushara county, Wis., remaining there till 1881, when he came to Clintonville, and located in Section 13, Larrabee township, on his present farm, which was then all in the woods. Here he owns fifty-four and a half acres of land, now considerably improved. In 1885 he built a good story-and-a-half residence, 16 x 24 feet in the main part, with an L 12 x 18, and in 1887 a barn 24 x 44 feet. In politics Mr. Vannorman is a Republican, has held the office of justice of the peace three times, and has been school clerk and pathmaster. He is a member of J. B. Wyman Post No. 32, G. A. R., and has been senior vice. He has seen much of the development of this section of the county.

WESLEY MASON, a highly respected and worthy citizen of Amherst, Portage county, now retired from active life, is a native of New York State, born March 3, 1832, in Pinckney, Lewis county, a son of Jared and Margaret (Green) Mason.

Elias Mason, father of Jared, was also of New York State nativity, was a gardener by occupation, and lived near Troy. The following children were born to him: David, John, Jared (father of the subject of this sketch), Mary, Elmira, Aaron and Moses (who reside in Rensselaer county, N. Y.), Betsey (who married David Soper, now deceased, and resides in Manitowoc county, Wis.), and Marvin (a farmer in Manitowoc county). Jared Mason, a farmer by occupation, was born in Rensselaer county, N. Y., in February, 1804. He was educated in his native county, married in Lewis county, N. Y., and soon after his marriage moved to Lyme, Jefferson Co., N. Y., where he bought a farm on which he lived for twenty-five years. He then moved with his family to Cato, Manitowoc Co., Wis., where he bought from a man named Carey a 160-acre tract of wild land, on a soldier's claim, on which he made his home until his death, which occurred in September, 1880. He is buried in Cato. Jared Mason was twice married. The children by his first wife, Margaret (Green), who died when her son Wesley was only twelve years of age, were as follows: Eli, who was a private in the Sixteenth Wis. V. I., and died in hospital at New Albany, Ind. (he was unmarried); Martha, who resides in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., and was married three times—first to James Odell, the third time to a Mr. Boomer; Leonard, a retired farmer of Amherst, Portage county; Wesley, subject of this sketch; Rufus, who married Rhoda Barnard, was a private in Company C. Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., and died of smallpox in hospital at Nashville, Tenn., leaving a wife and three children—Rosie, John and Fanny; Albert, who is proprietor of a canning factory in Sycamore, Ill., and married Fanny Van Napps, by whom he had four children—Sherman, Arthur, Hattie and Virgie; and Jeannette, who married R. E. Rickaby, and resides on a farm in Marinette county, Wis. (their children are Eva, Margaret, Earl, Edwin and Leonard). For his second wife Jared Mason married Mrs. Ruth Barnard, a widow, and to their union were born two children—Isaiah, who was elected clerk of court in the fall of 1894, married Evelyn Flagg, and they reside at present near New Lisbon, Juneau Co., Wis.; Ryley, a farmer and carpenter, who resides near Antigo, Langlade Co., Wisconsin.

Our subject, as will be seen, was but a small boy when his parents moved to Jefferson county, N. Y., and here he received a good common-school education, at the same time being reared to agricultural pursuits. On December 4, 1852, he was united in marriage with Miss Ann Thumb, who was born March 11, 1835, in Johnstown, N. Y., on the banks of the Mohawk, daughter of Peter and Mary Catherine (Castleman) Thumb. After marriage the young couple commenced housekeeping in Lyme township, Jefferson Co., N. Y., where their eldest child was born, and in May, 1854, the little family, accompanied by Mr. Mason's father, came west to Wisconsin, the trip being made by steamer from Sackett's Harbor to the Niagara river; from there by stage to the Falls, by cars from there to Buffalo, and from Buffalo to Detroit on the "Mayflower," crossed the State of Michigan on the Michigan Central railroad to Chicago, and then journeyed from Chicago to Manitowoc by water. On the very first day of the "Mayflower's" voyage from Buffalo to Detroit, she took fire, the flames being with difficulty extinguished, all on board narrowly escaping a terrible death. The family settled on a farm in Cato township, where they continued to reside until a year or two after the death of Jared Mason, which occurred in September, 1880. This farm, which comprised 160 acres of wild land, the latter had purchased from a Mr. Carey on a soldier's claim, and was cleared by him and his son with much labor and assiduous care. In 1882, after disposing of his possessions in Cato township, our subject and family removed to Amherst township, Portage county, making their home on eighty acres of land which Mr. Mason had purchased, but which he afterward disposed of.

On August 11, 1862, Mr. Mason enlisted in Company K, Twenty-first Wis. V. I., Capt. C. H. Walker, and immediately went into camp at Oshkosh, whence, after drilling a short time, the regiment left, on the 11th of the following month, for the seat of war, proceeding via Cincinnati, Ohio, to Louisville, Ky. Here it was assigned to the Twenty-eighth Brigade, Fourteenth Army Corps, under command of Gen. Starkweather. The first active engagement our subject participated in was that of Perryville, Ky., October 8, 1862, where he was wounded in the groin by a spent musket ball, on account of which he was ordered to hospital, but refused to go, although he was suffering acute pain, preferring to remain with his regiment until it reached Nolensville, Tenn., where, owing to his wound, which was aggravated by the exposure to storm and cold he underwent, and lack of proper clothing, tents, etc., he was compelled to remain, his regiment in the meantime continuing its march to Stone River, participating in the battle fought there from December 31, 1862, to January 2, 1863. At Nolensville Mr. Mason and several other Federal soldiers were surprised and made prisoners by a party of Confederates, a detachment of Gen. Wheeler's cavalry; but our subject was released on parole and allowed to proceed to Nashville, Tenn., where, having rejoined his regiment, he remained until January 20, 1863, thence moved to Camp Chase, Ohio, and from there in the following June proceeded to Murfreesboro. Soon afterward the regiment took active part in the battle of Chickamauga, after which it marched to Chattanooga, and while there witnessed the battle of Lookout Mountain, although not actively engaged, but immediately thereafter the Twenty-first Wisconsin and a Pennsylvania regiment took possession of the battlefield, and there remained on guard all that winter. In the spring the Twenty-first joined Sherman's command, and commenced operations at Buzzard's Roost. The next battle of consequence in which our subject participated was that of Resaca, Ga., fought May 14-15, 1864, followed by the engagements at Pumpkin Vine Creek and New Hope Church, or Dallas, in the same State, and so on fighting almost continuously up to the memorable battles and siege of Atlanta, which was captured August 31, 1864, under a terrific fire, the position of the Fourteenth Army Corps being in the center. After Atlanta our subject's regiment pushed on to Savannah, engaging in numerous engagements en route; also taking part in the pursuit of Hood, and participating in the battles of Jonesboro, Ga., and Bentonville, N. C., which latter was the Twenty-first's last fight in the great struggle. After the Grand Review in Washington, in 1865, Mr. Mason came north to Wisconsin, and on receiving his discharge, June 8, 1865, at Milwaukee, returned home to the pursuits of peace, soon afterward securing work in a sawmill, where he was employed during the three following years. While he was absent from home fighting the battles of his country his faithful wife had some hard experiences, finding it often difficult to provide for herself and family of four small children. At one time, anticipating a severely cold winter spell, and being without fuel, she bravely went into the woods, and, with axe in hand, chopped enough wood to carry them through the severe weather.

To Mr. and Mrs. Mason were born children as follows: Osias, born February 21, 1854, in Lyme, N. Y., married Carrie Peck, and they reside in Wausau, Wis.; Albert Franklin, born April 22, 1858, in Cato, married Elma Washburn, and they have two children—Herbert and Charles—(they live on a farm in Colorado); Ida Lucinda, born in Cato April 18, 1860, married Marcus Mason, and they have three children—Clifford, Maxwell and Thorn; Wesley, Jr., born November 30, 1862, married Lena Anderson, and died August 31, 1891, leaving three children—Virgie, Wayne and Jennie; Clarence, born July 1, 1866, residing in Oshkosh, Wis., married Annie Bartlett, and has one child—Lyman; Sherman, born June 6, 1870, married Ella Lago, and has one child—Lillian Irene (they live in Gladstone, Mich.); and Lillian Irene, born November 16, 1873, died July 14, 1888. In his political preferences our subject is a strong Republican, and he is a zealous advocate of the cause of temperance; in religious faith he and his estimable wife are Protestants. He is now retired from active life, having by patient industry and judicious economy secured a sufficiency for the later days of his life, and he is the owner of a comfortable home in Amherst, which is presided over with becoming grace by Mrs. Mason, and where he finds a well-earned repose in the bosom of his family. Physically he is a handsome man, having clear-cut features, iron-grey hair and a beard almost as white as the driven snow.

ZOPHAR MATTESON, a prosperous farmer of Matteson township, Waupaca county, was born in 1843 in St. Clair county, Mich., and is a son of Roswell and Miranda (Palmer) Matteson, born, respectively, in Vermont and New York. Roswell Matteson was a son of Beriah Matteson, who was born in Connecticut, and was a millwright by occupation. He went to Vermont, and thence, in 1804, to New York. Afterward he went to Monroe county, Mich., where both he and his wife died.

Roswell Matteson was reared near Utica, N. Y., from the age of seven years, was educated in New York, and married there in the Mohawk Valley. In an early day he came to Monroe county, Mich., then to Port Huron, and in 1844 to Milwaukee, locating on a farm near Wauwatosa, where he remained two years. Going thence to Hartford, Washington county, he opened up a farm and made it his home till 1855. Leaving this farm, he went by team to Fond du Lac, then by boat to New London, up the Embarrass river by scow, remained one year on a farm in Section 12, Larrabee township, Waupaca county, and in 1856 located in Matteson township, opening up another farm. The house and barn which he here put up were all of cedar, and the first in the township. Later in life he lived here with his son, the subject of this sketch. In politics Roswell Matteson was a Whig and a Republican; his life was spent on the frontier. His death occurred in 1887, when he was nearly ninety years of age; his excellent wife died December 5, 1888, in her eighty-fourth year, having been married nearly sixty-eight years. They reared a family of thirteen children, some of whom are as follows: Ezekiel D., who is married and resides in Phlox, Langlade Co., Wis., was the first of the family to come to Matteson township, arriving in 1854, and made this his home for years; Mark P. resides in Monroe county, Wis.; Mrs. Ewer resides in Clintonville, Waupaca county; Charles, who resides in Wittenberg, Shawano county, was a member of the Thirty-sixth Wis. V. I., in 1864; David, who resides at Phlox, was a member of the Thirty-sixth Wis. V. I.; Martha, now deceased, was the wife of George Warren; John enlisted from Monroe county, Wis., in the Fourth Wis. V. I., and was killed in a charge at Port Hudson; Zophar is the subject of this sketch; Noyes died at the age of seven years in Washington county, Wis., and Aaron died at the age of two and a half years in Washington county, Wisconsin.

Zophar Matteson was reared in Wisconsin, and educated in the schools of Washington county. From Hartford township, Washington county, he came in 1855, when at the age of twelve years, to Larrabee township Waupaca county, and in 1856 to Matteson township, and aided in opening up the home farm. In 1867, in Matteson township, Mr. Matteson was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Shipman, who was born in Canada, and they have become the parents of three children, namely: Noyes, who is attending Lawrence University, and has taught school two terms in Matteson township; Mabel, who died at the age of six years; and Glenn, who is attending school at Clintonville, Waupaca Co., Wis. They also have an adopted child, Wallace Webster. Mrs. Matteson came to Waupaca county in 1859, and taught school in Matteson township and in Belle Plaine, Shawano county, and in Outagamie county, teaching till she was married. Her parents were Timothy and Rebecca (Noble) Shipman, both born in New York. They went to Canada, then after seven years returned to New York, and in 1848 came to Byron township, Fond du Lac Co., Wis., located in the woods and opened up a farm. Afterward they went to Omro, Winnebago Co., Wis., where Mr. Shipman died in 1884; his wife died in Canada. Timothy Shipman's father, William Shipman, was born in Vermont, and was in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Timothy Shipman's father, William Noble, was also in the Revolutionary war, and was one of Washington's body guard.

In 1869 Mr. Matteson bought a timber tract of 103 acres in Section 19, Matteson township, Waupaca county, where he located, and had to make a clearing to build a house. He now owns 183 acres, eighty of which are in Larrabee township, with about eighty-five cleared. He is a descendant of one of the oldest families in this part of Wisconsin, and has seen much of the development and progress of improvement in this section of the State. In politics he is a Republican, and both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Clintonville, Larrabee township.

WALTER M. ROBERTSON, an honorable and honored citizen of Waupaca county, claims Scotland as the land of his nativity, his birth having occurred in Glasgow, March 7, 1857.

His parents, Duncan and Mary (Houston) Robertson, were also natives of Scotland, and the father earned his living by day labor, while the mother attended a small store which they owned. Eight children were born to them in Glasgow, three of whom died in Scotland, five coming to America with their parents, viz.: William H., now of Dayton township, Waupaca county; George S., of Royalton, Wis.; Walter M.; Andrew S., of Royalton; and Christine M., who died in Royalton. The family landed at Castle Garden, New York, after sixteen days, thence proceeding by rail and water to Royalton township, Waupaca county, where Walter Houston, an uncle of our subject, then lived. The father purchased forty acres of partially cleared land, and carried on farming in Royalton township until his life's labors were ended in January, 1880; he was laid to rest in Weyauwega Cemetery; the mother still resides on the old homestead.

The subject proper of this sketch was a lad of eleven summers at the time of the emigration of the family to America, and has since attended school but three winters. Here he became familiar with the arduous task of developing a new farm, and for three winters was employed in the lumber woods. He also spent one year as a laborer on the Northern Pacific railroad, working in western Dakota and Montana. On February 22, 1883, in Weyauwega, Wis., he married Miss Sophia Anderson, born in Denmark, August 3, 1862, a daughter of Hans and Carrie (Jensen) Anderson, who in the spring of 1863 came to the United States, locating first in Royalton township, Waupaca county, and now living in the city of Waupaca. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Robertson: Carrie M., Walter M., Alfred H., John A., Lizzie S., and Christina, the last named born July 28, 1894, died March 27, 1895.

Mr. Robertson never spent his money foolishly, and ere his marriage had purchased a part of the home farm in Royalton township, upon which he lived until January, 1891, when he removed to a farm which he had purchased in November, 1890, comprising 208 acres in Sections 19 and 30, Dayton township. His life has been one of honest, earnest toil, and the success that has come to him is the reward of his own labors. His word can ever be relied upon, and, although he has lived in Dayton township for only a short period, he has the respect of the entire community, wherein he is known as a law-abiding citizen and prosperous farmer. He usually votes with the Democratic party, but is not strictly partisan, and while living in Royalton township he served as pathmaster.

JAMES JORDAN. The Emerald Isle has furnished to America many men who are numbered among her best citizens, and in this class is included the gentleman whose name introduces this article.

He was born in County Tyroë, Ireland, November 6, 1838, and is a son of Joseph and Jane (Spratt) Jordan, whose family numbered eight children, James being the eldest; the others were Fannie, wife of R. Riddler, of England; William, deceased;

Joseph, of Ireland; John, who makes his home in England; Joseph, deceased; and two who died in infancy. The grandparents, Joseph and Betsy (Worthington) Jordan, were of English descent, and the former was an extensive farmer and very wealthy man, but becoming interested in fast horses he lost all of his property in that way.

James Jordan received very meagre educational privileges, and at the early age of ten years had to begin to earn his own living. He worked at farm labor through the day, and thus was employed until 1863, when he determined to try his fortune beyond the Atlantic, and sailed for Quebec. His immediate object of emigration, however, was his great desire to aid the United States in the war which was then in progress. After two months spent in the city of Ottawa, Canada, he went to New York, and enlisted December 21, 1863, in Company I, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, was mustered into the United States service at Rochester, and sent to Staten Island, where he remained until the spring of 1864. The command was then ordered South, and he participated in the seven-days battle of the Wilderness. He was later in the engagements at Spottsylvania, May 12, that year; Cold Harbor, Va., on the first three days of June; the battles of Petersburg, Va., on the 17th of June and 30th of July; Weldon Railroad, August 19; and Pegram Farm, September 30. Not long after the troops went into winter quarters, there remaining until the spring of 1865. In the last year of the war, Mr. Jordan was with his command at the battle of Fort Haskel, March 25, 1865; Fort Stedman, March 31, 1865; and entered Petersburg on the 3d of April, 1865. At Fort Haskel he was wounded by the bursting of a shell, which caused the loss of the sight of his left eye and destroyed the hearing of his left ear. He also contracted disease from which he has never fully recovered, and the government now grants him a pension as a slight compensation for the injuries sustained. He was discharged September 5, 1865, in Rochester. He then engaged in farm work for two years in Canada, whence he removed to Berlin, Wis., where he was employed in a hotel for nine months, resuming agricultural pursuits on the expiration of that period. He was sick in Canada two years. Ere leaving that country he had wedded May 10, 1868, Mary Jane Rogers, daughter of W. T. and Jane Rogers, who were of English descent.

In the fall of 1869 Mr. Jordan brought his wife to Waupaca county, and purchased eighty acres of land in Section 16, Dupont township, a part of his present farm. He had to cut his own roads through, for this section of the country was still in its primitive condition, the work of civilization being scarcely begun. The land was covered with heavy timber, and he had to clear away the trees ere he could build his 18 x 12 feet log cabin. Soon he had a small clearing, and some potatoes and corn were planted. In the lumber woods he was employed through the winter, while during most of the summer he engaged in harvesting, being obliged to leave his wife and babies alone in their forest home. He had hard work to get along at first, and eight years passed before he was able to purchase a team, so he usually had to walk to market, carrying his provisions home on his back from Clintonville or New London, the latter place being twenty-six miles distant. To his first purchase he added eighty acres—forty being in Section 18, forty in Section 23—and eighty acres in Section 7, one of which tracts, however, he mortgaged to pay for his team. The cultivation and improvement of his place is all due to him, and only hard and persistent labor has accomplished the splendid results.

Mrs. Jordan died February 22, 1889, leaving seven children: James H., of Chicago; Jane Rebecca, of New London, Wis.; Joseph B., of Tomahawk, Wis.; William John, who died March 27, 1895; Walter A., at home; Flora C., of Poy Sippi, Wis.; and Laura. Mr. Jordan was again married October 19, 1894, on this occasion to Mary E., daughter of Calvin L. and Minta (Mitchell) Latta, natives of North Carolina, the father a carpenter by trade. Mrs. Latta died eighteen years ago, but Mr. Latta is living in Illinois, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. They had a family of ten children, namely: Mrs. Jordan;

John M., Dr. William James, Josephine, Jerome, Mattie, Alice, Noveline and Gertrude (both deceased), and Belle Zora. Mr. Jordan has always been a stalwart supporter of the Republican party and its principles, and has served as township assessor. Socially he is connected with the Grand Army Post of Marion, Wis. The deeds of battle have been the theme of story and song for earliest ages, and we would add our tribute of praise to that already written. Especially would we honor him who crossed the Atlantic that he might defend the principles of liberty in which he believed, braving danger and death for the cause of right.

C M. FENELON, one of the earliest pioneers and best-known citizens of Waupaca county, prominent in politics, and closely identified with the development of her industries, can look back over an active career of forty years spent within her borders.

He was born in Maryland in 1830, son of W. W. Fenelon, who was the son of Thomas Fenelon, an emigrant from Ireland to Cayuga county, N. Y., where W. W. was born and reared. The latter became a contractor, and was identified with the construction of the most important public works of New York State, during its period of rapid expansion early in the present century. Mr. Fenelon during the construction of the Erie canal established a number of stage routes from points on that important waterway. Later he was engaged in a Canadian enterprise, and was afterward a contractor in building the Chesapeake & Ohio canal; also interested in placing a line of packets on the same canal. He married Eunice Bostedo (the family originally spelling their name Bosteder) a native of New Jersey, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Reed) Bostedo, early Holland emigrants to New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Bostedo emigrated at an early day with an ox-team from New Jersey to Cayuga county, N. Y., settling on a farm near Auburn, and there establishing a pioneer mill. Mr. Bostedo died February 2, 1814, Mrs. Bostedo in 1842. Their children were Susannah, who became the wife of Loren Brown, and died at Toledo, Ohio; Maria (Mrs. Jewett), deceased in Ohio; Eunice, wife of Mr. Fenelon; John and Elvina, who both died in New York; and Louis, who in 1852 moved to Weyauwega and became a member of the firm of Weed, Birdsell & Co., owning the village plat, and who was elected representative in 1856. To W. W. and Eunice Fenelon were born five children: John and Louis D., who both died in Cayuga county, N. Y., the latter in 1892; Seymour, who died at St. Joseph, Mich., July 10, 1891; Charlotte L., who became the wife of M. L. Marr, bookkeeper at Dunkirk, N. Y., for the New York & Erie railroad (she died in Ceresco, Calhoun Co., Mich.); and C. M. the subject of this sketch. The father of these died at Owego, N. Y., in 1834, the mother in Cayuga county, N. Y., in 1845.

C. M. Fenelon was educated in Cayuga county, N. Y., and in 1852 went to California via the Nicaragua route, where for three years he was engaged in mining. In 1855 he returned to the East, and after prospecting at New York, and at Grinnell, Iowa, where he purchased a half section of land, he settled at Weyauwega, as a clerk for Weed, Birdsell & Co., who had opened a store of general merchandise there. In the following spring he entered business for himself as a trader in land and dealer in lumber; but in 1857 sold out and went to Winneconne to estimate and scale logs. Here he was offered a raft of logs for his watch. In 1858 he was engaged in farming, and the same year, with David Robinson, opened a general mercantile and tailoring business at Weyauwega, which they conducted three years. Resuming farming, in 1861, Mr. Fenelon was elected sheriff of Waupaca county in 1862, and served two years; in 1871, he was elected county treasurer, and served two terms, or four years. Between these periods of public service he was an active farmer and lumberman, and after retiring from the treasurership he dealt extensively in hay and produce. Politically, in earlier life Mr. Fenelon was a Whig, casting his first vote in California for Gen. Scott; in 1856 he voted for John C. Fremont, and became an ardent Republican.

In 1859 C. M. Fenelon was married at Weyauwega to Miss Jeanette Moodie, daughter of David Moodie, originally from Washington county, N. Y. To Mr. and Mrs. Fenelon were born four children: W. W., a merchant at Rhinelander, Wis.; C. D., a physician and surgeon at Phillips, Wis.; Eunice A., who resides at home, and Emma M., deceased. Besides the offices mentioned above, Mr. Fenelon has officially represented his town and township, and also county, in various capacities. He has been and is now a member of the county board; has been county commissioner, and also assistant assessor of internal revenue. He owns considerable land in the county, and is one of its best-known representative citizens.

L EMUEL W. R. KROMER. In proportion to its population Grand Rapids, Wood county, can justly claim as large a number of pioneer families, whose names have been indissolubly woven with the history of the county, as any other part of the State. Among those who have assisted in the development of that city is Mr. Kromer, who was one of its earliest settlers.

A native of Pennsylvania, he was born in Philadelphia, July 4, 1825, and is a son of John and Parmelia (Winer) Kromer, who had a family of seven children, four of whom are yet living. The subject of this sketch is the eldest, the other surviving members of the family being Henry, in Indiana; Eliza, living in Grand Rapids, Mich.; and Napoleon, making his home in Grand Rapids, Mich. With his parents our subject removed in an early day from Philadelphia to Auburn, N. Y., and later went with the family to Monroe, Mich. Their next place of residence was in White Pigeon, Mich., and on leaving that city they became residents of Lima, Ind. There, in the public schools, our subject acquired the greater part of his education, and in 1845, when twenty years of age he came to Grand Rapids, Wis., at that time a mere hamlet in the midst of a wilderness, for the now busy city could at that time boast of but one sawmill and two white families. Mr. Kromer engaged in lumbering and logging on the Wisconsin river until 1856, when, the town having grown to a considerable extent, he opened a general merchandise store which he conducted for about five years.

In 1861, Mr. Kromer, imbued with the spirit of patriotism, and anxious to aid in the preservation of the Union, enlisted in Company G, Seventh Wis. V. I., was made second lieutenant and with his regiment was assigned to the "Iron Brigade," then stationed at Arlington Heights, Va. In 1862 he resigned his commission and returned to Grand Rapids, once more identifying himself with its business interests by establishing a fancy grocery and restaurant which he conducted for some years. He also represented the American Express Company there thirteen years, and for the past three years has been agent for the United States Express Company in Grand Rapids. On March 1, 1849, in Portage City, Wis., he was united in marriage with Miss Avilla Allen, daughter of John and Betsey Allen, and they have had eight children, five of whom are living namely: Harriet E., wife of D. D. Demaris, a resident of Minneapolis, Minn.; Elizabeth, widow of S. D. Demaris, and a resident of Grand Rapids, Wis.; Allen L., who is located in Ashland, Wis.; Orin E., who is living in Helena, Mont.; and Ellis L., a resident of Grand Rapids.

Previous to 1856, or before the division of the county, Mr. Kromer served as county treasurer for one term, and held the office of register of deeds continuously from 1856 until 1876, with the exception of two terms. He has been a member of the city council several times, at various elections has been chosen city clerk, and has held many other civic offices. He has always taken an active interest in matters pertaining to the welfare of the community, and his progressive spirit is widely recognized. In his political views he is a Democrat. Socially he is connected with the following organizations—Grand Rapids Lodge, No. 128, F. & A. M.; Stevens Point Chapter, No. 34, R. A. M.; and Crusade Commandery, No. 17, K. T., of Stevens Point. The family attend the Methodist Church.

Mr. Kromer is a man of more than orinary intelligence, and his strict integrity and amiable disposition have won for him hosts of friends. During a continuous residence of nearly half a century in Grand Rapids he has seen many important changes, improvements and developments, and it may truthfully be said of him that he stands today as one of the few remaining links between the pioneer days of hardships and trials and the mighty present, teeming with wonderful achievements and foreshadowed by the possibilities of still greater triumphs in the future.

J GEORGE BRUNNER, who enjoys the distinction of having been the first settler in the thriving village of Wittenberg, Shawano county, having settled in what was then a primeval forest some fourteen years ago, is a native of Wisconsin, born July 5, 1849, in Mequon, Ozaukee county.

Andrew Brunner, his father, a Bavarian by birth, and a miller by trade, in 1842 emigrated to the United States, coming direct to Wisconsin and to Ozaukee county, where he bought eighty acres of wild land, covered with a dense forest, inhabited by wild animals, who jealously resented the encroachment of civilized man. This land our subject bravely set to work to clear, and in course of time, by assiduous care and consummate industry, he transformed it into a fertile farm. Later, he bought another twenty acres of wild land, and this, too, he in due course converted into productive fields. After a residence of four years in his New-World home, Mr. Brunner took unto himself a wife in the person of Miss Jane Spareber, also a native of Bavaria, and ten children were born to them, a brief sketch of whom is as follows: John P. lives on the old homestead, caring for his mother, who is now seventy-five years old; J. George is the subject of these lines; Margaret is deceased; Sophia is the wife of Nicholas Renk, a baker, of New London, Wis.; Leonhard is a resident of Leopoldis, Wis.; William J. lives in Milwaukee; Barbara is the wife of Fred Kolpeck, of Almond, Wis., a farmer;

Michael is a conductor on a street railway in Milwaukee; August G. is a motorman on a street railway in Milwaukee; Gottlieb is a carpenter in Wittenberg. The father died in 1871, and the widowed mother subsequently married John Dehling, since deceased.

At the age of fourteen years our subject, who was given a fairly liberal common-school education, left the parental roof and commenced to work among strangers for his board, first in Dodge county, Wis., where he was employed about one year. From there he went to Waukesha county, thence at the end of a year to Green Bay, Brown county, where he found work in a shingle mill for a time, and thence, in company with a friend, moved to Michigan, there laboring in the lumber woods six years, at the end of which time he returned to Wisconsin, bought the old homestead in Ozaukee county, and settled down to agricultural pursuits.

In the fall of 1875 Mr. Brunner was married to Miss Emma Schneider, who was born April 11, 1858, at Mequon, Wis., daughter of Methuselah and Fredericka (Radel) Schneider, well-to-do people of Saxony, Germany, who came to this country and to Wisconsin early in the "fifties," settling in Mequon, Ozaukee county, where the father followed agricultural pursuits. They were the parents of eight children, namely: Rosalie, Edward, Fred, Charles, Emma, Frank, Annie, and one deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Brunner continued to make their home at the old place in Ozaukee county some three years after their marriage, and then, selling the property there at a profit of $500, moved to Shawano county, locating on 120 acres of partially improved land in Herman township which Mr. Brunner had purchased, and which he has since sold. Here they lived three years, or until toward the end of April, 1881, when they came to Wittenberg, at that time, as already intimated, a "howling wilderness," but, to quote from the columns of a local paper: "he at once proceeded to annihilate the primitive and historic beauty of the place by tearing the mighty monarch of the forest from his imperial throne, and utilizing the remains of his excellency's fallen grandeur for the erection of a first-class hostelry, which he very appropriately named 'The Wittenberg House,' and took upon himself the duties of a genial and hearty landlord. But the urbane proprietor of the first hotel of which Wittenberg could proudly boast was not satisfied alone with the honor of being the first settler in our prosperous village, for he took upon himself, as it were, another and still greater honor. Before many moons had passed away there was an arrival at the 'Wittenberg House' who did not register. His appearance was somewhat extemporaneous, to say the least, and decidedly decolleté; but these little peculiarities, if such they were, found favor in George's eyes, so the little guest was allowed to remain, and, in fact, is still stopping at Brunner's as we go to press. He was a boy, and a bouncing boy at that, the first white child born in the place, and George was the happy and hilarious father." In 1887 Mr. Brunner erected a fine brick building, 24x46 feet in size, two stories high, and at the present time is conducting a retail liquor establishment, in addition to which he owns a farm in Eldron township, Marathon county, with good improvements, besides other real estate, including three lots in Milwaukee; he is also interested in the lumber industry.

To our subject and wife were born five children, two of whom—Edwin and Alice—are deceased; those yet living are Alvina, Alexander and Allen. Politically, Mr. Brunner is a Republican; has been a trustee of the village of Wittenberg ever since its incorporation, served as a justice of the peace one year, and as constable also a year, filling these several incumbencies with characteristic zeal and fidelity. In religious faith he and his wife are members of the German Lutheran Church, toward which he has been a liberal donor. He has ever been a leader in enterprises tending to the advancement and prosperity of Wittenberg, substantially verifying the assertion by donating $355.00 toward a factory located there, and from one dollar to ten dollars for other enterprises almost every year since he has lived in Wittenberg.

HERMANN NABER, one of the most extensive agriculturists of northern Wisconsin, especially of Shawano county, is a representative German-American, one in whom is exemplified the truthful saying that "intellect and industry are not incompatible." There is more wisdom, and will be more benefit, in combining these attributes, than scholars like to believe, or than the common every-day world imagines. Life has time enough for both, and its happiness will be increased by their union.

Mr. Naber was born November 12, 1825, on a farm in the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg, Germany, the country whence the Saxons of old departed for England centuries ago. He is a son of John Diedrick Naber, a well-to-do farmer of Oldenburg, and of the better-educated class, for ten years holding the position of president of an Agricultural Society, besides filling other important offices in his locality. "Diedrick" has for many generations been a family name with the Nabers, and the Hollandish or Dutch admiral, Diedrick, is said to have been the original "Flying Dutchman" of romance. To John D. Naber and his wife, Annie Catherine (Hillen), were born ten children, as follows: Hermann; Diedrick, of Mayville, Wis., a merchant; Gerhard, a retired farmer of Mayville, Wis.; Charles, who at the age of thirteen was afflicted with some nervous disease, and died in Mayville, Wis., at the age of twenty-two, after years of helplessness; Henry D., who was a well-to-do merchant, deceased in California; Margaret, wife of Charles Radebusch, a merchant of Mayville; Gesine, deceased in infancy; Sophia, widow of J. D. Koch, of Dodge county, Wis.; Mary, Mrs. August Mann, of Dodge county, Wis., and a daughter, deceased in infancy.

Our subject received a common-school training, and later a special agricultural education, when he enjoyed, for about six weeks, two lessons a week in English—all the schooling he ever had in that language. In the spring of 1848, at the age of twenty-two, he was sent by his parents to the United States in order to prospect in that country, especially in the State of Wisconsin.

sin, for future homes for their own family and for those of others, under agreement to report by letter, or in person, inside of three years, which was done, resulting in the Naber and many other families coming to Wisconsin and establishing comfortable and prosperous homes. Our subject on his voyage out sailed from Bremen on the ship "Wieland," and after a voyage of seven weeks landed at New York, thence proceeding direct to Wisconsin. In the fall of 1850 he made his return trip to the Fatherland, in the meantime "spying out the land" and posting himself in the mode of farming in America, especially in Wisconsin, which was at that time a new State. In Germany he staid long enough to plunge into the sea of matrimony, the ceremony being performed June 6, 1851, while his choice of partner on life's voyage was Miss Margaret Schweers, who was born in the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg in 1833. On the fifteenth of the same month he and his youthful bride set sail from Bremen on the good ship "Stephanie," bound for New York, which port they reached after a most pleasant voyage of over seven weeks, the sea during the entire trip being as placid and calm as "love's young dream." Nor were Mr. and Mrs. Naber the only passengers, for he had chartered the entire second cabin, which was filled with acquaintances of the happy couple, bent, like themselves, on seeking new homes in the New World.

Our subject first located in Mayville, Dodge county, where he remained until October, 1858, at which time he moved his family to Shawano, the journey being made by team to Oshkosh, thence by steamer. This was not his first visit to Shawano county, for on his last trip from Mayville he brought some produce with him which he conveyed to Shawano and sold to the new settlers there. Mr. Naber fully intended at that time to return to Mayville, but the prospect of a railroad being constructed to Shawano induced him to remain there, and he purchased 160 acres of land, near to that city, through which the contemplated railroad would pass. This was never built, and the grand prospect of Shawano was blighted. Embarking in mercantile business, in partnership with Mr. Rudebusch (the style of the firm being Naber & Rudebusch), our subject became sole proprietor of the concern later on. They did a vast trade in produce, bringing the goods all the way from Mayville, a distance of over one hundred miles, the trips during the winter having to be made with sleighs, the river being frozen over. Mr. Naber also built the first saw-mill at Shawano, operating same many years, and he owned the first hay-press and scales ever seen in Shawano, the pressed hay being sent to the lumber camps. He also owns a farm of one thousand acres in the county.

A brief record of the twelve children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Naber is as follows: F. D., a prominent citizen of Shawano; Adaline, deceased in infancy; Matilda, deceased in infancy; Hermine, living at home; Charles C., who was a druggist and one of the prosperous business men of Shawano, where he died; Emma, at home; Hermann L., a liveryman of Cecil, Wis.; Mary A., Mrs. William C. Zachow, of Cecil, Wis.; Margaret, a bright young lady, who commenced teaching school at the age of fifteen, and died at the early age of nineteen; Henry G., attending Rush Medical College, Chicago; Annie, a school teacher; and Gerhard, who died in infancy.

Mr. Naber, in spite of his various and extensive business interests, has yet found time to devote to the service of his fellow citizens, his adopted county and State. In both Dodge and Shawano counties he held minor offices; in 1875-76 he was mayor of Shawano; in 1876 was candidate for Presidential elector, and in 1888 was a candidate for railroad commissioner, both on the Democratic ticket. In 1889 he was elected county judge of Shawano county, by all the votes in the county except ten.

In 1864 he was sent to the Assembly, by the vote of the people, to secure for Shawano the U. S. military road about to be built from Ft. Howard, Wis., to Ft. Wilkins, Mich., and he succeeded in his mission. In 1875 he was elected to the same office in order to secure better educational facilities for Shawano, resulting in the passage of the present free high-school law for the whole State. In 1880 he was again sent to the Assembly, chiefly by the votes of the high-minded Republicans of Oconto, for the desperate task of securing State aid of swamp land for the building of what was then called the St. Paul & Eastern Grand Trunk railway, which road was a last possibility for Shawano getting a railway at all (all other chances having passed by), and for Oconto to get a road into the interior of the State. The enterprise was a success, so far as legislation could assist it, but proved a failure for lack of money to build a "trunk line," as contemplated. In 1883 Mr. Naber was again elected to the Assembly, when Shawano county became for the first time an Assembly District. A disgraceful quarrel among Democrats, in their county convention, over the spoils of office, disgusted the better elements in the party, and they, together with many Republicans, forced Mr. Naber onto the ticket just a week before the election, and after nearly every voter was supposed to have been pledged. The advent of the two railroads, the one through the western, the other through the eastern, portion of Shawano county, changed it from a Democratic to a Republican county, by reason, Mr. Naber avers, "of the large population of 'floaters' which followed the roads and which were here for 'the money there was in it,' and, among others, I was twice in succession defeated for the Assembly."

The above has been gleaned, for the greater part, from a brief and modest autobiography of Mr. Naber, intended specially for this work, the following being his concluding sentences: "While in much other business during my life, I have never claimed any other profession than that of a farmer, and the height of my present ambition is not 'office,' but to be allowed to retire to our family farm, on our beautiful Lake Shawano, to develop and cultivate it—not for profit, for there is no profit in farming now, but for a family life insurance, the cashier of which can not lose the cash in gambling or otherwise, and for a harbor of refuge for all of my numerous descendants, who may get wrecked in the storms of business life."

OLE C. SETHER. The subject of this sketch stands second to none among the well-to-do farmers of Scandinavia township, Waupaca county, whose record it has been deemed wise to preserve in this manner for the perusal of the coming generation. As a judicious tiller of the soil he has met with success, and as a man and a citizen holds a good position among his neighbors. He is a native of Wisconsin, born in the town of Oconomowoc, Waukesha county, March 10, 1848, and is a son of Christopher Sether.

The father's birth occurred near Skien, Norway, March 9, 1815, and he was one of a large family of children. When he was but nine years of age, his father, who was a farmer and woodsman, died, and at the age of nineteen years he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade, serving seven years, when he became a full-fledged carpenter. Although his wages were very low, he saved enough by working at his trade to bring him to America. On May 17, 1843, he left Skien on the sailing vessel "Salvator," Capt. Gassman, and at the end of a nine-weeks' voyage landed at New York. He then proceeded up the Hudson river to Albany, thence by canal to Buffalo, where he boarded the steamer "Great Western," which landed him in Milwaukee. There were a great many passengers and the accommodations were very poor, Mr. Sether having to sleep upon his trunk. In Milwaukee he worked at his trade, but could only realize $7 per month, as carpenters were generally paid in merchandise, little money being in circulation in this State at that time.

In the town of Merton, Waukesha Co., Wis., in August, 1845, Christopher Sether wedded Miss Gunhilde Listul, who was born in Norway, August 7, 1825, a daughter of Torkel Listul, a farmer, who brought his large family to the New World on the same vessel on which Mr. Sether sailed. At the time of his marriage he bought eighty acres of land in Oconomowoc township, Waukesha county, which was still in its primitive condition, but he immediately began its improvement which was carried on under difficulties as he had no team and had to drag the rails for his fences on a hand sled. He was also employed at various kinds of labor outside of his farm by which he could earn a livelihood. In Waukesha county three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sether: Carrie, who died at the age of nine weeks; Ole C., subject of this sketch; and Carrie M., now Mrs. Dr. George Dale, of Iola, Waupaca county. Four other children were added to the family after their removal to Scandinavia township, Waupaca county: Christian, Thomas, Andrew (deceased in childhood), and John Theodore (who died in childhood of lung fever). Christian Sether, the second son, graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, at the age of twenty-three. He proceeded to Northwood, Iowa, where he practiced medicine for three years, after which he entered Bellevue College, New York City, and graduated from the same at the age of twenty-seven, being the youngest graduate in Bellevue College at that time. He engaged in the practice of his profession at Stoughton, Wis., where he acquired an extensive practice; but his health failing him, he was compelled to leave his country practice, and thinking that city practice would agree with him, he moved with his family to Chicago and got well established in the practice of medicine, when his health compelled him to leave his much-loved profession for good. He then sought his old home, Waupaca, where he remained until death separated him from his family and many friends, at the age of thirty-six years.

In June, 1854, the father came to the "Indian lands" in Waupaca county, looking up a location, and selling out in Waukesha county, he removed his family to Scandinavia township. They drove the entire distance in a covered wagon with an ox-team, sleeping where night overtook them, and most of the streams had to be forded as there were few bridges. The trip was made by Berlin, Pine River and Waupaca. On their arrival they stopped at the cabin of Jacob Listul, which already sheltered two families, and remained there while a shanty was being built on their own land, which comprised 200 acres in Section 4, Scandinavia township. Their first home here, which was 14 x 20 feet, was built of logs, and though rudely constructed sheltered them from the wintry blasts. Besides clearing and improving his land, the father also worked at the carpenter's trade for others, which proved quite a lucrative profession. Wheat became the main crop, and was hauled by oxen to market at Gill's Landing. Indians still roamed the forest and wild game was quite plentiful; but as years rolled by these things were entirely changed, and where once was dense timber now waving fields of grain are to be seen, and many substantial buildings were erected on the home farm. All through his active business life the father followed his trade in connection with the labors on the farm. While now well advanced in years he is still hale and hearty, and his good wife is also well preserved. They are consistent and faithful members of the Lutheran Church of Scandinavia, and gave liberally to the erection of the church edifice. The father never fails to use his right of franchise, and first voted with the Free-Soil party, but now is an ardent Republican.

Being the eldest son, Ole C. Sether assisted his father in the cultivation of the farm, and received a limited education in the district schools, which were not very far advanced in those days. There was no improved machinery at that time, and consequently farm labor was much more difficult. At the age of eighteen our subject left home, going to Iola, where he learned the trade of a miller under the Burr system, being employed in a flouring-mill, and for eleven years followed that pursuit, working for others in Amherst, Waupaca and Scandinavia, besides Iola, where he remained most of the time.

On June 3, 1879, in the town of Leed, Jefferson Co., Wis., Mr. Sether was married to Miss I. M. Johnson, a native of Waukesha county, Wis., and a daughter of John Johnson, a farmer by occupation. This wife died June 24, 1887, and now lies buried in the Scandinavia Cemetery; she left one child—Le Roy, who died at the age of eleven years. Mr. Sether was again married, this time January 5, 1889, in the Scandinavia Lutheran Church, to Miss Clara Peterson, who was born in Scandinavia township, daughter of Christian Peterson, who carries on agricultural pursuits. They have three children—Olger Gerhard, Carl J. Leroy and Victor Christian.

After his first marriage Mr. Sether located on the home farm, operating same in connection with the real-estate business, in which he was engaged. In the fall of 1885 he was elected sheriff of Waupaca county, which position he creditably filled two years. His farm now comprises 200 acres of excellent land, besides which he owns a great deal of property elsewhere, being extensively engaged in real-estate dealings and speculation, in which he is meeting with good success. He is interested in several enterprises with local and foreign capital, and has handled thousands of dollars' worth of property. His extensive business transactions have given him a wide acquaintance, and he has the esteem and confidence of all with whom he comes in contact. Mr. Sether is one of the leading members of the Republican party in his part of the county; takes an active interest in politics, and has served in various township offices. Socially he belongs to the F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F.; while in religious faith he is a member of the Lutheran Church of Scandinavia.

HEALY MARCY LOOMER, at present one of the Agency Clerks at Green Bay Indian Agency, Keshena, Shawano Co., Wis., but whose home is in the city of Shawano, was born in the town of Oppenheim, near the village of Brocketts Bridge (now Dolgeville), Fulton Co., N. Y., November 5, 1847, and is the son of Aaron Perry and Esther Marcy (Healy) Loomer.

Aaron P. Loomer, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in the town of Stratford, Fulton Co., N. Y., on the 31st of May, 1822, and was brought up a farmer, but for the past thirty years has been a hotel keeper. He had three children, as follows: Healy M., the subject of this sketch, is the oldest; Byron Lucien, unmarried, is a farmer at Zillah, Washington; Guilford Morell, is a resident of Beaumont, Jefferson Co., Texas, and has been engaged in lumbering the greater part of his life, meeting with fair success. He married a daughter of Col. T. D. Rock, of Woodville, Texas, and has four children: Perry, Harry, Mary and Bessie. The subject of our sketch is of Scotch, English, Irish and Mohawk-Dutch ancestry. George Loomer, his great-grandfather on his father's side, and Job Wood, his great-grandfather on his mother's side, were Revolutionary soldiers, the latter living to be upward of ninety years old, and his wife was one hundred years old at the time of her death.

The Loomers are descendants of emigrants from Connecticut, who moved into New York State shortly after the Revolutionary war. George Loomer, grandfather of H. M. Loomer, died with the cholera when his son, Aaron P. Loomer, was an infant, and his widow, Hannah (Chase) Loomer, a few years afterward, married again, and lived to the age of ninety-five years. At the time of her death it was claimed that she was the oldest living heir to the noted Chase-Townley estate of England. Aaron P. Loomer was an only son, and had a half-sister, Ophelia White, who married Andrew Thompson, and died in Oshkosh, Wis., a few years ago.

Healy M. Loomer was reared a farmer's boy, but being averse to that mode of life, was sent to school. After learning what could be taught him in the rather primitive district country school, where he lived, he attended Fairfield Seminary, in Herkimer county, N. Y., which, at that time, was quite a noted institution of learning. At the age of seventeen he commenced teaching district schools, and while not attending school himself, engaged in this vocation until he was about twenty-three. Taking Horace Greeley's advice, at that time quite notorious, to "Go west, young man, go west," he landed in Oshkosh, Wis., May 1, 1869. In the fall of 1869, Charles M. Upham, a merchant of Shawano, engaged him to go to Shawano and teach the village school, and he arrived in the then frontier village of Shawano, November 6, 1869. At that time Shawano was the last settlement between Green Bay and Ontonagon, Mich., on Lake Superior, a distance of over two hundred miles. The nearest railroad was at Green Bay, Brown county, a distance of forty miles. After teaching school in Shawano for two years, Mr. Loomer went to work in the lumber woods. His first job was given him by T. H. Dodge. He worked in the woods for two years, and then, in company with John A. Winans, John M. Schweers and Chas. R. Klebesadle, purchased the Shawano County Journal from M. H. McCord, changed its politics from rabid Republican to rabid Democratic, eventually bought his partners' interest, and while under his control, the paper was one of the staunchest and sprightliest Democratic country weeklies in the State. In 1879 he sold the Journal to Mrs. Peavey, now State School Superintendent of Colorado, and a sister of Governor Upham, of Wisconsin. Mr. Loomer, after taking a trip to Montana in company with a colony from Chippewa Falls, which was headed by ex-Speaker of the Wisconsin Assembly, A. R. Barrows, returned to Shawano and engaged in lumbering for several years; was the editor and half owner of the Shawano County Advocate for some time, after which he was land man and private secretary for Chas. M. Upham, of Shawano, for two years. In 1887, Col. Wm. F. Vilas, then postmaster-general, obtained for him the position of agency clerk at the Green Bay Indian Agency, under Thos. Jennings, agent, which position he resigned at the end of a year to accept a position with Robinson & Flinn, pine land dealers of Detroit, Mich., to go south to purchase pine lands for them, which business he was engaged in for several years, becoming familiar with all the long-leaf pine territory from Texas to Florida. In September, 1894, Thomas H. Savage, agent at the Green Bay Indian Agency, appointed him to his present position.

In politics Mr. Loomer has always been a Democrat, and has taken an active interest in politics ever since coming to Wisconsin. He has received many nominations from his party; but on account of the large Republican majority in his vicinity has been elected but a few times. In 1876 he was nominated by his party for member of Assembly, the District at that time consisting of Shawano and Oconto counties. He ran away ahead of his ticket in his own county, but Oconto county gave a large enough majority for his opponent to elect him. In 1878 he was his party's candidate for State Senator for the First Senatorial District, which at that time was composed of the territory that now embraces the counties of Shawano, Oconto, Door, Kewaunee, Marinette, Florence, Forest and Langlade, nearly one-fourth of the whole State. His opponent, George Grimmer, of Kewaunee, was elected in 1876 by over nineteen hundred majority, but he only succeeded in defeating Mr. Loomer by about two hundred and fifty votes; but who had the satisfaction, however, of receiving in his home city all the votes cast but twenty-seven. Mr. Loomer has repeatedly been elected a member of the county board of supervisors of Shawano county, and several times has been chairman of the board. He has also several times been elected city clerk and alderman of Shawano. In 1882 he was elected county clerk of Shawano county, but failed to be re-elected. He has been chairman of the Democratic County Committee of Shawano county, several times, and has repeatedly been a delegate to all his party's conventions from a ward caucus to the Congressional and State Conventions. In 1884 he was an alternate to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago that renominated Grover Cleveland for President, and was one of his staunch supporters.

On July 7, 1875, Healey M. Loomer was united in marriage in the Presbyterian Church at Shawano, by the Rev. A. F. DeCamp, to Bessie Ann Charnley, who was born at Newport, R. I. April 2, 1852, and they have had two children born to them, namely: Grace Esther, born March 6, 1877, who is now a school teacher; and Inez Healy, born February 16, 1879, who is now a school girl and resides at home. The parents of Mrs. Loomer were William and Sarah (McNeil) Charnley, the former of whom was an Englishman from Lancaster, England, the latter a Scotch woman from Johnstone, near Glasgow, Scotland, both of whom emigrated to America in early life, and were married in the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. Charnley was a mason and a farmer by occupation. He removed from Rhode Island to a farm he purchased near Black Lake in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., where he lived for many years. In 1869 he came to Milwaukee, Wis., removing to Shawano in 1871, and both he and his wife died there. Their children living are as follows: Mary, wife of James A. Allen, of Shawano, Wis.; James, wife of John Loan, a farmer of Shawano; Bessie A., the wife of H. M. Loomer, the subject of this sketch; John T., of Alexandria, Louisiana, who has a wife and two children (he is a mason by trade, and is also engaged in the soda-water bottling business); Frances Ida, of St. Paul, Minn., who is an assistant principle in one of the city high schools; William H. C., unmarried, who is a farmer and speculator and lives in the town of Richmond, Shawano county, and Anna, wife of John Williams, a hardware merchant of Marshfield, Wisconsin.

Mr. Loomer is a Knight Templar Mason, and in 1878-79 was grand senior deacon of the Grand Lodge of A. F. & A. M. of Wisconsin. He has been the representative of his Lodge in the Grand Lodge many times, and is an enthusiastic Mason. He formerly belonged to the I. O. O. F., and Mrs. Loomer is still a member of the Daughters of Rebekah of that order. Mr. Loomer is not connected with any religious denomination, but his wife and two daughters are Episcopalians.

CHARLES C. GILBERT, postmaster at Alban, Portage county, and a well-known farmer of Alban township, is, like many of the thrifty settlers of his section of Wisconsin, a Norwegian by birth, having been born in Norway February 5, 1837. His parents, Erik and Carrie (Larsen) Gilbert, were also natives of Norway, where the father was a laborer. In the spring of 1855 they emigrated thence with their family, sailing from Christiania and landing in Quebec, Canada, and from that city continuing their journey to Wisconsin. Here, in Cato township, Manitowoc county, they made a permanent settlement, the father investing in eighty acres of land, whereon he built a home and spent the remainder of his days. In 1885 he passed to the home beyond, whither his wife had preceded him.

Charles C. Gilbert received a common-school education in Norway, where he was also reared to farming, and he was eighteen years of age when he came with the rest of the family to this country. In Wisconsin he worked as a farm hand until the Civil war, when he offered himself for the support of the Union cause, enlisting September 11, 1861, at Manitowoc, in Company A, Fifty-sixth Ill. V. I. Immediately thereafter he went with the command to Chicago, Ill., and on February 28, 1862, the Fifty-sixth Regiment having disbanded, he became a member of Company H, First Illinois Light Artillery. They remained in Chicago, drilling, until March, when they left for the seat of war, proceeding first to St. Louis and on April 4 leaving that city for Shiloh, Tenn. There took an active part in the engagement there and remained in camp in the vicinity for about a month, after which they pursued the enemy to Corinth, Miss., thence proceeding to Memphis, Tenn., where they went into camp. In December, 1862, they were ordered to Vicksburg, intending to attempt an attack on the rear of that stronghold; Gen. Sherman, however (in whose command our subject served), failing to receive the expected aid from Grant, they left Vicksburg and crossed to Arkansas, where they fought the battle of Arkansas Post. Returning to Vicksburg on the Louisiana side, they remained there until early in May, 1863, when Sherman crossed the Mississippi river at Grand Gulf and coming round took up his position in the rear of Vicksburg, fighting the battle of Champion Hills en route. After the fall of Vicksburg the command went to Jackson, and participated in the engagement there, after which, returning to Vicksburg, they were in camp there about two months. They went on to Memphis, Tenn., thence, after a short stay, pushing on to Chattanooga, and shortly thereafter took part in the battle of Missionary Ridge, from which battleground they were marched to Larkinsville, Alabama.

On February 28, 1864, Mr. Gilbert veteranized, re-enlisting in the same company for three years, and after a short visit home, on a thirty-days' furlough, he rejoined his command at Chicago, proceeding thence to Larkinsville, Ala., and from that time on until the taking of Atlanta his regiment saw constant service. On December 4, 1864, at Jonesboro, Mr. Gilbert was taken prisoner; the main body of the army was considerably in the rear, and he and forty comrades were surprised and captured by the Rebels, being conveyed to the prison at Florence, S. C., whence they were released on parole March 1, 1865, on the approach of Sherman. They were sent to Wilmington, N. C., and later to Baltimore, Md., from which city our subject came home on a thirty-days' furlough, rejoining his company at Washington, D. C. On June 13, 1865, he was honorably discharged, at Springfield, Ill., and returning to his home in Cato, Manitowoc Co., Wis., he remained there about a year. In the spring of 1866 he purchased eighty acres of land in Section 28, Alban township, Portage county, the farm which has ever since been his home, and to which he has since added another eighty acres, lying in Section 1. Besides attending to his agricultural labors, Mr. Gilbert has taken an active interest in local affairs, having held various township offices and positions of trust, and that he has been attentive to business and faithful to his duties as a citizen may be readily judged by his present prosperity and high standing in the community. For some years he conducted a general store, but he has recently retired from the business. He is the present postmaster at Alban, has served his township as clerk two years, as assessor one year, and as treasurer two years, and has been justice of the peace since 1878. In the spring of 1895 he was appointed notary public, and his continuous public service has given him a prominence and popularity in his community which he well deserves.

In September, 1865, Mr. Gilbert was married, in Cato, to Miss Martha Johnson, like himself a native of Norway, who was born August 14, 1837, and died August 14, 1892. Their union has been blessed by the following named children: Emily Matilda, now Mrs. John Oleson, of Iola, Waupaca Co., Wis.; Charles J., of Cato, Wis.; Laura Maria, unmarried; Nettie Caroline, Mrs. George Lee, of Alban; Eliza Amelia, Mrs. John Erikson, of Milwaukee, Wis.; and William Albert, Clara Josephine, and Martin Oliver, at home. In religious connection Mr. Gilbert is a member of the Norwegian Lutheran Church at Alban.

HENRY SEIM, city treasurer of Wausau, is one of that city's most estimable citizens. He was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, May 30, 1848, son of Conrad and Mary (Siepel) Seim, both natives of the Fatherland. Conrad and Mary Seim had five children—Henry, Conrad, John, Mary and Louis; the last three are still residents of Germany, and the parents died in their native land.

In his boyhood Henry Seim attended the public schools of Germany, and at an early age he was apprenticed to the trade of shoe-making. When his trade was completed, in 1866, he resolved to try his fortune in the New World. He came to Milwaukee, and after a brief residence in that city was attracted to northern Wisconsin by the reports of abundant work and high wages paid there. Mr. Seim in the same year came to Wausau, which was then a small village, about which the lumbering interests were actively prosecuted. For nearly four years he worked in the woods, and on the river, and thus obtained a start in the new country. But he had no intention of permanently abandoning his trade. It was about the year 1870 that he established himself in business at Wausau, by opening a little shop in the growing town. His trade grew, and he has ever since followed shoe-making very successfully.

In 1871 Mr. Seim was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Patzer, a young lady of German descent, daughter of John and Louisa Patzer. To their union five children were born, four of whom yet survive:

Henry, Jr., Edward K., Herman R. and William C. Mr. and Mrs. Seim are members of St. Paul's German Evangelical Church; in political views he is a Republican. Mr. Seim is a man of sterling qualities and irreproachable character. He ranks high in the community in which he resides, and is highly respected by all classes of citizens for his straightforward business methods. He is one of Wausau's most trustworthy officials, and one of her oldest residents.

JOHAN B. GAUTRON DIT LAROCHELLE, a prosperous and deservedly popular citizen of Grand Rapids, Wood county, was born in the city of Joliette, Province of Quebec, Canada, August 5, 1837, and is a son of Francois and Louise (St. Amour) Gautron Dit LaRochelle, who were also natives of the same province. They had a family of thirteen children, seven of whom are yet known to survive, their names and places of residence being as follows: Frank, a well-known and popular hotel man of Junction City, Portage Co., Wis.; Fabian, a resident of Lillooet, Cariboo, British Columbia; John B., of this sketch; Joseph, who is living in Loretta, S. Dak.; Mealia, wife of Peter Noel, a resident of Merrill, Wis.; Philomene, wife of Louis Monville, of Massachusetts; and Arneline, wife of Medy Racette, a resident of Arpin, Wood Co., Wisconsin.

Our subject did not receive the advantages of an education, it being considered in his country, in those early days, an unnecessary luxury. He worked as a farm hand for his father until thirteen years of age when he left home for Upper Canada, where he was employed in the lumber woods for about three years. At the age of sixteen he became a resident of the United States, locating in Troy, N. Y., where he remained three years, rafting timber in the summer and working through the winter in the lumber woods near Rome, N. Y. Making his way to Chicago, he intended to remove to Green Bay, Wis., but navigation was closed ere he arrived at that place, and as there were no railroads yet built he was obliged to return to New Buffalo, Mich., where he spent the winter employed in the lumber woods cutting timber. In March, 1857, he again made his way to Chicago, and a few days later started for Grand Rapids, Wis., being obliged to make the journey on foot from Madison, Wis. On reaching his destination, he secured employment at log driving on Mill creek, but in April of the same year he went to Wausau, Marathon county, and assisted in taking a raft of lumber to St. Louis, whence he returned to Chicago. Subsequently he went to Mound City, Ill., resided there one year, then removed to Cairo, where he made his home during the summer, spending his winters in New Orleans from 1859 to 1864. In the latter year, acting on the advice of a physician, for he was suffering from ill health, he removed to Hamilton, Ontario, Canada. Upon his recovery he returned to Grand Rapids, where he resided until 1868, when he became a resident of Richardson county, Neb. Eight years were there passed, when on account of his wife's health he returned to Grand Rapids in 1876, and has since been identified with the interests of that city.

Mr. Gautron Dit LaRochelle was there married, by Rev. Father Gleason, December 29, 1867, to Sarah Martin, daughter of John B. and Sarah (McLean) Martin. Five children were the result of this union: Mary, born November 9, 1868, and died in infancy; John Franklin, born in Rulo, Richardson Co., Neb., April 29, 1871; Lillian Louise, born in Rulo, Richardson Co., Neb., March 4, 1874; Charles, born in Grand Rapids, February 21, 1879, and died October 26, 1881; and George Nelson, born in Grand Rapids, December 23, 1883. John B. Martin was a native of Quebec, Canada, his wife of Little York, N. Y. Their family numbered eleven children, five of whom are yet living, namely: Caroline, wife of Joseph Homier, a resident of Mosinee, Wis.; John, who is living in Grand Rapids; Elizabeth, widow of Joseph Seavey, and a resident of Lynn, Mass.; Justine, wife of Francis Breyon; and Sarah. There is also a stepbrother and stepsister—Prudent Martin, and Jovite, wife of Eugene Roy, residing in Petit Rocher, New Brunswick, Canada.

Mr. Gautron Dit LaRochelle and his family are members of the Catholic Church, and in his political views he is a Democrat. In his business career he has prospered, capable management and enterprise winning him success and securing for him a comfortable competence. He is an industrious and energetic man and is numbered among the leading citizens of his adopted county.

HARMON BEGGS, a prominent agriculturist of Almond township, Portage county, was born March 25, 1864, in Pine Grove, Portage county, a son of James and Arabella (Roseberry) Beggs, and remained at home with his parents until his marriage.

On November 12, 1885, Mr. Beggs was married to Miss May E. Burrows, who was born in Oasis, Waushara Co., Wis., October 9, 1867, and they have two children: Harold, born February 27, 1893, and Vernon, born September 12, 1894. The parents of Mrs. Beggs, Calvin and Sarah A. (Crandall) Burrows, were from Binghamton, N. Y., and Pennsylvania, respectively, coming to Wisconsin in an early day.

At the time of his marriage Harmon Beggs bought 120 acres of land in an improved condition, and equipped with buildings, situated in Section 30, Almond township, Portage county, and he also owns twenty acres of timber land in Pine Grove, Portage county. Politically, Mr. Beggs is a stanch Democrat, and has always loyally supported that party. Mrs. Beggs is a member of the Baptist Church.

William Burrows was born May 20, 1822, in Susquehanna county, Penn., a son of Jesse (a carpenter by trade) and Cynthia (Cheever) Burrows, who were originally from Connecticut, and had a family of six children: Jesse H. (deceased), William E., David (deceased), Olive (widow of A. J. Bolls, of Pennsylvania) and Hartwell. Our subject attended but a short time the common schools, having in early life commenced to work for a living, and remained at home, as did also his brothers and sisters, until he had attained the years of maturity. At the time of his marriage he rented land in Pennsylvania, which he worked two years, and then bought a farm, but adversity following him he had to allow the property to revert to the party he had purchased it from. Then for two years he worked in mills, after which he moved to New York State and bought a piece of timberland, of which, during his residence thereon of eight years, he cleared fifty-three acres, about half its area, and then sold out to advantage. In 1860 Mr. Burrows came to Wisconsin, renting a farm in Stockton township, Portage county, which he carried on until 1865, when he bought 217 acres of partially improved land in Oasis, Waushara county, continuing agricultural pursuits until about the year 1880, when he sold out there and moved into Belmont township. Here he also followed farming three years, at the end of which time he returned to Almond township, Portage county, and has since made his home with his son William, who is badly crippled, having lost both a hand and leg by accident.

On January 1, 1843, Mr. Burrows was married to Parna E. McLeod, who was born in Pennsylvania, March 28, 1821, a daughter of John and Hannah (Gregorie) McLeod, and six children were born to them, viz.: Calvin A. (now a resident of Plainfield, Waushara county, a mechanic and blacksmith by trade, married to Sarah M. Crandall, by whom he had five children: May, Mrs. Harmon Beggs; Marion, Minnie, Vernie, and Vere, three of whom are living); Lucy E., Warren E., Ellen J., William M. and Alice. Mr. Wm. Burrows and wife, with two of their children, C. A. and Lucy E., and their families, are members of the Baptist Church, in which Mr. Burrows has been a deacon some thirty years; politically he is a Republican.

The parents of Mrs. Calvin Burrows were John T. Crandall and Betsey A. (Hagerman) Crandall. They were married in Hector, Thompson Co., N. Y., in September, 1823, and resided there until 1827, when they moved to Pennsylvania where they spent about thirty-one years of their married life, when the western fever, so common in those days, caused them to dispose of their property, and in 1855 they came to Illinois. They remained there only two years on account of ill health of the family, and came to Pine Grove, Portage Co., Wis., in the fall of 1857, where they lived until Mr. Crandall's death in 1865. There were twelve children born to them—eight sons and four daughters—Mrs. Burrows being the youngest. She was married January 6, 1866, to Calvin A. Burrows. Of the eight sons four were volunteers in the Civil war, all that could go, three being dead and one deaf. One died from wounds received in the battle of the Wilderness. There are now living three boys and two girls. Their mother, Betsey A. Crandall, lives with her youngest daughter, Sarah A. Burrows, at the advanced age of ninety-two years.

JOHAN KLICKMAN, one of the oldest and most highly respected settlers of Belle Plaine township, Shawano county, is a Prussian by birth, having been born at Gaegersburg, Neumark, Frankfurt, July 26, 1832, a son of William (a day laborer) and Anna S. (Draeger) Klickman. They were the parents of five children, only two of whom we have any record of, viz.: August, who served in the American Civil war nine months, and died, in 1865, in hospital at Louisville, Ky., and John.

Our subject received but a very limited education in the common schools of his native land, and at the age of fourteen commenced learning the trade of a brickmaker, which he followed in the Fatherland till 1854, in that year emigrating to the United States, landing at New York in the month of June. From there he came direct to Milwaukee, Wis., thence by wagon to Watertown, Jefferson county, thence to Oak Grove township, Dodge county, where he hired out to a farmer. Here he remained about two years, working as a farm hand, and then rented land, which he cultivated for a season or two. In the meantime, his father having died in Germany, the widowed mother and her son August came to this country and to Wisconsin, and in 1859 they and our subject settled in Belle Plaine township, Shawano county, the journey from Oak Grove, Dodge county, being made with an ox-team. Here Mr. Klickman bought from Alexander Bucholz forty acres of wild land in Section 21, on which stood a small log slab-roofed shanty 16 x 20 feet in size, and here the little family set to work in earnest, to make a clearing and prepare the soil for crops, their only implements being an axe and grub hoe, their ox-team being not the least important item in their equipment. Day and night they labored assiduously till finally they succeeded in getting enough clearing made to put in a small crop of potatoes, the next being wheat, which was harvested with a scythe and threshed with a flail. Here the mother died December 18, 1886, at the advanced age of ninety years, the brother, as above recorded, having passed away, far from home, in 1865. Since his marriage in the latter year, which will be fully mentioned farther on, our subject has from time to time bought more land until he now owns 200 acres, seventy of which are under the plow, equipped with substantial and commodious buildings, all accumulated by hard work, indomitable perseverance and judicious economy.

On November 12, 1865, Mr. Klickman was married to Wilhelmina (Klickman) Klickman, a cousin, also a native of Germany, born in 1834, coming in her girlhood to this country, and locating in Fond du Lac county, Wis.; her father, who was a day laborer in the Fatherland, died there leaving three children: Ernestine, now Mrs. Fred Eberhardt, of Fond du Lac, Wis.; August, a farmer in Eau Claire county, Wis.; and Wilhelmina, Mrs. Klickman. Three children have come to bless the union of our subject and wife: John, born September 18, 1866, died November 5, of the same year; Albert, born September 25, 1867, was married January 5, 1893, to Anna Schultz, daughter of Robert and Henrietta (Schewe) Schultz, of Liberty, Outagamie county, Wis., and who was born at Maple Creek, that county, June 20, 1871; they live with our subject; Herman, born February 18, 1870, also lives at home, and is a telegraph operator, having been in the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company. Mrs. Klickman died September 20, 1892. Her mother died April 23, 1881, aged nearly eighty-six years.

In the fall of 1864 Mr. Klickman enlisted in Company F, Forty-fourth Wis. V. I., was mustered in at Madison, and from there sent to Nashville, Tenn., where for a time his regiment did guard duty some six months. From Nashville it proceeded to Paducah, Ky., and here our subject was taken sick and sent to the hospital, remaining there until his discharge in June, 1865. Politically he is a Republican, has served as chairman of Belle Plaine township ten years, and has also filled the positions of supervisor, assessor and treasurer. In fraternal fellowship he is a member of the F. & A. M., and in religious faith he is a Lutheran. He is highly respected in the community, and well merits the esteem in which he is held.

JOHAN C. WIXON, senior member of the firm of Wixon & Bronson, proprietors of the planing-mill at Rhinelander, Oneida county, was born October 5, 1856, near Lakeport, St. Clair Co., Michigan.

Benjamin Wixon, his father, was born near Toronto, Canada, a son of Joshua Wixon, a native of the State of New York, whence in an early day he moved to Upper Canada (now Ontario), where he carried on farming operations; he was also a Baptist minister, preaching the Gospel "without money and without price." He died in Canada the father of nine children, Benjamin being the youngest, and the names of the others are Amos, Asa, Joel, Ozias, Ruth, John, Rachel, Joshua and Solomon; Amos and Joel were ministers. Benjamin was a farmer by occupation, and in early times settled in St. Clair county, Mich., at a time when stage coaches were the speediest means of transportation. For many years he kept a well-known tavern between Port Huron and Lexington; but in 1865 he moved his family to Ottawa county, near Grand Haven, same State, where he bought a tract of land and engaged in lumbering. He married Miss Mary Ellerthorp, a native of England, born in 1822, a daughter of Joseph Ellerthorp, who had a family of six children: Mary, William, Ann, Jane, Sarah and Joseph. They came to Canada in the year 1832 and settled on a farm near Toronto. To Benjamin Wixon and his wife were born twelve children, named as follows: Joseph B., Sarah, William, an infant son not named, Rachel, Joshua, Mary Jane, John C., Thomas G., Annie E., Elizabeth and Emma. Of these, Joseph was a soldier during the Civil war, serving in the Second Michigan Cavalry one year, when he came home sick, and died. The father died at Cedar Springs, Mich., in 1876, aged fifty-seven years. He was a Republican in politics, and formerly a Whig; the mother survives, and is residing at Grand Rapids, Mich., and is seventy-three years old.

John C. Wixon, the subject proper of this sketch, received his education at the common schools, and at the age of sixteen, his father being a cripple, commenced working in the lumber woods, having charge, at that early age, of a gang of twenty-four men. When eighteen years old he left home and worked on a farm two years, or until 1875, at which time he made a trip to Texas, sojourning there some four months, then returning to Michigan. Mr. Wixon now commenced working in a sawmill at eighteen dollars per month for Walworth and Reed, remaining with that firm nine and one-half years, a good part of the time in their yards as grader and inspector. He then entered the employ of the Ives Estate at Hungerford, Mich., as general superintendent of their mills and yards, remaining with them two years, after which he removed to Big Rapids, in the same State, filling a similar position with L. S. Baker. In the spring of 1887, he moved to Merrill, Wis. (still in Mr. Baker's employ), and there remained until the following July, when he proceeded to Wausau, being there engaged in inspecting lumber till November, the same year, at which time he came to Rhinelander in the employ of the Underwood Lumber Company, as general superintendent. With this firm he remained until June, 1894, and then commenced his present business, having, in partnership with C. C. Bronson, purchased their planing-mill plant, the firm name being Wixon & Bronson.

Mr. Wixon has been twice married, the first time in Michigan, in the spring of 1875, to Miss Alwilda Davenport, a native of that State, and two children were born to them: Mary L., and one that died in infancy. Mr. Wixon was married at Waupaca, Wis., in October, 1893, to Mrs. Bessie (Shearer) Van Tassel, who was born in Melbourne, Australia, in 1856, and who, for her first husband, was married, in 1875, to E. F. Van Tassel, by whom she had one child, Inez Isabel Van Tassel. Mr. and Mrs. Wixon are members of the Baptist Church, of which he is treasurer and a trustee; socially, he is a Knight Templar and a member of the K. of P.; politically he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party.

ANDREW S. WELLS, proprietor of the Waupaca Feed Mills, is one of the most enterprising business men of Waupaca. His present prosperity he owes to his own efforts. He was born in Cambridge, Dane Co., Wis., August 25, 1861, a son of Thomas and Mary (Scobie) Wells, both of whom were emigrants from Scotland.

Thomas Wells, the father, was a self-made man. He was born at Tillicoultry in 1823, and was but a year old when his father, John Wells, died. In his boyhood Thomas entered a woolen-mill in Scotland, and thoroughly learned the trade. When a young man, twenty-one years of age, he decided to emigrate to America. Coming to Cambridge he temporarily abandoned his business and opened up a farm. He was married here to Miss Mary Scobie in 1854, and established for himself a pioneer woolen-mill at Cambridge; and, being an efficient workman and the possessor of good business traits, he soon commanded a good trade. The children of Thomas and Mary Wells were John, who died at the age of twelve years; Andrew; Mary; Thomas; and one child who died in infancy. In 1867 Thomas Wells sold out his business at Cambridge, and removed to Madison where he accepted the position of superintendent of the woolen-mills at that place. This position he filled two years, and then removed to Neshkoro, Wis., and built a woolen-mill which he still operates. His faithful wife died in January, 1886.

Andrew S. Wells attended the common schools at Neshkoro, and in his youth spent seven years in his father's woolen-mill at that village, completing the trade at the age of twenty years. But the work proved distasteful to him, and was also injurious to his health. He therefore entered a gristmill to learn the milling trade. In the fall of 1882 he came to Waupaca, having accepted a position as second miller in the milling establishment there. Remaining fifteen months he removed to Berlin, Wis., but six months later he returned and became head miller for Roberts & Oborn, a position which he filled satisfactorily for eight and a half years. Desiring to enter business for himself Mr. Wells, in May, 1893, rented the Waupaca Feed Mills, which he now operates and where he now handles all brands of flour.

Mr. Wells was married, in June, 1888, to Anna Hamilton, who was born in Erie county, N. Y., a daughter of Orlando and Sarah Hamilton, both natives of that county and of Scotch ancestry and Quaker descent. Orlando and Sarah Hamilton were married in 1857, and reared a family of five children. The father of Orlando Hamilton was William Hamilton, a native of Pennsylvania. To Mr. and Mrs. Wells one child has been born, Catherine E. In politics Mr. Wells was a Democrat until 1892, when he affiliated with the principles of the Republican party. He was elected to the city council as alderman in the spring of 1894. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and socially is connected with the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Wells is an energetic and successful young business man of Waupaca, and enjoys the respect and esteem of a wide circle of acquaintances.

LF. WEST (deceased), who was a successful pioneer farmer and respected citizen of Waupaca county, was born in Bradford, N. H., January 26, 1828, and was the son of Timothy West. The parents of L. F. West were people of means, and he had good opportunities for an education. He had a teacher's certificate, but never taught school. When a young man, about 1853, in a pioneer period, he came to Lind, Waupaca county, and was among the early settlers.

On November 17, 1859, at Berlin, Wis., L. F. West was united in marriage with Miss Lucia Gibson, who was born in Canada July 15, 1835. They located on a farm in Lind, of which only six acres were improved when they took possession. On this property there was a "claim" shanty, with two roofs, which was among the best residences in the neighborhood at that time. To their marriage there were born the following named children: Henry L., born March 9, 1861, a farmer, at home; Charles M., born August 2, 1864, of Oregon City, Oregon; and John G., born July 1, 1869, in Winneconne, Winnebago Co., Wisconsin.

Mr. West resided on his farm in Lind until the fall of 1868, when he removed to Winneconne, Wis., where he engaged in the livery business and remained one year. He then returned to Lind and lived thenceforth on his farm, the same on which he and his wife commenced housekeeping. On October 29, 1894, when in Waupaca attending to some business he was stricken with paralysis, and lived only four hours. He was buried in Lind Cemetery. Mr. West was a Republican in politics, but voted the Prohibition ticket on several occasions, being a sympathizer with the principles of that party.

The parents of Mrs. West were Royal and Harriet (Thorne) Gibson. In her younger days Mrs. West was a school teacher, having received her literary education at an academy in Franklin, Vt. She taught her first school in Canada, receiving a dollar a week, and boarding around among the scholars. This was at the age of fifteen, and at a time in the history of women, when, although doing the same work equally as well as their male competitors, they received only one-fourth as much pay. She received various wages at different times, ranging from a dollar a week up to forty dollars a month. Mrs. West first united with the Baptist Church in Lowell, Mass., and, in 1889, united with the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Lind, of which she is yet a member. Since her husband's death she has had charge of matters which he supervised, and conducts the business as left by him. The success which attended the affairs of Mr. West can to a considerable degree be attributed to his wife, who is a woman of intelligence and exceptional business ability. While not a dictator, she suggested many moves which afterward showed her wisdom; and her good management and frugality, as well as the proceeds of her own efforts, went a long way toward building up a very substantial and pleasant home. Mrs. West is well known, and is a most highly respected lady.

LOUIS DE VAUD. Among the residents of Dupont township, Waupaca county, there is but one who has longer resided within its borders than this gentleman, who dates his residence here from 1857. He has lived in Wisconsin since 1854, at which time he located in Oshkosh. A year later he went to Winneconne, and thence to his present home. He has witnessed the entire growth and development of this region, and in the work of progress and upbuilding has ever borne his part, being especially active in transforming the wild land into rich and fertile fields.

Mr. De Vaud was born November 15, 1825, in the township of Forrest, Canton of Vaud, Switzerland, and is a son of Frederick and Jane (Deseraut) De Vaud, who were of French descent. The father was a farmer by occupation and a successful business man. The family numbered six children besides our subject—David, Francis and Daniel, all in Switzerland, and Jeanette, Mary and Caroline, who are married and also reside in that country. Our subject, the only representative of the family in America, was educated in the common schools of his native land, and as soon as old enough began work on the farm, becoming familiar with all the duties that fall to the lot of the agriculturist. He continued with his parents until twenty-two years of age, and then began working for others that his labors might more directly benefit himself, spending his time thus until 1852, when he sailed for America. After a twenty-seven-days' voyage on a sailing vessel he reached New York, and during the two succeeding years engaged in farming in the Empire State, where he received as much for his services in two months as was given him in Switzerland in a year. In 1854 he arrived in Oshkosh, Wis., where he worked in the lumber woods and followed the river for about four seasons.

After his removal to Winneconne, in 1855, Mr. De Vaud began farming, and also operated a threshing machine. On removing to Waupaca county he settled in what was then Union township, within whose borders at that time there lived only one other family. The previous year he had purchased of the government 160 acres of land in Section 26, and in 1857 located thereon, and began the development of his present farm, which is now included in Dupont township. The timber was so thick that a number of trees had to be cut away in order to give space for a house. As there were not enough men in the locality to raise a log building, a small lumber shanty was constructed, and Mr. De Vaud began life on the farm, which has since been his home, in true pioneer style. He had an ox-team which he used in clearing the land, and with crude implements the work went slowly but steadily on, until, where once stood wild forest trees, golden harvests were garnered. The nearest market was Oshkosh, a distance of sixty miles. As he had no team at first, Mr. De Vaud was often obliged to carry supplies home on his back, and many a time has he walked several miles, carrying flour and other necessities. The present generation hear the stories of pioneer life, but can little realize what it was to live on the very borders of civilization, where comforts were hard to obtain, in homes situated in the midst of a wilderness which was the haunt of wild beasts, and through which the Indians often traveled.

Mr. De Vaud lived alone until 1858, when he secured as a helpmeet and companion on life's journey Miss Phæbe Quimby. He brought his bride to the little shanty, in which they lived for three years, when a log house 18 x 26 feet was built on the site of their present elegant home. Those first settlers had to cut their own roads through the forests, and their farm work was done with a grub-hoe, cradle and flail. As time passed Mr. De Vaud added to his original purchase until he had 600 acres; but as the country became more thickly settled he disposed of it, retaining possession only of his first tract. Of this, 100 acres are under a high state of cultivation, a work that was accomplished through his own arduous labor. He has made farming his life pursuit, and has won success, though in the earlier years he encountered many hardships and met many difficulties.

Mr. and Mrs. De Vaud were the first couple married in Dupont township, their marriage occurring November 28, 1858, and their union was blessed with eight children, viz.: Francis M., born September 14, 1859, who owns and operates a sawmill at Elmhurst, Langlade Co., Wis. (he married Miss Mary Mines at her parents' home in Marion, and they have two children—Luella and Leonard); George, born January 1, 1862, who died from the effects of a fall at the age of thirteen; Charles, born August 14, 1866, Ida, born February 5, 1871, died February 5, 1877, and Etta, born February 14, 1874, died February 14, 1877, all three of whom died of diphtheria; Ada, who was educated at the Clintonville schools, and lives at home; Elton, who died in 1881, when sixteen months old; and Ina, born October 31, 1885, at home. When Mrs. De Vaud's people, the Quimbys, came to Dale, that village could boast of only one house, and the now thriving city of New London contained but two houses.

Since the organization of the party, Mr. De Vaud has been a stalwart Republican, and his fellow townsmen have frequently called him to office, thus substantially recognizing his worth and ability. For three years he was chairman of Dupont township, was assessor three years, and also served as side supervisor; he was postmaster at Dupont for several years, having the post office at his house for ten years, during part of which time his son also served as postmaster. During the Civil war he manifested his loyalty to the government by enlisting, on November 3, 1864, in Company C, First Wisconsin Cavalry, being mustered in at Madison, whence the regiment was sent to Louisville, Ky. After two weeks the command followed Gen. Lyon on his raid through Kentucky, with three thousand men, for some five weeks. Subsequently a week was passed in Nashville, and then the army went into winter quarters at Waterloo. In the spring he went to Alabama, and after participating in the battle of Selma, started for Montgomery, but the city surrendered before their arrival. They next captured West Point, then marched to Macon, Ga., where the company to which Mr. De Vand belonged, was detailed for the capture of Jefferson Davis. They followed three days and three nights, succeeding in the capture on the 10th of May, after which they went to Macon, Ga., and four weeks later to Nashville. Mr. De Vand was honorably discharged July 19, 1865, at Nashville, for the war was over and his services were no longer needed. While in the South he contracted disease, from which he has never recovered, and the government now gives him a pension. His long residence in Waupaca county numbers him among her most honored pioneers, and her history would be incomplete without the record of his life. He is true to every trust reposed in him, whether public or private, and is respected alike by young and old, rich and poor. Mr. De Vand was reared under the influence of the Lutheran Reformed Church in Switzerland, and the family are now attendants of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Marion.

JOHAN C. CURRAN, one of the most progressive citizens of Rhinelander, Oneida county, where he is held in high respect, is a Canadian by birth, having first seen the light August 22, 1838, in Huntingdon county, Province of Quebec.

Patrick Curran, his father, was born March 17, 1798, in Ireland, whence at the age of sixteen years he emigrated to Quebec, Canada, making his home in the then new county of Huntingdon, which borders on New York State, and followed farming.

Here he married Miss Julia Finnegan, also a native of Ireland, whence when a child she came to Canada with her parents, and to this union were born thirteen children, four of whom died young, the names of the others being Martin P., James, Michael, Patrick, John C., Thomas, Nora, Mary and Patrick F. Of these, Martin P., John C., Thomas and Patrick F. are yet living. The father died in 1891, near where he had settled; he served in the Canadian militia during the Papineau and McKenzie rebellion in that country of 1837-38. His mother died in Ireland, his father, who was also a farmer, subsequently emigrating to Canada, dying in the State of New York in 1863, the parent of six sons. The mother of our subject was a daughter of Patrick Finnegan, who was killed in Canada by a falling tree, while he was engaged in clearing land; his wife, grandmother of Mr. Curran, lived to be one hundred years old.

John C. Curran, of whom this sketch more particularly pertains, received but a limited education at the district schools of the neighborhood of his place of birth, working afterward in the woods of Essex county, N. Y., until 1855, when he came to Wisconsin, making his first western home at Jennie, now known as Merrill, Lincoln county, and here he also worked in the woods, and also rafting lumber on the river till 1857. In that year he proceeded up the Eagle river, to a little above where is now the village of Eagle, and here he prospected in land, made hay, etc., in the employ of Helms & Co., lumberers, also superintending their camp. In the fall of 1859 he returned down the river, and settled where he at present lives, part of his house being now within the city limits of Rhinelander, all that section at that time being included in Marathon county. He was the first settler in that vicinity, and conducted a trading post for the Indians, which was also a stopping place for travelers on their way up or down the river. The nearest railroad station was at Berlin, 170 miles distant, from which point he had to haul his goods; this business Mr. Curran continued until 1864, about which time the land came into the market, and he then commenced logging, buying land of the government, all the time continuing his lumbering business and farming, eventually clearing 150 acres, which he sold in 1883. He also conducted a store where he first settled and now lives, till 1882. He took a very active part in getting Oneida county organized, was the first chairman of the Pelican township board, and is its present chairman. Politically he is a Democrat, and since 1883 he has served on the school board. He owns an addition to Rhinelander, platted in 1890, and known as "Curran's Addition."

On September 27, 1870, our subject was married in Canada to Miss Lizzie Sloan, a native of that country, born in 1850, a daughter of Patrick and Julia (Atkins) Sloan, both natives of Ireland, coming to Canada with their parents, when children. Patrick Sloan and his wife had thirteen children, two of whom died in infancy, eleven yet living as follows: Jane, Cordelia, Lizzie, Catherine, Mary Ann, William, Charles, Albert, George, Theresa and Isabel, all still residents of Canada, as are also their parents; Mr. Sloan was a member of the Canadian militia. To Mr. and Mrs. John C. Curran have been born five children, to wit: Julia M., Thomas B., Lizzie Pearl, Muriel J. and Frances M., all yet living at home. Of these, Thomas B., a very bright young man, was a cadet at West Point from the Ninth Wisconsin District, but was obliged to resign at the end of a year on account of failing eyesight.

Our subject is a typical pioneer, whose footsteps are the stepping places for the inevitable and inexorable army of civilization, in fact he is known as "the Pioneer," having been the very first to settle in Rhinelander. He was brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, but is liberal in all things pertaining to the social status of his adoption, regardless of sect, particularly in educational matters, and he is the organizer and patron of what is one of the first ward schools in Rhinelander, and which is named, in his honor, the "John C. Curran School." Mr. Curran is highly respected, far and near, and is remarkably well-preserved for his age, owing in a great measure to his temperate habits in all things.

AP. JONES (deceased) was one of the honored early settlers of Waupaca county, making his home for many years in Little Wolf township. He was born in Otis, Berkshire county, Mass., September 4, 1828, and was the third child in a family of eight born to Adanijah and Sophia Jones. His education was such as the common schools of that early day afforded.

In 1848 he came west as far as Illinois, locating at Grafton, that State, where he remained for two years. The year 1850 witnessed his arrival in Little Wolf township, Waupaca county, where he first met the late James Meiklejohn, between whom the warmest friendship sprung up. With him he remained until 1857. At that time he was the owner of considerable land in that section of the country, on which he erected a frame building and embarked in general merchandising, at the same time also operating his land. He was one of the first men to locate within the borders of Little Wolf township, and being possessed of an unselfish nature, a warm and generous heart toward all, he proved a most valuable member of the young and rapidly growing community. In 1865 Mr. Jones led to the altar Miss Anna F. Vinton, a daughter of David Vinton, of Fond du Lac, Wis. (native of Wales).

Mrs. Jones was born in Canaan, Wayne Co., Penn., and is one of a family of fourteen children, all of whom grew to man and womanhood. In 1847 the parents, with their family, removed to Fond du Lac, Wis., which was then a place containing only two or three wooden buildings, and near there the father purchased 320 acres of wild land, immediately beginning its improvement. The timber being light, it was cleared, and soon waving fields of grain were to be seen on all sides. There the mother died in 1847, leaving many little ones, the youngest daughter being only nine days old, who was then cared for by the older children. On reaching maturity the children were all married and had families of their own. The father continued to live on the farm until 1868, when he sold out and moved into Fond du Lac city, where his death occurred, January 14, 1880, at the age of eighty-three years. Mr. Jones made his home in Little Wolf until 1891, when, accompanied by his wife, he went to New London, Wis., where he lived with James Meiklejohn, for they were still bosom friends. There he remained until 1894, when (strange to say) he and Mr. Meiklejohn sickened and died—one on the 19th and the other on the 27th of March. Their remains now lie interred in the cemetery of New London. It might well be said of them—"United in life; in death not divided." Mr. and Mrs. Jones had no children, but reared as their own their nephew, Marquis E. Wood, who is now engaged in the livery business at Manawa, Wisconsin.

For thirty-five consecutive years Mr. Jones held the office of postmaster; for twenty-five years served as township clerk; was chairman of the town board for many years, and was also justice of the peace, ever discharging his duties to the satisfaction of all concerned. Politically, his support was given to the Republican party, and at all times he was willing to labor and make sacrifices for the good of the community at large. His death was widely and deeply mourned, as he had gained the friendship and respect of all with whom he came in contact.

JOHAN F. SWENSON, one of the enterprising and respected citizens of Iola township, Waupaca county, was born in Norway, June 18, 1840, and is a son of Swen Iverson, a brewer by trade, who supported his family by day's work. Our subject is the oldest of three children, the others being Andrew, of Harrison township, Waupaca county; and Christina, who is married and lives in Norway.

Mr. Swenson received a good common-school education in his native tongue, and being the son of poor parents he learned a trade. When nineteen years of age he began work as a brewer, which occupation he followed until coming to the United States. His wages were very meagre, yet by saving he was able to board and clothe himself and have a little left; but he knew that it would be a difficult matter to secure a home for himself in Norway from his small earnings. By coming to the New World, where chances were better for a poor boy, he hoped to improve his condition.

In April, 1867, Mr. Swenson bade farewell to parents, home and friends, taking passage at Christiania on a Guion Line steamer bound for Liverpool, where he boarded another steamer, and after sixteen days landed at Portland, Me. His destination was Wausau, Wis., where his brother Andrew was located. He came to Oshkosh, Wis., by rail, thence by boat to Gill's Landing, and by stage to Waupaca, where he met John Murat, who was there on business, and with him rode to Scandinavia. Mr. Swenson then walked to New Hope, Wis., where he remained a few days and later proceeded to Stevens Point, and thence by stage to Wausau, where he earned his first dollar at construction of a lumber raft bound for St. Louis. After its completion he went down the river to Hannibal, Mo., and then returned to Stevens Point, north of which he went to work in a sawmill. This was the first work of this kind that he had ever done, but after two years he had become so competent that he was made head sawyer, which business he followed for twenty-one seasons. He also worked in the lumber woods along the Wisconsin river and its tributaries, being employed by Stewart & Co. five years, and even longer for the Wausau Lumber Company. His extensive experience gave him a full knowledge of this important capacity in a sawmill, so that his services were always in demand, and even after he left the lumber regions his services were often sought.

In Iola, September 24, 1871, Mr. Swenson married Caroline Olson, who was born in Ashton, Dane Co., Wis., February 12, 1853, and by her marriage has become the mother of five children: Nettie, now Mrs. Olof Gullickson, of New Hope, Portage Co., Wis.; Halbert, of Iola; and John, Edna and Walter, at home. The father of Mrs. Swenson, Hans Olson, came to America in 1849, locating in Dane county, Wis. In 1855 he came to Iola township, Waupaca county, where he purchased a new farm in Section 32, and erected the first house on the place, which stood a short distance west of the present home of our subject. He experienced all the trials and privations of pioneer life, but he bore these patiently in order to make a home for his family, which comprised three daughters who grew to womanhood: Mrs. Swenson; Annie, the widow of Ole Benson, of Iola; and Betsy, now Mrs. Ole Solum, of the same place. The father departed this life July 19, 1888, at the age of seventy years, and the mother of Mrs. Swenson, who was his first wife, died in 1864. Their remains now lie interred in the cemetery at Scandinavia.
